"There is a heck of a lot of damage, and a number of files have been taken, but John refused to leave the office to protect the rest of the documents," he said.

Among those arrested was Robin Webb, press officer for the Animal Liberation Front, who resigned from the ruling council of the RSPCA as it was about to investigate his links with the militant ALF.

In the past, Mr Webb has justified "economic sabotage" by the ALF, including fire-bomb attacks on meat lorries and a bid to contaminate bottles of Lucozade — a law-breaking strategy in direct conflict with the RSPCA's insistence that animal welfare must be pursued only by legal means.

The RSPCA later said that it was "totally inconceivable that this society can have someone sitting on its governing body who does not thoroughly disapprove of all acts of violence".

Animal Lib raid on labs

ANIMAL Liberation Front activists raided government-run science labs in Guildford on Tuesday night and released a number of animals and birds.

After cutting through the perimeter fence of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in Worplesdon Road, they broke into the labs and took two foxes, two ringed barn owls, two little owls and several ringed starlings.

The ALF later took responsibility for the raid when it gave a statement to the Southern News Service. A spokesman for the raiders claimed they set free well over 100 birds. It said the two foxes would be rehabilitated and later set free.

The raid took place between 5pm and 9.30am. The ministry has said there is no risk of infection from the animals.

SURREY ADVERTISER
OCT. '93

ALF blamed for attacks

THE Animal Liberation Front are believed to be behind two attacks on charity shops in Chiswick, last week.

The Cancer Research Campaign shop and Imperial Cancer Research campaign shops, in Chiswick High Road, were both attacked on Tuesday night, last week.

The shop windows were broken with either an air gun or catapult.

No one has claimed responsibility for the attack, though the ALF have attacked the shops in the past because the charities use animals for experiments.

MIDDLESEX CHRONICLE
OCT. '93

Hunt cars attack

By JOANNE ROWE

ANIMAL activists have caused thousands of pounds worth of damage to cars belonging to Holcombe Hunt members and their guests.

The Animal Liberation Front struck as the car owners enjoyed a meal and dancing at the annual Hunt Ball at Rivington Barn.

ALF activists claim they sneaked into the car park and squirted between 30 and 40 expensive cars with paint stripper.

Several thousand pounds of damage is believed to have been caused to the paintwork of the vehicles, which included expensive four-wheel drive vehicles and BMWs.

Today hunt master Ray Longster refused to comment on the incident.

But a spokesman for the Animal Liberation Front warned: "More action against the Holcombe Hunt will follow. We will continue to target the hunt and its property as long as they continue to target wild animals."

BOLTON EVENING NEWS
NOV. '93

Hunt man targeted

A MAN who was helping at a recent foxhunt claims he has been targeted by the Animal Liberation Front.

Mr John Bartley, of Hollamby Park, Hailsham, returned home on Monday night with his wife, Beverley, and two children, to find the windows of his house had been smashed and the words ALF daubed across the outside of his home.

EASTBOURNE HERALD
NOV. '93

EVENING STANDARD 22/11/93

Activists say they carried out attack

The Animal Liberation Front has claimed responsibility for a gun attack on an East Sheen charity shop.

The front window of the Imperial Cancer Research Fund shop in Upper Richmond Road was damaged but not shattered in last week's attack.

The next day a shot gun pellet was found in the shop, although a spokesman for the fund said it may have been from an air gun pellet.

A spokesman for the Animal Liberation Front contacted the Guardian and claimed responsibility soon after the attack.

The written statement said:

RICHMOND AND TWICKENHAM GUARDIAN

OCT. '93

"In the early hours of yesterday morning, the Imperial Cancer Research shop in Upper Richmond Road, East Sheen, had its window smashed by the Animal Liberation Front.

"These acts of economic sabotage will continue on these similar premises until their admission that animal experimentation is not the way forward in a cure for cancer."

A spokesman for the fund was not aware that the ALF was responsible until contacted by the Guardian, but said that it was still business as usual for its shop.

"This does happen from time to time," said Margaret Wilson from the Imperial Cancer Fund.

"They're targeting charities that are here to help people. The irony is that they're targeting shops manned by volunteers, most of whom have had contact with cancer through a sufferer in their family. Clearly they don't care very much about people and it's just very, very sad," she said.

She said that the fund carries out less than two per cent of its research on animals and this is only for vital research using specially bred mice and rats.

Police probe bomb threats

By Darwin Templeton

THE RUC was today investigating a claim that animal rights extremists from Ulster have sent a wave of letter bombs to targets in Britain and Ireland.

Officers were warning individuals and groups named in a statement phoned to Robin Webb, "press officer" for the Animal Liberation Front.

Mr Webb said the caller, who had a strong Northern Irish accent, claimed that "timed incendiaries" had been sent on Wednesday to "fieldsports organisers throughout the UK".

The man named five of their targets, in Ulster, London and the Republic and said that further devices had been sent in the last 24 hours.

"There will be no further warnings and this is a major step up in our offensive against bloodsports throughout the UK," he said.

Mr Webb stressed that the man said he represented "animal liberation activists in Northern Ireland" and was not acting on the part of the ALF.

An RUC spokesman said: "Anyone receiving a parcel or a letter that looks in any way suspicious should contact their nearest police station immediately."

The letter bomb threat will heighten fears that animal rights activists in the province could be turning to violent methods.

BELFAST TELEGRAPH FEB. '94

ANIMAL rights activists announced they were back in Furness by smashing windows in Barrow McDonald's.

The Animal Liberation Front has said it will also target butchers and others firms which they accuse of exploiting animals.

WESTMORLAND GAZETTE DEC. '93

Howard urged to hunt down animal rights bombers

Peter Victor

SCIENTISTS targeted by animal rights bombers have asked the Home Secretary for new measures to protect them.

Sir Colin Berry, chairman of the Research Defence Society, wrote last week to Michael Howard asking him to give "urgent consideration" to attacks by an animal rights group calling itself the 'Justice Department'.

The group has planted 32 bombs and injured seven people since it started a bombing campaign last October. It has said it plans further outrages and will pack bombs with syringes full of HIV-infected blood. Last week The Observer reported that the group had sent 13 parcel bombs containing empty syringes. We are withholding the names of the intended victims.

The attacks have outraged members of the scientific community, and about 100 have written to the Home Secretary or their local MP calling for action to curb the extremists.

They fear the attacks signal a return to the extreme violence last seen in June 1990, when a bomb exploded under a car belonging to Dr Max Headley, a Bristol University researcher. He was unhurt, but a 13-month-old boy was seriously injured. In the same month, a Jeep belonging to Margaret Baskerville, a veterinary surgeon, was destroyed by a similar bomb as she left her home at Winterslow, near Salisbury. In his letter, Sir Colin said the Animal Liberation Front was defined as a terrorist organisation in America, where there is a law relating to them. 'By comparison, the UK animal extremists are far more active and far more violent, but we have nothing beyond normal criminal law to deal with this growing problem,' he wrote.

He pointed out that the Government is introducing legislation to curb the activities of hunt saboteurs. 'You have made no proposals concerning the further protection of medical research workers, who have been the target of these extremists for much longer and have suffered far more violent and dangerous attacks.'

The Justice Department began its campaign by sending bombs packaged to look like videotapes to a farmer and a laboratory animal supplier. The group has since targeted furriers and fox hunt organisers.

At the end of last month, it sent out 13 parcel bombs. Each contained a home-made explosive — known as 'co-op mix' — and six syringes. They were addressed to scientists and laboratory animal suppliers. One exploded in a laboratory in West Sussex.

The group then delivered a series of firebombs packaged as Boots hair products. One damaged a store in Cornwall and another was defused after a woman took it home. The Animal Liberation Front says it is ignorant of the Justice Department's membership, but has acted as the group's mouthpiece, issuing press statements on its behalf.

The Anti-Terrorist Squad is treating the Justice Department threats seriously and has taken the unusual step of co-ordinating the nationwide hunt for members.

Animal terror alert

THE RUC yesterday warned bloodsport followers and members of fox-hunts to be on their guard for letter bombs.

The warning follows claims by animal rights extremists in Ulster that they had launched an incendiary bomb blitz on targets throughout the British Isles.

The Animal Liberation Front issued a statement on behalf of the "activists" in the province claiming that within 24 hours letter bombs were dispatched to fieldsport organisers across the country.

The targets included the Irish Coursing Club headquarters in the Republic, and prominent members of the hunting fraternity in England.

According to the ALF statement the devices consisted of a timed incendiary device.

"There will be no further warnings and this is a major step up in our offensive against bloodsports around the UK," it said.

A police spokesman said anyone who found anything remotely suspicious in their mail should contact their nearest RUC station at once.

SUNDAY LIFE FEB. '94

Animal group behind attacks

THE Animal Liberation Front in Britain yesterday admitted delivering three parcel bombs to branches of Boots chemists.

All the attacks took place on the south coast. One suspect package delivered to a shop in Hastings exploded, causing a small fire.

SUNDAY INDEPENDENT FEB. '94

Farm attack: Police were today investigating an attack by animal rights activists on a Sussex egg farm. More than £1,000 worth of damage was done early today at Halcombe Farm in Telscombe Road, Peacehaven. Chickens were let out, vehicles damaged and slogans painted over buildings. The Animal Liberation Front has claimed responsibility.

OBSERVER DEC. '93

Terror threat from ALF

WINDSOR Police have appealed for vigilance after animal rights extremists vowed to renew their violent campaign.

A 30-strong cell of the Animal Liberation Front warned they have drawn up a hitlist.

These include butchers, betting shops, battery farms and chemists.

And the group said they were willing to use bombs, arson and vandalism in their campaign.

A press release sent to the 'Observer' said: "We are now stepping up our campaign and none of us will be deterred by big prison sentences."

Chief Inspector Geoff Chivers at Windsor police said: "We are fully aware of their activities as we recently had a visit from the group."

"People are security conscious in this town as we have two barracks. They will report anything suspicious and that helps us."

ASCOT OBSERVER NOV. '93

Blitz on Boots

THE Animal Liberation Front yesterday admitted delivering fire bombs to three Boots stores.

One exploded in Hastings causing minor damage. Two others were found in nearby South Coast towns of St Leonard's and Bexhill.

The Front claims Boots test their products on animals.

SUNDAY MAIL FEB. '94
ANIMAL GROUP ADMIT ATTACKS

Animal Liberation Front admitted delivering three parcel bombs to branches of Boots.

Attacks took place on south coast of England and one suspect package delivered to shop in Hastings exploded, causing small fire.

The other devices, delivered to stores in St Leonards and Bexhill, caused no damage.

Animal Liberation Front claimed that, in spite of their professed cruelty-free image, all Boots pharmaceutical products are tested on animals.

EVENING TELEGRAPH FEB. '94 EVENING ARGUS DEC. '93
ARKANGEL 11

'Arsonists' attack on shop report by Chris

Warway

ANIMAL Liberationists could be behind an arson attack on a butchers shop, started by a fire-bug pouring an inflammable substance through the letterbox on Thursday night.

Fortunately, Mitchell Butchers in White Hart Lane only suffered smoke damage after the flames failed to take a hold at the Collier Row premises.

Romford police investigating the fire revealed that the butchers had suffered a previous attack by the animal liberationists, when the words Meat is Murder were sprayed in red paint there a month ago.

Police Sergeant Dave Hammond of Romford Crime Desk said: "We cannot rule out that the Animal Liberation campaigners may be responsible."

"We would appeal to anyone who was in the area around 11.30pm and saw anything suspicious to come forward."

"We would also like to hear from any butchers in the area who may have suffered any similar attacks."

YELLOW ADVERTISER HAVERING

NOV. '93

THREATS OVER ANIMAL RIGHTS

SPECIAL Branch officers have been notified as Slough police react to the latest threats of violence from animal rights extremists.

This week, a letter was released in the name of the North West and West London Area Animal Liberation Front — a letter very similar to that issued several months ago when windows at a butcher's and a take-away food shop in Slough were attacked by people firing metal ball-bearings from catapults.

Claiming 30 committed activists, the ALF letter again threatens "incendiaries, arson, smashing shop windows" against targets ranging from labs and battery farms, through butchers' and chemists, to research charity shops, betting shops and "anyone displaying circus posters."

Chief Inspector Clive Doyle of Slough police said (Wednesday): "We are aware of the ALF as we are of other groups of that ilk."

"All we can do is ask people for vigilance to protect their property. We can't post an officer out- side every door. By the tone of their letter, it could be anyone's."

If any attack was made, he said: "We would pursue it with diligence and when evidence is available we will arrest, as we have in the past."

Special Branch have been informed as a matter of course, say police sources.

Police warn of activist threat

FARMERS and butchers have been put on red alert against potential attacks by para-military animal rights extremists.

Calls for greater security come on the anniversary of fire bomb attacks on a chicken factory and pig breeding company last year.

Animal Liberation Front leaders admitted planting the incendiary devices which caused more than £250,000 worth of damage outside Driffield.

Detectives made exhaustive enquiries across the country to track down the activists, but nobody was ever charged with the offences.

Now there are fears the campaigners against meat production could strike again in North Humberside in the run up to Christmas. Humberside Police are warning farmers and butchers to be extra vigilant especially if strange people or vehicles are seen in the countryside.

Driffield National Farmers Union secretary Mr Tony Pallert said farmers must always be on guard because animal rights extremists could strike at any time.

He warned: "Any target is legitimate to these activists and they don't care if people or the animals they are so keen to protect get hurt."

Insp Richard Wood, head of Driffield police, said farmers and butchers were being given a timely warning.

He added: "Incendiary devices were used to start fires at both premises last year, but fortunately nobody was hurt."

HULL DAILY MAIL

NOV. '93

ALF in attack

ANIMAL rights activists turned vandals by wrecking a car and a minibus belonging to Shamrock Farm staff.

The vehicles, which were parked outside homes in Eastbourne and Brighton, were daubed with paint stripper and had their tyres slashed in the Monday night attack.

The Animal Liberation Front claimed responsibility for the attacks.

They disagree with the ethics of Shamrock (GB) Ltd in Small Dole which is a holding centre for primates.

Sussex Police Insp Mike Alderson condemned the incidents.

Turkeys freed

More than 30 turkeys destined for Christmas dinner tables were taken from a farm at Ringmer, East Sussex, in a raid by supporters of the Animal Liberation Front.

THE TIMES NOV. '93

SLOUGH EXPRESS NOV. '93

WEST SUSSEX COUNTY TIMES JAN. '94

A Ford Sierra daubed in Eastbourne last night

Vandals strike

A CAR and mini-bus were vandalised last night in another outbreak of violence by animal rights activists in Sussex.

Tyres were slashed and paint stripper was poured on panels of the vehicles parked outside the Brighton and Eastbourne homes of two employees of Shamrock monkey farm at Small Dole, near Henfield.

The Animal Liberation Front claimed responsibility for the attacks. Another group calling itself the Justice Department last month sent a parcel bomb to a veterinary centre in Small Dole, injuring four people.

Sussex Police Insp Mike Alderson today condemned last night's incidents.

EVENING ARGUS JAN. '94

ARK ANGEL COMMENT

This is the part of the magazine where you can say what you want. We try to print everything we can - providing it is to do with Animal Liberation, and is not intended to further some other aim - political or otherwise. Articles are reproduced in full - and do not necessarily represent the views of the editors.

Please remember - an article submitted on computer disk (in ASCII / Text format please) will save us a lot of typing, but we welcome your thoughts in any form (especially if they are typed with double-line spacing, or neatly hand-written)!

Plan 2000

by Vernon Coleman

Plan 2000 wasn't conceived. It wasn't carefully nurtured. It wasn't the result of months of plotting and scheming. There were no meetings. It just happened. In all honesty I can't remember exactly how or precisely why or just when. At the editors' request this is an attempt to explain why Plan 2000 has been added to the list of anti vivisection groups.

I've been campaigning against the medical establishment and the pharmaceutical industry since I was a medical student. When, in 1975, I wrote my first book (The Medicine Men), it was an attack on doctors and drug companies that got me into a tremendous amount of trouble. Not that that was anything new. I'd been getting into trouble for refusing to toe the party line (on vivisection and many other issues) since I'd been at medical school.

Over the years my books and articles have brought me a constant stream of mail from readers. (Last year I got an average of around 1000 letters a week). Most of the letters come from people offering or requesting information. But a year or two ago I started getting letters from people who wanted to work with me against vivisection. There were, I suspect, three reasons for this.

First, in a couple of speeches I had voiced the belief that if we all fought together we ought to be able to get vivisection banned by the year 2000. I wanted a specific target because it seemed to me that it might help if we had something to aim at. Give a dream a date and it becomes a realisable ambition.

Second, I had founded the European Medical Journal because I didn't think the existing medical journals were giving writers a fair chance to explain the anti vivisection arguments to the medical profession. And the EMJ was gradually acquiring a readership.

And finally, although it hadn't really changed much over the years, my personal campaign against vivisection had become slightly more effective since I'd started writing national newspaper columns - first in the Daily Star, then in The Sun and finally in The People. The Editor of The People has been enthusiastic about my promoting Plan 2000 in my column and it is partly thanks to my association with the paper that we now have the support of nearly 100 top celebrities - many of whom have never allied themselves with any anti vivisection group before. Some anti vivisectionists look down their noses at the tabloids. But, for a variety of reasons, I believe the tabloids are the best place to do battle for public opinion. And celebrity names do have a big impact. Lots of people will take a greater interest when they see Paul McCartney, Jason Donovan, Linda Lusardi, Russell Grant, Lulu, Michael Mansfield QC, Herbert Lom, Nigel Hawthorne, Penelope Keith, Richard Wilson, Bob Monkhouse, Bridget Bardot, Charlie Watts and many others supporting Plan 2000 - which is, remember, not calling for some modest changes but for an end to all animal experiments.

I wasn't quite sure what to do when people wrote and said they wanted to work with me. I've always been a bit of a loner. I don't fit in well with organisations.

But I did need help with the European Medical Journal and one or two of those who had written (notably Gill Redfearn up in Hull) seemed convinced that working together made sense and that by founding an organisation we could be more effective.

And that's how Plan 2000 began.

Right from the start we have made it clear that we will work with all other anti vivisection organisations. I have a good working relationship with most of the anti vivisection groups (at least, I think I do!). I've always been saddened and annoyed by the fighting that goes on between anti vivisection groups. It has long seemed to me that if we all work together then we'll achieve our aim that much quicker. I'm a fervent abolitionist (a nice way of saying an obsessed fanatic) but I've always been happy to work with anyone who is going in the same direction as I am. My philosophy is that even if an organisation is only fighting for a partial ban on experiments then that's still 'a good thing'. I would be happier if everyone wanted all animal experiments to stop today. But I can't see that I'll help realise my ambition to see experiments stopped by the year 2000 if I spend my time slagging off people who are marching in the same direction, albeit more slowly and with slightly less resolution.

Ironically, my determination to work with as many other groups as possible has got me into yet more trouble.

Plan 2000 is one of the few organisations which operates truly globally. It is as well known (or as unheard of) around the rest of the world as it is here. We cooperate with organisations, politicians and journalists in many different countries. And they cooperate with us. For example, a couple of weeks ago a University in the Far East sent a letter supporting Plan 2000 to the House of Commons. The letter was sent on behalf of 144000 students and over 4000 faculty members.

The drug companies who control much animal experimentation are international and so we too must battle on an international basis. The EMJ has readers in 40 countries and our publications are read all over the world. We have to fight globally or else the drug companies will simply move their activities around if we succeed in imposing new strictures in one part of the world.

Because I have been around for a long time and my books and columns have been translated into around 20 languages (and therefore appear all over the place) I was, a few years ago, invited to be President of a Swiss organisation called International League of Doctors for the Abolition of Vivisection. Reluctantly (holding any sort of office in an organisation isn't really my scene) I agreed. In retrospect I wish I'd been more reluctant.

I subsequently found myself in the middle of a long running argument between some fairly strong willed characters in Europe. Strangely, things weren't helped by the fact that I was known to have worked with organisations such as NAVS, BUAV and Animal Aid and to have encouraged the readers of my columns to contact these groups. I spent much of my presidency struggling to bring people together but quickly found myself stuck in the crossfire. I tried to persuade the protagonists to abandon what I regarded as damaging legal action and ended up being attacked by both sides.

It's a long and very boring story but in the end I got so fed up of the squabbling that I resigned from the presidency of LIMAV - despite a vote from the membership which gave me over 500 votes and the opposition just one vote. I left because I felt I wanted to be able to use all my energy to fight vivisection and not waste any more time trying to be a diplomat. As anyone who knows me will confirm, diplomacy is not my greatest skill.

The battle in Europe is apparently still raging and as a result of my part in it I still get accused of a variety of bizarre and entirely untrue things. It saddens me that so much time and effort is still being wasted. Our opponents must love it all. You don't often see the vivisectionists squabbling in public, do you?

Plan 2000 has steadily built up a good range of contacts around the world. The European Medical Journal now has English and German editions and a total readership which makes it one of the fastest growing medical journals in the world. To try and make sure that libraries subscribe I include non-vivisection anti-establishment material - though probably not as much as I should. We've published a range of booklets (including one report called 'How to Win Debates With Vivisectionists' which is constantly being reprinted around the world and another entitled 'Why Doctors Do More Harm Than Good'). The EMJ's aggressive book publishing programme really begins with its first hardback book - 'Betrayal of Trust' - which comes out this Spring and is packed with information which, I believe, proves that animal experiments are not just scientifically and medically unsound but are also directly responsible for the epidemic of iatrogenesis (doctor induced disease) currently sweeping the western world. For example, the book includes a list of 50 drugs which are known to cause serious problems when given to animals but which are, nevertheless, happily prescribed for human patients.

The bigger, more formally organised groups can do most things much better than Plan 2000 ever could. We don't have the resources or the staff to compete even if we wanted to.

But because it isn't run by a committee and doesn't have formal rules Plan 2000 can act quickly. It doesn't have to worry about upsetting people (and I'm afraid I can be very rude about vivisectionists and those who work with them) and doesn't have to spend time cooperating with lobbyists or being nice to unsympathetic politicians. Plan 2000 is tough and irreverent. Like a lot of other groups it has no staff, pays no expenses and has no offices and so every penny that comes in goes towards paying for real essentials such as printing and postage.

I believe that this battle will be won by public opinion - as were the battles to end slavery and to give the vote to women. Politicians don't lead - they react. Plan 2000 specialises in collecting information and then presenting that information to the public in an easily digestible way.

Gill Redfearn in Hull looks after the administration and the organisation and I decide who to annoy next and how best to achieve our goal - a global end to vivisection by the year 2000. Judging by the enthusiasm with which we are attacked by many who support vivisection it seems reasonable to say that we are proving to be fairly effective.

If you want to know more about Plan 2000 or the European Medical Journal or 'Betrayal of Trust' please do drop a line to:

*Gill Redfearn,
234 Summergangs Road, Hull HU8 8LL, UK.*

A Reply to Zol!

by Tabitha Swale

After reading the article by Zol in the last issue I felt I had to write in response. Her view, that those people who are very involved in animal rights have no right to comment on her meat-eating compromising lifestyle because in doing so make her feel inferior seems to be shared by quite a few activists who avoid criticising others because they don't want to cause bad feelings. I feel that it is about time that this attitude stopped.

I first got involved about six years ago, but only turned vegan about two years ago. This was because it took me so long to realise that there is as much (if not more) cruelty involved in the egg and dairy industries as there is in meat production. Why did it take so long for me to realise this? The reason is that nobody pointed it out to me. I would help out on stalls and travel to demos happily munching on a cheese sandwich, and nobody ever challenged me or started up a debate. I would listen while the more long-term members of the group would talk to the public about vegetarianism and the cruelty involved in the MEAT trade. Is it any wonder that I remained an ignorant animal abuser for so long?

Nowadays, whenever I get into a conversation with vegetarians I always try to introduce the subject of veganism. This is not because I want to appear in any way superior, but simply because I feel that such people have the right to know the full truth about animal abuse, and that they should be able to make an informed decision about their choice of diet and lifestyle. If I feel that someone cares about animals, I naturally want to give them advice about the best ways to reduce animal suffering. Why do people like Zol have such a problem with this? If her argument is followed, then we have no right to criticise vegan vivisectionists, meat-eating anti-bloodsport campaigners, or a hard-working animal rights campaigner who beats and starves their own dog. Zol's assertion that such people should not be criticised does not make sense. If you shouted abuse at someone wearing fur who promptly turned around and informed you that they had a house full of rescued animals, would you apologise for upsetting them and congratulate them on their caring efforts? I think not.

Zol also states that the BUAV and CIWF are "effective", whilst direct action is "counter productive". I agree that the BUAV and CIWF are effective in their aims, after all, their aims are to spread the message that animal exploitation is perfectly acceptable as long as the animals are not treated TOO badly. CIWF do not campaign for veganism or even vegetarianism, they campaign for humane animal farming and slaughter. They want people to be able to eat animal products that have been produced from animals which have been allowed a bit more space to move about, and which have been 'properly stunned' before slaughter. Their leaflets read, "Buy Free-Range Eggs". If CIWF believed in animal rights, ie. the right of sentient creatures to live in freedom and not be exploited unnecessarily by the human race, their leaflets would read, "DON'T Buy Eggs". As for the BUAV, this once respectable organisation has now changed its policy statement from, "Against ALL Animal Experiments" to "Campaigning to End Animal Experiments" and states in its own literature that some animal experiments are necessary. They have also withdrawn all support for the activists who risk prison to break into labs and obtain the photographs which they happily display on THEIR fund raising posters and leaflets.

Finally, Zol points out that she has stopped being "apathetic" now that she has become aware about animal abuse and that the way forward is to get public opinion on our side by, "Using every means to get the truth out". Well, by continuing to eat dead animals even though she reads Arkangel and considers herself to be knowledgeable about animal issues, surely Zol is being extremely apathetic. Also, by talking to people such as her about veganism, etc., surely I am simply "using every means to get the truth out" as she advocates. I am an animal rights activist because I care about animals - not because I want to feel 'superior' to people like Zol.

Arkangel Back Issues, T-Shirts and Postcards

Back Issues of Arkangel: Numbers 2, 3, 4 & 10 are still available - and FREE OF CHARGE! (But please send 50p per magazine to cover the postage.)

T-Shirts: Four different designs are available - the pictures from the covers of Arkangels 5, 7 (as shown here), 8 and 9. Colours: - 5 comes in Yellow, Brown, or tie-dye; 7 is B/W or tie dye, 8 and 9 are B/W. All are available in XL only, and cost £6 each.

Postcards: A set of three 'Surimpressions' postcards donated by Brigitte Jacques. Prices are: 35p each, 3 for £1, 50-99 cards 20p each, 100-499 cards 15p each, and 500 cards or more 12p each. Please add 25p p&p for orders of less than 50 cards.

Order from Arkangel, BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX. Cheques payable to 'Arkangel' please.

Cruelty-Free : Easier Said Than Done?

by Zol

Since I wrote the article that was printed in Arkangel 10, a few things have changed. The conclusion I eventually came to (after two years of struggle) was that vegetarianism (at the least) is the only lifestyle possible for those who have rejected vivisection and other forms of animal exploitation. To believe that someone can work to prevent the cruelty to and torture of animals in labs while condoning the cruelty and torture of modern farming methods is illogical at best and hypocritical at worst. This is a conclusion that I didn't want to accept and tried to avoid. So, I've become a vegetarian - or, strictly speaking, a lacto-vegetarian who occasionally eats fish.

I'm aware that this may not be considered a great improvement by some, but for me it's been a great struggle to get this far. Others can seem to square this circle - I couldn't. Perhaps veganism will be the next step, perhaps not. Having got this far I can certainly see the logic of veganism - battery egg and milk production methods are just as cruel a part of the farming business as rearing animals primarily for slaughter. Eating vegetarian cheese cuts out one animal by-product but uses another. Hens and cows are slaughtered for meat after being intensively bred and farmed for eggs and meat. The whole area of food production is riddled with animal exploitation - even eating only veg is not 'safe' - vegetable crops that have been sprayed with pesticides or herbicides are part of the same process because concerns about the effects of these things on people means that they have been, and are being, tested on animals. However, even having said that, I don't at the moment feel the same compulsion to change to a vegan diet. (Very regrettable on my part I'm sure, but honest.)

However, I can still sympathise with those still eating meat simply because it has taken me two years to force myself this far. However, as I said in my last piece, during my struggle I didn't find the attitude of vegetarian/vegan 'fellow' anti-vivisectionists very helpful, so I'd like to offer some (I hope) more positive advice to those who have not yet managed to give up meat.

1. Subscribe to Compassion in World Farming and make yourself read their magazine Agscene. I found this very hard. Most of us prefer not to know what happens between animal in field and burger on plate.

2. If you go out, try only eating veggy food / eat in veggy restaurant.

3. Treat your meat-eating as a habit like smoking, or as an illness like alcoholism. Give it up slowly if you can't go 'cold turkey'. Have one day a week meat free, then two, then every other day. Eventually, you should be able to cut out meat altogether. If you can go 'cold turkey', do it one day at a time.

4. Stand outside a butcher's shop and really look at the contents. Don't think of meat as 'steak' or 'chops' but as an animal's organs, muscles and legs. Try to add up how many dead animals are lying dismembered on the shelves. If this makes you feel sick, it's working.

5. You may find it easier to give up one product or one animal at a time. Some products like veal or pate de fois gras have such disgusting production methods that if you're eating them there's probably no hope for you anyway! Have some specific reason for giving up each animal. I started with lambs - I made myself think of them running around the fields, and then their journey to the slaughterhouse. You could give up beef because of the danger of 'mad cow' disease. You could make a list of the ingredients in sausages and burgers and put it up near the cooker. In the end I was just eating chicken; finally, the impossibility of reconciling being against battery egg production and eating the end-product forced me into vegetarianism.

6. If your family or friends mock your efforts to change, change your friends. Tell your family that if they can't say anything good, they'd better say 'nowt'.

7. Keep trying. Eventually, feeling guilty about every meat product you eat will pay off - for you and for the animals whose life you will save.

8. Let MP's, MEP's, etc know that you're not happy with modern farming methods. They're generally not very bright and will be swayed more by numbers than by principles. If enough people cut down / cut out meat, at least the lives of animals who will still be eaten can be improved.

PS: In the latest ALFSG mailing there's a note for those using freepost addresses to tell those lovely people carrying out medical research using animals, or selling equipment for butchers' shops, etc what decent people they are (the advice concerns the leaving of fingerprints). May I just add that you never know what might happen if you lick the envelopes or stamps! Evening all.

Missing the Point

by David Phillips

'You do not settle whether an experiment is justified or not by merely showing it is of some use. The distinction is not between useful and useless experiments, but between barbarous and civilised behaviour. Vivisection is a social evil, because if it advances human knowledge, it does so at the expense of human character...' - George Bernard Shaw.

The real question in the 'vivisection debate' is not why we are opposed to animal experiments, but how we are going to put an end to them. Some of the recent articles in Arkangel seem to suggest that all we have to do is prove that vivisection is medical fraud, and that will be an end to the matter. But here it is they who are 'missing the point'. The point is that it is actions, not words, which bring about any real change in society. A quick look at the history of other struggles shows that those in power cannot be persuaded to do anything which is not in their own interest. Merely proving that vivisection is not a valid science is not enough. After all, the vivisectors already know this, or don't care, and the politicians will only act if and when their positions are threatened.

Only by building a large and active movement of opposition, will we ever see an end to animal experiments. Therefore our main aim should be to encourage others to become active campaigners. Experience shows that it is almost always the animal suffering which inspires people to become active, and the reasons for this are obvious.

It may be possible to convince the public and politicians that vivisection is a fraud and hazardous to health, but this is hardly going to stir up a mass-movement. Vivisection would just be another in a long list of health dangers, competing with issues such as global warming, ozone depletion, food contamination, nuclear power, acid rain... the list goes on. Moreover, telling people about health dangers hasn't exactly achieved amazing results in other fields. Most people know about the dangers of tobacco, alcohol and poor diet, yet these remain the biggest causes of premature death in the western world.

With the population so apathetic in the face of all these known hazards, it seems a bit optimistic to expect people to raise much of a fuss about the health dangers of vivisection, however serious. It may take a long time for animal experiments to be stopped on moral grounds or because they are no longer profitable, but waiting for abolition as a health issue will take much longer.

The recent articles from 'scientific' anti-vivisectionists seem to rely entirely on one main argument to support their view, which is that animal experiments have continued and increased, and this means that the ethical arguments have failed. But the medical fraud issue is just as old as the moral argument, and has been used repeatedly over the years, with the same results as the moral arguments. In the early years of vivisection, public pressure forced the governments of the day to set up two Royal Commissions, in 1875 & 1906, to hear arguments for and against animal experiments. The anti-vivisectionists who gave evidence included some of the most highly respected members of the medical profession, who gave numerous examples of the ways in which the experiments were not only useless, but misleading and potentially dangerous. The reason that the Royal Commissions failed to act was that they were packed with vivisectors and their political friends, so that the outcome was a foregone conclusion anyway. Nobody should imagine that the political situation is any different almost a century later. In going down this same dead end road it is the medical fraud campaigners who should examine their tactics.

In the early years of this century, Dr. Walter Hadwen was one of the most respected medical practitioners of his day. His work to expose the dangers and the lies behind vaccination led him to become one of the most influential of the early anti-vivisectionists, and he used his professional status to condemn his vivisectioning colleagues for what he saw as its 'damaging effect upon the art and practise of medicine'. But Dr. Hadwen was also for 20 years the editor of the 'Abolitionist', the campaigning magazine of the BUAV. In his public campaigning he chose to emphasise the moral evils of animal experiments, understanding the futility of endless public debates about the scientific validity of individual experiments.

Today, this should still be the main role of the medical fraud argument, especially with regard to science students about to be indoctrinated by the vivisection establishment. The scientific facts may be useful in some campaigns, but to actually base public campaigning on science is a waste of time and effort.

What some campaigners have done is to mix two issues, which are in some ways contradictory. This is typified by the argument and counter argument we have seen over the years: (i) that using the medical fraud issue implies that it is morally acceptable to use animals, (ii) that using the ethical argument implies that vivisection is a valid science. Most people don't set out with these intentions, but it is important to understand that such contradictions are bound to cause problems.

If that is the case, what is the reason for the patronising tone of some of the recent articles in Arkangel from groups such as ARK? Chris Pedler of ARK announces that he has awoken 'to the reality of the situation', but in fact he offers no real evidence to back up his argument, except the usual one, that vivisection continues, so the ethical arguments have failed.

Interestingly, he also argues that because the 'pro-vivisection community presents the issue as a human health issue... therefore it is a human health issue, and has to be tackled as such'. Since when did we let the vivisectionists decide what the issue should or should not be? Usually it is a safe bet to do exactly the opposite. The fact is that the vivisectionists don't need to prove anything. They will continue torturing animals until they are stopped, and would probably torture humans too, but for the fact that this is morally unacceptable. Debating with them about science is exactly what they want. It allows them to appear respectable, and makes their terrible crimes against animals seem a trivial question of good or bad science.

The rest of Chris Pedler's article descends, typically, into a personal attack against Peter Singer, which does not help the debate, and only serves to discredit Chris's argument. Anyone who has been involved in animal liberation knows that infiltrators and informers are not rare. But for some people, an infiltrator has come to mean anyone who does not agree with their point of view, or a convenient way of disguising the weaknesses in their own argument.

Although the articles by W Samuel Purves and Alan Hood were more reasonable, they still suffered from a lack of logical explanation for their point of view. If the ethical argument has failed to stop vivisection, they offer no evidence that the medical argument has been or will be any more successful. It could equally be said that the medical fraud argument has failed for over a century. The problem isn't that moral or scientific arguments have failed. In the past the mistake was in believing that vivisection could be stopped by using reason and persuasion at all.

Because the point still stands that it is not really important why we are opposed to animal experiments, it is what we do about them that matters. The moral arguments may be a century old, but the modern animal liberation movement is really only about 20 years old, and in that time it has grown beyond what anyone dared to hope. Over recent years, activists have developed a strategy which involves taking the fight right to the vivisectionists doorstep. This is now the best hope for animals in laboratories, probably the only hope.

Vivisection depends very much on secrecy and anonymity. The vivisectionists know that the public would be outraged if they saw first hand, or even regularly on TV, what goes on in laboratories. The millions spent on extra security by the drug companies and universities shows that what they fear is not words nor reasoned debate, but exposure to the public of their experiments, and the angry backlash that this would and has provoked against companies and individuals. Activists have consistently broken through this veil of secrecy, and exposed the horrors behind. It is the photographs, video film and documents which have brought about the beginnings of a mass movement of opposition to vivisection. A good example of this is the Pennsylvania Primates video, which was removed by ALF activists from the University of Pennsylvania. The film of baboons in head injury experiments was seen across the USA, and led to a public outcry. What was significant was that the vivisectionists made no attempt to justify the experiments and the laboratory was quickly closed down. In the UK there have been similar examples, such as the video from the raid on the Churchill Hospital in Oxford, which showed pigs in irradiation experiments. Again the experiments were stopped.

Alan Hood is right to say that 'vivisection is a profit motivated industry', but again the only way to tackle this is to make the industry unprofitable, thereby taking away the motive. There are many ways that activists are using economic sabotage, from pickets and boycotts, to damaging the property of the companies and individuals involved. These tactics are being used on a large scale, even if the press and the police are now trying to cover up the extent of the campaign. True, these are often wealthy multinational concerns, but it is only a matter of time before using animals becomes more trouble than it is worth. Because the drug companies and the medical mafia don't really need animal experiments, they will soon find other ways of pushing their poisons onto the market. That is not to say that the suffering this causes to humans is any less evil than animal experiments, it is just to point out that one does not depend on the other.

Another line of attack has been to expose the individual experimenters and their work, which has the effect of removing their anonymity, and in Britain at least, this has been very successful. Colin Blakemore has been for many years the mouthpiece of the vivisection community, defending his gruesome experiments to anyone who would listen. Last year, Blakemore appeared on Channel 4's Public Eye programme. He admitted that, had he known the level of harassment he would receive, he would never have started experimenting on animals. As the vivisection establishment have stepped up their security, the experimenters and the company bosses have been receiving 'home visits', which is usually no more than a

At the time of writing this report the latest and newest design of devices were despatched on 16th February 1994 to people involved in or responsible for vivisection, including the most senior staff of Boots. As with most of the devices since October 1993 delivery was to home addresses. This design comprised 'a metal mouse trap primed and fitted with razor blades... each device has been contaminated with the HIV-infected blood stolen last year...'. Strangely, there has been little media coverage apart from some local newspapers. More censorship perhaps?

With 4 quite different types of device so far it would seem that the Justice Department is here to stay, at least for the foreseeable future. It should therefore be made clear that the ALF press officer does not act as a spokesperson for the J.D. but as a recognised news agency operation, is prepared to receive and channel their news in the same way as that from any other animal liberation group. The policy has already been made clear: the Animal Liberation Front cannot condone the use of such devices but, knowing the extent and horror of animal abuse, fully understands the anger and frustration that leads people to take radical actions of this nature.

To sum up, to the end of February there have been 14 video-devices, plus 3 hoax versions; 13 poster tubes; 4 timed incendiaries plus 4 hoaxes with no packages at all; 10 mouse trap devices... a total of 41 operational devices plus 7 hoaxes.

THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT A POINT OF VIEW

by Robin Lane

At the present time there is a fair amount of discussion concerning the Justice Department, and their postal-device campaign.

While animals are being tortured to death in laboratories and murdered in their millions, little appears to be bringing their plight to an end. Thousands of concerned individuals are engaged in the struggle to bring an end to this horror: Vegans, vegetarians and certain meat-eating members of the public are involved. The fight is not exclusive to the animal rights movement.

There is a rising awareness amongst people, and there have been successes, but progress has been relatively slow - which is what has brought about the emergence of the Justice Department. Little is known about this group but it is generally accepted that it is a genuine animal liberation group who have decided that enough is enough. It is, of course, unlikely that they will be little more than a thorn in the side of the gigantic animal-abuse machine but that is not to say that they will not achieve a degree of success against certain animal-abusing (and potential animal-abusing) individuals.

My concern is whether any and every action in defence of animals is justifiable. AIDS, for instance, is a modern day horror story and for the Justice Department to threaten to spread the virus is, in my opinion, indefensible. Apart from that there is no conclusive proof that the AIDS virus originated in a laboratory. In December last year, devices were sent in poster tubes said to contain needles packed in explosive material. Surely postal workers, who handle the packages, and secretaries, who open them, would be most at risk.

The purpose of the postal-device campaign seems to be one of a mixture of retribution and deterrence. What worries me most is the terrible danger that some innocent person (or indeed animal) could be harmed by one of these devices. If this were to happen, would it be a case of the "Oh well, there are casualties in all wars, better luck next time" mentality? I believe few people would weep at the death or injury of an animal abuser other than those close to them and possibly other animal abusers - that, people could argue, would be justice. But I also believe that the injury or death of any person who is not directly involved with the abuse of animals would indeed be an injustice.

ANIMAL LIBERATION AND THE HARD OPTION

By Annie Lib.

It's good to see that Black Sheep (author of the article 'Animal rights and the Easy Option' in Arkangel 10) has thought about strategies for the movement, and what will achieve the best results for animals. However, I feel that this article is written from one angle only, which Black Sheep openly states: "...the most important lesson we can learn, it seems to me, is a political one; work from within". Perhaps a lot of people agree, and this is what I consider an animal rights objective, where we are in the business of conversion.

There are some people who are not working towards animal rights, or are into conversion, because they believe we are working from a huge disadvantage point already. The system we live under is specifically designed to control people. As soon as anything ever becomes a threat it is outlawed, or the people involved oppressed still further; the unions, particularly the NUM, or the new laws to stop hunt saboteurs, for example. The ruling class, who have spent centuries building up a system to profit and protect themselves, are not going to allow the smallest threat rise against them. I can't think of one useful piece of legislation that has helped animals, for instance, badger baiters are not deterred!

On the other hand, Britain has some of the toughest criminal legislation in Europe; its intelligence service is also one of the most highly developed in the world; we have one of the largest percentages of people in the population in prison; and in Britain 95% of the wealth and land in this country is owned by 5% of the people. The list goes on and on to prove that we are far from living in a 'free' country, where working from within is plausible. Black Sheep regularly reflects on the "comparative successes of the equal rights movements", ie of women's and ethnic minority's rights. Black Sheep admits that they "still have a long way to go", but I would say that the so-called achievements in these areas is superficial, as is any work within the capitalist system. Women and ethnics (?) may now have slightly better chances of getting jobs, or they may even be able to be seen to attain positions of relative authority; but since when has becoming more of a part of the abusive society we live in been a success for a true liberation movement! I doubt if all the 7,000 people deported in 1992 or the victims of the 7,800 racial attacks in the UK in 1991 (both vast increases over the past few years) will be willing to acknowledge these "successes"?

The authorities are happy to see us believing we have achieved great successes in terms of various rights and liberation movements through conversion. The capitalist system can adapt quite easily with consumer changes. In terms of animal suffering, people often quote successes regarding cosmetic testing, or the growth of vegetarianism. The consumers were given the highly acclaimed vegetarian 'wonder' food Quorn (produced by an ecologically destructive and vivisection based company) which was tested on animals and includes animal ingredients. Consumers were also fed Boots' cruelty-free image, hiding the face of vivisection they heavily indulge in. Looked at closely, the large amount of vegetarians in this country (7% it is put at) often still eat white meat (chicken, and other vegetables with wings) and still many more eat fish. The vegan population is put at 200,000 - compared with at least 600 million animals killed each year in the UK for food, it fades into relative insignificance.

Any time we try to produce truthful and revealing information, distribute it, and witness a positive reaction, the authorities will react with new laws (Public Order Acts - how many A/R campaigners have now been nicked for simply holding placards and giving out leaflets? Several hundred times this has happened, I suspect). The system will also flood the population with propaganda; witness the millions of pounds spent by the Meat & Livestock Commission on promotion including magazine and billboard adverts! I am not dismissing public campaigning or education completely, and I am not suggesting we have made no gains, or that we have no hope. This is where direct action steps in, because its whole purpose is not, as Black Sheep mistakenly presumes, to get "the cause on the political agenda" or to get the "support of the public". Its purpose is to stop animal abuse; its purpose is animal liberation. This is where people work for animal liberation, as opposed to animal rights, and where some people argue the most.

Black Sheep raises an important point that must be answered. It is; "It's a question of scale: the number of people/actions involved. Either everyone does it or no-one should If all you can manage is small scale actions involving a few night stalking activists (no matter how many of those actions may be taking place separately) then forget it until such a time (if the time comes) that you know there is no other way left open to you".

Obviously, I cannot speak for all activists, but based on my knowledge, I would say that as far as animal liberation activists are concerned, they believe that there has never been any real alternative route open to us, and that they wish everyone would carry out actions. They believe that the time to act for animal liberation is now. The idea of "forgetting it" horrifies activists, because without direct action, literally thousands and thousands of animals rescued year in, year out, would be dead; and labs would be operating without their very large additional security costs; and the department stores would still be stocked up on furs; the meat industry would be operating without fear (having kept all the hundreds of millions of pounds they have been deprived of due to economic sabotage); and many more animal abusers would still be operating, or would be continuing unabated.

The suggestion of large raids of people going into Boots labs in daylight in front of the press would simply involve large numbers of people going to prison! This method was tried, and failed (although it was without the press) in the 80's by the various regional animal liberation leagues. Dozens of people ended up doing prison sentences. The idea of getting large amounts of people involved in any constructive activity at the moment is unimaginable with the movement being as apathetic as it is. Black Sheep says that: "whatever we do, we must remember that it is absolutely essential that we get through to as many people as possible". On the campaigning angle, that is an essential point and our tactics must constantly be assessed. But, at the end of the day we must ask ourselves, in view of the brief points I have tried to make (and attempted to back up with minimal examples); are we in a political lobbying and public conversion movement... or an Animal Liberation Movement?

What's Wrong?

by Emilie E:son, Press Officer of the DBF

That's a good question. What's really wrong with the Swedish Animal Liberation Front - the Djurens Befrielse Front (DBF)? Lately several letters have arrived at the DBF wondering why there aren't any reports about successful direct actions. The answer is easy, there haven't been any.

Less and less people have been interested to take part in DBF's work. Money, cars and homes for rescued animals has been a problem for a long time now. Is the DBF dead? The answer is NO, not as long as I'm around and I'm trying to get things to move, but it isn't easy since I'm on my own now.

You might wonder how this could happen, in the UK, Canada and USA there are ALF groups working. Well, Swedish people are different. Here, people couldn't care less about animals. Here, people don't want to take any risks at all. People just want to be safe.

Until the DBF is back in business I'll conduct various campaigns and/or take part in other (legal/illegal) groups' campaigns. As usual I conduct investigations and write articles about animal rights, and of course, all AR prisoners get letters and postcards. I wish I could do more, but a one-man DBF is not effective. The only excuse I have for not being able to do more is that I've suffered and struggled with poor health lately. That is not a very good excuse because one should go on fighting anyway until the very last breath. It's really tearing me apart not to be able to work the night shift. The DBF has been different from the ALF in the UK, here the press officer takes part in various actions (make a note about that ARNI).

I wish it was possible to 'import' some of you AR activists so we could start all over again. Many years have passed since the DBF was formed in early 1985 and during this time I've got to know many activists, mainly in the UK, but also in the USA and Canada, and I must say you are made of the right stuff and I have a great respect for you all. Every time you manage to carry out a successful action you perform a miracle, yes you do. I know all about how much hard work is behind every successful direct action.

I wish every AR prisoner a better 1994. I wish all activists success and safety. And I wish freedom to you who couldn't cope with being imprisoned any more. Most of all I wish a better year for all animals all over the world.

*Emilie E:son, Djurens Befrielse Front,
Box 2051, S-265 02 Astorp, Sweden
Phone +46 42 576 93*

All that is necessary for the triumph of evil is that good people do nothing.
(Edmund Burke)

ACTION INFORMATION POUR LES DROITS DES ANIMAUX (A.I.D.A.) (Action Information for Animal Rights)

A.I.D.A. was set up in May 1993. Our organization aims at informing the general public about all the aspects of animal exploitation. We will use any lawful mean so that the principal of equality be no longer applied only to the human species but also to all non-human animals. A.I.D.A. deals with every animal abuse (vivisection, hunting, fishing...), but we dedicate much of our efforts to the development of vegetarianism in France. Therefore, we work in collaboration with foreign animal rights organizations: PETA - People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (USA), Animal Aid (GB), The VSUK - Vegetarian Society of the United Kingdom (GB) and CIWF - Compassion In World Farming (GB).

Following a recent claim by A.I.D.A. that we made no difference between humans exploiting animals at that, no matter their political opinion, A.I.D.A. will work with every dedicated animal protection people, the so-called animal liberation group based in Lyons and called les "Cahiers antisp_cistes lyonnais" publicly criticized two A.I.D.A. members.

Since A.I.D.A.'s policy consists in working/collaborating with other French animal protection/defence organizations no matter their political opinion (provided human politics are not mixed with animal rights), they like to say that A.I.D.A. members are ready to collaborate with Nazi people. The problem is that they cannot understand that we will also work with "right wing" or anarchist people, provided all these people do not mix human politics and animal rights. The problem with the Lyons people is that they have difficulties to (or are reluctant to) free themselves from the traditional right-left conception of politics.

For these people, especially David Olivier, animal liberation is a fight that must be more ideological and political as they wrote in their last bulletin ! For this purpose, they link the anti-racist and feminist movements in France and attend any demonstration carried out by these meat eaters, betraying the animals while collaborating with humans who commit the cruel halal slaughter. On top of it, they are proud not to take part in the very few animal protection/defence demonstration because they say all the animal protection people are rotten. Unlike Arkangel policy to encourage debates, these people have denied one A.I.D.A. member the right to express his views on the animal liberation struggle and they do not accept debates in their magazine.

These people think they are the world "leaders" of the animal liberation movement and have much contempt for any other group that strikes against animal abuse and which is not made up of left-wing or anarchist people. They say that the future of the animal liberation movement will come from France and Italy ! For them, the movement in the UK and the United States is losing ground. Maybe, but there are approximately 50,000 vegetarians in France for various reasons against millions in the UK and the USA ! Some of these three people and their friends do not hesitate to wear leather shoes (for financial reasons) while publicly claiming to work for animal liberation ! For fear of being mixed with the "ecologist" people, they purposely do not print their brochure on recycled paper and cannot understand the obvious link between environment destruction and animal suffering. They work, as they say, to develop the anti-speciesist philosophy among the French intellectual elite. How many people do they think they will change and how many animals will they really and physically save or help ?

These people work for their ideas, for purism and do not realize they are specist when they demonstrate hand in hand with meat eaters working only for human rights. Their attitude may well may damage A.I.D.A.'s dedicated work to develop the animal rights movement in France. They are also making ridiculous the international animal rights movement and the genuine people working for animal rights all over the world. As already too many people told A.I.D.A., the Lyons people are putting off not only the general public but also the people in the animal protection societies who are likely to become more radical and vegetarian.

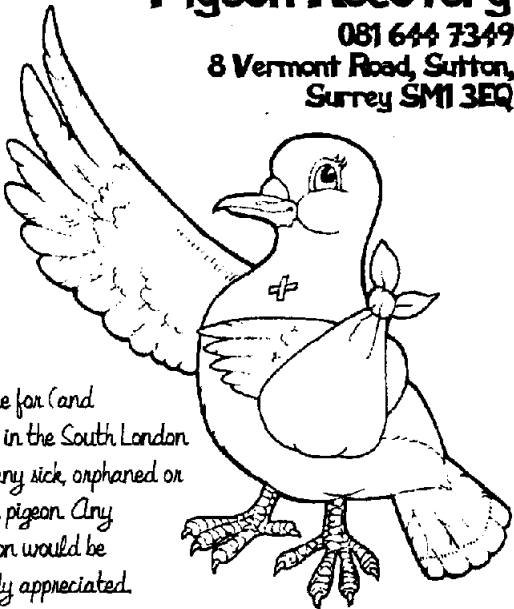

Sincerely yours for animal liberation.

A.I.D.A. Committee

S. Hennion E. Moreau C. Moreau S. Gabbriellini

A.I.D.A. c/o MBE no200, 117, bld Voltaire, 75011 Paris

Pigeon Recovery
081 644 7349
8 Vermont Road, Sutton,
Surrey SM1 3EQ

We care for (and collect in the South London area) any sick, orphaned or injured pigeon. Any donation would be sincerely appreciated.

Some Reactions...

by Jez Caudle

I have just finished reading "The Vivisection Debate" in Arkangel number 10. David Lane's article was well written and well argued, and to answer his questions:

The issue of warfare experimentation is outlined in the Cruel Deception by Robert Sharpe. He gives examples of warfare experiments that are sickening and disturbing and makes the point that they are of no human benefit whatsoever. Warfare experimenters cannot hide behind the lie put out by "medical" vivisectors that not only are they saving human lives, but they are saving animals lives as well. The occurrence of animals being shot with high powered military hardware then reported to vets must be very small and how many people take rabbits with them on violent demonstrations when CS gas is used? On the subject of wounding experiments -

"... doctors at the Royal Victoria Hospital in Belfast who have had to deal with the real victims of a continuing war, believe the Porton Down experiments are of no value to them in treating human patients." (The Cruel Deception, Page 229. Dr Robert Sharpe.)

And if David saw a recent programme on the design of bullets he would have seen weapons technicians firing bullets into a gel that mimics the human body very accurately. But even this is not enough for the arms industry, they know that only by actually shooting the bullet at someone will they learn what actually happens. This is why we have so many small scale wars, it's just practice for the big one.

General Motors stopped crash testing with pigs due to moral outrage. But this moral outrage came from the fact that anatomically correct crash models (I hate the term "dummies", it comes from the word dumb which is the inability to speak and is now used to label people with learning difficulties. Just because you can't speak it doesn't mean you're stupid) are available and that they give the closest results you are likely to see. A pig is different to a human and would not respond in the same way as a human, mentally or physically. If you are driving along and sense that you are going to crash your heart rate increases and you tense yourself for the crash.

On the subject of animals into space, vivisection again could not be relied on. When the first humans came back to earth they were kept in sealed living quarters to see what happened to them. The scientists were frightened that they may have picked up a virus floating in space or that the radiation they were exposed to would mutate viruses that they already had and spread amongst us down here on earth. All this despite the fact that animals had gone into space and had also been exposed to samples of moon rock.

The case against vivisection must always start with the moral questions:

Animals cannot talk, walk or do the normal things that humans do. So if it's all right to experiment on them it should also be justified to experiment of those with severe learning difficulties. After all, they cannot talk, walk or do the normal things that humans do either. (Although what goes on in the brain of an animal or of a person with severe learning difficulties will never be known).

If humans destroy their own health by smoking, drinking too much, eating the wrong foods and not taking exercise - why should animals suffer? And if humans destroy the environment - causing cancers and making us more susceptible to disease, who should suffer?

But these moral questions are only a precursor to the main argument because the vivisectionist will wheel in the arthritis sufferer who has lived a healthy life and still suffers, the cancer child, etc. The only way to deal with this is with history and the medical facts. On the 7th January 1950 the Cancer Research Campaign placed an add in the Times appealing for money; the byline read: "We're winning the fight against cancer. Will YOU join in the victory?"

The New England Journal of Medicine reported in 1982: "The main conclusion we draw is that some 35 years of intense effort focused largely on improving treatment must be judged a qualified failure. ... we are losing the war against cancer." (Quoted from the Cruel Deception, Dr Robert Sharpe.)

The number of people dying from cancer increases each year, the vast majority of vivisection has occurred since the second world war yet human health in the 1st World is getting worse, not better.

Recently Dr Peter Simmons of Doctors in Britain Against Animal Experiments (DBAE) beat Dr Mark Matfield of the Research Defence Society and Myc Riggulsford of the Research For Health Charities Group in a debate at the Oxford Brookes Debating Society. DBAE argues against vivisection on scientific grounds; they are taking on the vivisection industry head on and winning. We should follow their lead.

Black Sheep's article was amazing - I must say that I agree with everything that was written. Presentation is more important than content to most people, just look in someone's shopping trolley the next time you visit a supermarket. The point that the animal exploitation business is not scared of a few smelly hippies is very true.

I am a computer programmer by trade, I like nothing more than wearing a shirt and tie and I take a bit of time in my appearance - ironed shirts, etc. Where I worked people soon found out that I was vegan, and when I sat and ate bourbon biscuits there were cries of, "Foul!" "How can they be vegan?" was the question. Well they were and the myth that vegan food is boring and very limited was exploded. When people found out that I sabbed hunts I was inundated with news of hunt meets and information about supporters as well as questions about violence. As these people knew me they were prepared to listen.

I also feel that people who are fully immersed in animal rights have problems communicating with people who aren't. I became a hunt saboteur at college and spent all my time with other animal rights people. When I started work I had to learn to talk about things other than sabbing, and quite frankly this was difficult. (One of the difficulties that sab groups face - the high turn over of people - may be due to new people not being able to join in conversations about past glories.) This can lead to problems when facing up to the real world and meeting "real" people who take part in the animal exploitative society.

I have no difficulty sitting at a table with meat eaters and have a meal. What I do object to is them waving meat in my face. By sitting at the table I am showing them that there is an alternative to eating meat, that it is healthy and it tastes good. It also gives you a chance to put your view across, but this has to be done a professional manner.

"Animal Liberation by All Means Necessary" says the slogan. Would the wearers of the t-shirt be prepared to wear smart clothes, stop spitting and swearing, lose the dreadlocks and silly clothes and say to the public by their very demeanour - "I am like you, you are like me. Animal liberation in your own life takes no effort at all, just a few minutes thought every now and then."

I certainly hope so because, as the Black Sheep article pointed out, when Lee entered the Boots store at the demo in Nottingham nobody thought he was an animal rights "extremist". As he walked into the store he was verbally abused. When he pulled the placard out from under his jumper the crowd cheered, and on being expelled from the shop those doing the abusing apologised (he had been having personal problems and the crowd reaction cheered him up immensely, he still goes about his minute of glory to this day).

The establishment is not frightened of violence, hippies or trade unions - it will paint them in any which way it likes until public support crumbles and fades. But it is frightened of articulate, educated (self or otherwise), ordinary people because they have the power in their hands. It's just a shame that they have never used it to its full potential.

The Vegan Society : The First 50 Years

1994 sees the British Vegan Society celebrating its 50th Anniversary. Since its inception in 1944, the Society (the world's first vegan society) has matured into a respected educational charity employing one part-time and two full-time members of staff, publishing a professionally designed magazine, and owning its own office premises.

It continues to be the main focal point for those seeking information and advice. As awareness increases, so do the enquiries - from schoolchildren, prospective vegans, journalists, nutritionists, teachers, prison officials and food manufacturers.

As part of the celebrations the Society will be launching a new promotional video - presented by rasta poet and performer Benjamin Zephaniah - highlighting the benefits of a vegan diet for the environment, Third World, human health, and animals.

The Summer 1994 issue of The Vegan - the Society's quarterly magazine - will contain a special pull-out section comprising: a history of the Society, a feature on the evolution of the vegan shopping guide (1954 - present), a complete copy of the first Vegan (published November 1944), and messages of congratulation/support from groups, companies and celebrities. The issue will be published in mid-June. Don't forget to try the recipe for the 'Vegan Society 50th Anniversary Cake'!

Hunt Saboteurs and the Police: Sleeping with the Enemy

Why HSA Committee members have more in common with the police than they do with hunt saboteurs

by Gareth Gee - former Editor "Howl" magazine

(NB: I wrote this piece following my decision to quit as editor of Howl magazine, and it explains my reasons for quitting and also serves as a response to the HSA's recent letter to senior police officers entitled: "Why the police have more in common with hunt saboteurs than they do with the Home Secretary".)

As Paul Davis rightly asserts, one of the few statements that can safely be said about relations between hunt saboteurs and the police is that things have not always gone smoothly. What Paul Davis and several of his colleagues on the HSA Committee overlook - or simply can't perceive - is the one-way nature of these "relations".

For years the police have been detaining saboteurs, hassling them, wasting their time with stupid questions, pushing them around, locking them up, prosecuting them, monitoring them, telling lies in court about them, scaring them, hurting them. This is an endlessly repeating pattern that Paul Davis et al seem unable to see. The police have always worked against hunt saboteurs.

Police violence is nothing new, nor is it employed exclusively in the treatment of hunt saboteurs in Britain. In South America, the police round up and execute homeless children. In Turkey, the police use bottles to anally rape members of opposition groups. And here in Britain, the police beat up suspects, manufacture evidence and put innocent people in jail.

Of course, even among hunt saboteurs there are those who will disagree, citing the example of PC Decent, the helpful Bobby who is "on our side", hates hunting, never gives sabs any hassle, and so on.

There are two points to remember here. Firstly, one of your helpful copper's most important duties is to provide the police's Animal Rights National Index (ARNI) with as much information about sabs as possible. Being nice to you is just the officer's way of getting you talking.

Secondly, the exceptions only serve to reinforce the rule. Individual acts of police reasonableness (or the backing down of the Crown Prosecution Service in a handful of cases) do not constitute (as Paul Davis puts it) a "genuine working relationship".

Furthermore, the fact that the police don't illegally arrest sabs as often as they used to isn't because of a desire by officers to work in harmony with sabs. It's because, recently, more saboteurs have refused to be ordered about, kept silent when arrested, said nothing in the interview room, and sued the police for damages at a later date.

And there's another reason why sabs have had less police aggravation just recently. The police know that the law is changing in their favour. All they have to do is to sit tight, and soon they will once again be able to get stuck in to re-criminalised saboteurs with new zeal and little to fear from the courts - just like the old days.

Because they are almost always the victims of police violence, most ordinary working class people perceive the situation as it really is. They know all about the Birmingham Six, the West Midlands Crime Squad, the bent coppers at Stoke Newington. And those at the top of the pile - the ruling elite who invented, order and control the police - they too understand the true relationship between police and opposition groups. After all, the rich and powerful employ the police, and they are, in the end, the chief beneficiaries of police activity. But only the middle classes - the educated, the affluent and the successful, are able to perceive police officers as equals, colleagues and friends.

From an informed working class perspective, this is what is truly incredible about the present situation. No matter what the police do, middle class hunt saboteurs are unable to see the pattern. The explanations we are given by our own "saboteur elite" is proof of this: "most coppers are just ordinary people doing a job"; "sabs are equally to blame for any 'problems'"; "we mustn't generalise about the police"; and so on. There is a bias in favour of seeing the police not as a part of our opposition but as being "like us". The view is that sabs are people, the police are people, so with a bit of "give and take" we can all get on together.

The people I'm criticising will read this and, no matter what arguments are set out here, will say, "All this stuff about class and the police is nonsense; hunt sabotage is nothing to do with politics." And herein lies the problem, and the reason why we may well fail. Our self-appointed "leaders", those who have recently been issuing "commonsense" leaflets about law and order and sending crawling letters to senior police officers, see the world only in terms of individuals and isolated events. On meeting police officers at a hunt, for example, middle class saboteurs realise that they share a code and a language with these people. They see the police not as the agents of social control that they truly are, but as the protective force of "law and order". Where one might expect loathing and hatred towards the police for all their countless crimes, what actually emerges is a desire to "work things out together". For those who have always been on the same side as the police in other areas of life, hatred doesn't come easily, even in the killing fields where the police have always assisted the hunts.

Conversely, middle class sabs do feel hatred at the sight of terriermen, with whom they have nothing in common. True, the police might beat up blacks, fit up the Irish, kill the occasional deportee, and so on. But terriermen - they hurt little creatures! And to make matters worse, the terrierman is so inarticulate that he can't even provide the media with a comprehensible excuse for his cruelty - ugh!

This is the real reason why the phrase "terrier scum" is okay with the sab elite (it refers to members of a different class) but "cop bastards" isn't.

These misplaced loyalties are the undoing of most opposition groups, and it looks like hunt saboteurs will be next. Years ago, trade unions lined up against the state, demanding full employment, decent wages, workers' rights and a greatly reduced working week. Now the unions have been fully incorporated into the system, and their power has been controlled and nullified. These days unions are content to squabble amongst themselves over pay rises which are, at best, an insult.

And now it's the turn of the hunt saboteurs - "direct action against all bloodsports" is our slogan, but how much longer will it remain our policy? The rush to build bridges caused the most damage to our "public reputation"?

Of course, the vital point is that this idea of a "public reputation" is in fact nonsense. If Thames Valley sabs choose as their friend an ex-Nazi recruiting sergeant, that's their business, and ordinary people continue, as ever, to oppose bloodsports. They aren't idiots, they know that hunting is cruel and wrong, and they won't be swayed by a set of headlines. If people were so easily influenced, the BFSS, with their greater numbers and their friends in high places, would by now have won over the hearts and minds of everyone.

Of more concern to us now, for it has been done in our name, is the HSA's own recent propaganda drive. As well as Paul Davis' bizarre letter to senior police officers, the HSA has also issued a leaflet entitled "Ban Hunting, Not Hunt Saboteurs". Could it be that the HSA Committee now has more in common with fascists and moralisers than it does with its own direct-action / anarchist roots? The leaflet reads:

"Michael Howard is proposing to strip the police of their traditional impartiality and turn them into little more than lackeys of the hunt..."

with the police, the desire to negotiate with MP's and the Government (in a word, to make compromises) will be the undoing of hunt sabotage, just as it was with the Left, trade unions, CND and countless other groups who fell for the idea of "being included" (otherwise known as "divide and rule"). To put it crudely, the middle class liberals, through their naive need to "get on" with people they ought to hate, are fing things up yet again.

Internally, this misguided urge to compromise presents other problems. I am still derided for publishing, in Howl magazine, the article entitled "All coppers are bastards". HSA Committee members accuse me of unnecessarily involving the HSA in a political debate, and of making it impossible for them to "get on" with journalists. Remember that this committee still refuses to exclude Margaret Flynn, one-time fascist activist, from HSA membership. She's a "good sab", you see, and they can "get on" with her, so that's really all that matters.

I am also accused of giving the HSA a "bad press", of ruining saboteurs' public image with these articles and letters about the police. It's true that "ACAB" was reported in the press - in Shooting News, to be precise. However, Margaret Flynn (not wanting to be outdone) got us on the front page of Today ("Nazi Past of Hunt Death Saboteur"), with follow-up stories in all the Tory papers. With the benefit of hindsight, which of these stories

"We believe that police officers should be allowed to do what they joined the force to do - catch criminals and try and make this country a better, safer place to live..."

Clearly this language doesn't reflect the experience of hunt saboteurs. This isn't sabs speaking; this is the language of the BNP reactionary, the right-wing policymaker and the Sun editorial. How has the HSA Committee acquired the right to make such infantile, uncritical statements about the police on our behalf?

And who, exactly, are these "criminals" that they reckon the police should be catching? Would they include those who were imprisoned for their "crimes" at the Cheshire Beagles' kennels following Mike Hill's death? After all, the HSA's apparent new-found friends, the media and the police, were very adamant that these people were criminals, and it was police officers and journalists who worked together to put away the "Doddleston rioters". And all the people who've been involved in Animal Liberation "crimes" - should the police have been out catching them, too? Or are we just talking about the "crimes" committed by shoplifters, squatters, travellers, blacks, the Irish?

Maybe sabs should make it easy for the police, and stay at home until they've cleared their backlog of unsolved "crime"?

VEGANISM

by Louise Wallis

For as long as there has been an animal rights movement, there has been debate about 'Direct Action' - a highly emotive issue which continues to occupy a significant amount of space in Arkangel. So deep run the feelings that the mere mention of these two 'buzz' words can spark off bitter and acrimonious debate - sending previously calm and mild-mannered individuals into paroxysms of rage and hostility. The very expression 'direct action' has become highly loaded, conjuring up powerful images - whether it be the affectionate archetype of courageous, selfless activists risking imprisonment for the sake of animals; or the cynical media stereotype of people-hating, balaclava-clad bombers. This extreme polarisation of views means that we associate its use either with heroes worthy of our admiration and support, or irresponsible wreckers and terrorists deserving condemnation and ostracism. And as long as this definition remains so rigid, the movement itself is destined to remain divided into two seemingly irreconcilable camps.

Somehow the term 'direct action' has become synonymous with the ALF; and by extension, with illegal activities and the more confrontational methods such as hunt-sabbing and daylight occupations of laboratories. It is therefore implied that you are only taking direct action if gainfully employed in one of these. And furthermore, that if you're not taking 'direct action', then you're not doing anything worthwhile at all.

I feel it is high time we challenged such a self-righteous assumption - for it has the effect of devaluing the work of those individuals who use other, less 'daring', but equally valid methods to bring about a permanent end to animal abuse. As an organisation whose credibility has certainly suffered as a result of this attitude, The Vegan Society is a good case in point. Too often dismissed as a timid, ineffectual and (dare I say it) boring little charity with little relevance to the movement at large, its importance is considered merely peripheral. In our desperation to be SEEN to be doing something, we seem to have overlooked the obvious. That, as vegans, we ARE doing something. That, as vegans, we are in fact taking 'direct action' EVERY SINGLE DAY OF OUR LIVES. And, that ultimately, veganism is the most effective means we have at our disposal to end ALL animal exploitation - simply because we are removing the demand for animal products. When there is no demand for products of suffering, it will no longer be profitable for manufacturers to supply them. In other words, when we stop buying - they'll stop dying. Once and for all.

Unfortunately, the vegan version of direct action usually goes unrecognised - precisely because the direct results (ie. benefits to animals) of one's actions are not immediately apparent. You do not, for example, have the reward of watching a newly rescued beagle frolic on the grass for the first time in its life. Nor do you feel the satisfaction of going home after a hard sab knowing that you successfully diverted a pack of hounds from the trail of an exhausted fox. There is no adrenalin buzz, no warm afterglow, no adulation nor pats on the back. Just inconvenience when you eat out and a disproportionately intense feeling of annoyance when you discover that Safeways have put whey powder in their digestive biscuits which have previously been cow-free. That is, perhaps, the hardest thing about being vegan - no-one thanks you for it (although I'm sure the animals would if they could).

It is important that we acknowledge our achievements (however small they may seem) and to remember that being vegan means that we can, and do, make a difference. In the face of such enormous wholesale abuse of animals, we can easily fall victim to the destructive forces of guilt and self-recrimination. The anger, despair and frustration we feel at the slow pace of change can sometimes so overwhelm us that our efforts seem futile and pointless. We need to stop punishing ourselves and each other for not doing enough - we are doing what we can. We are not failures - the truth is that it is society which has failed us.

"ANIMAL LIBERATION - THE SEQUEL"

In issue 10 of Arkangel you will have seen an article by Anon headed, "Animal Liberation - The Sequel". This article defended the poor quality of the video, arguing that it was the content shown that was important. Certainly, the footage it contains of raids is almost priceless and many people have been satisfied to live with the inferior reproduction.

The ALF Press Office has been donated a number of these videos so that the money can be used for special projects, and we are therefore pleased to be able to offer them at £10 each including post & packing. Available while stocks last!

Please make cheques / postal orders payable to "ALF Press Office" and crossed "A/C payee only".

Note: The remaining copies of the original "Animal Liberation - The Movie" video, "Fear Haunts the Abattoir" T-shirts, and "ALF Supporter" hats may soon be returned from their extended holiday in the cellars of Lothian and Borders Police HQ in Scotland. If you are interested in any of these items please send an SAE to the Press Office stating which you are interested in.

Send Orders to:
ALF PO VIDEO OFFER,
BM4400, LONDON WC1N 3XX

————— Please DO NOT send any money yet! —————

ANTI-VIVISECTION; TIME TO MOVE ON?

by Barry Maycock

The anti-vivisection debate (see Arkangels 9 & 10), discussing the relative merits of scientific or ethical arguments against vivisection, is an old favourite, a hardy perennial - in fact it could go on forever! - and it provides much entertainment, as well as a generous quantity of weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth. Perhaps the Great Archangel in the sky should blow the whistle, and then we could all go home. However, at the risk of taking the game into extra time (and boring everybody to death), I will add a few more comments.

Firstly, it is misleading to refer to anti-vivisection as if it were one campaign, because, as David Lane points out, this is not one campaign but several, embracing issues as diverse as weapons testing, space research, food testing, cosmetics, car safety testing, etc. It is obvious that different arguments will apply in different cases, and their tactical deployment will vary accordingly. In this article I shall concentrate on the use of animals in medical research. For this seems to be the contentious issue at the heart of the controversy.

The second point to be made is that this debate is often presented in terms of a choice between 'science' (hard-headed, rational) on the one hand, and woolly old 'ethics' on the other. However, this is not the case: science doesn't float around in some ethically-neutral vacuum, it is embedded in the values of society. Science justifies its eminent position by the claim that it is based on certain principals (to do with the improvement of human knowledge and the quality of human life) that are themselves ethical. The concerns of the 'concerned' medical scientist, in particular, are rooted in ethics. It is not 'ethics' which is in question, as in the supposed choice between 'a baby or a dog' - it is the strength of the ethical case for animal rights, the amount of ethical consideration we should give to animals, when human health or human life is at stake.

Scientific anti-vivisectionism need not condemn the case for animal rights as a whole, merely find it less applicable, or perhaps not strong enough, on this particular issue. But it is easy to see how an attitude of scepticism about animal rights can slide into one of contemptuous hostility, as David Lane's quotation from SUPPRESS makes clear. According to this viewpoint, 'animal rights people' (as dismissed by SUPPRESS) are part of the problem, not the solution, and positively detrimental to the cause of anti-vivisection. This whole approach is human-centred; animals we put back in their proper (inferior) position - the place from which animal rights campaigners have for so long, and with such difficulty, tried to rescue them. Indeed, much scientific anti-vivisectionism seems to go further, and seeks to detach itself from animal rights altogether, so that in theory there could be a meat-eating anti-vivisectionist who is solely concerned with human health, or correct scientific methodology. It is strange indeed that animal rights campaigners should find themselves on the same platform as the people who seem to despise them. It isn't hard to see how scientific anti-vivisectionism can be a divisive and disruptive force within the animal rights movement.

This attempt to appeal primarily to human self-interest, and to down grade the question of animal suffering, is a perverse one to make for a movement which must surely seek to do the opposite. In fact it seems to betray a remarkable lack of confidence in the case for animal rights. After all, ethical arguments are central to our other campaigns, because the philosophy of this movement is based on compassion (and the belief that in certain crucial instances human self-interest can be set aside) and this is the source of its strength. In this respect it is closely linked to the philosophy of the Green Movement, with its belief that the planet and ecosystem have an 'intrinsic value' irrespective of human self-interest, use and exploitation. Surely it must be confusing for people to attend meetings organised by animal rights campaigners, filled by animal rights supporters who distribute leaflets and posters depicting animal suffering, only to be told by the speaker that this is a 'human health' issue. I suspect that they know, in their heart of hearts that it is not, but they go along with the scientific argument in the belief that it is a strong one. But if ethical arguments are good enough in our other campaigns, then why is anti-vivisection an exception?

The reason is obvious; in our society at the present moment, the idea that animals should not be made to suffer unnecessarily is now widely accepted. People do not, on the whole, regard animals simply as property, to be treated as the owner thinks fit. And by an extension of this principal, most of our campaigns could actually be included within the current moral framework, without any need to go outside this framework by introducing difficult ideas about 'rights', or even obscure philosophies such as 'deep ecology'. The argument (concerning 'unnecessary suffering') is a strong one, and easily understood, and could even be used against factory farming, the dairy industry, etc, on the grounds that an affluent society such as ours could find alternative sources of food without recourse to animals. Of course there will always be disagreements about the meaning of that key word 'unnecessary'. Society is hypocritical and inconsistent, and principles that are accepted in theory may never be applied in practice. But it is a strong ethical case, to weigh animal suffering against human pleasure and profit. The exception is vivisection, where animal suffering is being weighed against human suffering, now and in the future. This is surely the reason for the attempt to bypass difficult ethical problems altogether and to use the 'scientific' argument instead.

So how strong is the scientific case? The strength of its main argument seems to lie in its simplicity, that vivisection is a wrong methodology, that animals and human beings are manifestly different, that the results of research on the one cannot be applied to the other, and this is therefore scientific fraud, maintained by deception, in the cause of greed and self-interest. In other words, it is self-evidently unscientific to use animals in this way, and any scientist of any integrity would have to accept this. So how could a vivisector, therefore, respond to this argument? The answer is; quite easily. The concerned, 'enlightened' scientist could argue like this: "Yes, I agree that the results of animal testing should not be applied to human beings on any kind of crude, simplistic way, and the results should be treated with caution; yes, I too deplore the bad drugs manufactured and promoted by bad drugs companies. But in many cases scientific research must necessarily be inexact, and animals can yield us useful information; if society allows the use of animals for food, clothing, and indeed for all sorts of trivial reasons, then it seems perverse not to allow the use of animals as necessary material in scientific research that may prevent human (and indeed animal) suffering, and may save human (and indeed animal) lives. And, by the way, aren't you wearing leather shoes?" What begins as a scientific issue leads us back, inevitably, to the problem of animal rights.

The scientific argument, according to its own philosophy, needs to be tested scientifically, by examining the results of vivisection - its effects. We could argue that vivisection has done more harm than good, but it is not clear how we would produce the evidence for this assertion. In any event, the vivisector can reply, if this is the case, then more animal testing (not less) is needed, to reduce the harmful effects. This is the vivisector's argument about Thalidomide, that more animal testing (not less) would have revealed the deficiencies of the drug. So we might then have to adopt a more uncompromising position, and state that no benefits have ever been conferred on human beings as a result of animal experimentation. This argument permits of no exception, and for this reason usually provokes incredulity; in the end it has to be accepted (unscientifically) on trust, since it is surely impossible to 'prove' one way or the other. Unfortunately, the vivisection lobby has an easy response to this; it can simply produce a small child whose life has been 'saved' by animal experimentation. Or someone could say: "Yes, I took the drug, it worked as it was supposed to do, the pain has gone, the proof of the pudding is in the eating!" I suppose we could say that the person hasn't really benefited (pain is good for the soul!), that terrible side-effects are ticking away in the body. We could discuss society's attitude to disease and its treatment, and the importance of social factors in creating ill-health. We could argue that the experiments were unnecessary (and therefore 'alternatives' are unnecessary) because we need a different, 'holistic' approach to the care of the human body and the human soul. This is a technique known as 'moving the goalposts', where the argument continually shifts its ground. But it is already trying to prove too much, and is collapsing under its own weight.

In the end we cannot rely simply on an assertion about 'wrong methodology', because the methodology has to be proved wrong by its bad effects. The effects have always got to be bad because one good effect, so intended, might indicate that there is something right with the methodology. So we have to be prepared to argue about every case, which is surely impossible. And this focus on ends rather than means runs counter to another argument within the anti-vivisection case, that the ends do not justify the means. Imagine the kind of outcry there would be if someone in power proposed that old people, or the unemployed, should suffer the kinds of scientific experiments inflicted on animals, on the grounds that the human race would benefit immeasurably from them. The objection to this would be, that the issue of benefits does not apply; the idea is wrong on principle, because human beings are considered to have certain rights, not just in this society, but universally applicable. Animals are not considered to have such rights, and that is why they are used. It has nothing to do with science; they are used more or less as lifeless matter is used, because they are considered to have no value.

Whatever the merits of the scientific case, it has often been said that this is simply a matter of tactics, that all sorts of arguments are worth using, as long as they have a chance of success. There is something to be said for this pragmatic approach, but campaigners who use the scientific arguments need to be very sure of their ground - in other words, of their science. The spectacle of a tongue-tied campaigner, struggling for words when confronting a self-assured white-coated 'expert' is not usually a happy one. And one problem with the scientific case is that it confronts scientists on their own ground, where they feel most secure. They are much less comfortable when trying to answer awkward ethical questions. Another problem too, is that it elevates the scientist, the doctor, the expert, at a time when many theorists, in the Green Movement and elsewhere, have questioned the claim of the scientist to be the self-appointed arbiter of human, animal, and planetary destiny. These two tendencies, to elevate scientists and to cut them down to size, pull in opposite directions.

Nor do I think much of the 'mud-slinging' school of argumentation which seems to believe that if enough arguments are slung at a target, something at least will stick. But a dozen weak arguments are no substitute for a strong one. I have often come across leaflets crammed with diverse (and often contradictory) arguments because the writer is obviously unsure of the strength of his own case.

And this is why scientific anti-vivisectionism is important, because it emphasises a fatal flaw in the animal rights movement - the weakness of the ethical case for animal rights. But the point is, not to discard it, but to strengthen it, to establish the theoretical basis for animal rights on a much firmer foundation. This is one of our most important tasks, and it only seems to be attempted by moral philosophers, rarely by activists and campaigners, the people who actually write the leaflets and argue with the public on the streets.

Those who object to ethics claim that the whole subject is woolly, vague, messy, unsatisfactory. Of course it is, but that is true of all ethical questions, including the ethical basis of scientific research. There is no easy escape from ethics into science. Ethical theories of human rights are equally vague, woolly, messy, unsatisfactory, but they still form part of the conceptual framework within which governments make decisions, and people live their lives. They have become established, and cannot be wished away by clever people demonstrating all the flaws and weaknesses.

It has also been argued that the ethical case against vivisection has 'got nowhere' in the past century or so, in fact vivisection has grown because of the weakness of our arguments! This is absurd; vivisection has grown because consumption has grown (with the growth of population, industrialisation, capitalism) including the consumption of health care. To blame our weak arguments for this growth is as absurd as to blame the same arguments for the growth of factory farming over the last half-century. Factory farming has grown for the same reasons as vivisection, because consumption has grown. Our arguments (and our campaigns), strong or weak, have nothing to do with it. If our cause hasn't succeeded, it is because of the strength of the forces ranged against us, the powerful vested interests, the might of governments and the transnational corporations that control them. Faced by our failure to make dramatic progress, it is an easy option to seek scapegoats in our own movement, to blame our poor arguments, or 'corrupt' societies. But we know who our enemies are, and they are not our fellow campaigners. To me this is what the debate is really all about, along with the other controversies that storm through the pages of Arkangel, the search for scapegoats in which everyone blames everyone else for our supposed lack of progress. If the ethical arguments have 'got nowhere' then we should be honest enough to admit that the scientific case is not the 'knockout blow' that it is claimed to be. As year follows year, and vivisection is still with us, then there may soon come a time when we can argue that scientific anti-vivisectionism is 'getting nowhere', because it is struggling against the same powerful forces that have always impeded us. In such circumstances it is easy to turn to 'the enemy within', corruption within our own ranks, and scapegoat anyone we don't like. But arguments about corrupt anti-vivisection societies, and about the power and corruption of the drugs companies, which take up an enormous amount of space in these debates, are not directly relevant to this issue at all. It is important to discuss these matters, but they have nothing to do with the principle of vivisection, which was established long before the drugs companies (and the animal rights groups) came into being. Vivisection doesn't have to be about drugs, or even the treatment of ill-health, it is justified as being part of the acquisition of knowledge, in the way that the dissection of animals is introduced to school children.

Personally I am not at all pessimistic about vivisection.

Far from 'getting nowhere', the ethical case has already been conceded - by vivisectioners themselves. In a recent issue of one local paper, a supporter of vivisection dismisses the scientific argument as 'nonsense', but is defensive about the ethical aspects, defending only the 'limited use' of animals, their 'small but vital contribution', and supporting the development of alternatives which will make animal testing unnecessary. If vivisectioners themselves can concede this much, then they haven't much of a case left. Nor will the drugs companies collapse if vivisection is removed; they will probably turn 'Green' overnight, and continue to sell their useless and harmful products.

I actually believe that the arguments against vivisection have been won, which is not to say that its abolition is imminent. The case against fox hunting has long been won, in my view, but fox hunting is still with us. I also believe, controversially I suppose, that vivisection takes up too much energy, space and time within the animal rights movement, especially the acrimonious (or perhaps rather silly) controversy. The ferocity and paranoia generated in this debate seems totally absurd - out of all proportion. It has been said that people are afraid to speak out through fear of receiving a mountain of hate-mail, or a deluge of bile and abuse. But my advice would be, that if people get too hysterical over this, then it is best to back away, and gently agree to differ.

It is surely time to move on - to the discussion of really difficult issues, such as the abolition of factory-farming.

CAMPAIGNS UPDATE

BOYCOTT SELFRIDGES CAMPAIGN

by Vivien Clifford

It is not often we get a victory in our war against animal abuse and certainly it is most unusual to get a fast victory. But I am pleased to say that after just three months of weekly pickets outside Selfridges, this store has announced that its Fur Department has closed. We were invited to inspect the area on Selfridges' third floor where the sickening sight of fur coats for sale had prompted us to picket Selfridges weekly, and it was pleasing to see these coats had now been removed. However, a few coats/cloaks with fur trims were still on display. We spoke to a couple of security men, who assured us that the Fur Department had closed from 3rd February, but we said that unless Selfridges stopped selling fur trims as well, we would continue our weekly pickets. We were told this was going to be considered and we have given them a few weeks to get rid of all fur trimmings, after which time we will resume our pickets if they are still for sale. Selfridges also assured us they will not be selling the fur coats from a back room!

A further victory has been that, at about the same time as Selfridges' statement, Zwirn, the fur shop we picketed, and as a result closed last year, after re-opening recently, made a woeful announcement of its final closure with a sale of its remaining furs, and 'an era gone forever'!

We are still continuing to picket the remaining fur shops around the West End of London, and unfortunately a few small ones have recently opened. It may not be as easy to close these shops as Selfridges Fur Department, as fur is the only product they sell. However, time will tell!

We need more people to attend the weekly anti-fur demos so as to speed up the closure of these wretched fur shops.

The closure of Selfridges' Fur Department is far more significant than may at first be apparent. Had their Fur Department been allowed to flourish, other large department stores, believing the press hype and claims of the fur trade that 'Fur is Back', may have been tempted to start selling fur coats again. This would have put us in the position of having to re-start the war against the fur trade from the beginning, taking away precious time to combat the other areas of animal abuse, as well as being unable to prevent further suffering to the animals ranched and trapped for this evil trade.

By fighting the more winnable areas of animal abuse, such as those which have the majority of public opposition, ie. bloodsports, and killing off the dying fur trade, it will be much less difficult to abolish the areas of legalised animal cruelty, which at present have public support, such as medical experiments on animals. With the eradication of bloodsports and the fur trade, and therefore with fewer areas of animal cruelty, we will be several steps nearer to the end of vivisection and other legalised animal abuse, as cruel exploitation of animals will be less acceptable generally to the public.

MCLIBEL NEWS

A provisional trial date for 18th April has been set for the McLibel trial. This is a libel case brought by the McDonald's Corporation against two unwaged supporters of London Greenpeace, Helen Steel and Dave Morris. McDonald's are suing the two defendants over the contents of a 6 sided leaflet entitled 'What's wrong with McDonald's?' produced by London Greenpeace in 1986, and since then translated and distributed worldwide. McDonald's, however, accepts that the two defendants were not the authors of the leaflet, but refuses to drop the case against the two, claiming that they were present at meetings where the leaflet was available and that Helen handed out the leaflet on one occasion.

The leaflet brings together criticisms of McDonald's practices that have been brought throughout the world by concerned organisations and individuals. McDonald's are suing over passages relating to the destruction of rainforests and damage to the environment, the links between a 'junk food' diet and ill health, the rearing and slaughter of animals for burgers, and the exploitation of workers in the fast food industry. The aim of McDonald's in bringing this case was to intimidate their critics into silence. They have threatened legal action against numerous groups and individuals, most of whom backed down because of the massive odds against defendants winning libel actions, and the huge cost of even being able to fight a case.

In December last year the judge ruled that the case would be heard without a jury, after McDonald's argued that the issues in the case were too complicated for a jury to understand. The truth is that McDonald's are scared of having members of the public decide on the issues, they fear a jury might see through their glossy image and glimpse the unpalatable reality. The court also ruled out some of the defence evidence including proof that McDonald's has lied to the public about their use of beef from cattle reared on ex- rainforest land.

A month before the trial had been set to start, McDonald's served statements from another 47 witnesses whose evidence they wanted to rely on at trial. This doubled the size of their case and meant it was impossible for Helen and Dave to prepare their defence in time for trial. As a result the trial date was put back, and was provisionally set for 18th April. However this depends upon the outcome of the defendants' appeal against the judge's pre-trial rulings.

The appeal against these decisions was heard on 15th & 16th March but the judges reserved their judgement, which is likely to be given at the end of March. As a result there is no definite trial date as yet. The McLibel Support Campaign is calling for protests outside branches of McDonald's throughout the country (and world!) during the weekend before the trial starts. There will also be a demonstration outside the High Court, The Strand, London, WC2 on the first day of the trial. For street leafletting against McDonald's you can buy leaflets in bulk from Veggies (0602 585666) at £12 per 1,000.

Since the writs were served on the defendants in 1990, over half a million leaflets have been distributed in this country in defiance of libel laws. On 26th February, two days before the trial had been set to start, pickets were held at a number of McDonald's stores throughout the country, and as far abroad as New Zealand. Whatever the verdict at the trial, people will continue to protest against McDonald's and to hand out leaflets exposing the reality of multinational profiteering. This year, the annual World anti- McDonald's Day on 16th October has been declared FREE SPEECH DAY. We must show McDonald's and other companies that they cannot get away with their bullying attempts at censorship.

FREE SPEECH MUST BE DEFENDED!

More information from:

*McLibel Support Campaign,
c/o London Greenpeace,
5 Caledonian Road, London, N1 9DX.
Tel. 071 837 7557.*

Donations welcome!

Animal Rights Prisoners

Arkangel gives its full support to animal liberation prisoners, and up until now we have given details of names, locations and prison numbers. From now on we will only mention the names of those in prison and ask people who wish to make contact with prisoners to write to the ALF Supporters Group for up-to-date information. This is because Arkangel is produced less frequently than the ALFSG information and can be out of date by the time you read it, and so this change if for purely practical reasons.

Please write to the ALFSG, BCM 160, LONDON WC1N 3XX.

Prisoners at the time of going to press are:

Vivien Smith - 6 Years
Annette Tibbles - 4 Years
Terry Helsby - 3 and a half years
Max Watson - 3 Years
Allison McKeon - 2 Years

Anthony Miller (USA) - 6 to 10 Years
Kim Trimview (USA) - Grand Jury
Deborah Stout (USA) - Grand Jury

McLibel Stop Press:

The Court of Appeal ruled that the defendants had won their first appeal so parts of the case which had been ruled out are now back in.

In the second appeal, the Judges ruled that the case would be tried without a jury. As a result of winning the first part, the trial date may be put back.

To find out the trial date, contact the McLibel Support Campaign.

Those Who Benefit From YOU Being A Vegan

This picture, and cover illustration, by Lyn & Maggie

Some Recommended Reading

ALF SUPPORTERS GROUP NEWSLETTER BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX: £1.00. Contains information concerning A/R prisoners and defence funds, articles and news. Bi-monthly.

TURNING POINT PO Box 45, Northolt, Middlesex UB5 6SZ: £1.50. Excellent animal rights/liberation magazine. Bi-monthly.

VEGETARIAN LIVING Available from W.H.Smiths and some newsagents: £1.75. Excellent magazine which not only covers a wide range of issues concerning vegetarianism and veganism but is also supportive of animal liberation issues. Monthly.

THE ANIMALS CONTACT LIST Veggies, 180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HW: £2.00 (inc p&p). The list provides a co-ordinated means by which groups can contact one another with details of their work, news of campaigns, or requests for support.

ARC NEWS c/o PO Box 155, Manchester M60 1FT: Free with SAE. ARC NEWS contains reports of local group activities as well as an up-to-date list of events.

Donations

We are extremely grateful to the following people who have made a donation of £4.00 or more to help us to produce and distribute this magazine:

Animal Concern, Akiko Motomura, Allen, A Lane, Barnsley Animal Rights Group, B Lakhani, Beryl Clifton, Belfast Animal Rights, CAFE, Carol Stevens, Don Brown, Dorothy Adams, Eddie, Freeman Wicklund, Frank & Wendy Allen, John Carter, Jean Latimer, Lynda Rawley, L William Giddings, Linda Tuttlebee, Michael Sutcliffe, Monica Harvey, M Barlow-Bannister, Mike Lillington, Michael Maas, Mark & Naomi Ridley, Mark Willett, M Cooper, Phillip & Mary Griffin, Robert Macfarlan, Rh Cottrell, Shirley Stones, Steven Fenner, Tim Thompson, Vicky Critchley, William Samuel Purves, Walshall Animal Rights.

Extra special thanks go to Animal Concern, Akiko, Barnsley Animal Rights, and to M Cooper, Michael Maas, Mark Willett, Mark, Linda Tuttlebee and Tim Thompson who are donating on a monthly basis by standing order.

THE ROAD TO VICTORY

Hunt saboteurs descended on two moors in North Yorkshire and Scotland at the start of the grouse shooting season. The shoot was partly stopped on one and abandoned on the other. (Daily Telegraph 13.8.93)

Builders have halted work on a £1.8m council house repair scheme in Slough to avoid disturbing 14 pairs of nesting housemartins. (Daily Telegraph 16.8.93)

The 75 year old Quantock Stagounds is facing disbandment following a decision yesterday to ban it from crossing a strategic strip of heathland owned by Somerset County Council. (Daily Telegraph 5.8.93)

Anglers were wriggling on the hook last night after scientists claimed fish feel pain. "I would not want to fish for amusement because of this," said Cambridge University Professor Donald Bloom. "It proves that fish have the mechanism for pain". (Daily Express 13.9.93)

The 12 mile long Kings Langley and Berkhamsted bypass will contain 3 butterfly havens, a parcel of re-created chalk downland, badger tunnels, wetland areas and safe wildlife zones. (Daily Telegraph 11.9.93)

More than 130 firefighters battled against smoke and fierce flames after fire broke out in the roof above the factory floor of Sun Valley poultry packing plant in Hereford. (Daily Telegraph 7.9.93)

A power station waste tip has become Britain's first established 'spray on' nature reserve less than two and a half years after a revolutionary seeding process. (Daily Telegraph 20.9.93)

A farmer was killed by his bull in Cournemin, France. (Daily Telegraph 14.9.93)

The number of British mink farms continues to decline. There are now just 14 mink farms operating in Great Britain, 1 in Scotland and 13 in England. (Agsceen Autumn '93)

A Consumers' Association report in Which magazine says up to 60,000 of the 30 million eggs eaten in Britain each day carry the salmonella bacterium. (Agsceen Autumn '93)

More than 10,000 fish were taken to the Bristol Channel after pollution affected Barry docks in South Wales. National Rivers Authority bailiffs saved large quantities of bass, mullet and eels, which were netted, put into tanks and ferried out to sea. (Independent 16.9.93)

Britain's rarest and most threatened fish, the vendace, was given a lifeline yesterday when Bassenthwaite Lake in the Lake District was given National Nature Reserve status. (Daily Telegraph 23.9.93)

A bird breeder was yesterday jailed for 4 years for Cattle humor

Gary Larson

handling 5 rare parrots worth £54,000. (Independent 6.10.93)

A man who trapped birds in tiny cages as bait to lure others was fined 50p and ordered to pay £605 costs at South East Northumberland Court yesterday. A legal technicality meant a fine had to be imposed so that magistrates could ban him from keeping birds for 3 years. (Independent 6.10.93)

A farmer who ill-treated a total of 266 animals was jailed for 6 months by Cheltenham Magistrates and banned from keeping animals for life. (Daily Telegraph 12.10.93)

Field sports enthusiasts were warned to be on their guard after an incendiary device posted by animal rights activists damaged a post office sorting machine in Watford. A further 7 devices were found. (Independent 7.10.93)

Animal rights activists are claiming unprecedented success in their campaign to end fox-hunting. Last week Leicestershire became the 26th county to ban fox-hunting on council land. Bans on the sport are expected to follow in Surrey, Gloucestershire, Wiltshire, Norfolk, Oxfordshire and elsewhere. Soon fox-hunting will be banned on council land in more than half of the English counties. The political success of the animal rights lobby is causing alarm in the hunting community which fears another private members Bill attempting to ban the sport. (Independent 11.10.93)

Princess Michael of Kent has been banned from a tree planting ceremony at Vale Wildlife Rescue, Hereford & Worcester because she has hunted foxes. Mr Alan Brookbank, the centres' wildlife officer, said, "It was pointed out the Princess did participate in hunting. Foxes are brought to us with horrific injuries caused by hunts so we couldn't possibly allow someone to come in who had that involvement." (Daily Telegraph 26.10.93)

Burnham Beeches, one of the nations' foremost ancient wood pastures, was declared a National Nature Reserve. (Daily Telegraph 21.10.93)

The National Trust, which has rejected a call to ban hunting on its land, is facing a challenge in the High Court from anti-hunt supporters over the way it sets out its resolutions and proxy voting forms for the Annual General Meeting. (Daily Telegraph 16.10.93)

Soya milk and tofu may protect women against developing breast cancer because they contain natural chemicals that appear to inhibit the growth of tumours, according to scientists. (Independent 25.10.93)

Wiltshire became the latest county council to ban hunting on its land. The Beaufort, the Avon Vale, the Tedworth and the South & West Wiltshire are among hunts affected. (Daily Telegraph 20.10.93)

A farmer and a breeder of cats used in vivisection were injured yesterday when they opened letter-bombs sent by animal rights terrorists. (Independent 29.10.93)

Anti-hunt campaigners won a High Court battle to prevent a resolution calling for an investigation into the supposed cruelty of deer hunting being voted on at the National Trust's annual meeting on Saturday. The ruling places the Trust under pressure to hold an extraordinary general meeting solely to consider holding an investigation into cruelty and animal welfare issues raised by hunting on Trust land. Anti-hunt campaigners believe that they would win any ballot put to that meeting. (Daily Telegraph 3.11.93)

The twelve European Union states are currently debating new rules for the transport of farm animals. (Independent 4.11.93)

Part of Stevenage, Herts, was sealed last night as an army unit exploded a 'bomb' package delivered to the home of a Glaxo drugs company press officer. The package was later found to contain granules similar to those used in cat litter. (Daily Telegraph 2.11.93)

A rare species of caddisfly has been given international protection along with its habitat, Malham Tarn, in the Yorkshire Dales. (Daily Telegraph 8.11.93)

Foods rich in fibre cause cancer cells to self-destruct, researchers have discovered. The ten-year study at Bristol Medical School lends scientific weight to the belief that high-fibre foods such as cereals, fruit and vegetables can help prevent bowel cancers responsible for 20,000 deaths a year in Britain. (Daily Mail 10.11.93)

A dog trapped 30ft below ground for 4 days was rescued. (Daily Telegraph 11.11.93)

Eight hunt saboteurs who took legal action against Lincolnshire police after being arrested at a point-to-point meeting have received between £1,000 and £1,500 each in an out-of-court settlement. (Daily Telegraph 10.11.93)

A bird breeder who tried to smuggle Thai parrots into Australia was fined £10,000. (Independent 20.11.93)

Volunteers managed to refloat 45 whales beached on the north of New Zealand's South Island. (Independent 10.11.93)

Oxfordshire County Council has voted to ban fox hunting and hare coursing from its 6,000 acres of land. (Independent 17.11.93)

Dumping of radioactive waste at sea was permanently banned yesterday. (Independent 13.11.93)

An attempt to save the red squirrel from extinction in England was launched yesterday in Cumbria where the animals, besieged by grey squirrels, are holding out. A body called Red Alert has been formed to alter the environment to favour red squirrels. (Independent 16.11.93)

Malton bacon factory in North Yorkshire was fined nearly £3,000 for overloading a sewage works with effluent. (Fauna 10)

40 dolphins and pseudo-orcas were released from nets on Iki Island, Japan, in early April. Ben White's Dolphin Rescue Brigade claimed responsibility. (Fauna 10)

The Cambridgeshire Hunt, at whose last meet in April hunt saboteur Tom Worby was killed, have decided to disband. (Fauna 10)

A four month jail sentence was slapped on a pit-bull owner for dog fighting at Humberside. Stephen Brown of Lincs was also banned from owning a dog for life. (Fauna 10)

Shropshire councillors voted yesterday to ban hunting from all council-owned or council-managed land. (Daily Telegraph 27.11.93)

A furrier was injured when a letter bomb, believed to have been sent by animal rights activists, exploded at his West London flat yesterday. (Daily Telegraph 1.12.93)

Four men who took up a challenge from a vegetarian author to spend a week in a battery hen cage for £10,000 gave up after 20 hours. (Daily Telegraph 7.12.93)

A dog has wounded his master who was shooting game in Northern Cyprus. When Ahmet Gazioglu put down his shotgun to rest, the dog trod on the trigger. (Daily Telegraph 7.12.93)

Vegetarians now make up 6% of the British population as health worries and consumer ethics turn people away from meat, says a new report by Euromonitor. Many have banished meat from their tables altogether, leading to a 200,000 ton reduction in the market last year. (Daily Telegraph 2.12.93)

Kinder Scout, a moorland in Derbyshire damaged by over-grazing and visitor erosion, has been restored by a 10 year restoration by the National Trust and is thriving. (Daily Telegraph 10.11.93)

A controversial Master of Foxhounds yesterday resigned after being criticised by colleagues and saboteurs. (Daily Express 24.11.93)

Prawns can trigger asthma attacks, according to scientists studying the high rate of respiratory problems found among workers in the seafood industry. (Independent 8.12.93)

Four people were taken to hospital with minor injuries when one of several letter-bombs sent by animal rights activists exploded at a veterinary laboratory in West Sussex. (Daily Telegraph 22.12.93)

Folkestone and Dover Water Services has spent £10,000 on re-housing a family of badgers whose set would have been destroyed by the extension of a reservoir at Paddlesworth, Kent. (Daily Telegraph 14.12.93)

The RSPB has bought Mosstown Farm next to its Loch of Strathbeg nature reserve near Fraserburgh in Scotland, to feed the world's largest over-wintering flock of 230,000 pink-footed geese. (Daily Telegraph 24.12.93)

The risk of rabid wildlife entering Britain through the Channel Tunnel has become almost negligible, experts in France say. Vaccination of foxes has been so effective that scientists predict that France will be rabies-free within 6 years. Similar success is occurring elsewhere. (Daily Telegraph 20.12.93)

European Union rules have closed 3 slaughterhouses near Whitby and are making it difficult for another to continue. (Independent 24.12.93)

One of the first ever successful rehabilitations of a stranded cetacean has been achieved. A dehydrated and underweight striped dolphin, found off the Dorset coast near Christchurch, was taken to Weymouth Sealife Centre and treated with the help of experts from the RSPCA's Norfolk Wildlife Hospital. The dolphin made a good recovery and was released off Portland Head in Dorset,

Item no.	Description	Price (inc p&p)
C003	TAPES C001 & C002 Special offer for set.	£4.50
V002	VIDEO 'ANIMAL LIBERATION - THE SEQUEL' The follow-up to "Animal Liberation - The Movie". Although the reproduction falls below the quality of the original this film has almost priceless footage of ALF raids, liberated animals in their new surroundings and much more. A limited number have been donated to the ALF Press Office so...never mind the quality, feel the passion. Available only while stocks last. VHS FORMAT ONLY	£10.00

Notes on ordering:

1. Cheques and postal orders should be made payable to 'ALF Press Office' and crossed 'A/C Payee Only'.
2. Full payment must accompany every order.
3. Please allow 28 days for delivery.
4. All merchandise offered is for leisure or amusement use only. It is not intended that any item should encourage or incite unlawful activities.
5. This list, April 1994, supercedes all previous listings.

ITEM NO.	DESCRIPTION	PRICE EACH	QUANTITY	TOTAL COST
T001G	T-SHIRT 'MATCHES' GREY	£8.00
T001W	T-SHIRT 'MATCHES' WHITE	£8.00
T002G	T-SHIRT 'NECESSARY' GREY	£8.00
T002W	T-SHIRT 'NECESSARY' WHITE	£8.00
T013	T-SHIRT 'ELEPHANT' WHITE	£8.00
T014G	T-SHIRT 'ON TOUR' GREY	£10.00
S014G	SWEATSHIRT 'ON TOUR' GREY	£16.00
C001	TAPE ALFOO1 + BOOKLET	£3.00
C002	TAPE ALFOO2 + LYRIC SHEET	£3.00
C003	TAPES ALFOO1 + ALFOO2	£4.50
V002	VIDEO 'ANIMAL LIBERATION - THE SEQUEL'	£10.00
TOTAL AMOUNT ENCLOSED WITH ORDER

SEND ORDER TO: NAME: _____

ADDRESS: _____

POST CODE: _____

* Please send completed order form and your remittance to: ****

* ALF PO Sales, BM4400, London, WC1N 3XX ****

Animal Liberation Front

Press Office

MERCHANDISE ORDER FORM

Item no.	Description	Price (inc p&p)
TO01G	T-SHIRT 'MATCHES' Front shows a large box of ALF matches based on Swan Vestas design with caption "A match for all animal abuse". GREY SIZE XL ONLY	£8.00
TO01W	T-SHIRT 'MATCHES' As above but white. WHITE SIZE XL ONLY	£8.00
TO02G	T-SHIRT 'NECESSARY' Shows everyone's favourite little activist, Alfie Molotov, in 3 poses with graffiti-style slogan "Animal liberation by whatever means necessary". GREY SIZE XL ONLY	£8.00
TO02W	T-SHIRT 'NECESSARY' As above but white. WHITE SIZE XL ONLY	£8.00
TO13	T-SHIRT 'ELEPHANT' Black-and-white laser-print picture of circus elephants. Slogan (in red and black lettering) "Elephants never forget - neither will ALF" Reduced by £1	£8.00
TO14G	T-SHIRT 'ON TOUR' The long-awaited "ALF On Tour" t-shirt for 1993/4. Front has slogan "Support the Animal Liberation Front" with superb black-and-white screened photograph of activist with two young pigs liberated from Wye College pig research unit. Back of shirt details twelve ALF actions from 1993/4. Bound to become a classic!! GREY * AVAILABLE FROM LATE APRIL * XL ONLY	£10.00
SO14G	SWEATSHIRT 'ON TOUR' As above but sweatshirt GREY * AVAILABLE FROM LATE APRIL * XL ONLY	£16.00
CO01	CASSETTE TAPE ALFOO1 "Darkness Before Dawn - The Book of Suffering" (with booklet). Dedicated to Davy Barr.	£3.00
CO02	CASSETTE TAPE ALF 002 "Darkness Before Dawn - Into a World of Terror" (with lyric sheet). Dedicated to Mike Hill.	£3.00

BM 4400, London, WC1N 3XX. Telephone/Fax: 0954 230542(24 hrs) 0836 310763 (Mobile)

At around 3.15 pm on 9th February Mike Hill and two other saboteurs climbed onto the back of a pick-up truck of the Cheshire Beagles with the intention of preventing the huntsman, Alan Summersgill, from moving the hounds to another location. The hounds were being carried in a trailer behind the pick up. Instead of asking the saboteurs to move or calling the police, Summersgill sped off at high speed with the sabs on board. They estimated that he was travelling at speeds of upwards of 80 mph around the country lanes of Cheshire for over 5 miles.

Holding on for all they could, they pleaded with Summersgill to stop. He wouldn't. He intended beyond doubt to either terrify or injure the saboteurs. They decided to attempt to jump to safety when the vehicle slowed down. When it did, to around 40 mph, at a bend, Mike jumped but was hit by the trailer and dragged under. Summersgill still refused to stop, even after they were forced to break a window in the back of the pick-up to plead further. He drove on. The passenger even attacked the remaining saboteurs with his whip before they were forced to pull up at a junction. Even then he didn't hang around.

An hour later Mike was dead.

His death was not accidental, the actions of Alan Summersgill were malicious.

Will justice be done?

Mike Hill is the first animal rights activist to be killed by an animal abuser. He probably won't be the last.

Mike's dead and they're still killing.

THE MIKE HILL MEMORIAL FUND

Mike Hill was 18 years old and was dedicated to the animal rights cause. He lived and worked with us caring for the many abandoned puppies we have at the Sanctuary. He was totally committed to their care and welfare.

On 9th February 1991 Mike was killed whilst taking part in a protest against a local hunt 'The Cheshire Beagles'. He was there to try to prevent the senseless killing of wildlife and it tragically culminated in his own death.

Mike was a gentle, kind and quiet person whose life revolved around the animals in his charge. He was idealistic and wanted to help make the world a better place. With his parents permission this fund has been set up to provide a permanent memorial to Mike, here at the Sanctuary where he was so happy.

Donations will be used to build an isolation unit for sick animals and it will be dedicated to the memory of a friend who died fighting to prevent animal cruelty. He will never be forgotten.

Freshfields Animal Rescue Centre
East Lodge Farm,
East Lane,
Ince Blundell
L29 3EA

FREEDOM ANIMAL SANCTUARY TRUST

12b Dudley Rd.
Tunbridge Wells
KENT
TN1 1LF.

0892-543764

The Freedom Animal Sanctuary Trust was set up in late 1986 by people involved in the animal welfare movement who were appalled at the small number of facilities and people involved in the re-homing of animals. The long term aim is to buy land to create a sanctuary but till then the trust re-homes and neuters as many animals as possible. All animals which pass through the trusts hands are neutered and good homes are then found for them. No animal is put down unless it is suffering from a terminal illness. All the homes are vetted before an animal is placed there and checked on a regular basis. If, at a later date, the home appears unsuitable, the animal is taken back into the trusts care. All animals which are homed remain the trusts property and the new 'owners' are just adopting their new animal. All work done for the trust is on a voluntary basis and all money raised or donated is spent directly on the animals. We always have animals needing good homes so if you feel able to give a needy animal a home please feel free to ring. If you would like to aid the trusts work perhaps you would like to become a member. Just fill in the slip below and return it to us. Please make all cheques payable to Freedom Animal Sanctuary Trust.

ANNUAL MEMBERSHIP £5	[]
FAMILY MEMBERSHIP £8	[]
DONATION	[]

only the second successful release ever made in the U.K. (Animal Life, Winter 93)

Norfolk Wildlife Hospital, the RSPCA's newest hospital near King's Lynn, was recently opened and will provide specialist treatment for at least 2,500 wildlife casualties a year. The hospital has several seal rehabilitation pools, an intensive care unit, an operating theatre, outdoor aviaries, oiled bird cleaning facilities and a 14 acre field with paddocks to house deer, foxes and badgers. (Animal Life, Winter 93)

The first education authority in Britain to impose a ban on British beef following the incidents of 'mad cow' disease is poised to continue its policy more than 3 years later. (Fauna 10)

An analysis by the Zoology Dept at Glasgow University has shown that students who 'opt-out' of rat dissection classes are at no disadvantage in subsequent examinations. (Outrage, Dec-Jan)

L'Oreal have promised not to test any more of their products on animals, which brings them into line with other cosmetics giants. (Outrage, Dec-Jan)

The number of local authorities to prohibit circuses from their land has broken through the 200 barrier. (Outrage, Dec-Jan)

A sick porpoise which came ashore at Beadnell, Northumberland was flown by RAF helicopter to a warm water pool in Scarborough last night. (Daily Telegraph 8.1.94)

The future is looking bright again for the barn owl. 5,000 breeding pairs remain as pesticide levels fall. Sparrowhawks and Peregrines, 2 other species put at risk by pesticides in the 60's and 70's, are also flying high again. (Daily Mail 9.11.93)

Burger King report the spicy bean burger is outselling meat burgers. 90% of bean burgers are sold to non-vegetarians. (Turning Point, Jan-Feb 94)

Devon County Council have warned companies of its intention to withdraw orders if they continue testing on animals. (Turning Point, Jan-Feb 94)

The Foundation for Sport and the Arts has rejected an application for an angling grant, saying their policy is, 'not to inflict pain or harm on members of the animal world'. (Turning Point, Jan-Feb 94)

A steamroller was used by protesters to flatten steel jaw traps outside Conelius Furs in Sydney, Australia.

In an historic case in Tasmania, a court has ruled that keeping hens in battery cages is cruel and breaks the law prohibiting cruelty to animals.

Three bears, one from Bosnia and two ex-dancing bears from Greece were rescued and released into the bear forest of Rhenen.

The Home Office has reported a 10% decrease in animal experiments in the UK in 1992.

Sao Paulo, Brazil, host to over 100 bullfights and rodeos last year, has banned both.

Abattoirs in the UK numbered 2000 in 1970, but had declined to 653 by the end of 1990. During 1991, this dropped to 581, and by the end of 1992, to 510.

Mad Cow disease cases were up 42% on last year for the first quarter of this year. (Turning Point, Jan-Feb 94)

A tireless seven-year crusade by Southport's animal rights campaigners, Vicky and Tony Moore, paid dividends recently when animal cruelty in Spain took a battering. Some 22 villages around Madrid have been fined or face stiff penalties by local governors for their cruel 'sports'. (Southport Visitor, 15.10.93)

An underpass for otters has been built beneath the A39 at Dunster, Somerset, after one of the creatures was run over. (Sun 16.10.93)

Animal rescue experts last night waded in to save a dolphin which beached itself for the third time at Llangennith, Wales. It will be taken to a sanctuary. (Today 20.1.94)

Norfolk has become the 35th of 47 counties in England and Wales to ban fox hunting on council land. (Sun 25.1.94)

A gamekeeper who bludgeoned two badgers to death for sport was jailed yesterday for three months. (Daily Star 19.1.94)

More than a tenth of the British population has gone over to a mainly vegetarian diet, with the figure rising to 17% among teenagers. Sales of organic foods have increased five-fold in the last five years. Between 1988 and 1992 sales of meat alternatives such as tofu and Quorn grew from £6.6m to £25.5m. Sales of traditional vegetarian products such as fruit, vegetables and pulses have also risen. Overall sales of vegetarian foods were more than £11bn last year, up from £8.8bn in 1988. Reasons for adopting a vegetarian lifestyle include animal welfare, environment concern, and health. Women are more likely to be vegetarian than men and London has the highest proportion of vegetarians in the country. (Independent 20.9.93)

Otters have been seen in the River Avon for the first time in 25 years. They were spotted south of Stratford-upon-Avon, Worcs, where they are now being built artificial holts to live in. (Daily Express 28.1.94)

ARKANGEL MAGAZINE
BCM 9240
LONDON WC1N 3XX

Arkangel Magazine
Number 12

£1.80

Arkangel

for Animal Liberation

Arkangel Editorial

Arkangel magazine is committed to drawing together all sections of the animal rights/liberation movement and reporting on the various successes achieved by both local groups and national organisations.

While bickering and recrimination goes on between these groups, animals are being tortured to death and murdered by the million. The end result of this in-fighting can only lead to a weaker opposition - while the movement has the potential, if united, to crush animal abuse once and for all.

Arkangel welcomes positive, constructive criticism regarding the activities of groups and organisations, but will not get dragged into arguments about whether one group is better or more effective than another. All campaigning is useful - from letter writing, to direct action - if it brings us one step closer to animal liberation. The squabbling and holier-than-thou attitude of so many only serves to take us one step further away.

Recently the League Against Cruel Sports actually discouraged its members from attending the recent National March Against Hunting. With friends like these, who needs enemies? It is the last thing the animals need.

Until everyone who believes in animal liberation (the liberation of all animals from abuse and exploitation) manages to work and fight together, animals will continue to be abused, exploited and murdered.

Plan 2000

Over 100 top celebrities and politicians have joined the campaign to get all animal experiments banned by the year 2000, as described by the plan's founder, Vernon Coleman, in Arkangel 11. Here is the latest list:

Alan Meale MP
Alexei Sayle
Andrew Bowden MP
Andrew Faulds MP
Barbara Dickson
Bill Etherington MP
Bill Oler MP
Bob Monkhouse
Bob Parry MP
Brian Blessed
Brigid Brophy
Brigitte Bardot
Bruno Brookes
Bryan Forbes
Carla Lane
Carol Royle
Carter the Unstoppable
Sex Machine
Celia Hammond
Charlie Watts
Chris Mullin MP
Chrissie Hynde
David Morris MEP
David Shepherd
Dennis Skinner MP
Dusty Springfield
Ed Bicknell
Elkie Brooks
Faith Brown
Gary Wilmot
George Baker

Gerry Steinberg MP
Harry Cohen MP
Hayley Mills
Herbert Lom
Imelda Staunton
Ingrid Pitt Jacques Tauran (Deputy to EC Parliament)
James Fox
Jason Donovan
Jenny Seagrove
Jim Lee
Jimmy Somerville
Jo Brand
Joanna Lumley
John Pilger
John Bird
John McArdle
Julia McKenzie
Ken Livingstone MP
Kim Wilde
Lene Lovich
Linda McCartney
Linda Lusardi
Liz Fraser
Lizzy Welch
Lord Pandit Prof Dr Sir
Anton Jayasuriya
Lulu
Lynda Bellingham
Lynsey De Paul

Marje Proops
Matthew Kelly
Michael Mansfield QC
Midge Ure
Mike Hall MP
Mike Elliot MEP
Nanette Newman
Nick Ainger MP
Nigel Hawthorne
Nigel Havers
Nik Kershaw
Nyree Dawn Porter OBE
Otto von Habsburg MEP
Paddy Tipping MP
Pam St Clement
Paul McCartney
Paul Flynn MP
Penelope Keith
Penny Junor
Pete Murray
Peter Crompton MEP
Peter Griffiths MP
Peter Cushing
Professor Andrew Linzey
Richard Wilson
Richard Briers

Richard Adams
Rita Tushingham
Robert Lindsay
Robert Wyatt
Roger Godsiff MP
Roger Lloyd Pack
Rolf Harris
Russell Grant
Sean Hughes
Sheila Steafel
Shirley Watts
Sir John Gielgud
Spike Milligan
Stan Newens MEP
Stephanie Beacham
Stephen Byers MP
Susan Hampshire
Terry Patchett MP
The late Bill Travers
Tom Watt
Tom Spencer MEP
Tony Banks MP
Tony Blackburn
Tony Britton
Victor Spinetti
Wendy Richard

*(Readers can get more information about Plan 2000 by writing to:
Plan 2000 Information Office,
234 Summergangs Rd, Hull HU8 8LL.)*

Local Group Reports

ANIMAL RIGHTS COALITION (LONDON)

c/o CALF, Box BM 8889, London WC1N 3XX

On the 15th May, ARC (London) held its second meeting and 22 people from various animal rights groups in and around London attended. Protests organised included the leafleting of the Anti-Nazi League carnival where 3,000 leaflets detailing events and groups addresses were handed out. On June 4th, 8 ARC (London) people surrounded the dead sheep at the Serpentine Gallery as a protest against sick artist Damien Hirst, and on 16th June a demo took place at the publishers of Anglers Mail to mark anti-angling week.

On July 16th, 3 people handed out leaflets at Westminster Hall where the National Trust were holding an EGM regarding whether or not stag hunting should be allowed on National Trust land. ARC (London) meet every 3 months.

ANIMAL RIGHTS CHESTERFIELD

c/o M.A.R.G., PO Box 39, Mansfield

Animal Rights Chesterfield have produced a leaflet asking people to think carefully before getting a pet. They also inform people of the cruelty involved in bringing exotic animals into this country such as monkeys and wild birds.

ANTI-SHAMROCK CAMPAIGN

PO Box 307, Ship Street, Brighton, East Sussex

World Day For Laboratory Animals Against Shamrock Farm was held on Sunday April 10th. Around 400 people attended the rally which lasted two hours. Speeches were made by Terry Hill, the private investigator, who spent several months working inside Shamrock, and Dave Hammond, the Event Organiser. A 30 minute video has been produced featuring monkey trapping in the wild, scenes from inside Shamrock Farm and footage of the campaign. It is available for £6 including postage and packing.

AVON VEGANS

*c/o Karma Cottage, 3 The Rock, Brislington,
Bristol BS4 4PU*

Avon Vegans has been set up as part of the South West Region Vegetarian Coalition initiative. The primary aim of Avon Vegans is to unite and socially interact with vegans throughout Avon. The group will also look at campaigning if members wish to do so. Please write to the above address, enclosing an SAE for more information and details of how to join.

ANIMAL RIGHTS CAMBRIDGE 74 Sturton Street, Cambridge CB1 2QA

Animal Rights Cambridge meet at 8.00 pm on the fourth Tuesday of every month at The Bath House, Gwydir Street, Cambridge.

In May, Anne Campbell MP gave a talk on hare coursing and foxhunting to Animal Rights Cambridge and Cambridge Anti-Bloodsports Society.

BARNET ANIMAL RIGHTS GROUP

*PO Box 76, Barnet, Herts. EN4
9AW*

BARG primarily covers the Barnet and Finchley areas. They hold regular meetings on the first Wednesday of the month at 8.00 pm at the Quaker Meeting House, 58 Alexandra Grove, West Finchley, London N12, usually with a video presentation or discussion, and the occasional guest speaker. Regular leafleting sessions are held on a Saturday morning in Barnet or Finchley. New supporters always welcome.

B.H.S.A.

c/o PO Box 355, Basingstoke

Past activities have included letters of protests to holiday companies which promote hunt meets. For details of current events, please contact above address.

BELFAST ANIMAL RIGHTS

*PO Box 148, Belfast BT1 2LZ
0232 314076*

Belfast Animal Rights held their World Day demo outside Queens University which was attended by 50-60 people. They also had a stall where students were able to watch videos showing the cruelty and fraudulence of animal experiments. They had three coffins on the demo - two to represent the animals which had suffered and died at Queens University, and one to represent the humans throughout the world who had died as a result of taking drugs tested on animals. An informative newsletter called Ermintrude is available.

BANGOR ANIMAL RIGHTS (BAR)

c/o The Greenhouse, 1 Trevelyan Terrace, Bangor, Gwynedd, North Wales

BAR is a newly formed group and they would like to hear from anyone in the area interested in animal rights. For details of meetings etc, please write to the address above. They would also like to hear from other groups in Wales and North West England with a view to supporting each other's actions.

BARNSELY ANIMAL RIGHTS

0226 742993

Contact Margaret on the above number for further information regarding participation in activities organised in the Barnsley area. Local information stalls are set up, demos attended, pickets and public meetings arranged.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY ANIMAL RIGHTS GROUP

This group is pleased to announce growing support and increased activity over the last year. Recent campaigns have included pickets outside McDonalds, and leafleting sessions outside a Glaxo careers presentation, supermarkets selling Faroese fish and a cinema showing Free Willy. They recently had a very well attended speaker meeting with Dr. Gill Langley talking on alternatives to vivisection and students have been encouraged to carry the Humane Research Donor Card. Many members are active in the local hunt saboteurs, and members have attended the Grand National demo, the World Day march, circus demos, and an inspection of the Huntingdon Research Centre.

C H SABS / LAKELAND ANIMAL AID

PO Box 83, Carlisle, Cumbria.

Sabs hold regular stalls and have been collecting signatures for the National Anti-Hunt Petition. Lakeland Animal Aid have held demos against Boots and circuses and the group is continuing to hold demos against McDonalds. The local group's stalls are proving to be successful.

CAT CONCERN (AND OTHER ANIMALS)

PO Box 234, Hounslow TW3 2QG

In the last year over 200 animals have been rescued, homed, treated for illness and/or neutered and spayed. 17 homes act as foster homes for rescues. The group continues to accept gifts of tins and biscuits from the public. Strict checks are carried out by volunteers before an animal is rehomed with a new owner.

CLOSE DOWN LEYDEN STREET CHICKEN SLAUGHTERHOUSE

(East London)

The campaign against Leyden Street chicken slaughterhouse continues - battery hens are kept there in cramped conditions awaiting a cruel end. A picket is held outside Leyden Street Slaughterhouse on the first and third Sunday of every month. They meet at Liverpool Street underground/British mainline station at the main entrance between 10.45 to 11.00 am. Supporters welcome.

DARTMOOR BADGERS PROTECTION LEAGUE

*Riverside Cottage, Poundsgate,
Newton Abbot, Devon TQ13 7NV
0626 773744*

The Dartmoor Badgers Protection League are asking people to write to their MP's calling for a complete halt to badger killing by the Ministry of Agriculture. They are also protesting against South West Water's plans to construct an access road through woods in Dartmouth which would destroy some badger setts and put others in peril. Annual subscriptions £2, members receive a quarterly newsletter.

DEVON VEGANS (Campaigns Unit)

c/o The Old Forge, Throwleigh EX20 2HS

Devon Vegans (Campaigns Unit) are currently highlighting the cruelty involved in rabbit farming. In Britain 40,000 rabbits are slaughtered per week. They invite people wanting a full list of rabbit farms in the South West to send an SAE to the above address. Devon Vegans (Campaigns Unit) would like to hear from other groups to publicise their campaigns in their newsletter.

EAST ANGLIAN CAMPAIGN FOR ETHICAL RESEARCH

About 20 activists from Suffolk and Norfolk mounted a protest outside a Suffolk laboratory complex where experiments are conducted on live animals. The protesters handed in a letter to the management of Pharmaco LSR at Occold calling for less secrecy surrounding experiments and asking for animal welfare groups to be allowed to look around.

EAST KENT ANIMAL WELFARE
0304 363071/830873/362666

An all-night vigil was held at Dover Docks on July 29th to protest against live exports. The following day a march and rally was held from Dover docks through town into Pencester Gardens. Guest speakers invited to attend included Tony Banks MP, Andrew Bowden MP and Phil Lymbery (CIWF).

FRIENDS OF ANIMALS (FAUNA)
PO Box 156, Cardiff, South Wales CF5 5YD

FAUNA is campaigning to make Cardiff City Council ban angling on the Roath Park lake, where many birds have become entangled in discarded and broken fishing line. Previous successful campaigns have included a plan to introduce ostrich farming in Penmark being rejected by Councillors, who refused planning permission after reading Fauna's detailed letters on the cruelty involved.

FRIENDS OF THE ANIMALS
c/o 70 High Street Leicester LE1 5YP

Stalls are held three times a week in Leicester city centre. The group raises public awareness on veganism. Local demos against Boots, McDonalds and butchers are organised. A foster home has been set up for homeless dogs, cats, mice, etc. It neuters and spays animals and organises home checks. The group is run by vegans but anyone is welcome to assist them in their work.

HERTFORDSHIRE ANIMAL RIGHTS CAMPAIGN
PO Box 66, Broxbourne, Herts. EN10 6LU

HARC is run by the same people involved in the National Anti-Hunt Petition. The petition now has over a quarter of a million signatures and hunt bans have been secured in Somerset, Hampshire and Leicestershire.

HUNTINGDON ANIMALS RIGHTS
PO Box 83, Huntingdon, Cambs. PE18 9HD

This is a new animal rights group and if anyone is interested, please contact the above address.

I.O.W. ANIMAL PRESERVATION AND ACTION GROUP
Little Spinney, Solent Road, Cranmore, Yarmouth,
Isle of Wight PO41 0XY

This group produces Preserve, an informative bulletin. They organised a sponsored bicycle ride in August. For further details contact the above address.

LONDON VEGANS
7 Deansbrook Road, Edgware, Middx. HA8 9BE

London Vegans organise various socials, catering and information stalls throughout the London area. Regular meetings are held on the last Wednesday of every month (except December) at the Millman Street Community Rooms, WC1. London Vegans produce a brilliant mailout list on the activities taking place up and down the country.

LONDON BOOTS ACTION GROUP
c/o Alara, 58 Seven Sisters Road, London N7 6AA

The LBAG was set up in October 1991 to campaign against Boots' animal experiments. They are calling for a boycott of all Boots stores and products until the company ceases animal testing. They are producing an Alternative Report on Boots detailing all their undesirable activities. To receive the report and a regular newsletter, please send a donation of at least £3 for one year's LBAG membership.

LONDON ANIMAL PROTECTION LEAGUE
BM L.A.P.L., London WC1N 3XX

The London Animal Protection League, formed in April 1994 aims to campaign against all forms of animal abuse in London, as well as supporting and encouraging others to get involved in the struggle for animal liberation. They have no membership fees and produce newsletters, but people can become members by attending their events which are publicised in their National Animal Rights calendar - a copy can be sent on request.

MIDLANDS ANIMAL RIGHTS COALITION
(M.A.R.C.)

PO Box 43, Dudley, West Midlands DY3 3DL

M.A.R.C. is growing as a true coalition and is finding it very productive working with other groups. They have recently been joined by Wolverhampton Hunt Sabs, the Birmingham Animal Rights Campaigns Group, Dudley Animal Concern, Walsall Animal Rights and Wyre Forest Animal Concern. Two local universities have AR/Green groups which have expressed an interest in joining. M.A.R.C. recently held protests outside McDonalds in West Bromwich and Dudley Zoo. They are also launching a new leaflet on the exotic meat trade which includes ostrich and bison meat.

NEWCASTLE ANIMAL RIGHTS COALITION

PO Box 1JY, Newcastle upon Tyne, NE99 1JY

On 6th April 1994, three animal rights activists, all members of NARC, disrupted the North's most prestigious greyhound racing event, the BBC trophy, at Sun Bonds Ltd. Sunderland Greyhound Stadium. The protesters scaled the perimeter fence and stormed the track seconds before the hare passed the traps where the dogs were waiting to start the race. The hare was stopped by officials at the last second, and a banner was unfurled behind the traps reading NO SPEED, NO GOOD - 30,000 losers butchered per year. The result was that the televised race, seen by millions on the BBC's Sportsnight programme, live, was delayed by 7 minutes and received coverage by newspapers and radio nationwide. The three activists were attacked by racegoers before being arrested for Breach of the Peace and held for around 3 hours.

NORTH WEST VEGGIES CATERING

PO Box 38, Manchester M60 1NX
061 953 4039

North West Veggies works along the same lines as the original Veggies providing great food at assorted Animal Rights and Green events. They would be happy to hear from anyone planning an event either in the North West, or a larger event in the North of England.

PRESTON ACTION FOR ANIMALS

PO Box 385, Ashton, Preston PR2

If anyone in the Preston area is interested in the group's activities, please contact them at the above address.

SOUTH WEST REGION VEGETARIAN COALITION

c/o Devon Vegans, The Old Forge, Throwleigh,
Devon EX20 2HS

This coalition is hoping to be able to unite vegetarian/vegan groups and contacts throughout the South West of England. They want to encourage help and support, and to motivate vegetarians to get together, exchange campaign information and offer each other advice. The coalition uses the term vegetarian in the loosest form possible, as no groups will be excluded.

SOUTH EAST ANIMAL RIGHTS COALITION (SEARC)

19a Amherst Road, Bexhill-on-Sea, East Sussex
TN40 1QH

An informative newsletter, The National Link, is available containing the latest news regarding the campaign against Sealink and lots more besides. For more information, write to SEARC.

SHEFFIELD NEUTERING AND SPAYING SCHEME

193 Firth Park Road, Sheffield S5 6WU
0742 420434

This is a new group in the Sheffield area which aims to promote neutering and spaying through education and also to help people on low incomes or state benefits with the cost of getting their animals neutered/spayed. They also undertake some rescue work. They raise funds by doing car boot sales, and any saleable goods or donations are always welcome.

SURREY ANIMAL RIGHTS

PO Box 787, South Croydon CR2
6TG

Surrey Animal Rights have received good newspaper coverage of their protests outside Boots and Cancer Research shops. For more details, please write to above address.

SUTTON ANIMAL ACTION

33 Lower Road, Sutton, Surrey SM1 4QJ
081 241 8674

Sutton Animal Action is run by active animal rights campaigners who seek to draw public awareness towards all aspects of cruelty in the area. They divide any profits from their stalls between local animal sanctuaries. Their main aim is to involve more people in sabbing and demonstrations.

SURREY BADGER PROTECTION SOCIETY

0883 344662

This registered charity is affiliated to the National Federation of Badger Groups. The SBPS recently made strong representation to the Council to support the motion to ban hunting on council owned land. The society's concerns about the stopping of badger setts by the hunt were supported by the county's own Ranger service. The vote was won by the anti-hunting councillors by 10 votes to 7. The recommendation to ban hunting will now go to a meeting of the full council on 16th November. A regular newsletter published by the SBPS is available to members.

STEVENAGE ANIMAL RIGHTS

Box 6, Bowes Lyon House, St. George's Way,
Stevenage, Herts. SG1 1XY

Stevenage Animal Rights held a Cruelty Free Fair at Stevenage Leisure Centre in May. The first edition of a Cruelty Free Guide, compiled by members of the group, was launched at the Fair. Volunteers are always welcome to help man Stevenage Animal Rights street stalls. Membership fee is £4.50 - members receive a bi-monthly newsletter. Recent newsletters have highlighted the cruelty involved in British Zoos, and Glaxo animal experiments in Stevenage.

SOUTH LONDON ANIMAL AID

PO Box 594, London SW9 8QG

SLAA meets regularly on the first Thursday of every month at 7.30 pm, at the Voltaire Room, Clapham Baths, 157 Clapham Manor Street, London SW4. A recent speaker was Peter Stevenson, Political and Legal Director of Compassion in World Farming. A 24 hour vigil at the Institute of Psychiatry was held in June to protest against primate experiments.

SLAA run a catering service called the Green Marmoset Catering Company, for which volunteers are always welcome. Volunteers are also needed to help with the Deptford Cat Sanctuary - please write to SLAA for details.

TAUNTON ANIMAL RIGHTS

PO Box 243, Taunton

T.A.R. also includes hunt sab groups. Regular meetings and town centre stalls are held. Recent demos include Boots, McDonalds and Bristol Zoo. T.A.R. also joined up with HARC against hunting on council land and much public support has been gained.

WINCHESTER ANIMAL CONCERN

6 South Street, Ropley, Alresford, Hants.

Previous activities have involved a march through the Winnal Industrial Estate in Winchester to the Webbs poultry slaughter and processing plant, which received good newspaper coverage. For details of latest events, please write to above address.

WALSALL ANIMAL RIGHTS

0922 414885

Previous action has included a picket at the Home Office to protest against the proposed trespass law against hunt sabs. For details of current activities, please contact.

UNCAGED

14 Ridgeway Road, Sheffield S12 2SS

'Uncaged' held a march against vivisection at Sheffield University in July. A rally took place with speakers in Barkers Pool and a Cruelty Free Fayre was held in Sheffield Town Hall. Uncaged are currently holding a campaign asking people to boycott Proctor and Gamble in a bid to stop the testing their products on animals - 50,000 animals die at the hands of Proctor and Gamble in America every year. Leaflets about this campaign listing which products to avoid are available at £5.00 per set of 100, as are postcards. A consumer guide on which companies do or do not test on animals is available for 50p.

YAA

Box 1760, Yeovil, Somerset BA21 5YD

YAA have produced a leaflet highlighting the charities, including the British Heart Foundation, which fund animal based research. Factsheets are available at a cost of £1 each.

STOP PRESS!

New anti-fur campaign.

London, with its dozens of fur shops, manufacturers and brokers, represents the last stronghold of the fur trade in Britain. Several animal rights groups are getting together to launch a major drive against the fur trade in London, with daily pickets of fur shops in Central London beginning in October. If you live in the London area, or are planning a visit, a couple of hours of your time could be vital to the success of this campaign.

Write to "Fur-Free London", c/o the London Anti-Fur Campaign, PO Box 216, London E7 9RB or phone 081 771 2792 for further details.

Animal Rights Coalition (ARC News)

It has come to our attention that a number of local animal rights groups haven't been receiving their copy of ARC News. If not, please write to ARC, PO Box 155, Manchester M60 1FT.

New prisoner

Lise Olsen F9446267.

Sanctuaries

CHIN UP SANCTUARY

*Gwernalt Bungalow, Llanarmon, Chwillog,
Pwllheli, Gwynedd LL53 6SW
0766 810799 (8-10pm only)*

Lee Campbell founded Chin Up in 1991 after becoming aware of the plight of intensively farmed chinchillas bred in wretched conditions for the fur and pet trades. The sanctuary takes in sick, abused or unwanted chinchillas and legally rescued animals from these fur farms. Donations are desperately needed for feeding, housing and vet care for the many creatures in their keeping, and also to campaign against polygamous breeding of chinchillas and buying from pet shops. Free advice on chinchilla care is available plus a free fact sheet (S.A.E. appreciated).

TY AGORED ANIMAL SANCTUARY

*Cribyn, Lampeter, Dyfed, Wales SA48 7NQ
0570 470589*

Ty Agored Animal Sanctuary was founded in the early 1970's, and while growing in size and repute, its aims remain the same. These are: to rescue animals in need or in distress, to advocate the neutering and spaying of pet dogs and cats, and to re-home animals whenever possible. As Ty Agored does not destroy animals, except for the terminally ill or injured, there are always many animals needing good homes. No financial help is given from public funds and the sanctuary, a registered charity, depends on donations from its well-wishers, on fund-raising events, market stalls and the income from its charity shops. All these are organised and run by the sanctuary's founder, Barbara Packham, and her voluntary helpers who, with a small but efficient kennel-staff, do their best to ensure that countless animals are given a second chance.

THE SEAL AND WILDLIFE HOSPITAL

*83, Newlands Estate, Bacton, Norfolk NR12 0HR
0692 650540*

Barry Nickerson gave up his business in 1988 to devote himself to the rescue of seals and other marine casualties. Barry and his team of volunteers rescue on average 30 seals a year and to date have released 200 seals back into the wild, and nursed thousands of birds which are usually the victims of ocean pollution. The rescue teams cover a 60 mile area of the North Norfolk coast and the Norfolk Broads where they treat sick swans poisoned by fishermen's lead weights. Around 2,000 birds have been released into the wild including guillemots, razorbills, gannets, fulmars, seagulls, kestrels, barn owls, tawny owls and swans. The hospital works hard preparing special alternatives to seal milk and cleaning pens and pools, etc. It costs a great deal of money to cover the expense of equipment, drugs and food.

THE PHYLLIS HARVEY HORSE AND DONKEY TRUST

*"Tethers End", The Ring Road, Weetwood,
Leeds 16
676122*

Heidi, a starved young pony; Bimbo and Jack Frost, donkeys saved from a slaughterer; Jeremiah, an abandoned foal; and Dante, a Shetland colt bought from a butcher, are just a few of the old, unwanted, mistreated and abandoned animals this charity gives refuge to. Although primarily a rescue centre for horses and donkeys, many other creatures are also given much needed help. The Trust never resorts to euthanasia unless advised to do so by their veterinary surgeons if they feel the quality of life has gone. All the rescued animals welcome visitors and can be sponsored for £5 each. Due to the high cost of feeding, stabling and veterinary treatment, finances are continually at a very low ebb, and the centre relies on donations and on holding Open Days, details of which can be obtained from the above address.

THE CAT AND RABBIT RESCUE CENTRE

*Holborow Lodge, Chalder Lane, Sidlesham,
Chichester, West Sussex PO20 7RJ
0243 641409*

"Giving the Living a Chance at Life" is the worthy motto of this charity who take in and re-home cats and rabbits. They offer advice and help on all aspects of cat and rabbit care. For general sanctuary and cat problems, please ring Monique on the above telephone number. For advice on the rabbit side of their work please ring Donna on 0903 755909. Started in 1986 this registered charity also tries to educate the public on the necessity of neutering and spaying pets and the humane control of feral colonies of cats. Visits are by appointment only and the centre is always in need of saleable goods for much needed funds.

CREATURES WILDLIFE CARE TRUST

11 Egham Crescent, North Cheam,
Surrey SM3 9AL : 081 395 8844

'Creatures' is a wildlife rescue and rehabilitation centre which cares for sick, injured and orphaned wild animals and birds. Each year they look after hundreds of patients ranging from hedgehogs and foxes to blackbirds and owls. Once fully fit, the patients are released back into the wild, and those that cannot be released are found suitable alternative accommodation. No animal is ever turned away. One of the trust's objectives is to educate, and the founder, Kevin Ahronson, gives talks and slide-shows to all kinds of local groups. He also produces a regular wildlife column in the local newspaper. The trust wishes to expand with a new intensive care block which will house incubators, heated hospital cages and additional veterinary equipment. Long-term plans involve moving to a purpose-built hospital which will provide an opportunity to increase medical facilities and give additional housing for more casualties. Membership of Creatures Club is £12 for adults, £5 for children and OAP's, and family membership is £20 per year. Please write to the above address for details of volunteer work, membership, talks, or to make a donation.

CELIA HAMMOND ANIMAL TRUST

High Street, Wadhurst, East Sussex TN5 6AG
0892 783367 / 783820

The Celia Hammond Trust is the only charity whose main objective is the establishment of low-cost spay clinics for dogs and cats. CHAT has just completed the purchase of the country's first low-cost neuter clinic in Lewisham, South London, which it hopes to open within the next few months. Two and a half million stray cats and dogs struggle to survive in the streets. To combat this national scandal, CHAT will arrange for two full-time vets to neuter one hundred and fifty dogs and cats a week, with two more operating tables available when staffing increases. A bitch spay will cost £20-£25, a cat spay will be £10. Eventually, CHAT plan a nationwide service of eight clinics and are heartened by the success of a Vancouver spay clinic who, after five years, achieved an 88% reduction in the destruction of unwanted animals, and a 61% reduction in cruelty cases. This can be achieved in the UK if funding can be found.

CHAT have recently moved their sanctuary with 340 cats, kittens, rescued dogs, six goats, and numerous ex-battery hens to Brede in Sussex. They also operate a rescue service and recently saved sixteen cats and kittens from a demolished building. Literature is available from their Wadhurst address. Over one hundred permanent sanctuary residents can be adopted either individually or as a group.

THE HAVEN ANIMAL CENTRE S.O.S. FOAL AND EQUINE CENTRE

Seymour Farm, Curland, Taunton,
Somerset TA3 5SD
0823 481220

Although currently setting up the sanctuary for rescued ponies, this centre is also trying desperately to expose the horrific treatment of thousands of British native ponies who are exported, under barbaric and cruel conditions, to the slaughterhouses of France, Italy and Belgium. They are collecting film and video evidence to aid their objectives which are; to save as many ponies as possible from death and give them a life of ease at the sanctuary; to ensure that the current laws relating to the welfare and transport of ponies are upheld and offenders punished; and to fight for a change in the law that will end this evil trade forever. Funds are very desperately needed for this aim, as are volunteers to help run the sanctuary (manual or clerical), and fund-raisers. Annual membership of S.O.S. is £6.00 for adults, £2.50 for under-16's, £4.00 for concessions, and family membership is £15.00. For further information on petitions, newsletters, the campaign and/or donations, please call Julie or Sarah on 0823 481220, or write to the above address.

CEDARWOOD WILDLIFE CARE

Blissford Hill, Frogham, nr. Fordingbridge,
Hants. SP6 2HX
0425 657402

Dawn and Jerry Collinson devote their lives to helping and caring for injured animals at their Wildlife Care Centre at Frogham. Here, injured animals can be brought, nursed back to health by Dawn and Jerry, and released back into the wild. Over the years they have helped foxes, badgers, deer, rabbits, hedgehogs and countless birds. No animal is ever turned away, many having been shot, trapped or involved in car accidents. Once at the centre wounds can be healed, legs and wings mended and local vets are able to help with more serious problems. The centre is run as a non-profitmaking concern but financial support remains a problem, and they will continue their fine work as long as money is available.

THE DONKEY SANCTUARY

Sidmouth, Devon EX10 0NU
0395 578222

6,174 donkeys have found love and care at the sanctuary since its foundation by Dr. E. Svendsen in 1969. Through staff and volunteers, reports of cruelty are investigated quickly anywhere in the U.K. and welfare officers regularly visit horse markets and do checks on donkey derbys and beaches, etc. Advice on donkey care is freely available. The sanctuary also has a purpose-built donkey hospital to serve its nine donkey-filled farms. Visitors are welcome every day of the year from 9am until dusk at their intake centre at Slade House Farm, Sidmouth. Every care is taken to ensure that funds are used for the purpose they were given and administration costs are kept to the minimum. All donkeys admitted to the Sanctuary are granted the right to life regardless of age or health; the best possible treatment, care and drugs; permanent peace and freedom; and a dignified, peaceful death - this only being induced in the event of extreme suffering and on a vet's recommendation.

PETSEARCH

16 Elm Grove Road, Salisbury, Wiltshire SP1 1JW
0722 326046

Although not a sanctuary as such, Petsearch, the national network of helplines for assisting pets and reuniting them with their owners, goes a long way towards relieving the burden on sanctuaries who often have to home or keep lost animals. Petsearch has been operating for over two years in the south of England and have already had over 30,000 calls and have reunited more than 16,000 pets with their owners. It was founded as a response to the increasing problem of lost and stolen pets; sadly, many cats and dogs are being stolen for vivisection, fur, bait for fighting dogs, etc. Other pets are simply lost and are often destroyed before the owners have time to claim them.

Petsearch is a charity which relies upon volunteers who work closely with dog wardens, vets and animal sanctuaries, as well as maintaining four helplines for owners. The numbers to call are: 0722 326046 (Phil); 0722 327146 (Monica); 0722 337773 (Celia); 0722 712527 (Margaret).

Petsearch also organises a Pet Owners Support Scheme to relieve the worry of pet owners who have to go into hospital or care. Petsearch offers all their services without charge, but because of the size of the pet problem they are now desperate for an individual or group to sponsor them for £1,000 a year.

PHOENIX ANIMAL RESCUE

P.O. Box 29, Biggin Hill, TN16 3XZ

It is the objective of Phoenix Animal Rescue to take in any abandoned, unwanted or abused animal - from guinea pigs to horses. They also hand-rear and rehabilitate wildlife such as fox cubs, squirrels, birds, etc. After regaining their health, homes are found for as many creatures as possible - always vetted and on a loan basis only. Animals which cannot be rehomed remain as permanent residents. These include cats, rabbits, guinea pigs, goats, donkeys, horses, pigs, ex-battery hens, ducks, geese, and many more.

Phoenix Animal Rescue are actively seeking permanent, safe accommodation for the animals in their care. They also urgently need sacks, tins of animal food, hay, straw, woodchips, cages, hutches, dishes, brushes, and various tools such as shovels and buckets. On the administration side, items such as new stamps, paper and envelopes are required.

Volunteers for fund-raising are urgently needed, as are saleable goods. Please ring Mike on 081 402 0705 or Andree on 081 291 6815 for details. Membership is £6 for adults, £3 for under-16's, and £10 for a family. A sponsorship scheme for the animals' keep is also available. P.A.R. is run entirely by volunteers and every penny of your donation, however small, goes towards upkeep and the funding of their rescue work.

WARNHAM ANIMAL SANCTUARY

Mayes Lane, Warnham, Sussex RH12 3SG
0403 268095

The small village of Warnham, near Horsham, has two claims to recognition; the first being that it is the birthplace of the vegetarian poet and campaigner Percy Bysshe Shelley, and the second is that it hosts the winner of the Dog World Rescue Competition at Crufts this year. Warnham Sanctuary was founded in 1979 by David Browne who some may remember as an actor in Z Cars and Dixon of Dock Green. Open to the public 364 days a year, visitors can see the cats, dogs and donkeys who are awaiting new homes.

Five thousand animals have been helped by the sanctuary so far, and no fit creature is ever put to sleep. Hundreds of unwanted pets arrive every year and are looked after by troubled and difficult young people, under the guidance of the sanctuary and various authorities, who are given the chance to love and be loved. With no office blocks, clerical staff, or huge wages to pay, all donations go to the running of the sanctuary. Recent events include a large but easy-going dog show held at the Warnham school on 27th August.

Pigeon Recovery

8 Vermont Road, Sutton,
Surrey SM1 3EQ
081 644 7349

We care for (and collect in the South London area) any sick, orphaned or injured pigeon. Any donation would be sincerely appreciated.

National Groups

ANIMAL LIBERATION FRONT (SUPPORTERS GROUP)

BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX

Subscription to their quarterly newsletter is £24.00 a year. It provides information about current arrests and imprisonment of alleged animal rights activists. The SG raises funds, chiefly to help pay fines and help towards the travelling expenses of visiting relatives. Funds also go towards paying for books, cruelty-free toiletries, etc. A range of merchandise is available with a discount to any SG member.

ANIMAL LIBERATION FRONT (PRESS OFFICE)

BM 4400, London WC1N 3XX
0954 230542 (H) or 0836 310763 (Mobile)

The Press Office plays a vital role in the animal rights movement. It remains paramount as a means of providing TV, radio and newspaper coverage about why ALF actions take place. Speakers are also available for meetings, etc. Merchandise is also available. Donations are always welcome to help run the office of a much needed and valuable animal rights service.

ADVOCATES FOR ANIMALS 10, Queensferry Street, Edinburgh EH2 4PG

This group produces the Annual Pictorial Review, a colour booklet packed with information. AFA highlighted Glasgow University when they experimented on monkeys in head injury experiments. They finance and take part in special investigations and campaign against all forms of animal abuse.

ARKANGEL

ARKANGEL
BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX

Arkangel is a magazine which aims to provide information and support for the animal rights movement, to encourage unity, and to provide a forum for the exchange of news and views. Donations are always welcome. In order to keep Arkangel up-to-date, please would local and national groups continue to send in information about their current activities as these will be used in the next edition of the magazine.

ANIMAL LIBERATION INVESTIGATION UNIT

PO Box 38, Manchester M60 1FT

Animal abuse establishments are inspected, video footage taken and documents removed to build up files.

ANIMAL RIGHTS COALITION (ARC) PO Box 155, Manchester M60 1FT

ARC encourages the coming together of all groups. A newsletter is provided with a diary of events and current campaigns. ARC also sends out lists detailing addresses of current animal abuse establishments supplied by Arkangel Information.

ACTION TO ABOLISH THE GRAND NATIONAL

PO Box 3152, London E12 5JW

AAGN campaigns to publicise the cruelty of the Grand National - highlighting the fact that 250 horses die on British racecourses every year and many others are seriously injured. Posters and leaflets are available.

ANIMAL BIRTH CONTROL Festings Buildings, Highland Road, Southsea PO4 9BZ 0705 736691

ABC helps with the spaying and neutering of animals, and also with helping elderly people with the costs of keeping their companion animals. Due to an upsurge in animal cruelty, ABC now works with Animal Action which rescues and re-homes unwanted and abandoned animals.

ANIMAL AID AND ADVICE 081 889 9714

Their main objective is to encourage responsible pet ownership. They reinforce the fact that neutering and spaying is essential to prevent unwanted litters. AAA also re-homes abandoned and unwanted pets and runs a fostering service.

ANIMAL AID & ADVICE

ANIMAL AID SOCIETY

*The Old Chapel, Bradford Street, Tonbridge,
Kent TN9 1AW
0732 364546*

Animal Aid publishes a Journal for Action called Outrage. In June, along with the Global Partnership, they organised the Living Without Cruelty Exhibition in London. They are about to launch a new manifesto for humane non-animal research, provisionally titled Liberating Science. Annual subscription £10 waged, £6 unwaged, £4 youth.

ACTION AGAINST PUPPY FARMING

PO Box 2, Llandysul, Dyfed SA44 4EB

Dyfed is known for its puppy farming. The animals are bred only for profit therefore suffering, cruelty and neglect are involved. AAPF spreads the message not to buy puppies from a pet shop as they are usually bred in the appalling puppy farms. Donations welcome.

ANGLICAN SOCIETY FOR THE WELFARE OF ANIMALS

*St. Augustine's Vicarage, 117 Queens Gate,
London SW7 5LW*

Objectives of the society are to promote a more compassionate view towards animals in the Anglican Church. A bulletin is produced.

ALLIANCE FOR ANIMAL RIGHTS

4-5 Eustace Street, Dublin 2, Eire

Campaigns against all forms of animal cruelty.

ANIMAL CRUELTY INVESTIGATION GROUP

c/o 83-87 Union Street, London SE1 1SG

This is a small group of specialist investigators who gather evidence of the cruelty involved in a range of animal welfare issues - bloodsports, vivisection, factory farming etc. A twice-yearly news bulletin is produced.

THE ARK ANIMAL RESCUE

*PO Box 463, Beckenham, Kent, BR3 2ZH
Wildlife Aid - 081 312 9021*

This is an animal rescue centre which cares for unwanted pets and rescued animals. They also deal with hurt animals and encourage people to ring them on the above Wildlife Aid telephone number if they find any injured wildlife. Their sanctuary is run solely by volunteers and they would welcome any donations. They also run a yearly animal adoption scheme for their permanent residents. A quarterly newsletter is published. Adult membership is £6.00 annually.

ANIMAL CONCERN

*62 Old Dumbarton Road, Glasgow G3 8RE
041 334 6014*

Animal Concern incorporates the Scottish Anti-Vivisection Society. They publish a quarterly newsletter and run various campaigns including a farm animal campaign to ban all factory farming by the year 2000.

ANIMAL RESCUE

PO Box 233, Liverpool L69 7LF

Animal Rescue are currently running a campaign to highlight the plight of llamas being farmed for their wool. They are also conducting a national survey for which they would welcome any information on the location of llama and angora rabbit farms and shops which sell clothes made from llama or angora fibre.

ANTI-BULLFIGHTING COMMITTEE

PO Box 175, Liverpool L69 8DX

Liaises with Spanish A/R groups to persuade holidaymakers not to attend bullfights, and tries to persuade travel companies to publish a statement in their brochures discouraging people from attending bullfights.

BRITISH DIVERS MARINE LIFE RESCUE

12 Mayland Road, Corby, Northants. NN7 2DR

This is an international marine animal rescue and protection organisation, helping to protect marine animals from threats of over-fishing, pollution, etc. Membership is £15.00 a year with concessions for OAP's.

BRITISH UNION FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION (BUAV)

*16a Crane Grove, London N7 8LB
071 700 4888*

They continue to run various campaigns against animal abuse around the world. One of the latest campaigns is for people to boycott holidaying in Barbados in an attempt to end the trade in wild caught primates. They are also running a campaign backed by celebrities to call on airlines to stop transporting monkeys to laboratories. A quarterly newsletter is distributed to members.

BOOTS ACTION NOTTINGHAM

*BAN, 180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HW
0602 585666*

The Boots Action Committee has drawn up a charter which calls on Boots to cease all animal-based research and testing. It calls upon people to boycott Boots and encourages people to write to Boots Head Office to explain the reasons for the boycott. They held a day of action on Saturday 18th June and demonstrated outside the Boots Annual General Meeting in July.

BRITISH HEDGEHOG PRESERVATION SOCIETY

Knowbury House, Knowbury, Ludlow,
Shropshire SY8 3LQ
Hedgehog Helpline - 0584 890287

This charity publishes a regular newsletter giving details on all aspects of hedgehog welfare. They run a Hedgehog Helpline during office hours on the above telephone number. They are also interested to receive reports on hedgehogs seen in people's gardens for a hibernation study.

BRITISH ANTI-VIVISECTION ASSOCIATION

PO Box 82, Kingswood, Bristol BS15 1YF

B.A.V.A. has some useful information on medical fraud and experiments. They have recently launched their Medically Induced Plague campaign. The aims of the campaign are to abolish all animal experimentation and to increase public awareness of the hazardous nature of most medication. Posters, booklets and petitions are available. Subscriptions are £6.00 a year. Books by Hans Reusch are available by mail order.

BRITISH DIVERS MARINE LIFE RESCUE

12 Mayland Road, Corby, Northants. NN7 2DR

This is an international marine animal rescue and protection organisation, helping to protect marine animals from threats of over-fishing, pollution etc. Membership is £15.00 a year with concessions for OAP's.

BEAUTY WITHOUT CRUELTY CHARITY

57 King Henry's Walk, London N1 4NH
071 254 2929

The BWCC campaigns to end the torture and slaughter of all animals in the name of fashion and beauty. Current campaigns include FUR FREE 2000 to ban fur farming in the UK before the end of the decade and a petition to protest against the ISO/TC 191 Humane Animal Traps Standard.

CAMPAIGN AGAINST LEATHER AND FUR

(CALF)

BM 8889,
London WC1N 3XX

Leaflets are available on the leather, fur, wool and silk trades. Please send an SAE for further information.

CRUELTY-FREE COMPANIONS

Box CFC M, The Rainbow Centre, 180
Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HU

This is a non-profitmaking national set-up. It aims to link people together who believe in a cruelty-free lifestyle. There are now 100 members. For further details contact the above address.

CARE FOR THE WILD

1 Ashfolds, Horsham Road, Rusper,
West Sussex RH12 4QX

Care for the Wild is continuing its projects around the world. It has embarked on a project to move 500 elephants and their family groups to save them from being shot. This is the largest ever elephant conservation project to be undertaken. Also, in Britain, campaigning against the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Fisheries has been stepped up. The MAFF kills badgers in the belief that they spread TB. Care for the Wild assists with badger groups to help them look after badger sets. Essential items are needed such as walkie-talkies, cages in which to carry injured badgers and rehabilitation units. Donations needed.

CAMPAIGN FOR THE ABOLITION OF ANGLING

PO Box 90, Bristol BS99 1ND
0272 441175

CAA actively takes part in fish sabs all over Britain. They have been successful in disrupting fishing matches and forcing anglers to abandon local fishing events. In June they organised a week of action to coincide with the start of the coarse fishing season. They have a video available called Angling - the Neglected Bloodsport at a cost of £7 (£6 of which is a refundable deposit). Annual membership costs £4, members receive a quarterly newsletter called Pisces.

CINNAMON TRUST

Poldarves, Trescowe, Germoe, Penzance,
Cornwall TR20 9RX
0736 850291

This is a charity for elderly and terminally ill people and their pets. The trust has a national network of volunteer pet helps who visit owners at home and provide assistance where necessary. Fostering takes place if the owner is injured or hospitalised. Donations always welcome.

CAMPAIGN FOR THE ABOLITION OF CRUEL SPORTS

Lower Coyne Street, Callan, County Kilkenny, Ireland

CACS seeks to halt the imports of greyhounds from Ireland into the UK until the Irish government increases the penalties for those convicted of blooding - the practice of feeding live animals to greyhounds. They urge people to write polite letters of protest to the Home Secretary, the Home Office, Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AT.

CAMPAIGNERS FOR ANIMAL RIGHTS AND THE ENVIRONMENT (C.A.R.E)

*9 Soberton Road, Queens Park, Bournemouth,
Dorset BH8 9BG*

C.A.R.E. are currently concerned about the parts in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill which make it a criminal offence to conduct peaceful protest. They are encouraging people to write to their MP's expressing their opposition to the Bill. Leaflets containing sample letters are available.

CETACEA DEFENCE

PO Box 11, SEDO Office, Manchester M18 8GU

Principally involved in protecting the world's whales and dolphins. People are needed to act as on-the-spot investigators. Contact above address.

CO-ORDINATING ANIMAL WELFARE

PO Box 589, Bristol BS99 1RW

CAW produce a magazine with up-to-date information. For further details contact the above address.

DOCTORS IN BRITAIN AGAINST ANIMAL EXPERIMENTS

PO Box 302, London N8 9HD

DBAAE, founded in 1990, is a group of doctors, scientists and pharmacists who reject all animal experiments on scientific and ethical grounds. Full membership is open to fully qualified medical practitioners, with a category for Friends of DBAAE supporters.

DR. HADWEN TRUST

*22 Bancroft, Hitchin, Herts. SG5 1JW
0462 436819*

The Dr. Hadwen Trust for Humane Research is a registered charity which funds the development of new, humane techniques to replace the use of animals in medical research. The annual subscription to the Trust is £8 and members receive a quarterly newsletter. The Trust also runs a mail order catalogue featuring gifts and cosmetics.

DISABLED AGAINST ANIMAL RESEARCH AND EXPLOITATION

(DAARE)

PO Box 8, Daventry, Northants. NN11 4RQ

A national organisation of people who are disabled or have a chronic disease. DAARE is opposed to animals being used in drug experiments. People who are not disabled are welcome to join.

ENVIRONMENTAL INVESTIGATION AGENCY

*2 Pear Tree Court, London EC1R 0DS
071 490 7040*

The EIA has campaigned for most endangered species since its foundation in 1984. They expose environmental abuse and call on governments to enforce legislation. They have so far saved the lives of millions of whales, dolphins, elephants, rhinos and wild birds - but there is still much to do. The EIA celebrated 10 years of achievement with the Big Fun Sunday Funday in Trent Park, North London in May. This was to help fund a special campaign - Save the Whales and Dolphins.

FREEDOM ANIMAL SANCTUARY TRUST

12b Dudley Road, Tunbridge Wells, Kent TN1 1LF

The Freedom Animal Sanctuary needs money to re-home animals and realise their long term aim of creating a sanctuary. A range of t-shirts is available to help raise funds. Donations are needed.

Fox Cubs

FOX CUBS YOUTH GROUP

*PO Box 370a, Surbiton,
Surrey KT6 4YN*

This group is aimed at the under-17's and encourages them to join with adults to demonstrate at local hunts/shoots/angling matches. There is an annual subscription of £4. Members receive a New Members Pack, badge and a magazine three times a year.

FOX PROJECT

PO Box 56, Tonbridge, Kent TN8 1XY

The Fox Project has saved many foxes' lives by humanely trapping and moving them from potential threat. They take into care orphaned foxes and set them free when they are fit and well. A newsletter is available.

FRIENDS OF THE MORAY FIRTH DOLPHINS

A group existing to protect the only real population of around 150 dolphins in UK waters.

FELLOWSHIP OF LIFE

43 Braichmelyn, Bethesda, Bangor, Wales LL57 3RD

The fellowship was founded 20 years ago to influence the church on animal rights issues. They produce a newsletter and an excellent leaflet.

GREEK ANIMAL RESCUE

69 Great North Way, Hendon, London NW4 1PT
081 203 1956

Many animals suffer in Greece. Strays are thought of as vermin and are killed, many are thrown live over cliffs. A new shelter is being built to house 150 dogs, 40 cats, 2 mules, a few chickens and ducks. There is a 30 minute video available exposing some of Greece's atrocities towards its animals and it also shows the shelters and the sanctuary which is provided for abused and neglected animals.

HUNT SABOTEURS ASSOCIATION (HSA)

PO Box 1, Carlton, Nottingham NG4 2JY
0602 590357

Hunt saboteurs use legal peaceful tactics to ensure the freedom of wild animals. They are currently encouraging people to write to the Home Secretary to protest against his proposed anti-saboteur legislation. The HSA gives information and advice on how to form a fully operational hunt-sab group. They provide speakers for talks and give legal advice. Merchandise is available.

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR THE PROTECTION OF HORSES

Freepost, Anne Colvin House, Snetterton,
Norfolk NR16 2QZ
0953 498682

This is a registered charity which is currently campaigning to end the suffering of hundreds and thousands of horses. Many of these horses are from the former Soviet bloc and are currently being transported live in long distance road trains to Western Europe for the fresh horse meat trade. The ILPH have been petitioning the EC Council of Ministers to accept an amendment to the existing law. Donations welcome.

INTERNATIONAL FUND FOR ANIMAL WELFARE - IFAW

Warren Court, Park Road, Crowborough,
East Sussex TN6 2GA

IFAW, founded 25 years ago, is the largest organisation in the world entirely dedicated to animal welfare. They are currently campaigning to stop dogs and cats being tortured to death in Korea for human consumption, and to help endangered species such as the African elephant. Donations welcome.

JUSTICE FOR DOGS

c/o Ann Harpwood, Finloren Cottage, Weythel,
Old Radnor, Powys LD8 2RR
0544 22213 - Tel. and Fax

The Justice for Dogs campaign was launched in April 1993 in response to the Dangerous Dogs Act. Plans are now being made to take a selection of cases to the Courts for Human Rights in Strasbourg. Donations welcome.

LIBERTY

WSPA, 2 Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ
071 793 0540

Liberty is a campaign run by the World Society for the Protection of Animals. It was set up two years ago to come to the aid of bears which are exploited all over the world and has now been officially launched in the USA. Liberty has set up projects to help hundreds of bears and has physically rescued over 20 from lives of cruelty and neglect. An annual donation of £12.50 ensures 3 newsletters a year plus an introductory campaign pack.

THE MARINE CONNECTION

PO Box 2404, London W2 3WG

The Marine Connection is a campaigning organisation dedicated to raising awareness about dolphins and whales through publishing and networking. Currently they are campaigning to have the capture of wild dolphins and whales prohibited for entertainment purposes and are attempting to have two dolphins released from the Steinhart Aquarium in San Francisco. Annual membership is £7.00, and four newsletters per year are issued containing news from around the world.

McLIBEL SUPPORT CAMPAIGN

c/o London Greenpeace, 5 Caledonian Road, London N1 071 713 1269

See report elsewhere in the magazine!

NOW AGAINST LIVE EXPORTS

St. Joseph's, Souldern, Bicester, Oxon. OX6 9LA

NOW continues its campaign against live exports, with Sealink, P&O and Brittany Ferries being targeted. People are urged not to use these ferries - as a protest. NOW held their 3rd National March and Rally in Portsmouth in July. An Action Pack is available with an A4 SAE. Donations appreciated.

NATIONAL ANTI-HUNT CAMPAIGN (NAHC)

PO Box 66, Broxbourne, Herts. EN10 6LU

The National Anti-Hunt Petition was established to increase pressure on Parliament to reflect public opinion and introduce legislation banning hunting. They also intend to fund investigations into illegal bloodsports. In August, NAHC held a national march, rally and exhibition against hunting, in Hyde Park, London.

NATIONAL DOGSITTERS

*The Pulpits (Dog Holidays), Little Hereford,
Ludlow SY8 4AU
0584 711534 (Admin.) 071 413 9990 (24 hrs.)*

National Dogsitters provide a unique individual home-based boarding service for dogs while their owners are away and they can also offer a daycare or dog walking service. Dog owners are invited to contact them to be referred to their nearest Registered Dogsitters. People wanting to register as National Dogsitters are also invited to contact the organisation.

PAGAN ANIMAL RIGHTS

c/o Billy Frugal, P.A.R., 10 Broughton Street, Hebden Bridge, West Yorks. HX7 8JY

This organisation, founded 10 years ago, is open to people who care about animals - whether they are pagan or not. Membership is £3 a year, and members receive a newsletter listing all the Pagan Festivals.

NATIONAL ANTI-VIVISECTION SOCIETY

*Ravenside, 261 Goldhawk Road, London W12 9PE
081 846 9777*

NAVS once again organised the World Day for Laboratory Animals with a march from Hyde Park to Parliament Square. The march culminated in Westminster with a rally in Central Halls for the Animal World Show. They have also been holding a campaign against circuses called The Animals Defenders Circus Madness Campaign. This involved a bus tour of 100 towns at the height of the circus season. Annual Membership £10 - a magazine called The Campaigner is issued to members.

NATUREWATCH TRUST

*Austen House, 122 Bath Road, Cheltenham,
Glos. GL53 7JX
0242 252871*

The Naturewatch Trust are fighting to end the cruel trade of crated veal in all European Community countries. This practice is banned in the United Kingdom, but nonetheless calves are exported live to France and Holland where this method of intensive farming continues. Free leaflets are available.

PETSEARCH AND PET OWNERS

SUPPORT SCHEME

*c/o Phil Groombridge, 16 Elm Grove Road, Salisbury, Wilts. SP1 1JW
(0722) 326046 or 327146*

Petsearch UK runs a register of lost and found animals and produces a newsletter giving details of missing pets. They also run a Pet Owners Support Scheme where members can give instructions as to who should look after their pet if anything happens to the owner. Donations welcome.

PET STEALING ALERT

PO Box 94, Cheltenham, Glos.

Cats and dogs are going missing nationwide. Please contact the above address if you are suspicious of an advert offering good homes, or if an animal has disappeared in unusual circumstances.

PEOPLE FOR THE ETHICAL TREATMENT OF ANIMALS (PETA)

*PO Box 3169, London NW6 2QF
071 372 0459*

Campaigns against all animal abuse. Current campaigns include the Chicken Out campaign. PETA are very supportive of animal liberation groups and have recently produced the magazine Animal Times which is aimed at the general public. They also have an Animal Rights Groups directory available.

PLAN 2000

Lynmouth, Devon EX35 6EE

Plan 2000 aims to see all animal experiments banned by the end of the century.

RESPECT FOR ANIMALS

PO Box 500, Nottingham NG1 3AS

RESPECT was set up when LYNX went bankrupt. They will continue the fight against the fur trade. Leaflets are available.

SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF ANIMALS ABROAD (SPANA)

15 Buckingham Gate, London SW1E 6LB

SPANA highlights the use of animals in third world countries. There is a video available for £5.95.

SEA SHEPHERD

PO Box 5, Ashford, Middx. TW15 2PY

An invaluable organisation which campaigns against the abuse of marine life. They recently sunk a whaling ship. Donations are greatly appreciated.

STUDENT CAMPAIGN FOR ANIMAL RIGHTS (SCAR)

PO Box 155, Manchester M60 1FT

One of their aims is to help students who are having trouble opting out of animal practicals. A leaflet is available to help them with their rights. SCAR wishes to eventually stop animal abuse within all colleges and universities around the country - dissection and vivisection being not essential during a course or exam.

TEACHERS FOR ANIMAL RIGHTS

c/o 29 Lynwood Road, London SW17 6HP

Please write for an information pack, but a donation to cover costs for postage and literature is essential.

TAIL ENDS

PO Box 1550, London SW4 6HP

This is a small vegan animal rescue network which needs homes for abused and abandoned animals - mainly cats and dogs. All of the money, which is desperately needed, goes towards food, vets bills, neutering and spaying. A selection of black and white postcards depicting animals are available at 30p each. They have a fund to help set up a sanctuary.

VEGAN SOCIETY

*7 Battle Road, St. Leonards-on-Sea,
East Sussex TN37 7AA
0424 427393*

The Vegan Society is the main UK organisation promoting veganism and is always seeking new members to help the society grow so that it can be at the forefront of the movement, showing that veganism is the way forward for animals, people and the environment. This year, the Vegan Society celebrates its fiftieth anniversary. A new Vegan video will shortly be available. Copies of the Animal Free Shopper book are available at £4.95 + pp. Annual membership is £15 individual, £10 unwaged. Members receive a quarterly magazine The Vegan.

VEGETARIAN SOCIETY

*Parkdale, Dunham Road, Altrincham,
Cheshire WA14 4QG*

An important organisation for those taking the first step towards veganism! It publishes an informative magazine, and also Greenscene - a magazine for younger readers.

VEGGIES

180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HU

An animal rights calendar is produced on a regular basis - the most up-to-date and comprehensive one around. Their catering facilities travel up and down the country providing vegan food. Veggies produce a variety of posters - available on request.

VEGETARIAN INFORMATION CAMPAIGN

Greenyard, 27a Love Lane, Denbigh, Clwyd LL16 3LV

Sells a wide range of books by mail order, including vegetarian/vegan recipe books. A full colour leaflet is available to assist you in your choice.

VEGANS INTERNATIONAL

c/o 45 Chandos Road, Bristol BS6 6PQ

Vegans International unites those who want to spread respect and love for all life. VI believes in cooperation among all organisations. They have helped set up vegan societies around the world, organised seven international festivals and united thousands of vegans to work for a kinder world. Quarterly newsletter available to members.

WORLD SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF ANIMALS (WSPA)

2, Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ

One of the WSPA's latest campaigns is Pet Respect. This campaign aims to support the work of animal shelters, persuade local authorities to stop the brutal killing of pet animals, set up neutering programmes for cats and dogs and undertake education programmes to teach people how to look after their pets.

They recently launched a report called The Zoo Inquiry along with the Born Free Foundation's Zoo Check campaign.

They are also involved with helping to save bears with the Libearty campaign. (see Libearty).

YOUNG INDIAN VEGETARIANS

*41 Lakeside Avenue, Ilford, Essex IG4 5PS
081 550 3725*

The Young Indian Vegetarians recently organised a Vegetarian Music Festival in Southall Park, London in July. For details of future events, please write to above address.

International News

ANTARCTICA

A proposal to create a sanctuary for whales in the waters of the Southern Ocean was approved at the 46th annual meeting of the International Whaling Commission in Puerto Vallarta, Mexico. All commercial whaling is prohibited in the region for an indefinite period. (TRAFFIC Bulletin May '94)

ARGENTINA

Argentinian Airlines is refusing to transport monkeys for experimentation. (Tierbefreiung Aktuell June '94)

AUSTRALIA

Armadale City Council in Western Australia has become the 24th Australian council to ban the use of exotic caged animals in circuses. (Action Animal Liberation Magazine No.47)

BAHAMAS

The Bahamas' Parliament has adopted a law which prohibits long-line fishing in Bahamian waters without a licence issued by the ministerial cabinet - and the Prime Minister of the Bahamas has stated that no such licences would be granted. (TRAFFIC Bulletin Jan '94)

BANGLADESH

Anti-poaching programmes have now been established to protect tigers. (TRAFFIC Bulletin May '94)

BRAZIL

A bill banning bullfights and rodeos has been passed in the city of Sao Paulo. (The AV Feb '94)

CANADA

After learning how foie gras producers force-feed ducks and geese, Air Canada announced it will no longer serve the pate on any of its flights. (Animal Times June/July '94)

ETHIOPIA

Ethiopia's Ministry of Natural Resources has suspended all hunting of wildlife, pending a survey by the Ethiopian Wildlife Conservation Organisation. (TRAFFIC Bulletin Jan '94)

EUROPEAN UNION

Acting in response to BUAV reports, the EU agreed to prohibit the import of non-human primates captured in the wild. (Animals' Agenda March/April '94)

The EU has banned imports of Francois monkeys from China, Abbott's Day Geckos from Madagascar and Blossom-headed Parakeets from Vietnam. (TRAFFIC Bulletin May '94)

GERMANY

70.8% of callers to a chat show about wild and exotic animals believed such creatures belonged in the wild rather than in the home. (Tierbefreiung Aktuell June '94)

HOLLAND

A scientific inquiry into fur farming has been set up, which offers the real possibility of the abolition of fur farms in the Netherlands. (Liberacion Animal Spring/Summer '94)

HONG KONG

Possession and sale of medicines containing tiger products was prohibited as from April 28th. (TRAFFIC Bulletin May '94)

INDIA

The Delhi High Court issued a directive calling for traders to sell up their fur stocks by the end of Jan '94 and to remove them from display. (TRAFFIC Bulletin Jan '94)

INDONESIA

Following an investigation by the BUAV, Indonesia decided to prohibit the export of wild-caught non-human primates for research. (Animals' Agenda March/April '94)

ISRAEL

After a week-long hunger strike by Richard O'Barry, former trainer of the television dolphin Flipper (and now a pro-dolphin campaigner), the Israeli government decided to ban the importation of dolphins for entertainment displays. (The AV April '94)

ITALY

The Italian parliament has recognised the right of students, doctors and researchers to refuse to perform animal experiments. (Civil Abolitionist Spring '94)

JAPAN

New legislation has been enacted in Japan which offers protection to six marine species (porpoises, whales, dugongs and turtles) by prohibiting their capture, possession or sale without a permit. (TRAFFIC Bulletin Jan '94)

MYANMAR

New legislation has been introduced to protect tigers. (TRAFFIC Bulletin May '94)

NEPAL

Nepal has introduced stronger penalties for violation of its wildlife laws and is offering rewards for information leading to the arrest of offenders. (TRAFFIC Bulletin Jan '94)

PHILIPPINES

The collection of CITES-listed species of birds and the export of wild-caught birds was prohibited from 15/2/94. (TRAFFIC Bulletin May '94)

A resolution has been enacted in Palawan province prohibiting the capture, collection, possession, purchase, sale and shipment of live marine coral-dwelling organisms, including certain fishes, lobsters, oysters and prawns.

The Philippines has notified the Commission of the European Union that it will no longer permit the export of wild-caught primates. (TRAFFIC Bulletin Jan '94)

SOUTH KOREA

Yielding to international pressure, South Korea has decided to crack down on illegal trafficking of rhino horn, with the revision of an existing law meaning stiffer jail terms for illegal dealing in animal parts. (The Star 17/4/94)

The Ministry of Environment has announced that the sale of tiger bone will be prohibited with effect from November '94 and a prohibition on the sale of tiger bone derivatives will be effected in March '95. (TRAFFIC Bulletin May '94)

SWITZERLAND

Swiss Air has announced it will no longer serve pate de fois gras because of the cruelty to ducks and geese involved in its production. (Animal Times June/July '94)

TAIWAN

Following an EC ban on drift-nets more than 2.5 km long, the Taiwanese government has offered either to buy back vessels from its drift-net fleet or provide refitting loans for alternative equipment. By Jan '94, 33 drift-net vessels had been purchased under the "buy back" programme while 93 vessel owners had applied for loans. Taiwan has indicated that drift-net offenders fleeing Taiwanese waters will be prosecuted if arrested by foreign authorities and extradited to Taiwan. (TRAFFIC Bulletin Jan '94)

Taiwan has announced it is taking stronger action to control illegal wildlife trade, in particular of tigers and rhinoceros. (TRAFFIC Bulletin May '94)

USA

From humble beginnings in 1985, the Great American Meatout has grown explosively to become one of the nation's largest grass-roots public interest campaigns. Over 30 million Americans have now explored a meatless diet. National beef and veal consumption have dropped by 30 and 70 percent respectively. Most fast food chains

(Free Advertisement)

VEGAN HIKING BOOTS FROM ETHICAL WARES

A combination of the finest synthetic materials with quality craftsmanship and design has produced these cruelty-free walking boots, comprising all the best features of leather but which can be worn with a clear conscience.

- FULLY BREATHABLE
- HIGHLY WATER-RESISTANT
- TOUGH, COMFORTABLE, LIGHTWEIGHT
- MINIMUM MAINTENANCE
- TOTALLY ANIMAL FRIENDLY

For further details, contact
ETHICAL WARES,
Dept A.A. 84 Clyde Way, Rise Park,
Romford, Essex., RM1 4UT, Tel. 0708 739293 provide a salad bar, and major manufacturers are getting into the meatless food business. (Great American Meatout 1994)

McArthur Mink Ranch in Wisconsin has gone out of business. (The Militant Vegan Jan '94)

The American Veterinary Medical Association has adopted a position declaring unequivocally that the steel-jaw leghold trap is inhumane. According to a survey by the Los Angeles Times, nearly half the people polled believe animals "are just like humans in all important ways." 54% said they opposed hunting for sport and 50% opposed the wearing of fur.

Attempts to increase funding for killing wild animal "pests" were defeated in New Mexico. (SdeCAP Newsletter Jan '94)

Concerned citizens in Sacramento, California persuaded a restaurant owner to part with an 126 year old lobster, so it could be released back into the sea. (Ceefax 21/3/94)

The University of Nevada-Reno no longer insists that medical students carry out animal experiments as part of their training, meaning that there are now only 2 US medical schools which require animal experimentation.

After a campaign by animal protection organisations, the University of California at Davis allowed 177 "surplus" lab beagles to be rehomed instead of killing them for use in dissection. (Civil Abolitionist Spring '94)

In Monterey County, California, a new law established for the first time some humane guidelines for transporting horses to slaughter. (Redwings Newsletter Spring '94)

The Dean of Lehigh University, Maryland, called off a game of donkey basketball to be held there after animal rights activists sent him a fax detailing the cruelty involved.

Texas Judge Michael Peters ordered that a man convicted of cruelly starving a dog be fed only bread and water during his prison sentence, "so he'll know in some small measure what his dog went through."

Outcry about the hundreds of birds and bats killed in open-ended exhaust stacks on oil and gas processing machines has prompted the New Mexico Bureau of Land Management to regulate the covering of open stacks.

A $4.2 million judgement won against People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals by Las Vegas "entertainer" Bobby Berosini (who was video-taped beating the orangutans forced to perform in his nightclub act) was unanimously reversed by the Nevada Supreme Court and Berosini may now be forced to pay a huge bill for court costs. (PETA News Spring '94)

Researchers at Mt. Sinai Hospital have developed a new model for certain types of skin research, which should replace some animal experiments. (The AV April '94)

The Animal and Environmental Defense Association and Earth Island Institute have prevented the import into the US of four false (smaller than orcas) killer whales from Japan to Indianapolis Zoo, after the zoo was unable to prove the whales were not imported through the Japanese drive fisheries method.

Corrositex, the first non-animal alternative approved for safety testing by a federal agency, has been chosen by several of the 100 major US manufacturers or transporters of corrosives.

Circus Vargas has recast its show to feature people instead of animal acts after the Elephant Alliance produced video evidence of the elephant abuse taking place there.

In response to a lawsuit filed by six wildlife protection organisations, the US Forest Service has agreed to reinstate its ban on bear baiting in all national forests in Wyoming, where it was due to begin in April.

A laboratory animal dealer in California has had his dealers' licence revoked after Last Chance for Animals released undercover footage of him shooting and butchering a springer spaniel.

Crack-smoking experiments on monkeys at New York University have been temporarily suspended while federal agencies investigate charges of negligence and misconduct by the researcher involved. (Animals' Agenda March/April '94)

18 million mink are now "produced" for the fur trade in the US every year, compared with 45 million in the late 80's. (The Militant Vegan April '94)

The US has banned all trade in animal goods with Taiwan because the Taiwanese government hasn't done enough to stop the trade in rhino horn and tiger bones and skin. (Newsround 13/4/94)

America's most popular woman designer, Donna Karan, has become the third major US designer in a row (following Calvin Klein and Anne Klein) to drop fur. (Animal Times June/July '94)

ZAMBIA

A ban has been introduced on the export of the Nyasa Lovebird. (TRAFFIC Bulletin May '94)

Sabbing News

"Although it is two years since the MacNamara Bill was defeated, the threat to our country sports remains strong. There is a lack of understanding, not only in the urban population but also amongst those who are newly arrived in villages, of the critical role played by traditional pursuits in the conservation of the countryside. Many councils are now under hostile control, and the anarchist elements of our society are increasingly targeting shooting and fishing as well as hunting."

The above statement comes from BFSS stalwart Sir Nicholas Bonsor MP, admitting to members that their days are numbered. Now hunters appear to have accepted that the majority of the UK population deplores their activities and as a result have made an all-out effort to prevent hunt saboteurs saving the lives of foxes, deer, hares, birds, fish and other wildlife they refer to as "vermin". Their two-pronged assault on the sabotage movement has revolved around the use of "security" and legislation in the shape of the Criminal Justice Bill.

SLEDGEHAMMERS AND NUTS

Having persuaded ex-barrister Michael Howard of the need to support their disgusting little pastime, the hunters ensured that the anti-sab sections in the new law make it appear virtually impossible for sabs to succeed. Howard added "hippy convoys", raves and environmental protests on government road schemes to the Criminal Justice Bill and is now gleefully hoping for the British voter's support for his strong stance on law and order issues. The bill was drawn up and the relevant sections are likely to become law in October. However, the provisions of the Bill have brought previously uncommitted "party people" together with environmental campaigners, travellers, saboteurs and other political campaigners to form a unified opposition to the legislation. The protest against the bill in Central London on 24th July brought 30,000 people onto the streets in angry mood. Those protesters new to campaigning saw at first hand the strength of the saboteur and environmental protest movement and useful new links between the groups were forged. Several hunt saboteurs and other politically aware activists showed their true feelings against the government by attempting to pull down the gates to Downing Street and to occupy Major's den. The riot police charged in and managed to save Major's dignity but a clear message was sent to the Tories - stop lawful protest at your peril!

What is most important to realise, however, is that the provisions of the bill in respect of hunt sabotage have been made unworkable through the hunters' reactionary hatred of saboteurs and Howard's desperate need to appease the Tory right. If you examine the new laws in detail it soon becomes clear that rural police forces will never be able to prevent sabotage of hunts (unless, of course, we make it easy for them). The countryside forces will only be able to deal with determined hunt saboteurs if the saboteurs follow a predictable pattern, if the police outnumber the saboteurs and intercept them before they arrive at a hunt meet and thereafter prevent their access to the hunt all day. The police will never be able to patrol the hunt meets and surrounding country early enough to prevent pre-beating and remain nearby on the off chance that sabs will turn up. They will have to remain on stand-by throughout the afternoon to be sure that no saboteurs will be able to get between the hunt and the prey at any time during the meet and cannot leave until the hunt packs up. Just think of the cost implications for the police by sabs using less predictable methods. The most important lesson for sabs to learn is to forget any personal dislike between groups or individuals in the movement and to work together in a concerted attempt to end hunting for good. It is necessary for groups to become more disciplined and professional. We already have the expertise in saving hunted animals from the blood junkies; all we need to do now is develop sound tactics to ensure animals lives continue to be saved. If we are unpredictable in our behaviour the police will be unsuccessful in any attempts to prevent sabbing.

WHICH SIDE ARE THE POLICE ON?

Another issue to consider is the idea put about by some within the HSA that the police are as unhappy about the new arrangements as the saboteurs themselves and therefore the police should not be considered as the enemy but potential allies. It is a fair point to say that individual police officers have expressed their personal abhorrence for hunting and their irritation with hunt members for their arrogant attitude towards them. On some occasions they have even arrested and charged hunt followers and even the hunt master for assaulting saboteurs. However, the police forces are now to be given specific powers which make previously lawful protest unlawful. While the law on hunt sabotage was unclear police forces grudgingly accepted the rights of saboteurs to protest but were quick to crack down on those who engaged in acts they thought broke other laws under legislation such as the Public Order Act (even though they were often proved wrong in their assumptions and had to pay for their mistakes through civil court settlements). When the Criminal Justice Bill becomes law all this will change. Police officers will soon have the right to stop sabs' vehicles within 5 miles of a meet and can arrest those who refuse to turn away. Similarly, those organising hunt sabs could face arrest and punishment for organising "trespassory assemblies". Anyone seen sabbing a hunt will be liable to arrest and could face strict bail conditions from police stations without the need for a court appearance! Eventually sabs may face imprisonment and/or fines for sabbing, so it will become imperative not to be caught near a hunt in the first place.

Recent information suggests that in some areas the police have been meeting hunt saboteurs to explain how they will be enforcing the new laws. In one laughable meeting the police assured sabs they could still protest at hunts provided they stuck to footpaths, wore bright clothing but no scarves or other items to hide their faces and kept quiet to ensure the hunt were not bothered. Oh, and no-one could blow a horn or carry sprays!

SELF DEFENCE IS NO OFFENCE

The most problematical area for sabs is that of the legal position of "Hunt Stewards" and "Marshals" following the new laws. Already they believe themselves to be "hunt police" and have often acted illegally against saboteurs. If the sabs need to become unpredictable in order to avoid the police, we will no longer be able to appeal to the police to arrest hunt stewards or at least to stop the assaults taking place by their presence. We must face up to the reality of violent bumpkin thugs attacking sabs without restraint, and that means defending ourselves by force if necessary. It is unfortunate that those of us who have seen the escalating violence at hunts and who have refused to take part in violence ourselves now have no choice in the matter - we must defend ourselves or end up in hospital, followed by arrest and conviction for hunt sabbing. If the pacifist element within the HSA are prepared to take a beating from the hunt thugs, go to hospital, get arrested on discharge, face a hunt ban as part of bail conditions and then do the jail term or pay a fine, then good luck to them. However, the time for "turning the other cheek" is gone. We will be turned into criminals by the new law. It is up to us to save the animals' lives.

ALTERNATIVES TO SABBBING

If there are those within the sabbing movement who really cannot handle the possibility of being arrested, there are other tactics to use against the hunts. With the introduction of these ridiculous laws, no doubt hunts will report an increase in numbers of followers. The opportunities for former sabs to infiltrate hunts and gain valuable information with which to discredit them are excellent. The best proponents of such activities are the Animal Cruelty Investigation Group, who have produced a handy guide on the subject of infiltrating the abusers, entitled "HOW YOU CAN HELP". The ACIG can be contacted at the following address:

ACIG, PO Box 8, Halesworth, Suffolk IP19 0JL

Another handy tactic which can cause the bloodsports enthusiasts worry and hassle is the targeting of their support network. For example, the Wigan based holiday company Shearings Ltd. has been persuaded to drop advertisements featuring Boxing Day meets of the Cambridgeshire Foxhounds and several other hunts from their brochure. The company's managing director said that his company was a caring one which did not "condone bloodsports". This tactic has been utilised by a number of wildlife protection and hunt saboteur groups throughout the UK. Local farmers have been sent letters asking for their views on allowing hunts across their lands and were also supplied with facts and figures relating to the damage caused by hunts. Another good example of such an approach is being used by Ashford Hunt Saboteurs Association. The group have publicised those pubs and other establishments which support hunting, or have hunting connections. Members of the public are asked to boycott these places and write to the owners explaining why they have taken their business elsewhere. A comprehensive list of the premises supporting the hunt has been produced in leaflet form and passed on to the public. After initial contacts with the landlords and hotel managers, followed up in some cases by personal contact, letters were sent to each hostelry explaining why the list had been drawn up and pointing out that it should not be construed as a personal threat to the individuals concerned.

Public information such as the above examples are most important to ensure we get our side of the argument across. Public meetings and educational evenings are a great way to inform the uninformed and recruit new sabs. One excellent aid to public meetings is the use of a video presentation and news has come to Arkangel of a video featuring the highlights of the MacNamara Bill debate in parliament on 14th February 1992. The 29 minute long film features contributions from Tony Benn, Tony Banks and BFSS supporters such as Nick Bonsor.

The film can be obtained from Parliamentary Films Ltd., 11a Enterprise House, 59-65 Upper Ground, London SE1 9PQ (Tel.: 071 827 9510) at a cost of £9.99, which includes postage and packing. Cheques should be made payable to Parliamentary Films Ltd.

Other campaigns against the bloodsports fraternity are going to be affected by the new laws... run-ons at country shows will almost certainly fall under the new laws, as will protests at hunt balls which go further than a banner demonstration. At this year's Surrey County Show the Surrey Police revealed their true feelings for anti-hunt attitudes, when a group of 8-9 year old children who were holding a banner protesting against the hunt (which was parading around the show ring at the time) had their banner ripped out of their hands by local plod. If they are prepared to behave in such a fanatical manner prior to the new laws, one can only imagine their response to anti-hunt protesters next year. Any bloodsports activity which remains in one place can be afforded police protection and protesters must expect to spend some time in police cells, followed by bail conditions which will be effective bans from hunts or other bloodsports.

If such activities cannot be confronted through legal means, it seems likely that some campaigners within the anti-bloodsports movement will consider taking part in illegal direct action against the hunts. In the past such actions have ranged from spray-painting the hunters' cars right up to the sending of explosive devices through the post to BFSS organisers. Such attacks have been at a low level and usually in response to particular behaviour by the individual blood junkie. Now it seems wholly likely that such attacks will escalate. It is a sad comment on our society that the one legal means where those of us who wish to protest peacefully against the wholesale slaughter of animals for sport is now to be withdrawn from us. It seems unfortunate that the Home Secretary didn't consider the likely outcome of his proposed legislation.

CAMPAIGN NEWS

Arkangel has not received much information on anti-bloodsports actions throughout the spring and summer. A report of sabbing South West hunts during Devon Week in March 1994 revealed an increase in attacks by hunt heavies on the sabs which fell to a new low when hunt supporters grabbed a female saboteur and handcuffed her to a tree. Police were told of the incident, but as usual treated the allegation with disdain, explaining to those sabs present that if she hadn't done anything wrong she would have come to no harm! Despite such behaviour from the hunt scum and police overkill, the week of sabbing was felt to have been a great success and worth repeating.

Hunt saboteurs took part in a protest against the Ashford Valley Hunt point to point fund-raiser at Charing on 2nd April. During the meet about 70 demonstrators confronted the 7,000 strong crowd and there were "numerous incidents" but only one protester was arrested for breach of the peace. However, Richard Pemble, joint master of the hunt, made the headlines when he picked up a hoax bomb device which had been found near the hunt secretary's tent and dumped it a quarter of a mile away in woodland. The biscuit tin package, which had all the elements of a bomb but did not contain explosive was detonated by police. Pemble was criticised by the police for failing to take sensible precautions, such as calling the police to the package and letting them check it out first; they added: "We would not encourage anyone to take those risks."

On 2nd June, 50 anti-bloodsports campaigners staged an angry banner protest outside Christie's Auctioneers in Belgravia. The BFSS was holding a fund-raising event where the expected takings for the BFSS were about £60,000. The auction house was surrounded by police, who checked passers by for passes and herded protesters into the ubiquitous corral. Despite their strict control, two protesters gained entry to the auction and read a prepared statement to the audience, followed by a swift ejection by red-faced security guards. Up for bids were silly and overpriced sculptures, a Greek cruise, deer stalking, falconry and an African safari holiday, as well as invites to hunting, shooting and fishing events throughout the British Isles.

This event was followed by a humiliating defeat for the BFSS when those activists who had been arrested for occupying the BFSS head office in November 1993 had all charges against them dismissed. The charges had been reduced from "false imprisonment" and "criminal damage" to section 5 when it was revealed that the BFSS staff member had remained in the offices willingly and the damage to BFSS property had been caused by the police who sledgehammered the office doors down and knocked filing cabinets over. At the trial none of the prosecution witnesses said they had been abused or threatened by the demonstrators and the charge of disorderly conduct revolved around files which were scattered around the floor (the result of an over-enthusiastic entry by the police!) The magistrate had no difficulty in dismissing all charges and civil action against the Metropolitan police is pending.

On 16th June, the Campaign for the Abolition of Angling, and the London Animal Rights Coalition organised a demonstration outside IPC Publications, who produce the pro-angling magazine "Anglers Mail". The 20 strong picket culminated with the trashing of a fishing rod which a reformed angler had brought to the event.

On 16th July, three activists leafletted the National Trust Extraordinary General Meeting at Westminster Central Halls in London to encourage National Trust members to vote against stag hunting on their land. The vote banning stag hunting was eventually carried and the leafletters were pleasantly surprised to find a large amount of support from people attending the meeting.

It appears that the mink hunts received less attention this summer, with the exception of the Welsh mink hunters, who were regularly sabbed by local campaigners.

Finally, the National March and Rally against Hunting which took place on August 6th in Central London proved to be a most enjoyable day. The one sour note was the attitude of LACS to the march - they advised members not to attend the march because the organiser had convictions for ALF actions! Thankfully not all LACS members believe it is a bad thing to have been convicted for ALF actions and a number turned up to swell the crowd which was thought to be around 3,000 strong. The marchers enjoyed a good route through London which passed (or rather stopped!) outside those animal abuse establishments Boots and McDonalds before ending at Trafalgar Square, where speeches from a number of campaigners were heard. The event was rounded off by a visit to Westminster Central Halls where it was gratifying to see the ALF Press Office and the ALF Supporters Group among the legitimate stallholders. NAVS should take note that the whole event passed peacefully, with no problems developing between marchers and stewards and no flypitching of stalls, as the NAHC organisers had a non-discriminatory policy towards all animal rights organisations.

European Network for Dolphins

On July 4th, the World Day for Captive Dolphins, demonstrators held a protest/public education rally outside Kolmarden dolphinarium in Sweden. Six wild-caught dolphins and two captive-bred perform and are exhibited at the zoo. When Flamingoland's dolphinarium closed its doors in March '93, the three dolphins were moved to yet another 'bare, featureless concrete box'. Around 30 campaigners, with banners, leaflets and a megaphone made a visual impact at the entrance to the zoo. The press and radio came - including the two biggest newspapers in Sweden. The next day, one of the papers' headlines proclaimed 'set them free'. All in all, a very satisfactory public awareness exercise, informing them about the hidden facts of dolphinarium.

No doubt some saboteurs will be put off sabbing by the new laws. However, if those who are prepared to continue the fight organise and cooperate, the state hasn't got a chance to prevent the saving of animals' lives by utilising such absurdly unjust laws. We should all realise that the introduction of these new laws has happened because the powerful men in the Houses of Parliament have seen the possibility of their traditional sports (and their earnings from the grouse moors and pheasant shoots) seriously curtailed by effective campaigns. Don't forget, in a secret meeting sabs were told by a Home Office official and a spokesperson for the Attorney General that they didn't really give two hoots for the hunters, but when the shooters and the wealthy landowners found their murdering lifestyle under threat, the criminalisation of sabs would follow. The Home Office advice was ignored (as it should have been) but now we face the consequences. Still, we can handle it!

The Vegan Society presents...

who, what, where, when, how and why vegan

a dynamic new video

Truth or Dairy explains just why it is that some people have decided to go against the grain of popular burger, shake & fries culture and attempts to answer that most difficult of questions:

"If you give up eating meat, fish, milk, eggs and cheese, is there anything left except a few poxy vegetables?"

Truth or Dairy is presented by poet Benjamin Zephaniah, and features a star-studded cast including The B52s, Consolidated, Uri Geller, Casey Kasem, k.d. lang, Moby, River Phoenix, Martin Shaw, Heather Small (M-people), Spice Williams, Daisy the pantomime cow and a nice man who runs a fruit 'n' veg stall in Camden High Street.

Running time: 22 minutes

Please rush me copy/ies of Truth or Dairy @ £9.95 each (p&p incl.).

I enclose cheque/PO for £ payable to 'The Vegan Society'

Name

Address

Postcode

Return to: The Vegan Society
7 Battle Road St Leonards-on-Sea East Sussex TN37 7AA. (0424 427393)

News from the ALF Press Office

by Robin Webb

Are they gunning for all of us?

During the past few weeks the press office has been raided by the police twice; a dramatic change of tactics - having been left relatively alone for some time.

The first time was shortly after the latest battery egg contamination hoax by the Poultry Liberation Organisation which claimed to have placed such eggs in Tesco stores throughout the South. Two detectives from the Hampshire police arrived on my doorstep unannounced to which I gave my standard reply along the lines of: "No, I won't answer your questions, please contact my solicitor. His name and telephone number is ... Thank you." As usual, they left. However, they returned later that evening with some Cambridgeshire police and a search warrant. The warrant gave the reason that they wanted to search for correspondence. In truth it seems to have been plain and simple vindictiveness. They even took the answering machine and fax!

Exactly two weeks later I was down in Hove, next door to Brighton, to see a few people. Leaving the first visit, in sight of the sea, my car was stopped in true highway patrol fashion by the Special Operations Unit from New Scotland Yard (they just happened to be out on a day trip). Immediately from around the corner came several Sussex police patrol cars, which I guess didn't want to miss out on the action.

Clearly, I can't go into details at this time; suffice it to say that Dave Hammond, who I had just left, and I were both charged with possession of a sawn-off double-barrelled shotgun and 22 rounds of ammunition. I was also charged with possessing further ammunition.

We were both held incommunicado until our houses were "made secure" (i.e. searched). According to what happened back at my little terraced house in the sleepy village I call home no less than one unmarked police car, four patrol cars, and two police personnel carriers turned up. Turning the house over until midnight on Friday 20th August, a WPC was stationed there overnight, and the rest of them returned at 9am on Saturday to continue the search. Meanwhile, Dave and I are out on bail - our current conditions being: no communication whatsoever with each other, signing on at our respective police stations every day, reside at our home addresses. My additional restriction is that I must not travel more than 20 miles from the centre of Cambridge. Who needs a curfew?

A defence fund has been set up to which donations are urgently invited. Please make cheques/PO's payable to "Hove Two Defence Fund" (yes, I know there's an awful pun in the name!) and send them c/o BM4400, London, WC1N 3XX.

Hylyne hops it!

The press office, being treated as the genuine news agency it is, received a press release from Hylyne Rabbits dated 27th June. In short, it said that both Hylyne Rabbits and its marketing company Coney Europa, were going into voluntary liquidation, "due to recent severe firebomb and parcel bomb attacks".

The release continued that, "several recent attacks have destroyed staff vehicles, burnt down rabbit breeding and nursery units... (and) many rabbits have been stolen". Of its marketing company, Hylyne write, "Coney Europa Ltd... has also been placed in liquidation as their housing has also been burnt down only months after refurbishment". This is a culmination of the many ALF attacks over a number of years, plus attention from the Justice Department. You will no doubt recall the raid during May of last year when 80 rabbits, including nursing mothers with their young, were liberated. That action even used an inflatable boat to cross a nearby river.

The most recent actions, which appear to have provided the final nails to seal Hylyne's fate, were a car burnt out on 31st March, 30 rabbits rescued during the early hours of May 1st, and, exactly one week later, incendiary devices being placed in all sheds which were empty of rabbits. This success proves yet again, if proof were needed, that direct action can and does succeed where rational argument has sadly failed. Well done to all concerned, whoever they may be.

A hot time in the old town tonight...

Having gone across to Belfast for a few days in early July with a representative from the ALF SG, incidentally doing some radio and newspaper interviews whilst out there, I was surprised to get calls on my mobile phone on the morning of 6th July that Boots and some other stores in my home town of Cambridge had caught fire, seemingly through incendiary devices. At least I had a good alibi...

Not having received a claim at that time, I gave the usual reasons why the stores in question would be targets for animal liberation groups. However, during the mid-morning a call came through that devices had been placed in various Cambridge stores the previous day, timed to activate at about 2.30am with two others timed to detonate at noon. The latter two devices appear to have been a hoax to cause maximum disruption.

News from the A.R.M.

The devices which did activate caused £1.5 million damage on the first floor of the large Boots store and £550,000 damage at the Edinburgh Woollen Mill store. A further device was found smouldering in the pocket of a sheepskin coat at Marrs Leather Shop, a store which ceased selling actual fur coats after ALF attacks during 1993. Every opportunity was taken to explain the cruelties inherent in the wool industry - such as one million sheep each year dying from exposure after being shorn in Australia alone, and one-third of UK wool coming from the slaughter industry.

These actions, the caller claimed, had been carried out by the Animal Rights Militia and were the beginning of a campaign against High Street animal abuse in towns and cities across Britain.

Since that time, during August, both Oxford and the Isle of Wight have been subjected to similar attacks. Although the latter two have not been claimed that is not really surprising as the ARM activists would be aware that the press office telephones are bugged and one clear claim is surely enough? Certainly they are fulfilling their claim that the campaign will be aimed at towns and cities across Britain. Neither Cambridge, nor Oxford, nor the Isle of Wight are places which spring to mind immediately; perhaps it is intended as an indication that nowhere is safe?

Both the Oxford attacks on 10th August, and Isle of Wight incidents exactly two weeks later on the 24th, each caused, like the initial Cambridge actions, more than £2 million-worth of damage and received widespread publicity. However, with the intensity of the attacks the question must be asked; is there really no ARM in it (sorry!).

The Justice Department just keeps on...

In the last edition of Arkangel I wrote the first report on the Justice Department which concluded with the first wave of 'mouse trap devices' being mailed out on 16th February.

Since then, things have been far from quiet. On 7th April two video-type devices were delivered; one was made safe using a controlled explosion at Boots the Chemist in Cambridge and the second detonated injuring the office manager at the headquarters of the British National Party. The latter device was intended to highlight the fact that "human freedom, animal rights-one struggle, one fight" isn't just empty rhetoric. All abuse of the weak and innocent of whatever species is wrong.

Another two video devices were despatched on 18th April. The first, intended as, "the first wave of a new campaign against live exports", was addressed to a prominent member of the Gloucestershire family involved in animal transport, but detonated in a Coventry sorting office. The badger baiter from East Sussex who featured in a Channel 4 TV documentary earlier this year was the recipient of the other device.

One of the JD's few hoaxes was seen next on the 30th April when Boots the Chemist's huge store in Plymouth was evacuated on this busy Saturday of the May Bank Holiday weekend. Neighbouring businesses were also cleared, including McDonalds which didn't reopen until 4pm, with the entire city centre being closed for several hours.

A wave of fifteen more "mousetraps" were sent out on the 12th May to various targets in the Hampshire/Sussex area; 10 vivisection, 2 puppy breeders, 1 slaughterhouse and 2 bloodsports enthusiasts, including the ill-fated badger baiter from East Sussex.

A video-type device of what is thought to have been a slightly different design to usual was left on the doorstep of Genus, an artificial insemination company in Northamptonshire, on 27th May and was subsequently detonated by the RAF bomb disposal squad using a controlled explosion.

Poster tube devices were used again in the next series of attacks on no less than six targets involved in the live exports trade. Although these poster tubes lacked the hypodermic needles from the earlier design they possessed a greater explosive capability. Delivered on 3rd June, the targets ranged across the UK from Stena Sealink's head office in Kent to Ross Breeders HQ near Edinburgh. Two of the bombs were addressed to members of the Gloucestershire family against whom the campaign was originally launched.

Yet another fifteen "mousetraps" were mailed out on 15th July to targets including 9 vivisection, 3 bloodsports, 2 puppy breeders and 1 slaughterhouse. Eight of the devices were sent to addresses previously featured on 12th May. The device sent to the owner of Wickham Research Laboratories was claimed to have, "also got a little bit extra" ... suggestions on a postcard, please, the only trouble is that I don't even know what the "bit extra" actually was!

The speedboat kept at Garetmar Kennels (formerly Cottagepatch) was destroyed on 28th July by a powerful incendiary. This boat had previously been subjected to several damage attacks from the ALF but I guess they'll just have to look elsewhere now. Four hoax devices were also delivered that day, one to the owner of a company that breeds dogs for vivisection and three to hunt targets. One of the latter was dealt with by yet another bomb disposal squad using yet another controlled explosion.

Northamptonshire on 6th August saw the next attacks when 12 powerful incendiaries were planted at the premises of a livestock haulage company in Great Billing. Originally intending to hit buildings as well as vehicles the activists found additional lorries parked, so the attack was concentrated on those. Two lorry tractor units, three trailers and two rigid vehicles were severely damaged. One of the £30,000 vehicles was completely burnt out.

The latest incident, which appears to be the work of the JD, was a letter bomb delivered on 22nd August to a manufacturer of animal traps in Winsford, Cheshire. The target is also a member of the BFSS. Although these devices have usually been sent out in waves, it could be either an isolated individual attack or 'the powers that be' have put the lid on any other devices. Certainly the local media couldn't even find out the person's name at the time!

But what about the ALF?

Well, of course the Animal Liberation Front activists haven't been exactly idle since the last Arkangel; in fact, actions seem to be increasing as the year progresses. What with the actions of the Animal Rights Militia, Justice Department, Poultry Liberation Organisation, and Hunt Retribution Squad, they certainly aren't alone out there either!

As you will be aware, NAVS' slogan for this year's World Day was "Unlock the labs". Of course, it took the ALF to make the empty rhetoric a reality. During the early hours of Saturday 23rd April, the day of the march, activists went through the roof at North East Surrey College of Technology which runs courses for the Institute of Animal Technicians, and then into four rooms via the ceilings.

Fifteen large New Zealand white rabbits, 52 guinea pigs, 98 rats and 52 hamsters were taken to permanent, loving homes. Empty cages were trashed, rooms flooded by turning on the taps and blocking drains, an expensive electron microscope damaged, and slogans left including "World Day '94 - ALF".

The dairy industry, responsible as it also is for the veal trade and the live export trade in calves, hasn't been neglected... On the night of Tuesday 19th April, the premises of Tom Parker Dairies in Fareham, Hampshire, saw the ALF cutting through the security fence, painting slogans, contaminating a large vat of milk with creosote, and effectively trashing fifty milk floats by slashing tyres, pulling off windscreen wipers, smashing windows and paint-stripping the bodywork.

During the early hours of 15th August, the Co-operative Dairy in Torquay was hit and nine lorries were paint-stripped, tyres slashed, slogans painted and the refrigeration units turned off. Four milk floats were also badly damaged during the attack. The Western Morning News report covered the points made about the veal trade and live exports surprisingly well, the information taking up more space than details of the actual attack!

Many heart-warming liberations have been carried out, a very small selection being: six cats due to be destroyed under the terms of a will rescued from the North West after all legal means had failed; ten puppies rehomed in an action against Garetmar Kennels; three sheep spirited away from vivisection at Leeds University Farm; one hundred guinea pigs from a laboratory animal breeder at Battlesbridge in Essex; eleven Persian cats, some heavily pregnant, liberated from a stud farm in Cheshire; one hundred hens from Brooks Green near Horsham in West Sussex; and another eighty two from Long Buckby in Northamptonshire... and the list goes on and on and on... sorry to those we missed, and special thanks to those who gave all the individual animals and birds the opportunity of new and happy lives.

Economic sabotage has been far from forgotten, with locks glued, windows catapulted and etched, slogans painted, vehicles trashed, buildings damaged and a general rise in insurance premiums and security costs. I won't say, "keep it up" because that would land me with charges of incitement but if I said, "stop doing it" nobody would take any notice of me anyway...!

A "Thank you," and a plea for help

To all those who gave moral support to both myself and Margaret during our recent hassles "thanks so much"... unless you're on the receiving end you really don't know how much it can mean. Some people deserve a particular mention because of their special efforts, love and caring, but it wouldn't be a wise move to publicise them. They know who they are...

The problem with being restricted to a 20-mile radius means that the Press Office can't, at this time, do public meetings or demos. This means a dramatic reduction in donations and merchandise sales, which I feel sure was one of the main intentions of the bail conditions. To enable the Press Office to continue... even without a fax machine, etc... funds are urgently needed. Please, if you can send a donation or organise a fund-raising event it would be greatly appreciated at this very difficult time. Don't forget, the ALF Press Office is a voice for the activists.

Just in closing...

Apologies for this article not being up to the usual standard but pressures have meant that it's been done with many unexpected interruptions, and already Arkangel has had to wait for it past the usual deadline. That said, none of it would have been possible without the efforts of the activists, so to all of you - both free and not so free - well done, take care, be good.

Change of Address: SEARC and National Link

Dear SEARC members and subscribers to National Link,

Many apologies if you have sent correspondence to the new Brighton animal rights centre address that you may have been advised about a couple of months ago. Unfortunately, a room was sub-let to us at that address on a verbal agreement from an A/R person but, after two and a half weeks and for no other reason than sheer vindictiveness, we were ordered to get out and take our equipment with us. This after having spent over £150 of animal rights money on the room one way and another. However, as it happens the eviction did us a favour as we have found much better premises in central Brighton.

The name of the new organisation is the Brighton Region Animal Welfare and Rights Centre (BRAWRC). The following address will find us, simply prefix the address with either SEARC, National Link, or BRAWRC:

Room 3, 10 Waterloo Place, Brighton, East Sussex BN2 2NB (We can still be reached by phone on 0424 730154).

Warm regards to all,
Mike Nunn.

WHAT THE PAPERS SAY

A SELECTION OF CUTTINGS FROM THE PAST FEW MONTHS

BOOTS IS HIT AGAIN

'EVENING HERALD' 14.5.94

ANIMAL rights activists today caused more than £6,000 worth of damage when they sealed locks with glue and broke windows in attacks on both Boots stores in Plymouth city centre.

Robin Webb, spokesman for the Animal Liberation Front, rang the Evening Herald to claim responsibility for the attacks at the main store in Old Town Street and the shop in New George Street.

He also said the group was responsible for planting the incendiary device at the Old Town Street store last Wednesday which was de-

by MARK FLEMING

fused by Royal Navy bomb disposal experts.

Mr Webb claimed Boots are involved in tests using animals and warned the campaign of direct action would go on unless the firm stopped.

He said: "They claim their products are not tested on animals, but they are. They have two laboratories in Nottinghamshire where many species of animals, including Beagle dogs, are used in testing."

Staff at the main Boots store arrived at work this morning to discover the activists had smashed holes in almost every ground floor window.

At the lower store, staff found two broken panes of glass and locks on the main doors had been doused in glue.

The glass damage has been temporarily repaired, but it is expected that each of the main windows – ten in the main store and two in the lower store – will have to be replaced at a cost of £500 each.

Both stores were open for business as usual. It is the third time in a fortnight Boots has been targeted.

Apart from Wednesday's attack, a fortnight ago a large section of Plymouth's city centre was closed off after animal rights extremists dubbed the Justice Department claimed they placed an incendiary device in the Old Town Street store. Nothing was found at the time.

'Glorious Twelfth' opens with grouse and protesters

SHOOTING parties and opponents of blood sports took to Britain's grouse moors yesterday as the 'Glorious Twelfth' was again celebrated, together with the almost ritual war of words.

Fears that Lagopus scoticus, the red grouse quarry, would be thin on the ground, appeared to have been unfounded as sportsmen in Lancashire and Yorkshire were said to be "smiling" with "average bags."

Anti-blood sport groups were less in evidence than in previous years, although some drives were delayed and police said certain protesters converged on Yorkshire from as far afield as Guildford, Bristol and Nottingham.

Numbers

About 40 police officers were deployed to tackle possible breaches of the peace in north Yorkshire, but police said there was no violence and no one was hurt despite some "pushing and shoving."

A spokesman for North Yorkshire police said protests began at Harkerside in Wensleydale, where about 60 protesters delayed the shoot.

It had been feared that the grouse had not fully recovered from a disastrous breeding season last year – one of the worst in memory.

Phillip Pugh, Northern regional officer of the British Association for Shooting and Conservation, said however: "There appears to be a fairly healthy number of grouse being shot."

■ Inglorious: a scuffle breaks out on the grouse moors of north Yorkshire yesterday

Firebomb threat shuts city centre

by DAVID ZWIREK

TRADERS in the centre of Plymouth are counting the cost of lost bank holiday takings after animal liberationists threatened to blow up a store.

Shops and restaurants fear they could have lost hundreds of pounds from customers who had to be evacuated from three main shopping streets during the Saturday morning rush.

Police cordoned off Boots after a local radio station received a warning that a powerful incendiary device had been hidden among shelves of cosmetics.

The caller, claiming to be from an animal liberation extremist group calling themselves The Justice Department, said a bomb had been planted near aerosols to cause the maximum amount of damage and noise but had failed to go off in the early hours of the morning.

Old Town Street, Eastlake Street and part of New George Street were closed for two hours from 9.20 am as police tracker dogs were sent in to try and sniff out

NEW YEAR SHOP TERROR CAMPAIGN

ANIMAL extremists claimed responsibility for planting fire bombs in a campaign against Boots stores in Cornwall last New Year.

One device exploded in the Bodmin store causing minor damage, and two others were defused after being discovered in packets of hair care products bought from branches in Liskeard and Helston.

Boots brand hair care kits were targeted for the bombs although the company insisted that neither product was tested on animals.

The Boots store in Meneage Street, Helston, was evacuated and searched after a warning telephone call to police headquarters. A suspect package was discovered.

On the same day, part of Penzance town centre was sealed off while police blew up a carrier bag at the town's Boots branch.

But it was described as an "elaborate hoax" by police.

the bomb but nothing was found.

The manager of Marks & Spencer, Tony Beecher, said he had lost some trade on the busy bank holiday Saturday when his store was shut from 10am until 11.30.

He said: "It is very disappointing and bad news for traders but of course we have to put human life first."

Dingles manager Peter Fairweather said: "We did not close at all but those of us who were able to stay open are concerned about our colleagues in other stores who could not trade."

"It is a potentially busy weekend but the safety of people is most important."

One of the worst affected was McDonalds, which remained closed until 4pm. Shift manager Vance Withers said: "It has had a dramatic effect on us. We could not get the staff in and have lost a whole day's takings."

Animal Liberation Front spokesman Robin Webb said that a message had been left on his telephone answering machine by the Justice Department - an independent extremist group who were responsible for a spate of New Year fire bombings in Boots stores in Cornwall.

He said they had used a number of devices, including parcel bombs in the past, some containing razor blades in a bid to set off water sprinkler systems to cause damage to stock.

Mr Webb said: "Boots is seen as the high street face of vivisection."

"Any damage to Plymouth's economy is caused by animal experiments carried out by Boots."

It has been alleged that Boots Pharmaceuticals carry out animal experiments.

The company insist testing on its own brand products ended in 1975.

'WESTERN MORNING NEWS' 2.5.94

Animal extremists hit butchers' shops

THE outlawed Animal Liberation Front this week claimed responsibility for attacks on two butchers' shops and said it would carry on until "they cease their barbaric trade".

In a letter, hand delivered to the Edgware & Mill Hill Times office on Monday night, the group said it smashed front windows of Price's Butchers in High Street, Edgware, before moving on to the nearby halal shop, in Whitchurch Lane.

Shahid Afzel, manager of Hussein's

Actions against these Animal Abusers will continue until they cease their barbaric trade.

Part of the ALF's menacing message

Halal Meat, said they had only just replaced the £1,150 glass shop front following another attack three weeks ago.

He said: "The window of the butchers down the road was broken at the same time as ours and I know other businesses in the area have been attacked."

Susan Panther of Peggy's Pet Shop, in High Street, said they had been hit when shop fronts were splashed with acid towards the end of last year.

But for a furrier, who runs a business in the area, it was a lot worse.

His shop was repeatedly splashed with red paint, shot at with air rifles and had its locks jammed with glue.

'TIMES GROUP' 17.3.94

Rabbit farm shutdown forced by rights groups

A CHESHIRE rabbit farm is ceasing trading because of the activities of animal rights groups.

Hyllyne Rabbits is going into voluntary liquidation following a series of actions by the Animal Liberation Front and other animal rights groups.

The farm, at Statham, Lymm, recently suffered £25,000-worth of damage in an arson attack, a parcel bomb has been sent to it and rabbits have been stolen in raids.

Hyllyne director Edwin Sutton said: "You can't carry on when you've got to keep looking under your car to see if there's a bomb."

"We haven't gone bankrupt," said Mr Sutton. "We've got plenty of money. I'm just not prepared to put my staff through all this."

"It is an absolute disaster, but we

'You can't keep looking for bombs under cars'

By David Banks
Daily Post Staff

can't carry on."

It was the continuing threats of ALF action and the spiralling insurance costs which prompted Mr Sutton's decision to go into liquidation.

Animal rights groups are jubilant. A spokesman for the ALF called it a "victory for the rabbits."

The ALF claimed responsibility for the raids last May and September and for the arson attack last month.

Responsibility for the parcel bomb was claimed by the Justice Department, a very extreme group which, unlike the ALF, says it does not care about the risk of injury to people through its actions.

ALF spokesman Robin Webb said: "I'm delighted for the rabbits."

"We've had butchers and fur shops put out of business before, but this is the first time I can recall a venture of this type going into liquidation."

"I'm sure this will encourage activists everywhere."

Mr Webb said he had no sympathy for those who would lose their jobs as a result of the decision.

For the newly-formed Hyllyne Action Group, a Manchester-based organisation which was planning a series of demonstrations against the farm, yesterday's news was a victory before they had even started their campaign.

Its spokesman said: "This is really a victory for the ALF."

The rabbit farm, a family business, was started in 1955 with an initial capital of only six shillings.

It grew rapidly to become known world-wide for its breeding techniques and breeders from all over the world came to study its methods.

Mr Sutton worked in the business with his wife and eight part-time staff.

Local councillor Sheila Woodyatt said: "My impression has always been that this was a well-run and well-respected company."

Zoo under fire after probe by rights group

A MERSEYSIDE zoo has come in for heavy criticism after an undercover animal rights investigation.

Kent-based Animal Aid claims conditions inside Southport Zoo are inadequate for the species on display.

And the zoo, founded over 20 years ago by Carole and Douglas Petrie, was given a "Pitiful Exhibit Award" for its mandrill monkey cage.

Transferred

Animal Aid general secretary Iain Green said conditions inside the enclosure left the monkeys totally unstimulated.

He said: "Their most stimulating activity was to touch drain water outside their cages."

'LIVERPOOL ECHO' 21.3.94

Porpoise rescue

2ft porpoise cub found stranded on the Mawdach estuary in Gwynedd was being airlifted by helicopter last night to an RSPCA wildlife hospital in Norfolk.

THE TIMES' 26.8.94

ANIMAL RIGHTS terrorists were blamed last night for a series of firebombs that caused over £2 million worth of damage to shops on the Isle of Wight.

Two shops were gutted, a charity shop was badly damaged by smoke and three others were targeted but unscathed in a wave of attacks on the island.

A branch of Boots was burnt out as was a sports shop, believed to have been selected because it sold leather footballs and boots.

At the height of the fires on Tuesday night, extra fire engines had to be sent to the island from the mainland and people near the Boots store in Newport were told to keep windows shut after sheets of asbestos exploded in the fire.

The first alarm was raised on Tuesday afternoon when an incendiary device was found in a garment at a fishing tackle shop but police were criticised by Mr Morris Barton, leader of the Isle of Wight County Council, for not carrying out thorough searches of potential targets.

'DAILY TELEGRAPH' 25.8.94

BOMB SCENE: A policeman guards the wrecked Boots shop

Militants' terror trail

By KATHRYN LISTER

ANIMAL rights campaigners have been more active in the past 12 months than any other time in their 18-year history.

And none more so than the Animal Liberation Front, which caused £15 million worth of damage last year.

Scotland Yard says the group has made more than 400 incendiary attacks since the late 80s.

The ALF has even produced a manual describing how to make timed incendiary devices and petrol bombs, and how best to damage vehicles, locks and telephone lines.

The 2,000-strong group was founded by Ronnie Lee in 1976 after he was released from a three-year jail sentence for arson. Lee — freed again from prison two years ago for plotting fire-raising attacks on department stores — described animal laboratories and factory farms as "the concentration camps of the human Reich".

The group's toll of havoc includes £20,000 of damage when members attacked vehicles at a Bristol dairy.

Firebombs also caused £85,000 damage at a meat depot in Bournemouth and £100,000-worth at a pork pie factory in Reading. In the West Midlands a meat company lost 10 refrigerated lorries worth £500,000.

Ten years ago the ALF claimed to have poisoned Mars bars in protest at tooth-decay experiments on monkeys — a hoax which cost the manufacturers more than £3 million.

'DAILY EXPRESS' 25.8.94

Activist pledges attacks will be continued

BACKGROUND

By CLIVE SIMPSON

The News

Firebombs on the Isle of Wight last night are the latest in a series of terror campaign attacks by animal rights campaigners to hit the south.

Detectives are probing the involvement of activists in the series of blazes, Hampshire police said today.

Portsmouth animal rights campaigner Lin Sandell said today the attacks would continue.

"The reason it is done is because we are all against vivisection," she said.

"We want it to stop and we have to take direct action because the government is doing nothing."

Mrs Sandell, a member of the Portsmouth Animal Rights Group, added: "The reason the cancer research shop was targeted was because people do not realise vivisection takes place in cancer research."

"Anyone involved in animal abuse or vivisection is a target as far as the Animal Liberation Front is concerned. They will carry on until the businesses close down or stop animal testing," she pledged.

'THE NEWS' 24-8-94

Animal rights firebomb protest

A SERIES of firebomb attacks which caused £2m damage on the Isle of Wight yesterday were probably the work of animal rights activists, police said. The attacks stretched the island's fire service to its limits with reinforcements having to be called in from the mainland.

No one was hurt, but the four bombs planted in shops caused severe damage, forced people from their homes and sparked a pollution scare as asbestos sheets at a chemists shop exploded in the intense heat.

'THE INDEPENDENT' 25-8-94

Police find three shop fire bombs

By Collin Wright

POLICE investigating five early morning fires at stores and shops in Harrogate and York recovered three incendiary devices which, it is believed, were planted by animal rights militants.

Two Boots stores and an outlet of Fads — DIY subsidiary of the company — were damaged along with a gun shop and an Imperial Cancer Research shop between 1am and 4am yesterday.

Devices were recovered from the Boots and Fads outlets in York and from the Imperial Cancer Research shop in Harrogate. They were being examined last night.

North Yorkshire police have contacted Scotland Yard's anti-terrorist branch, which maintains a database of animal rights groups. The force was also liaising with police in Hampshire, Thames Valley and Cambridge, where in recent months there have been similar fires for which animal rights groups have admitted responsibility.

A police spokesman said last night that no group had admitted blame for the five fires which caused considerable damage to two outlets.

The Boots store in Harrogate suffered significant damage to its first floor although the outlet in York was not badly affected and opened for business.

The most serious threat was posed by the fire at Fads where hundreds of gallons of paint and inflammable material are kept. The store was badly damaged.

Boots has been a target of several animal rights attacks since last year and incendiary devices have been recovered from fire-damaged outlets throughout the country.

A company spokesman said: "We have suffered attacks recently for which animal rights activists have claimed responsibility."

'DAILY TELEGRAPH' 17-9-94

Turtle saved

Baltimore: A 93lb sea turtle, which was nearly blind when it was picked up off the Virginia coast, has a fighting chance of returning home after cataract surgery at the National Aquarium. The loggerhead turtle weighed only 78lbs when it was rescued. (AP)

Firebombs condemned

REACTION

The firebomb attacks were condemned by the Petersfield-based Compassion in World Farming.

Campaigns director Philip Lymbery said: "This type of action does nothing for our campaign or the welfare of animals. It only serves to alienate the public support we have worked hard to build up."

Mr Lymbery said Compassion in World Farming only organised peaceful and legal campaigns.

"To be honest we don't see this kind of activity at all in the sphere we work in," he added.

Compassion in World Farming is a leading farm animal welfare organisation campaigning against factory farming and the export of live animals.

'ISLE OF WIGHT NEWS' 24-8-94

Tiger rescue

Delhi: India, alarmed that its tiger population is dwindling, is to form a group of seven experts to tackle tiger poaching. (AFP)

'THE TIMES' 10-8-94

Otters make a return to cleaned-up Thames

by PETER GRUNER

THE wild otter is returning to Britain and today a meeting of international scientists applauded Britain's remarkable success.

Ten years after being driven to virtual extinction, the otter has returned to many of its old habitats, including the upper reaches of the Thames, delegates at the conference in the Netherlands heard.

The conference, organised jointly by the Council of Europe and the Dutch Ministry of Agriculture, has been called to spotlight the plight of otters badly hit by atmospheric pollution, pesticides and loss of habitat.

Britain compares favourably with other parts of Europe. In North Devon conservationists report a major success story with otters populating 80 per cent of the Torridge catchment area. They have also been seen in the Exe and the Taw.

British delegate Dr Sheila Macdonald, a research fellow at Essex University, said: "Britain has good reason to feel proud. In environmental terms we are obviously doing something right."

Stingray attacks angler

By ROBI DUTTA

A MAN will have to undergo plastic surgery after being attacked by a stingray while fishing on a Welsh beach.

Bob Dix, 51, a fireman from Cambridge, was helping another angler to land the fish during a competition in Borth, Dyfed.

Another man kicked the stingray's wings and it spun round and lashed Mr Dix's leg with its venomous tail. It sliced through his wellington boot and clothing, inflicting an inch-deep wound.

Mr Dix was detained at a hospital in Aberystwyth for two days, and will require skin grafts.

'THE TIMES' 15-7-94

Badgers on low road to long life

The Department of Transport has spent £225,000 on building 22 badger tunnels under the final 17-mile section of the M1-A1 link road in the Midlands. Each concrete tube is about 2ft wide.

Sue Radley, the landscape consultant who advised on the design of the tunnels, said: "Around 47,000 badgers are thought to be killed every year crossing roads, usually at night. This is an astonishingly high mortality rate when measured against a total adult badger population of about 250,000."

'THE TIMES' 19-7-94

Oxford disrupted by firebombers

ANIMAL rights activists disrupted the centre of Oxford yesterday when two incendiary devices they planted in city centre stores went off. Three others failed to ignite.

Detectives confirmed that the attacks on stores selling leather and woollen goods had the hallmarks of animal rights activists. They came after three similar attacks in Cambridge recently where the Animal Rights Militia attacked a leather shop, Boots the Chemist and a woollens shop. The first floor of Boots was severely damaged by a device believed to be the size of an audio cassette.

A spokesman for the Animal Liberation Front said yesterday: "The Animal Rights Militia claimed responsibility for the Cambridge attacks and said it was the beginning of a campaign in towns and cities across England against all forms of animal abuse. This could be the second wave of a new campaign." Police were alerted early yesterday when a blast was heard at C H Brown and Son, a leather shop in Oxford's covered market.

The explosion started a fire in the ground floor of the shop and caused heavy smoke in nearby stores. The workshop was flooded, causing thousands of pounds of damage, after a sprinkler system was activated. Two more devices were later discovered, at a furrier and a leather shop.

Shortly before 8am another device was found at West World and two hours later staff at the Edinburgh Wool Shop raised the alarm after a fire broke out. At one stage a large area of the city centre was sealed off but was reopened during the rush hour.

Chief Inspector Laurie Fray, of Thames Valley Police, said: "All the indications are that some animal rights activist group are behind this. We do not know who because no-one has claimed responsibility."

'THE TIMES' 11.8.94

£2m animal fire attacks

ANIMAL rights activists were last night blamed for a firebomb blitz which caused £2 million damage to shops.

Four fires early yesterday destroyed a Boots store and a sports shop.

Two other buildings — a suede goods store and a Cancer Research charity shop — had minor damage.

The incendiary devices, at Ryde and Newport on the Isle of Wight, went off within 80 minutes of each other. The previous day, another device had been discovered. Nigel Young, 47, owner of the sports store whose £600,000 business went up in smoke, was close to tears.

"Why me — the only leather products I sell, are football boots. The kids' Christmas club toys have all been wrecked," he said.

Police are checking ferry security videos.

'TODAY' 25.8.94

Cruel farmer banned from keeping sheep

'INDEPENDENT' 25.8.94

A FARMER was banned from keeping sheep for life by a court yesterday after he admitted more than 80 offences of cruelty.

Winston George Tucker, 43, was fined £5,000 by magistrates at Okehampton, Devon, and ordered to pay £13,161 costs.

Shops hit

The Animal Liberation Front said its activists had sprayed at least 17 shops in Hampshire with creosote, as part of their campaign against cruelty to animals.

'THE TIMES' 1.4.94

Ferries ban livestock

Brittany Ferries announced yesterday that from August 22 it would refuse to carry live animals for slaughter because of fears over the suffering caused. P&O said last month that it planned to stop carrying live farm animals to Europe for slaughter from October unless there was an imminent prospect of improved European Union standards.

Sealink bans animals

Stena Sealink is to stop carrying live farm animals for slaughter, falling into line with Britain's other big cross-Channel ferry operators. It is understood that the company will announce an immediate ban on carrying live animals for slaughter or fattening, going further than its rivals P&O and Brittany Ferries.

day meeting. High priorities include major night-time security patrols.

Up to 60,000 people are expected to turn up at this years event.

Package

The security operation will cover three acres on land including car parks.

Detective Chief Superintendent Derek Wright, head of the Special Branch, said: "Scotland Yard have the Animal Rights National Index and they have been sending us intelligence.

"We have done a certain amount of intelligence gathering and assessment and have given a package of information to Paul Barrell."

'This is as high profile a job as they come'

'LIVERPOOL ECHO' 1.4.94

RING OF STEEL ROUND NATIONAL

- Security cordon aims to keep out activists
- Armed police will mingle with the crowds

A SECURITY cordon is to be thrown around Aintree Racecourse for this year's Grand National.

Armed police will be among the hundreds of officers ready to pounce at the first sign of trouble.

Anti-terrorist special branch officers will mingle with the racegoers.

And an Aintree "iron curtain" has been built to prevent a course invasion by animal rights activists.

The 6ft high chain-link fence runs parallel to the rails on long country sections of the course and cost more than £1m to erect.

Activists have already threatened to disrupt the 1994 National, claiming last year's

By Will Rolston

false start farce as a victory for them.

Special Branch officers have spent hundreds of hours investigating the protesters.

Ambush

All security staff hired for the races on April 7, 8, and 9 National meeting have had their police records checked.

On Grand National day itself four-wheel-drive Land Rovers and riot vans will circle the course carrying squads ready to ambush course invaders during the four-and-a-half mile steeplechase which will be watched by around one billion TV viewers.

Superintendent Paul Burrell, commander of South Sefton area, is heading the operation.

He told the ECHO: "The eyes of the world will be on us.

"This is as high profile a job as you can imagine. It is very important for Aintree Racecourse, Liverpool and Merseyside — not least Merseyside Police."

He added: "We have examined Hillsborough, the Bradford football fire and other major sports events in the planning process."

Five months intensive planning have gone into the operation. It will swing into action well before next week's three

THE OBSERVER 28.7.94

THE TIMES 7.7.94

THE HARROW INFORMER 29.7.94

HARROW AND NORTHOLT INFORMER

Animal Lib attack on lab

BY KAREN MARTIN

ANIMAL Liberation activists who have repeatedly vandalised a research laboratory have sworn to keep up their campaign until they force its closure.

The Animal Liberation Front attacked the Microbiology Laboratories in North Harrow on Saturday of last week — smashing windows, gluing the door locks and daubing the building with red paint to symbolise 'the blood of murdered animals'.

Members also targeted the homes of two of the lab's employees in Harrow — the locations of which cannot be revealed for security reasons — covering them in red paint.

This is the third attack on the lab in recent months. In a note to the Observer the ALF stated: "The red paint signifies the blood of the animals that are murdered here every day. More to come soon, a lot more.

"The ALF will close this lab and end the suffering of the animals here once and for all. Evil only triumphs when good people do nothing."

The note warned: "The ALF will close this lab down by any means necessary."

A spokeswoman for the laboratory this week denied that it was involved in vivisection. She had no comment to make about the attacks.

Det Insp Graham Mann condemned the ALF action. "The incidents are being investigated and certain avenues are being pursued."

"This has happened twice before at this lab but as far as I'm concerned these people are barking up the wrong tree."

"They are going about their cause the wrong way and their actions are pointless. Any sympathy or support people might have had for them will be lost by their actions, which are in bad taste."

A spokesman for the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection also condemned the actions of the ALF. "We are a law-abiding organisation which would never use the methods chosen by the ALF."

"Instead, we campaign to educate the public to put pressure on the legitimate authorities, such as Parliament and the European Parliament."

Vandals daub red paint on workers' homes

Cambridge firebombs

Animal rights extremists last night said they had carried out firebomb attacks in Cambridge. Over £1 million worth of damage was caused and parts of the city centre were closed. A group calling itself the Animal Liberation Militia told a local newspaper it was behind the attacks. Early yesterday morning the first floor of a branch of Boots the Chemist was gutted and the other two floors badly damaged by smoke and water. Firemen were also called to a shop that sells sheepskins, Edinburgh Woollen Mills. A partially exploded incendiary device was found at a leather shop.

Animal rights' activists claim responsibility

ANIMAL activists have claimed responsibility after vandals attacked vehicles and wrecked a laboratory in Harrow.

By MIKE UNDERWOOD

Raiders broke into a microbiological laboratory

smashing windows, gluing locks and covering walls with paint last weekend.

And employees of the laboratory, which the police have asked not to be identified, had their cars smashed and damaged.

The Animal Liberation Front claimed responsibility for the vandalism.

Animal Liberation Front spokesman Robin Webb said: "We don't condone violence but we understand why people use it."

"It is 170 years since animals were first protected but they are abused more than ever."

He said that the Front did not use violence or threaten life.

Criminal act

Police later confirmed that they were treating the claims seriously.

Detective Inspector Graham Mann said: "It is vandalism and it is a criminal act."

Animal protesters send five bombs

ANIMAL rights extremists are believed to be responsible for parcel bomb attacks yesterday on four companies associated with the meat trade. Three people suffered minor injuries.

After the incidents in Kent, Gloucestershire, Oxfordshire and Edinburgh, a fifth bomb was made safe at a London branch of Boots, the chemist. The attacks all occurred within two hours.

Scotland Yard said anti-terrorist officers were involved in investigations. Robin Webb, spokesman for the Animal Liberation Front, said he believed the bombings were the work of the Justice Department, the newest and most violent animal rights group, which has claimed responsibility for 32 bombs sent to laboratories, meat trade employees and hunt supporters since October. Before Christmas, the group sent 13 parcel bombs to scientists and suppliers of animals to laboratories. Two exploded and 11 were made safe.

MARY BRAID

In the first explosion yesterday a 12-inch cylindrical package blew up at Graham Gilder, a haulage firm, in Elmstone Hardwicke, near Cheltenham, Gloucestershire. A second parcel bomb was found at Peter Gilder Haulage, 16 miles away at Bourton-on-the-Water. Later, a device exploded at the headquarters of the ferry operators Stena Sealink, in Ashford, Kent. A secretary suffered minor cuts. The companies are involved in the transportation of animals.

A man suffered injuries at the Pig Improvement Company, Fyfield Wick, near Abingdon, when a poster tube exploded, and another man received hospital treatment after a package exploded at Ross Breeders, a chicken breeding plant at Newbridge, Edinburgh.

Vandals strike at laboratory

Animal rights' activists claim responsibility

ANIMAL activists have claimed responsibility after vandals attacked vehicles and wrecked a laboratory in Harrow.

By MIKE UNDERWOOD

Raiders broke into a microbiological laboratory

smashing windows, gluing locks and covering walls with paint last weekend.

And employees of the laboratory, which the police have asked not to be identified, had their cars smashed and damaged.

The Animal Liberation Front claimed responsibility for the vandalism.

Animal Liberation Front spokesman Robin Webb said: "We don't condone violence but we understand why people use it."

"It is 170 years since animals were first protected but they are abused more than ever."

He said that the Front did not use violence or threaten life.

'THE INDEPENDENT' 4.6.94

By DAVE PETERS

Robin Webb promised: "These are not idle threats. The west London cell is very active and very committed."

"It could send two people out in a car with a bag of marbles and a catapult and smash dozens of windows in one night, causing thousands of pounds worth of damage."

"The ALF intends to end animal abuse. It doesn't matter how many individuals are imprisoned, we will always have more. You cannot imprison an ideal."

Butcher Gerry Paine, of Paine's Frozen Meals, in Alexandra Avenue, Rayners Lane, is advising shops to take the threats seriously. Six weeks ago, one of his vehicles was burned out. The ALF this week, told the Inform it was responsible for the attack.

Mr Paine said: "You can do nothing else but take their threats seriously. It is a terrible thing that so many people have been innocently affected."

"I'm just an honest trader. I sell vegetables as well as meat. Business is difficult enough without this."

The Inform has passed all its information on the ALF to the police, who are investigating.

They aim to attack high street shops

'TIMES' 29.9.94

Lambs ferried

A Harwich to Boulogne ferry service carrying lambs to France begins on Saturday, the day P&O imposes its ban. The service, by MDT Holdings of Slough, will ship up to 5,000 lambs a day.

Seal sanctuary

About 2,700 acres of marshes and coastline at Blakeney Point, Norfolk, which is home to 350 grey seals and colonies of wading birds, has been made Britain's latest national nature reserve.

'THE TIMES' 17.8.94

Arkangel Comment

This is the part of the magazine where you get to have your say. We try to print everything we can - providing it is to do with Animal Liberation, and is not intended to further some other aim - political or otherwise. The articles do not necessarily represent the views of the editors.

Please remember - an article submitted on computer disk (in ASCII / Text format please) will save us a lot of typing, but we welcome your thoughts in any form (especially if they are typed with double-line spacing, or neatly hand-written)!

The Animals' Padre Writes

by the Reverend James Thompson

I love what the Animal Liberation Movement stands for. As a Christian I would be a hypocrite not to! The simple fact is that Christianity is rooted in Christ, whose birth was foretold to animal carers protecting sheep by night. He grew up to identify himself with them: "I am the good shepherd," he said. And he went on to say that such a person was prepared to lay down his very life for those cattle committed to his charge!

Indeed, when I link the above with Christ's militance as he liberated animals about to be sacrificed in the Jerusalem Temple at the commencement of his ministry, I see in him not only an animal carer but an animal liberator as well. Yes, and one prepared to transgress the laws of property in the process.

Is it any wonder that this first century radical was tried for - amongst other things - being 'a stirrer of the people'? Yes, in all reverence, if anyone deserved receiving a wooden spoon, my Lord did. So I'm not ashamed to follow his example in rocking the boat; especially when it concerns those religious leaders who go around picking out moral midges while they swallow moral camels whole, just as they did in his day!

Religious leaders frequently get all indignant and heated over factors such as birth control. Yet, remarkably, they hardly blink an eye at thousands in the third world starving because of over-population and insufficient food. They are the type who denounce, with abhorrence, the use of Durex so as to lessen AIDS; and take children in parties to McDonald's to receive cooked offal which is possibly contaminated with BSE!

These bastions of religiosity pray that non-church attenders might see the error of their ways, but can't see any error in consuming a Sunday dinner broiler chicken following Sunday morning worship. Those of a different tradition will frequently get all emotional about the evils of the demon drink. They, themselves, respectably enjoy - without a qualm of conscience - a glass of milk; or at least a regular cup of tea whitened with the same. They wouldn't flutter an eyelid over the fiendish process involved in procuring it!

One thing else that appeals to me as most apt is the title of this outspoken journal: Arkangel. Indeed, the first part of the word remind's me of God's Ark of salvation. Apart from Noah, his wife, three sons and their wives, it was filled with chosen animals for their salvation. Indeed, how ever we choose to interpret the story, the moral is plain: God chose to save more animals than their human counterparts. Indeed, the latter parasites (human beings) he created last of all. Yet they have the audacity and arrogance to consider themselves the first!

Whenever I think of the word 'Angel', I'm reminded of the prophet Balaam. He was acknowledged to be a spiritually inspired human, yet was completely oblivious of an angel before his path. Consequently, he callously beat his animal which was far more righteous and spiritually perceptive than himself; God rewarding it with speech.

However, this journal's title - to be exact - is not two words, but one: 'Arkangel'; and I only know that in the Bible the similar word 'Archangel' refers to Michael whose task was to lead all the spiritual forces of good against the very core of evil, and to overcome it. Indeed, if that is not the noble warfare pursued by the great Animal Liberation Movement then I fail to know what is. The Church of which I'm a priest certainly does not fight this spiritual warfare. It does say: "Let us pray for the church militant here on Earth"! And it does sing: "Fight the good fight." But it does these things while it blesses pharmaceutical empires of corruption along with the nation's biggest health scourge - the National Health Service - which, most immoral, - we've been compelled to finance over the years.

The Animal Liberation Front is infinitely nearer Christ than church leaders who: oppose animals entering their buildings, pour scorn on those who pray for them, and condone religious festivities where live animals are cast out of towers!

Leading bishops in the House of Lords who get all agitated over the whys or wherefores of women as priestesses, are unconcerned about the grotesque mistreatment of animals. Yet these blind leaders of the blind go around parading shepherds crooks! They are certainly NOT shepherds; but that they ARE crooks (of deception) is truly obvious.

As for one of their present Anglican archbishops, he was, for five years, a practising vivisector! As for one of the present Roman archbishops (Alfredo Battisti of Italy), he hit headlines in January 1989 when he affirmed: "To beat up a dog or leave it to die of starvation is not a sin. For a dog is not a person and therefore has no soul. So no sin is committed."

*For further reading, the Reverend James Thompson's book:
'CAST OUT OF THE ARK - Christendom's appalling abuse of God's animal creation', is available.*

It has 96 pages and 15 illustrations. (ISBN: 0952302209). Price £4.50 (plus 50p p&p if direct from: Ty Coch, Fron Park Road, Holywell, Clwyd, North Wales).

Leyden Street Slaughterhouse - the Fight Continues

by Mark Simmonds

My first contact with Leyden Street chicken slaughterhouse, East London, was at a demonstration in 1984.

Poultry, mainly ex-battery hens which had outlived their use as egg layers, have their throats cut whilst fully conscious and are then placed in a tub of boiling water to loosen their feathers. These birds often spend several days crammed up to 12 in a crate awaiting slaughter, many dying of thirst, shock or suffocation. An ex-worker said that many chickens, having survived their throats being cut, are thrown into boiling water whilst still alive. The smell of death outside the slaughterhouse is almost unbearable.

Slaughterhouse workers have carried out physical attacks on demonstrators over the years. A female BUAV worker who attended the demo's in the early days was attacked with an iron bar and several other protesters have been threatened with knives. Mr. Cole, the owner, took out 14 injunctions against named individuals who, when they continued to protest, were arrested. These arrests, the assaults and the dwindling numbers attending the weekly Sunday demo's led to a short period when no protests took place. In 1985 there was the last of the mass demonstrations against the slaughterhouse organised by the group Anarchists for Animals when early one Sunday morning 40 people turned up. However, several vans of police soon arrived and informed everyone that unless they dispersed they would be arrested.

Between 1985 and 1992, few protests took place outside the slaughterhouse, and the building, previously a wooden structure, had been replaced by a brick one. At a London animal rights meeting in March 1992 it was decided that a new campaign would be launched using entirely legal methods. Meanwhile, direct action against the building took place including slogans painted on the walls and red paint thrown over the entrance.

The first demonstration was held on Sunday, 15th March 1992. Banners were provided but ended up spending the day under a hedge in a nearby park whilst some activists rushed into the slaughterhouse and despite a heavy police presence, four chickens were rescued. A large amount of money that was on the counter at the time was sent flying. Three people were arrested but were later released without charge.

Regular demonstrations were now being held, and on Sunday 5th April, animal rights activists were greeted by a new security door, a bodyguard for Mr. Cole and a video camera. However, these measures did not prevent a night-time raid on Easter Sunday when 77 chickens were rescued along with a tin of money which was used to help feed the birds in their new homes!

On 4th October 1992, a national demonstration took place and nearly 100 people turned up. This time, the police had erected metal barriers. A noisy protest ensued. In February 1993, another raid took place and this time 150 chickens were rescued and were all placed in good homes. Anger against the slaughterhouse erupted once again in August 1993 when protesters rushed in and, despite being attacked by slaughtermen, two quail and ten chickens were rescued. Horrific photos of the inside of the building were also taken. However, a woman protester was hit over the head with a stick, and another was beaten about the head and body by a live chicken held by its legs by one of the workers. A number of other people were also assaulted. Saddest of all was the death of one chicken whose head was pulled off by a slaughterman whilst in the arms of its rescuer.

On January 9th 1994, the building witnessed another display of people's anger when the phone lines were cut and paint and other nasty substances were thrown into the building. One slaughterman who looked outside to see what all the fuss was about ended up being covered in white paint!

The last known raid took place in May 1994 when 58 chickens were rescued; and another national demonstration took place on April 24th. With only three police present, demonstrators managed to surround the building for several hours. Eventually, police reinforcements arrived and the slaughtermen had to leave under police escort. On 7th August, after a noisy demo had taken place an animal rights campaigner had a beer can thrown at her and another was assaulted.

The last demo to be held at the slaughterhouse (at the time of writing) took place on Sunday 21st August when about 20 demonstrators staged a very noisy protest and attempted to encourage those queuing up for their freshly murdered chickens to think twice.

The campaign against Leyden Street slaughterhouse will continue and apart from the events mentioned, smaller actions are happening all the time. There are the regular demo's on the first and third Sunday of every month. Meet at the main exit of Liverpool Street BR station at 10.45-11am or at the slaughterhouse between 11.30am and 2.30pm. Leyden Street slaughterhouse can and will be closed down but we need your support.

(See also entry under 'National Groups' elsewhere in the magazine.)

Arkangel Back Issues, T-Shirts and Cards

Back Issues of Arkangel: Numbers 2,3,4 & 10 are still available and FREE OF CHARGE! (But please send 50p per magazine to cover the postage.)

T-Shirts: Two different designs are available - the pictures from the covers of Arkangels 7 (as shown here) and 8. They come in B/W and are XL only. £6.00 inc. p&p.

Cards: A set of three cat 'surimpressions' postcards donated by Brigitte Jacques. Prices are: 35p each, 3 for £1, 50-99 cards 20p each, 100-499 cards 15p each and 500 cards or more 12p each. Please add 25p p&p for orders less than 50 cards.

New - A5 Size Cards: Printed on recycled paper featuring the brilliant and unique cover design of Arkangel 11 (with envelopes) 50p each inc. p&p.

Order from:

Arkangel, BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX. Please make cheques payable to 'Arkangel'.

We received several contributions regarding April '94's World Day March in London. Accusations and counter-accusations about the march and the events surrounding it have been rife, and NAVS themselves published a seven page statement in response to the criticisms. Arkangel was named in the NAVS statement and so we feel it appropriate to add our own editorial comment at the end of this section.

World Day #1

(and another reply to Zol!)

by Dave Plews

I write concerning the recent anti-vivisection march in London, organised by the NAVS. I was unable to attend the march this year so instead I made a point of watching as many news broadcasts as possible. I also listened to the LBC afternoon news on the day of the march, and the next day I bought the Observer and the Sunday Express.

The net result of all this media-watching was NOTHING! Not one single report on what was probably the biggest animal rights march ever (although due to lack of info I can only speculate).

Now surely the whole point of the march is to get publicity and to help open people's eyes to what the vivisectionists are up to. From what I've seen the march was a failure in that main objective.

The fact that the media can choose to totally ignore such an important event is worrying, to say the least, though to be honest I expected no more of them.

It would be easy to get depressed about it, but really we ought to feel positive that about 30,000 people (last year's figure) feel so strongly about the right of animals NOT to be tortured by white-coated, uncaring, selfish bastards. The fact that our media are more concerned with Princess Margaret buying a new handbag, or similar crap, is something that will have to be overcome.

All the time, people are becoming more and more aware of animal abuse, and the number of those squarely opposed to it is rapidly growing. The day is drawing nearer when there will be too many veggies, vegans, anti-vivisectionists, etc. for the media to turn the other way. To get an idea of the speed of progress remember that ten years ago only about 3% of the population were vegetarians - now it's over 7%! Veganism, the only diet which recognises the rights of ALL animals, is also on the increase. People are getting to understand that adopting an animal rights stance doesn't mean giving up anything - it means taking up a lifestyle that doesn't rely on the exploitation, suffering and death of others.

It's vital that animal rights remains an issue that is always being highlighted one way or another. The media isn't altogether useless to us; local papers in particular are a good way to get the point across. My local paper printed an interview with ALF activists, and I was amazed at how open-minded the editorial line seemed to be.

If we all keep doing what we can animals WILL be allowed the freedoms to which we all know they're entitled.

Also, couldn't there be a bit less back-stabbing within the movement? I KNOW that when the BUAV slag off the ALF AND use their photographs it's a pain in the arse, but if we attack each other we're wasting energy which should be used to make animal liberation a reality.

Finally, I would like to make a few comments on the letter by Zol in No. 11. The point I'd like to make is simply that the basis of our movement is the acceptance of the fact that animals DO have rights. The ultimate right is the right to LIFE. Avoiding meat is great, but what of the rights of the fish you occasionally eat? Do they count for less because they don't look as cute as cows? And what about the rights of one day old chicks, crushed or gassed by 'cruelty-free' free-range egg farmers, because they were born the wrong sex? What about the rights of the two year old hen, slaughtered because she no longer lays enough eggs? What about the rights of a four year old dairy cow, killed because she's not cost effective any more? And what of her calves, dragged from their mother at a few days of age to either become part of the same cruel system or to be sent to French or Dutch veal crates?

Don't get me wrong, what you've done so far is great - I am not judging you. I just want you to realise that only by refusing to consume ALL animal products can you be sure of not encouraging the suffering and death of innocent animals. As a vegan, I can assure you that giving up all animal products is easy, it only takes a little commitment. Get in touch with the Vegan Society and give it a go - you won't be sorry you did. Remember those in the world who are dying for want of a bowl of rice, and you'll think nothing of not eating dairy produce.

PS. Can Arkangel explain precisely how I go about sending stuff in on a computer disk?

PPS. Have Animal Aid done something awful? I noticed they weren't in the National Groups listing in Issue 11.

(Ed.) This is the first time we've been asked direct questions in an article!

To answer your first query: Although Arkangel is produced on an Amiga-based system, we can take text from any disk, in any format, and from any computer made within about the last ten years (except those Amstrad PCW things!). HOWEVER, it helps if your text is saved in plain ASCII (or text) format on a low density disk (i.e. not HD) - but if all that sounds foreign, just save your typing in your usual way and send the disk! Incidentally, we can also scan text into the computer straight from a typed page, BUT, the print quality MUST be good, with clear, dark type.

Next question: You're right about Animal Aid, and we forgot to include them in Issue 10 too! Sorry Animal Aid. If you check Issue 9 you'll find that we gave them a good amount of space, publicising their activities and promoting the LWC exhibitions. Strangely, Mark Gold responded by calling Arkangel "...a nasty little magazine.." and banning its sale on stalls at the Kensington LWC. We are more than a little puzzled by this antagonism, but we'll take the opportunity once again to invite contributions from Mark or anyone else at Animal Aid!

World Day #2

(A Day to Remember!)

by Anon.

Although I have suspected it for some time, the World Day for Laboratory animals in London in April proved, at least for me, that Britain is a totalitarian police state. Short of actually banning the march, the police completely suppressed it.

Directed around comparatively empty 'back streets', we were led away from areas where we would have been able to confront the perpetrators of animal cruelty. Piccadilly (the route of last year's march) was clearly the point which the police had identified as being most vulnerable and, consequently, it was blocked by ten riot vans, eight mounted officers and in excess of sixty infantry. For those who did not notice, the side streets at the junction to Piccadilly were full of additional riot vans, laden with officers ready to move in at the slightest whiff of discontent.

The march was followed on either side by an almost continual line of police officers and there was not one stretch of the route which was not covered by a high-powered video camera, nestled on the roof of some high-rise building. Then, of course, there was the police helicopter, another instrument of oppression, aiding the creation of an atmosphere which prevented most protesters from showing anywhere near their real anger at Boots and other such establishments.

Then there was the first sit-down. Started some moments before I joined it, the action was clearly already exciting the police officers in the area, who were busy looking important on CB radios and gearing themselves up for an afternoon of riot. Disappointingly for them, these protesters were peaceful and there was, consequently, no opportunity for making arrests.

After some minutes, a number of protesters began to block off part of the road through which other marchers were filing. I was one of the first two to take this action, believing that the march should, indeed, stop for some moments in order for our true anger at Boots to be made clear. This was, of course, the excuse the police had been looking for and, at last, came their opportunity to make some arrests. Although I am not in a position to represent the views of others who blocked the remaining section of road, I, for one, had not intended to remain outside Boots on Bressenden Place for much longer. Some moments later all those taking part in the sit-down rose and began to move off following the route of the march.

As soon as I was standing the police grabbed hold of me and pulled me back away from the rest of the crowd. Between thirty and forty officers had formed a line between myself, the other protester who was arrested with me, and everyone else who had been seated. I shouted to try to draw attention to what was happening but it was too late. The line of police between us and the rest of the crowd would have been impenetrable.

Away from the other protesters, the police began to air their opinions about animal rights advocates, both verbally and physically. Almost breaking my arms, I heard one officer say: "You're not so loud away from the crowd, are you, you f...ing animal rights scum". Soon, other officers were joining in: "You're f...ing gonna get it down at the station, you little c...t". "You and your sort never learn do you, you little bastard. You're gonna f...ing regret coming today, you animal rights shit".

This continued for some time as they maintained the grip on my arms. I urged them to relax the position a little, trying to make it clear that I was not resisting arrest. Yet this seemed to make them pull my arms further up my back, so much so that I felt close to blacking out with the pain. By this stage I felt utterly scared - unsure of how they would treat me in a cell if they were treating me like this in a public street. I have been arrested and detained for numerous offences before, but never had I been treated like this. As the van pulled away towards Charing Cross police station I felt sure that things were going to get pretty rough and so I began to psychologically prepare myself for the worst.

However, the officers soon began to tone down their attitudes and I was surprised to hear them begin an approach which is so often talked about within the animal rights movement it is surprising the police still use it. Looking at me in a fatherly way, one officer began: "What's a lad like you doing mixed up with all this? There are some nasty characters involved in this business you know." As if this was not text-book enough, then followed: "Have you come far today?" and "What group are you from?" The standard: "We really believe in what you are fighting for here" was also used several times - so beware, the police still use this clumsy technique to try and catch out the off-guard activist.

By the time we arrived at the police station the atmosphere had changed considerably from the start and, although I still felt nervous, did not believe I was in for the beating I had originally been threatened with. I was released three-and-a-half hours later, having learnt that "no further action would be taken".

My experience has irreparably damaged my views on the British police force. I have only been involved in animal and environmental campaigning for a little over two years and, in this short time, all of my naive illusions about the British State have been shattered. Gone are the days when I thought that the British bobby was a decent chap whom one could ask the time of day.

Although on the scale of things my experiences were really not that severe, I found them particularly shocking because the worst parts had taken place in public. In fact, I even recall one woman smiling at me as she walked past. Moreover, this was a NAVS march, a respectable, liberal, middle-class organisation which denounces illegal animal rights activity. To have been treated in this way on such a march is clearly a sign that the state has branded anyone who campaigns under the animal rights/liberation banner as radical and criminal. How long will it be before families who attend such marches are treated in the way that I was?

When I first became involved in animal rights campaigning, I was very much against incorporating the police as another enemy. Now my view is different. My message to those involved in this struggle for animal liberation and who have not yet identified the police as being as intrinsically involved in animal cruelty as the vivisectioners themselves is this: the police are our enemy. For although the police do not themselves partake directly in animal cruelty (at least, not on the scale of vivisectioners, hunters, etc.) they are the protectors of those who do, and, consequently, they must be opposed as vigorously as the animal abusers themselves. In addition, the police force is comprised of individuals who have totally accepted the way society is run and structured. Therefore they react against, often violently, anyone who challenges the system they have accepted. Also, because of their fear of social and political change, they will do as much as they can to intimidate, demoralise and undermine the values of those who rise in opposition. The police, whose job it is to protect the fixed order of society are as guilty as those who vivisection, as guilty as those who destroy our countryside to build roads, and should, therefore, be considered the enemy of social and political change.

Of course, as we become an increasing threat (as is so often mentioned in this magazine) the more the state, with the police, and in turn, the army, will react against us. Increased suppression, such as the removal of our right to take to the streets, the removal of our right to object to and disrupt hunts, increased police violence, longer prison sentences for activists, etc., is a sign that real change is afoot.

As this suppression intensifies, as the state begins to try to repress and restrain us, we must not feel defeated. Instead, we must feel victorious because it will be a sure sign that those who hold power and those who exploit are on the defensive. Simultaneously however, we must be united. My last major concern about the World Day for Laboratory Animals is the way NAVS organised it. Not only did they refuse to allow a number of groups to take part in their exhibition or to speak at a rally after the march, they were also openly critical of those who chose to sit down outside Boots. In addition, they had clearly been persuaded by the police to route the march around a few back streets, exhibiting no surprise when the march took the route it did and giving other marchers no chance to voice their dissent at the new route.

In short, their actions can only be described as divisive and 'counter-revolutionary'. Large organisations such as NAVS offer thousands of individuals the chance to pay £20 a year, attend an annual march and have their consciences cured. In this way, impetus for meaningful activity is hugely diminished. Real change will only be achieved if the structure of society is fundamentally reorganised. The fight for animal liberation will not be won by making small cosmetic alterations to society as it exists. Actions by organisations such as the ALF are of the utmost importance as they represent real change and a real threat to the animal abusers. We will not win the fight if we concede to what is seen by 'society' as 'legitimate' means of protest, or if we compromise our aims to gain support or to appease the mass media.

In reality, the march did not attract nearly enough protesters to have made it massively significant. There were not more than about 15,000 people. What we need is 600,000, then if we decide to occupy a Boots store - we will!

As we approach the end of the century, we are witnessing the severest crackdown on our movement to date. Michael Howard, if successful in passing his Criminal Justice Bill, will make many forms of protest illegal - not just hunt sabotage - taking us further down the road to a police state. The time for unity within our movement has come. When we stand united we are powerful. Alone and isolated we will be picked off and oppressed. We must stand together, powerful and uncompromising, for revolution - when it comes - must be absolute or it will be worthless.

World Day #3

(An Open Letter to Jan)

by Cambridge University Animal Rights Group

Dear Jan Creamer,

About thirty people from Cambridge attended the World Day march on 23rd April, including ten from this group. We are writing to express our anger and, we believe, that of very many people in the animal rights movement at the poor organisation of the march and the sabotage of the alternative fair.

The fact that NAVS do not allow the ALF SG or similar groups into the Animal World show, or even allow the groups there to distribute pro-ALF literature, has always been a matter of great annoyance, but this has been mitigated by the existence of the local groups fair, which is always the best part of the day - far better than the anodyne official event. That you saw fit to spend precious funds 'gazumping' the alternative fair is an outrage - groups like our own could have achieved a great deal with just a fraction of what you spent to ensure that the rooms were left empty. We find it very difficult to obtain sufficient money for all the things we want to do; seeing organisations throwing money away is exasperating and very demoralising. This group will not be participating in NAVS collections and other fund-raising efforts in the future if it is going to be wasted in this way.

Furthermore, the organisation of the rest of the event was appalling. Having speeches indoors instead of an open-air rally left people with nothing to do, so they drifted away meaning an anti-climatic end to the march. Also, some Cambridge people stayed around for the advertised vigil, but found that they were the only people there and the NAVS staff who they telephoned had no idea what, if anything, was supposed to be happening that night.

It is, perhaps, too much to expect you to openly support the Animal Liberation Front, and you have every right to your opinions. However, denying them the right to any voice is anti-democratic and plainly unfair. Most local groups support both national organisations such as NAVS as well as the ALF, so the very base of the animal rights movement is alienated by your factionalism. If local activists are put off then the whole movement will disintegrate as there will be no-one to demonstrate or campaign.

It is very hypocritical for you to happily use stolen documents and photographs obtained by the ALF but at the same time ignore their very existence. You try to marginalise them by calling them a handful of violent extremists - but, as I'm sure you know, the ALF has widespread support from the grassroots movement and does not advocate the endangering of human or animal life.

This group and the town group, Animal Rights Cambridge, decided to support the NAVS march rather than the SEARC demo in Brighton for a number of reasons:

We felt it was important to show and encourage unity in the movement by supporting the big event of the day.

World Day is an enjoyable occasion (particularly, as we have said, the alternative fair.)

All groups are represented there - people with varying degrees of involvement in the movement - making it an important opportunity to inform and learn about the whole animal rights movement.

Many of us now feel that we made the wrong decision, and that in the future supporting protests organised by local groups will be far more productive.

Everyone in the movement must be prepared to pull together; animal liberation will not be achieved through petty in-fighting.

World Day #4

(Arkangel's Editorial Comment!)

One thing that many people seem unable to grasp is the idea that Arkangel can claim to have as a prime objective the unification of the animal rights movement, while at the same time carrying articles, like those above, which contain criticism of sections of the movement.

It shouldn't be that difficult. While roughly half the magazine is devoted to providing information, the rest is written by grass-roots activists who take the trouble to put pen to paper (or finger to keyboard) and have their say. We do not include articles on the grounds that we agree with them. (In fact, the hardest part of our job is spending two hours typing up something we think is a load of bullshit!) Our criteria for running an article are things like: Is it relevant? Is it interesting? Is it well-argued? Is it original? Will it be of use to the movement? (That's the theory anyway.) When WE want to express a view we put it in an editorial section like this.

Which brings us to the NAVS statement. At the top of page two the statement reads: "Over the last few years, almost every single issue of certain publications has criticised us unjustly. Prior to the 1994 march, ARC News, the ALF SG and Arkangel all ran articles criticising the NAVS and working up their hate campaign against us. Their attacks on the NAVS run to many pages..."

We were staggered! What rubbish! What articles are they referring to? Arkangel 11 appeared a week or two before the march - there was no criticism of NAVS at all, but we did promote World Day in the Groups section and encourage people to support the event. In Arkangel 10, Robin Webb responded to a previous NAVS criticism of the ALF - but in an extremely courteous way! In the same issue, an article by David Lane defended NAVS and others from attacks by CIVIS and Suppress. Arkangels 9, 8, 7 (there wasn't a 6)? No, we can't find any evidence of attacks on NAVS there either! What about going back nearly four years to issues 1 to 5? Sorry, they were before our time - they'll have to go unchecked!

Come on NAVS! What hate campaign? There isn't one, and there never has been as far as we're concerned. Of course you'll find the odd criticism of 'The Nationals' in Arkangel - an unfortunate term perhaps, and maybe you don't like being lumped in with some of the others - but isn't that exactly what you're doing to Arkangel? We're just a bunch of people who care about the plight of animals, and we're just like you really. We're all vegans, we are active in all sorts of AR groups, both local and national, and we get involved in a whole variety of AR causes and campaigns.

You're not the first to associate Arkangel with the ALF SG or the ALF Press Office - Animal Aid make the same mistake! Yes, we include a report from Robin Webb as a regular feature, but that's because he contributes them and our readers like to read them. And yes, the press-cuttings are mostly about ALF actions, but that's because most press-cuttings are about ALF actions! Newspapers carry reports about murders, but their editors probably don't go around killing people. We'll say it again; Arkangel is entirely independent of any other organisation.

We wonder if this misunderstanding stems from the fact that so few AR magazines publish any form of feedback or contribution from their readers or members? We suppose that someone who produces a magazine which consists solely of editorial matter might find it difficult to imagine printing something they actually disagree with!

Let's get back to the NAVS statement...

It is quite clear from the tone of the statement that the writer was extremely upset at the time, after all, no-one likes having their work attacked (least of all us), but if you are going to issue a very lengthy statement you must at least do it in a calm and rational manner. You must be certain of your facts, and you must not lay yourself wide open to charges of hypocrisy - that just makes things worse.

We'll deal with an example which seems to be aimed squarely at Arkangel; other organisations can look after themselves!

A substantial part of the NAVS statement is devoted to criticism of groups and people who sell magazines and T-shirts both in Hyde Park and during the march. We quote: "... many people and organisations benefit from what we do, for nothing; no contribution in effort, nor money, nor support." Also: "... the World Day march has been used simply as a means of making money rather than supporting the cause. This has been openly stated in the newsletters of the organisations who are complaining about us." It is also claimed that some marchers complain about too many people selling things!

We are obviously one of the main culprits and we make no pretence that the World Day march is extremely important to us. From our mobile shop (pram) we normally sell several hundred Arkangel magazines and a lot of T-shirts. The painfully obvious fact is that people buy our stuff because they want to. "No contribution in effort, nor money, nor support"? Effort? Count the number of words in Arkangel, then estimate how long it would take YOU to type them on an Amiga using two fingers! Support? Do you mean support for the cause or support for NAVS? Aren't they the same thing? Money? Every single penny we take goes to fund Arkangel magazine and to pay for Arkangel merchandise such as T-shirts. After our travelling expenses to London we end up out of pocket! By far the major part of the equipment we use to produce the magazine, we have bought ourselves - contrast that with organisations who seem to need thousands of pounds of fund-raisers' money to buy the latest computer equipment. (Nothing personal!)

We mentioned hypocrisy, and we'll end on that point. Again we quote from the NAVS statement: "ARC and others also set up stalls selling things at Hyde Park, knowing that this is against the rules and that we could be banned from using Hyde Park."

Well, there we were, mingling with the crowds, clutching our armfuls of Arkangels, shouting, "Arkangel Magazine - THE Animal Rights Magazine!" and who should we bump into coming the other way? No names, but we'll give you a clue...

He was shouting, "Turning Point Magazine - THE Animal Rights Magazine!" And guess what? That person happens to be not only the editor of that marvellous publication, but the very same person is also a most senior NAVS official - some might say number two in the NAVS hierarchy!

Animal Rights Prisoners

Arkangel gives its full support to animal liberation prisoners. In the past we have given details of names, locations and prison numbers. Now we only list the names of those in prison and ask those who wish to make contact with prisoners to contact the ALF Supporters Group for up-to-date information. This is because Arkangel is produced less frequently than the ALFSG information and could be out of date by the time you read it; so this change is for purely practical reasons.

For further information please write to the ALFSG, BCM 11bD, London, WC1N 3XX.

Prisoners at the time of going to press:

Gurjeet Aujla HV2047
David Barbarash
Angie Hamp TW1b87
Terry Helsby EF07b1
Keith Mann EE3588
Allison McKeon RE237D
Annette Tibbles TT2215
Darren Thurston
Max Watson BJ2477.

No matter what race, sex, or species...

by David Olivier

Many in France and elsewhere were dismayed to read in Arkangel 11 a heavy attack from the Parisian group AIDA against the animal liberationists such as me who produce or feel close to the anti-speciesist journal Les Cahiers antispécistes lyonnais.

After several years of work aimed at putting animal liberation onto the political and cultural agenda here, we have succeeded in at least putting it on the agenda of the French radical left. This of course is not enough, so we don't plan to stop at it; and I suspect that the main thrust behind the AIDA attack comes precisely from the interests of the right and the extreme right in protecting what they see as their proprietary domain against our intrusion. In France the management of "animal welfare" has always been left up to the paternalistic right, who don't appreciate the threat of a radical liberationist outlook lessening their hold on this very profitable theme.

Anyway, whatever the motivation behind AIDA's attack may be, there is a real political debate at stake. We believe that however sincere some racists and fascists may sometimes be in their commitment against the suffering of non-human animals, it is a matter of simple logic that one cannot be, in a full sense, an animal liberationist if one doesn't believe that all animals, including all humans, are equal. Whatever priorities one may choose to have in practice for tactical reasons, if one doesn't feel at least concerned by the plight of all suffering and oppressed sentients, no matter what species, race, sex, etc., then something is obviously deeply wrong. And I don't see how one can expect to change the public's outlook towards non-human animals without putting forth an at least plausibly consistent alternative outlook.

The positive aspect of AIDA's attack is that it has made clear the essential differences between their path and ours. True, we believe that the Front National is not our natural ally - we prefer to work with people who care for others and who try to be at least a bit rational about it. True, we don't single out ritual slaughter as a key issue. True, we believe that the point should be to defend sentient individuals and not, as e.g. the green ideology would have it, endangered species or rare plants, or "systems" such as "biotic communities." True, we care less about the milligrammatic purity of our own personal veganism than about trying to change the world.

I will not respond in detail to the often absurd, petty, and/or plainly untrue points AIDA makes in its Arkangel article. We already wrote an extensive answer to their political position in the January 1994 issue of the Cahiers antispécistes lyonnais. Those who are interested can ask us for a copy of that issue (include £2 if possible) or for a photocopy of the article (free). The text is in French; if someone would want to translate it into English, we would be delighted, because we believe the debate is important for Britain too.

David Olivier
Cahiers antispécistes lyonnais
20 rue d'Aguesseau, 69007 Lyon,
France

(Are we) the voice of the voiceless?

By Chris
Tucker

Every animal is a beautiful individual with its own right to live in freedom. Animal liberation seeks the release of animals from human bondage, this includes the end to the pet industry, and the keeping of animals in captivity for our own pleasure, and not for the benefit of the animals concerned.

To keep any animal (which can be released into a natural environment) in captivity is no more than imprisonment; of course, it is obvious that many captive and domestic animals can never be released into an environment free from human supervision. Where they can be released, they are (e.g. Paignton Zoo raided by the ALF).

So how far do we extend our compassion to other living creatures? Obviously we all have our own standards. When I was in prison I decided it was cruel for some of the other inmates to keep goldfish in pickle jars. I voiced my views and the fish were removed by the prison officers to a large tank. Of course this was not an ideal situation, I had hoped the fish would have been handed over to animal rights campaigners who could have placed the fish in an outdoor pond where, in this country, goldfish can survive throughout the year. This suggestion was refused.

Keeping a goldfish in a tank is no different from keeping a dolphin in a dolphinarium, or animals in zoos, and no-one has the right to deny ANY animal its freedom. Some people say that it is a 'personal' matter, why is it a personal matter when one person keeps an animal in confinement, but not with others? Try explaining that to the poor fish stuck alone in the tank. When we see animals being ill-treated we have NO right not to speak out. It is our duty to speak up for the voiceless. On behalf of those who are voiceless, please never turn a blind eye to those who deserve our help, even if that means speaking out against those who 'claim' to be on the animals side.

I will end with part of a speech spoken at a national march against vivisection by a well known animal rights campaigner... "We are not asking for better conditions for laboratory animals, we are not even asking for bigger cages for our imprisoned non-human brothers and sisters. We want an end to all animal experiments and the release of all our brothers and sisters who are imprisoned. Until then the war continues." Surely this should also apply to a goldfish?

Missing the Point - Again!

by Jacqueline Shortland

In response to Arkangel No. 11, the article MISSING THE POINT truly does just that. On many occasions vivisectionists have publicly proclaimed that if vivisection was abolished in this country they would simply go to another where laws are more lax, or non-existent: drug companies are already firmly entrenched in several countries and, unless we can show people all over the world that vivisection is an absurd, useless, irrelevant and potentially dangerous criteria for humanity, then we will simply be moving the goalposts to the ultimate detriment of ALL animals' welfare. Is this what David Phillips really wants?

We have more than enough irrefutable evidence to show the real reasons why it exists, often from the mouths of vivisectionists themselves, and all those who fail to use this information in conjunction with its cruelties not only fail the animals but also may have other - more personal - reasons for not doing so. Alarmingly, such individuals and groups are not decreasing and one cannot put it all down to apathy or the inability to see beyond their own noses.

I thought many remarks made by David Phillips were naive - dreaming of "large active movements of opposition", when the majority of people already eat animals and many would consider an animal organ transplant: others condone or demand that vivisection continues simply because they believe that it works. But the animal model means protection for the vivisectionists which is why they will fight tooth and nail to keep their lucrative empires. Taking into account an 'individual harassment' approach, how many years and how much effort will it take to get around to them all?

The writer also assumes, quite wrongly, that the MORI Poll figures of 48% opposed are against it solely for moral reasons, but how long is it since he actually 'talked' to people on the street who are often quite well informed, especially about the dangers of basing prescription drugs on animal tests.

Alongside the exposés and hostile actions, to which some of the public may have become inured/alienated, there has been a formidable worldwide team also exposing loud and clear the inherent dangers to people based on species differences - which are considerable - together with the vested interests of an amazing collection of companies, societies and individuals who profit from it. Consultancy fees for MP's from drug companies, Watchdog Committees set up to protect us with 'interests' in those very companies they monitor, millions of drug company shares allocated specifically to GP's (which I find shocking) not to mention their other perks for promoting vaccines, specific drugs, etc., and veterinarians who breed animals for research. Didn't Richard Body MP admit in 1972 that "sitting in the Upper House are practising vivisectionists"?

These are also areas where pressure MUST be brought to bear. Unfortunately many people who could, and should (like Mr. Singer), don't. But he is not alone.

In the past ten years there have been radical changes, even monumental ones, in the status quo, especially in legislation: students now have choice, the seeds of doubt sown on the front page of the New York Times, no less, not because it is a cruel system but because its flaws are steadily becoming apparent and cannot be ignored.

The next few years could see the making (or the breaking) of our movement: at least we know the States and the UK have set their power machine in motion to achieve the latter, and booklets promoting vivisection are now appearing in doctors' surgeries nationwide and, like the KGB system, those puppets stashed behind the scenes are now coming into play, with new recruits like the SIMR's vulnerable, but pathetically ignorant and brainwashed founder (an animal lover to boot), spreading his particularly nauseating kind of propaganda.

But how well prepared are we to do his kind of battle?

If we truly oppose this savagery called vivisection is it too much to ask that we be well informed ourselves? Is it really enough to highlight its cruelty leaving people faced with a mythical 'dilemma'? How many leaflets on YOUR stall condemn vivisection because it also is instrumental in killing people, including children? Now, for some people that would be a much more personal reason to get it abolished, forever.

I hope I have managed in some way to address David Phillips' doubts. I agree the time for reasonableness is over and understand that for some intimidation may be the order of the day.

But there is a third way: expose all those who profit from it directly and indirectly, even in our midst, whilst highlighting its dangers to humanity AND the resulting suffering of animals. People make new laws possible - not the power structure.

A CIVIS Supporter Slams the Nationals

By L. King

The difference between Hans Ruesch's CIVIS and the likes of BUAV, NAVS and Animal Aid that David Lane appears to find so hard to discern is the glaring fact that whereas CIVIS has as its foundation TOTAL ABOLITION OF ALL VIVISECTION NOW! and has consistently held that NO animal experiment has ever benefited a human, mainstream groups like the BUAV who undoubtedly began with honourable intentions have over the years degenerated into half-hearted, cosy, fat cat societies who pay out almost as much in staff salaries, prime site offices and trivial expenditures as they do on campaigning. Even worse, large amounts of what the public donate to them in good faith languishes in society accounts, accruing interest rather than helping animals.

Most disturbing of all however, must surely be the moving goalposts factor of these societies' aims and principles, especially in recent years. When they were small and relatively unknown to the public at large, it seemed they considered it 'safe' to be more forceful on the abolition front for example. As soon as they began growing by leaps and bounds financially and in terms of size and influence in the 70's however (thanks in no small part to the publicity generated by ALF actions), the slow but systematic dilution of their TOTAL ABOLITION NOW! stance began. Specific animal experiments started to be singled out as 'unnecessary' and 'obscene', thereby implying by critical omission that others were not and were valid. The new policy became NOT today but tomorrow, next week, next month, next year - hell, we'll have vivisection abolished by the year 2000, promise! Lastly, the public were told fairy tales about these things called 'alternatives' to animal research (conveniently buying even more borrowed time for the vivisectionists while these Emperors' new clothes weren't being sought), when as any antivivisectionist worthy of the name knows - you can't replace any erroneous 'science'. There's nothing to replace, unless you wish to concoct another mockery of the term 'science' equally as illogical and futile to all concerned.

Peculiar behaviour I'm sure you'll agree, from societies that David Lane assures us are NOT vivisection-infiltrated, since all these inconsistencies help the vivisection establishments' continued existence immensely, as of course did these societies' feeble, almost token, protests in the face of the animal-devastating Scientific Procedures Act 1986 which significantly reduced what few rights laboratory animals had and gave the vivisection establishment greater powers to abuse animals in the UK than they'd ever had. And no, I do not take Hans Ruesch's word alone for all this, and much more, dubious conduct in our A-V societies. I have actually made my own investigations (particularly into BUAV) to the extent that I am sadly satisfied, that my suspicions are not without strong grounds. Only last week I received yet another fob-off in answer to some pertinent questions I had posed to NAVS. Jan Creamer replied that she was glad to see I'd read their literature, then referred me back to their literature for the answers to my queries! So either I must conclude that the frontwoman of NAVS is two sandwiches short of a picnic or they have something to hide.

Like David Lane, I loathe backbiting and used to share his view that all conflict amongst animal rightists was only that. However having read Hans Ruesch's books and literature (right from Foundation Report No. 1, Mr. Lane) and then having proven for myself the validity of his exposes and investigations, I see now that the variance between BUAV and what it stands for and CIVIS and what it stands for is as Hans Ruesch says, "as big as that between night and day, or between vivisection and abolition".

On a final note, we ALL know animal experiments are monstrous, evil and cruel and I have cried as many tears over what goes on as the next animal rightist. But tears don't help animals. Action does, and because to me the cruelty of it is not in dispute and is blindingly obvious to the stupidist person, I choose instead to devote my energies to highlighting the not-so-obvious human health risks to the heartless selfish person for whom posters of cute puppy dogs being vivisected cuts no ice, for though such a person is as a despicable being indeed to me,

I must unfortunately concede that this is the breed with the political and societal power, rather than the animal lover, and this is the person who can do more for animals in a single stroke (whether directly or indirectly) than I shall probably achieve in a lifetime, and it is the animals that matter, not my pride.

More information from:

*Coventry Animal Alliance
PO Box 241,
Coventry CV1 1AA, West Midlands*

Arkangel 11 carried an article by Gareth Gee, former editor of 'Howl' magazine, entitled 'Hunt Saboteurs and the Police : Sleeping with the Enemy' and subtitled 'Why HSA Committee members have more in common with the police than they do with hunt saboteurs'. Here is a selection from the flood of replies!

Hunt Sabotage: Why there must be No Compromise

by A. Anarchist

Never has anyone spoken a truer word about hunt sabotage and the police than Gareth Gee. As I read his article in Arkangel 11, I could almost hear the cries of: "but there is no class war", and "hunt sabbing has nothing to do with petty politics". Sure enough, when I attended a local group meeting, the topic of conversation was Gareth's article. And the widely-held opinion? - "over the top... nothing to do with class politics... the police might not be on our side but they are still human..." etc., etc.

Well wake up! Yes, the police may be human but, sadly, this doesn't disqualify them from being cruel, misguided puppets of an oppressive state. Vivisectors, hunt scum, farmers and the like are, after all, only human! But does this stop us hating them? Does this stop us from wanting to hurt them, to damage their trade so the real innocents here, the animals, don't have to suffer? Of course not. And at the end of the day that is our goal, TOTAL ANIMAL LIBERATION.

Most experienced sabs have met the occasional 'bobby' who gets embarrassed when his senior officer orders him to arrest a load of sabs, or the 'reasonable' police woman who doesn't get all pissy when you refuse to give your name and address. But I've known hunt supporters who have helped sabs change a wheel on their van, or phoned for an ambulance because a sab is lying semi-conscious on the ground after being beaten up by members of the hunt. Yet these hunspeople are still our enemy first just as the police will always be our enemy.

The police are, to be honest 'bloody horrible gits'. It's no good trying to pretend that they are only doing their job; no one forces them to join the Police Force! I've been on several sabs when, as a direct result of unjust policing (detaining sabs without reason, hassling van drivers and so on), animals have lost their lives. Correct, the police themselves didn't actually kill the animals in question, but by supporting the murdering scum who did by directly preventing sabs from doing what, on at least three of these occasions, would have definitely saved the animals' lives, they may as well have carried out the death sentences themselves.

Gareth makes the point that we, as hunt saboteurs or A.R. people in general, cannot "work things out together" with the police. This is what the new HSA committee would have us do, compromise with the police! It is this wishy-washy attitude that will do more harm than good to the saboteurs' movement and thus, ultimately, to the animals whose lives depend on us. If we compromise on our feelings towards the police then where do we stop?

I personally know of sab groups which actually (can you believe it?!) try to compromise with the very hunts they are supposed to be sabbing! Oh yes, I've heard their 'reasoning' behind this: "we need to strike a bargain to stop getting trashed every week" or "we need to be accepted as part of the hunting tradition so that our actions are not seen as confrontational". For Christ's sake, this is what some saboteurs are actually saying! Striking 'deals' with the very scum they are supposed to be burying! And I can assuredly say that IT DOESN'T WORK. Like the vivisectors or, perhaps more appropriately, the police, people like this only give something to further their own interests, to 'keep the peace' long enough to allow them to get away with, literally, murder.

This, I feel, is the point Gareth Gee is getting across, because the police, in their obvious opposition to us, support the hunting fraternity they are themselves responsible for the continuation of animal abuse. As such they are our enemy. In the struggle for animal liberation, of which hunt sabotage is a major force, we must recognise this enemy and do our damndest to defeat it. This means NO COMPROMISE. No matter how the middle class HSA committee view the police we, as hunt saboteurs, the ground-troops so to speak, must not give an inch. The killing must end - so hunting must be stopped. The State supports this murderous activity, and the police are agents of the State. God help the animals if the day ever dawns when hunt saboteurs really start listening to people like Paul Davis and try and 'get on' with the police.

Hunt Saboteurs and the Police : 'Anon.' Responds

by Anon.

Gareth Gee seems so anxious to establish his "ordinary working class" credentials that he undermines his own argument.

There's little prospect of sabbing being co-opted by the State whilst the litany of police harassment Gee cites continues - the real danger comes when there is a "genuine working relationship" and every copper is "PC Decent". As a presumed revolutionary, Gee doesn't have to prove "all coppers are bastards" - just by 'keeping the peace' and 'only doing their job', they preserve the existing hierarchical social order. Its inequality is itself violence.

Although Gee rightly attacks the HSA Committee for their reformism, he forgets that there are elements of the State that would sooner ban hunting than see conflict on the killing fields broaden into a more general threat to the social peace that otherwise leaves their power and privilege unchallenged. Gee also attacks the HSA Committee for their "middle class" mentality but just as they will achieve nothing by doing deals with the State to defuse conflict, so sabs in the field will achieve as little if they confine themselves to that one arena.

The State isn't particularly concerned that sabs oppose hunting, its concern is how they oppose it. Rather than appealing to the State's monopoly of power to stop it for them, sabs undermine that monopoly by taking direct action themselves. Direct action means that people can do without the State - and can do away with it. Hunting is but one aspect of hierarchical power - sabs sussed enough to take direct action against hunting should be sussed enough to take direct action against all other aspects of hierarchical power that are its guarantors.

The police should be resisted not because they are "cop bastards" - who cares what they're like as individuals? - but because they are key guarantors of the State power monopoly. Without the likes of them to 'keep the peace', we would all have the power to make our own justice rather than the privileged few who abuse it to serve their own ends.

All the above should be obvious - my other reason for writing is to respond to Gee's attack on "Thames Valley sabs" as it's caused unnecessary disunity with Northern groups.

Just because Paul Davies happens to live in the Thames Valley region, Gee should be allowed to get away with attacking all sabs in that region because of his dispute with the HSA Committee! The fact is that at the 1993 AGM, the HSA as a whole "refuse[d] to exclude Margaret Flynnne" and so share equal responsibility for that decision. Contrary to Gee's assertions, any reading of the minutes of that debate will prove her politics were at issue, not whether or not she is a "good sab".

Gee is on very dangerous ground when he writes: "the HSA Committee now has more in common with fascists and moralisers than it does with its own direct-action/anarchist roots" as any informed reading of the first issues of Howl will demonstrate. Ideological genealogies aside, that Gee continues to refer to "Margaret Flynnne" when she reverted to her maiden name on separating from her husband and that he implies she is still a "fascist" when the editor of the Milton Keynes Gazette is currently being sued for alleging exactly that shows Gee doesn't know what he's talking about.

He is as embarrassing straining to establish his anti-fascist credentials as he is his working class ones. No-one will deny the person in question's involvement in the neo-Nazi November 9th Society in the early-1980's - I have read her crude revisionist tracts - but any competent anti-fascist knows it is counter-productive to attack ex-fascists, particularly when the organisation they were involved in is defunct and was always marginal to, and regarded as a joke by, the far Right anyway. What Gee is suffering from is a severe case of the 'contamination' thinking so thoroughly critiqued by Don Keoghty's article Fearful Symmetry [Here & Now #14, pp.40-44]. It is not enough that a woman is pilloried for a past association with a man she no longer wants anything to do with - it seems everyone even remotely associated with her is also branded "fascist".

Gee also tries to have it both ways arguing the media doesn't matter to excuse his own "infantile" public statements and then using the 'bad press' surrounding the Tom Worby incident to discredit the HSA Committee for poor judgement. I take the view that the media is a powerful tool of the State and Gee is playing into their hands by accepting their attempts to discredit hunt sabotage through Margaret's past rather than challenging this as the crude 'blame the victim' propaganda offensive that it was. The media were appealing to exactly the same 'contamination' thinking that Gee is afflicted with - which is why he and too many others in the HSA were so easily manipulated by the black propaganda retailed by State asset and Searchlight editor Gerry Gable. He features as advisor to the Daily Telegraph article on the Worby incident and it isn't the first time Searchlight have smeared animal rights militants with a far Right label - they were advising at David Henshaw's elbow when Animal Warfare ludicrously claimed SG founder Dave Nicholls was the British Movement's Essex organiser [A Lie Too Far, pp.35-38]. The reason this disinformation is going out is to isolate animal rights militants from the broader Left - sorry Gareth, but by not countering that disinformation when it was directed at Margaret, the "fascist" label's stuck to you too as far as they're concerned. Maybe now you appreciate how irrational and divisive 'contamination' thinking is and might consider attacking the media instead of its victims in future.

Hunt Sabotage: The Ends Justify the Means

by Anthony Hare

Speaking as a sab of some four seasons now, my own experiences, as in common with many if not most others, support Gareth Gee's assertion that the police are one of our enemies and that the impartiality and fairness practiced by a few should only ever be viewed with caution.

However, what I do take issue with is Gareth Gee's complete condemnation of the way Paul Davis, with other members of the H.S.A. committee, have chosen to oppose the Criminal Justice Bill.

Recognising as we all do how this bill affects sabs directly and of how, as a united body, we have to oppose it on a political level too. Then surely, since most of us are out there in the field saving lives, the H.S.A. committee, as our representatives, seems to me to be in the best position to mobilise public support behind us in an attempt to prevent this iniquitous bill being passed. And so the crux of the matter is this (and many may dislike me for saying so) but sadly, it is the educated, the middle-classes, who usually have the confidence to express themselves articulately at MP's surgeries, speak to the media with ease, or write coherent and convincing letters to politicians and national newspapers.

Yes, as a sab, I would be the first to agree that some of the text on Paul Davis' leaflet does have an air of the paradoxical and is so for the simple reason that it isn't a leaflet designed for sabs. Its readership is meant to consist of those with 9-5 jobs, those who are busily striving to meet the mortgage repayments or get the money for yet another car and seldom think of anything else but themselves and their immediate families. People who basically, however good their intentions towards animal welfare, have little sympathy for the rights of animals. We've all met these people. They sign a petition on a stall opposing vivisection or live exports but still shop at Boots or ask the GP for a 'miracle' potion when illness strikes and, of course, still eat meat.

The point I'm making is this. In trying to defeat the Criminal Justice Bill, the H.S.A. committee is courting popular appeal; trying to appeal in a non-extreme way to the majority of people in this country who lead very conventional, orthodox lives. Of course it's important to remember our direct-action anarchist roots, and as vegans, through the tacit refusal to be party to the abuse and exploitation of other living beings, everyone within the animal rights movement, including those on the H.S.A. committee, practice a fundamental anarchist premise. I honestly believe we are likely to alienate a lot of ordinary people at a most crucial period in our history if we dismiss all police as bastards. This isn't to say we shouldn't enlighten others about the wrongful arrest of sabs and the prejudicial attitudes in favour of hunting scum, but to attempt to do so on a single side of a leaflet is inadequate. Complaints of this nature are likely to be misconstrued and read out of context.

The fact is, people don't generally hate the police. If anything, they are admired for doing a difficult and potentially hazardous job. Neither do people generally have anarchist aspirations and the use of language seemingly advocating this will only be viewed as extreme.

Living as we do in a society where the abuse and killing of animals for pleasure and profit is accepted as normal then, when necessary, it is justifiable to be manipulative, even devious, in our use of language if we are to succeed in achieving our aims. As a movement we should never underestimate the power and influence of the spoken or written word. If this wasn't the case, why hasn't the government (the cause of so much anguish for animals and humans alike) irrespective of its political persuasion, been overthrown a very long time ago.

CONFLICT

If you support anarcho/punk music and animal rights then you should not miss the Conflict gig on Sat 29th October 1994 at the Astoria, Charing Cross Rd, London W1. Speakers and stalls will be provided by the ALF SG from whom you may obtain information and advance tickets. For further information about the band please write to: Conflict, PO Box 448, Eltham, London SE9.

Benefit Tape

A benefit tape has been produced featuring original music by Jez Caudle. The music is reminiscent of Mike Oldfield and Jean Michel Jarre.

The cassette is priced at £3.00 but half of the proceeds will be donated to Arkangel, ALF SG and Newcastle Animal Rights Coalition.

Cheques should be made payable to Newcastle Animal Rights Coalition and sent to:

Tape Offer,
PO Box 1JY, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, NE99 1JY.

Campaigns Update

Pig Unit Exposed

by Vikki Watkins of FAUNA

On Sunday 19th June 1994, South Wales Animal Rights Organisation F.A.U.N.A. filmed evidence of cruel conditions and suffering at the pig unit at Usk College of Agriculture.

"Upon entering the unit, we found some pigs were in filthy conditions. The stench was appalling. At the college most of the breeding sows are kept confined in stalls. All of the fattening pigs are housed in dark stinking sheds, in overcrowded pens. In the fattening house we observed one pig with a growth as big as a football hanging from his stomach. We found another pig unable to stand, dragging himself around on his rear quarters.

In one unit we found mother sows kept cramped and confined in cruel farrowing crates unable to turn around. Upon closer inspection of the unit we found dead piglets and one dead piglet had been put on top of the crate in full view of its clearly distressed mother. We found sows imprisoned in sow stalls, row upon row, unable to turn around. Upon opening the door of a windowless unit labelled 'Flat Deck', we found young piglets kept in virtual darkness, in metal pens with no bedding or straw. There were around 20 piglets to each pen".

F.A.U.N.A. made a formal complaint to the RSPCA and MAFF. An RSPCA inspector witnessed the video and MAFF collected a copy of the video from us. MAFF did not want to make a joint inspection of the college with the RSPCA inspector so they sent a MAFF Veterinary Officer to the unit, who reported that there were no breaches of any regulations and that he was quite happy with conditions there!

If anyone kept a dog or any other domestic animal in any of these conditions they would be prosecuted. USK College of Agriculture is a teaching college and teaches student farmers how to farm. If their pig unit is any example of this teaching, it is with little wonder that farm animal abuse and cruelty is on the increase.

Completely dissatisfied with the outcome of MAFF's enquiry, F.A.U.N.A. released the video to the press. It made headline news on HTV Wales throughout Thursday 23rd June 1994, being the first item on each news bulletin.

The Friends of Animals Under Abuse
PO Box 156
Cardiff
South Wales CF5 5YD
(0222 569914)

Campaign to Close Shamrock Farm

Plans for 1995 World Day Against Shamrock events, in Brighton, have now been formalised:

The march: Assemble Preston Park, Brighton (just off the A23) from 1pm for 2pm start (plenty of parking nearby). The rally, beginning approx. 4.30pm, will be held in a terraced area on the esplanade near the hall (Maps will be supplied to applicants). Refreshments will be available. Short speeches will be given by Anti-Shamrock activists and others.

As too much food was prepared at the 1994 event, vegan meals will only be available on production of a voucher at Friends Meeting House, Ship Street, Brighton - For a voucher send £1.50 for each meal required to the address below. There will be about 20 stalls. Stalls are free of charge to any voluntary group- apply now. Social evening at same venue.

Throughout the summer activists have been raising funds to supplement expenses for groups coming from beyond a 200 mile radius by giving free meal vouchers to up to 12 people from any one group. Send for an application form to the address below. We also intend providing free refreshments (non-alcoholic) to all at the rally. In a spirit of comradeship, any donations towards this event will be very welcome. Please make cheques payable to BRAWR (Brighton Region Animal Welfare & Rights Centre) and send to the address below.

The 1994 World Day march against Shamrock was held over a two mile route through Brighton Town centre. It was so active it lasted for three hours. There were seven sit-downs, with wreath-laying ceremonies accompanied by a minute's silence at the doors of Boots the Vivisectionists, McDonalds and other animal abusers.

Nearly everyone participated in the sit-downs and yet there were no arrests. Whilst this was truly an activists' march the participants behaved in a thoroughly responsible manner, resulting in excellent feedback from the public at the stalls which have been held throughout the summer. Join us in Brighton on April 22nd, 1995 and help to make this 1995 World Day for Laboratory Animals demonstration even more effective.

An active campaign by the ALF and other groups has recently forced the closure of Hyline Rabbits, proving the animal abusers can be stopped. We need your help to close Shamrock Farm (UK) Ltd., the major importers of primates caught in the wild, in the European Union. Please send us an assurance that you and/or your local animal rights group will be attending the demonstrations on April 22nd 1995, by writing to: TCTCSF, Room 3, 10 Waterloo Place, Brighton, East Sussex BN2 2NB. We look forward to hearing from you.

Big Mac on the Run

- the McLibel Trial gets off the mark!

The long-awaited McLibel trial started in the High Court in London on 28th June, and is proving, as expected, to be a very interesting and controversial case. The action began 4 years ago when McDonald's served writs alleging they had been libelled in a London Greenpeace factsheet. The areas covered in the factsheet, which have become the issues in dispute at the trial, are:

The connection between multinational companies like McDonald's, cash crops, and starvation in the third world

The responsibility of corporations such as McDonald's for damage to the environment, including destruction of rainforests

The wasteful and harmful effects of the mountains of packaging used by McDonald's and other companies

McDonald's promotion and sale of food with a low fibre, high fat, saturated fat, sodium and sugar content, and the links between a diet of this type and the major degenerative diseases in western society, including heart disease and cancer

McDonald's exploitation of children by its use of advertisements and gimmicks to sell unhealthy products

The barbaric way that animals are reared and slaughtered to supply products for McDonald's

The lousy conditions that workers in the catering industry are forced to work under, and the low wages paid by McDonald's McDonald's hostility towards trade unions.

Since there is no right to Legal Aid in libel cases, Helen Steel and Dave Morris, the two people accused of libelling McDonald's, are representing themselves against the burger giant's team of top libel lawyers. However, their cross examination skills (for which they have had no training) are proving very effective in cutting through the company's propaganda and shiny public image to reveal the truth about its operations.

The Defendants outlined criticisms of the multinational corporation in their opening speech. Helen summed up the case with the word 'censorship', describing McDonald's as the Robert Maxwell of corporations, using libel writs to silence their critics. Many of McDonald's critics had been forced to apologise due to the enormous costs of fighting a libel action. The defence of this case, which has dragged McDonald's into the spotlight, has only been possible because of the generosity of the campaign's supporters (including Arkangel readers). As a result, MuckDonald's is having to sustain in open court, for the first time, the claim that criticism of its practices is unjustified. Already, there has been a flood of publicity about the case both in the UK and abroad, so more people are learning the truth about McDonald's.

No jury - but a counterclaim

The case is being tried without a jury (which is unusual for a libel case) after McDonald's argued that the issues were 'too complex' to allow their assessment by a jury. The Defendants were outraged, but appeals to higher courts proved fruitless. However, in May, Helen & Dave lodged a counterclaim against the fast 'food' conglomerate for libel. McDonald's had issued press releases and leaflets (which were available nationwide in the company's stores) claiming that their critics (including the Defendants) were deliberately circulating lies about the company. The truth is that it is McDonald's who has been deceiving the public, for example with its lies about not using beef reared on ex-rainforest land. The counterclaim (which will run concurrently with McDonald's claim) means that it should now be up to the multinational to prove its assertion that the factsheet "What's Wrong with McDonald's", produced by London Greenpeace, is untrue.

Destruction of the Rainforests

During the Defendants' opening speeches, internal company documents were read to the court in which McDonald's admitted the purchase of beef imported from Brazil, a rainforest country; this was contrasted with their frequent denials of the use of beef from rainforest countries. Despite objections by the corporation's highly-paid barrister, an extract from the TV documentary 'Jungleburger' was shown, in which McDonald's beef suppliers in Costa Rica stated that they also supplied beef for use by McDonald's in the USA.

UK President in the Stand

Over a number of days, the McLibel 2 grilled 'Big Mac' himself. Paul Preston, McDonald's UK President, said that if one million customers each bought a soft drink, he would not expect more than 100 to 150 cups to end up as litter, even though an article read out in court quoted Preston as saying that litter is the biggest source of complaint! He asserted that styrofoam packaging is less environmentally damaging than using plates, knives and forks!

Incredibly, Preston claimed that the character Ronald McDonald was intended not to "sell food" to children, but to promote the "McDonald's experience". However, he did agree that Ronald "is a useful marketing tool". It was revealed in court that the original Ronald McDonald actor had quit and publicly apologised, stating: "I brainwashed youngsters into doing wrong. I want to say sorry to children everywhere for selling out to concerns who make millions by murdering animals."

Trade Unions

A taster of the abundant evidence to come on McDonald's attitude to trade unions was provided by Robert Beavers, Senior Vice-President of the corporation in the USA. He agreed that in the early 70's, at a time when trade unions were trying to organise in McDonald's in the US, the company set up a "flying squad" of experienced managers to intervene the same day at any store where a union was active. Unions made no headway in the company.

Packaging - Styrofoam & CFC's

Robert Langert, the Director of Environmental Affairs for the McDonald's Corporation, accepted that CFCs (used in McDonald's polystyrene foam food packaging) were banned by the US Congress as an aerosol propellant in 1978, but he said that McDonald's was not aware of CFC/ozone depletion as an issue until the mid-80's. Following worldwide concern over CFCs, McDonald's had phased out use of CFCs and HCFCs. However, Mr Kouchoukos, "Environmental Affairs" Manager of Perseco (the sole supplier of McDonald's packaging in over 60 countries), admitted that in 1989 these were still being used in 29 countries, and that even now HCFCs are used in the Philippines and Turkey.

Professor Duxbury, expert witness for McDonald's, agreed that CFCs & HCFCs caused damage to the ozone layer and that in 1988 McDonald's used "significant" quantities of these chemicals. He further said that McDonald's present UK blowing agent, pentane, contributes to smog formation and the greenhouse effect.

Defence expert witness from the USA, Brian Lipsett, explained how the 'McToxics' campaign (of which he was the coordinator) galvanised thousands of protests and official bans and forced McDonald's to withdraw their polystyrene foam food packaging in the US. Mr Lipsett firstly identified the problems associated with styrofoam production - toxic wastes, damage to the ozone layer and smog pollution. Secondly he identified the usage problems - the leaching of styrene from the packaging into the foods packaged in the foam. Thirdly, he identified the disposal problems - the sheer volume of the material and the lack of a suitable method of disposal. McDonald's has continued to use styrofoam in many countries, including the UK.

Nutrition

During the evidence of John Horwitz, a lawyer employed by McDonald's in the US, the Court heard that in 1987 the Attorneys General of three states in the USA threatened legal action against the company over a "deceptive" advertising campaign which promoted their food as "nutritious". The advertisements focused on areas of consumer concern at that time: sodium and cholesterol content, 'natural' ingredients and other matters. The Attorney General of Texas told McDonald's to "cease and desist" further use of the advertisements and said "the reason for this is simple: McDonald's food is, as a whole, not nutritious. The intent and result of the current campaign is to deceive customers into believing the opposite". The court also heard that an internal company memo, reporting on a high level meeting in 1986 with public relations advisors prior to this advertising campaign stated "McDonald's should attempt to deflect the basic negative thrust of our critics.....How do we do this? By talking 'moderation and balance'. We can't really address or defend nutrition. We don't sell nutrition and people don't come to McDonald's for nutrition".

McDonald's expert witness Verner Wheelock, a consultant engaged by the company since 1991, admitted that there is a considerable amount of evidence that diseases such as obesity, diabetes, high blood pressure, heart disease, stroke and some forms of cancer are related to a diet high in fat, saturated fat, salt and sugar and low in dietary fibre. He agreed that: "We have now reached the point where we can be very confident that diet is the primary factor in the development of most of the degenerative diseases in many industrialised countries" (including cancer). He also agreed with government dietary recommendations based on such views. He admitted that a typical McDonald's meal was high in fat, saturated fat and sodium content (Paul Preston had earlier admitted that McDonald's products were low in fibre) and would not come within dietary recommendations and further that it was "not sensible" to encourage the eating of foods high in fat, saturated fat, sugar and sodium (salt) and low in fibre. He accepted that people were attracted to high levels of sugar and salt and found it hard to give up the taste.

Wheelock contended that the number of McDonald's customers who ate there more than once a week was 'infinitesimal' - the Defendants put surveys to him which showed that in fact many people ate an unhealthy diet of burger type meals on a daily basis, and approximately 6% of McDonald's own staff ate the company's food daily.

When asked about the company's description of its food as 'nutritious' he defined the word to mean "contains nutrients". He then accepted that all foods have nutrients. When asked to define 'junk food' he said it was 'whatever a person doesn't like' (in his case semolina). With disbelief mounting in the courtroom, Richard Rampton (McDonald's Q.C.) intervened to say that McDonald's was not objecting to the description of their food as 'junk food'!

Animals

Dr Neville Gregory, McDonald's expert witness on the rearing and slaughter of animals, reported on and was questioned about site visits made to McDonald's suppliers.

Chickens - Living conditions for the broiler chickens used to make 'Chicken McNuggets' and 'McChicken sandwiches' were outlined. Birds were crammed into sheds, with less than the size of an A4 sheet of paper per bird and no access to daylight. Due to such conditions and constant efforts by the broiler industry to breed heavier and faster growing chickens, 44% of the chickens had leg abnormalities and other health problems occurred. Young chicks were regularly dosed with antibiotics in an attempt to reduce disease. Despite this many chicks were rejected by the company, dumped into dustbin-sized containers and gassed.

When birds were transported to the slaughterhouse, (aged 6-7 weeks) many received bruises and broken bones, some dying as a result. The birds were hung upside down before being electrically stunned in water. Up to 14% of the chickens received pre-stun shocks, which cause distress and can be painful. 1% of birds (around 1350 per day) were decapitated without being stunned, which Dr Gregory agreed could cause suffering. A further 1% were not dead on entering the scalding tank. He agreed that the stunning and killing methods used did not comply with the governments Codes of Practice, and might lead to distress and pain for the birds.

Dr Gregory told how McDonald's egg suppliers kept chickens in battery cages, 5 chickens to a cage with even less space per bird than the broiler chickens and with no freedom of movement and no access to fresh air or sunshine.

Pigs - Dr Gregory related that at least 40% of piglets reared for McDonald's products were raised in indoor breeding units. All pigs had their teeth clipped and one in four had their tails docked. When they reached 40kg the pigs were transferred to fattening units, where for the last part of their lives there was only half a square metre of floor space per pig.

Pigs were stunned using electric tongs and then shackled and knifed, some falling off the "bleeding rail" before they were killed. The method and current used during stunning meant there was a risk that pigs could suffer pain and distress. Dr Gregory stated that the method of slaughter had "shortcomings".

Cattle - Dr Gregory stated that abattoirs supplying McDonald's beef supplier used mainly ex-dairy cows. He accepted that dairy cows were subjected to stress, pain, exhaustion, and disease due to being forced to be almost constantly pregnant and milked. When they became unproductive after only a few years they were sent to be slaughtered for McDonald's burgers. Electric goads were used to force the cows into stunning pens. Cattle were stunned with a captive bolt pistol to the head. Dr Gregory stated that "the accuracy of shooting was not particularly good". Half of the skulls examined showed an inaccurate aim. Imperfect stunning was estimated at 3.7%.

General - Dr Gregory said that suppliers were concerned that more effective (higher) stunning currents in general would affect meat quality, and also that slower killing lines (allowing increased accuracy) would affect profits. He accepted that during inspections slaughter rates are often slowed down because "people are more careful about what they are doing when they are being scrutinised". (Helen & Dave have been unable to independently verify conditions as their expert witnesses have been denied access to the relevant establishments.)

The trial has now broken off for the summer and will resume on 12th September. It is scheduled to go on until next year. Please come along to the court to show your support. The trial is open to members of the public, starting at 10.30am daily: Court 35, Royal Courts of Justice, The Strand, London WC2 (Holborn/Temple tubes). Ring 071 713 1269 for details and directions. If you are travelling a long way to get to the court we advise that you ring this number to check that the court will be sitting on the day you intend to come.

Here are some dates for your diary:

Monday 12th September: trial resumes. Picket outside the High Court, Strand, London WC2 (Holborn/Temple tubes), 9.30 - 11.30am.

Saturday 8th October: nationwide Day of Action - pickets outside McDonald's stores across the country (leaflets available at 12 per 1,000 from 0602 585666).

Friday 14th October, 4.30 - 6.30pm: Picket of McDonald's Euro/UK headquarters, High Road, London N2 (by East Finchley tube).

Saturday 15th October: NATIONAL MARCH AGAINST McDONALD'S - Fight Corporate Censorship! Assemble Euston Station, London at Noon.

Saturday 29th October: London Greenpeace Fayre '94, 11am - 8pm, Conway Hall, Red Lion Square, London WC1 - stalls, videos, vegan food, discussions, creche.

McLibel Support Campaign,
5 Caledonian Road,
London N1 9DX

Tel / Fax 071 713 1269

Donations welcome!

(cheques to McLibel Support Campaign)

Some Recommended Reading

ALF SUPPORTERS GROUP NEWSLETTER BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX: £1.00. Contains information concerning A/R prisoners and defence funds, articles and news. Bi-monthly.

TURNING POINT PO Box 45, Northolt, Middlesex UB5 6SZ: £1.50. Excellent animal rights/liberation magazine. Bi-monthly.

VEGETARIAN LIVING Available from W.H.Smiths and some newsagents: £1.75. Excellent magazine which not only covers a wide range of issues concerning vegetarianism and veganism but is also supportive of animal liberation issues. Monthly.

THE ANIMALS CONTACT LIST Veggies, 180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HW: £2.00 (inc p&p). The list provides a co-ordinated means by which groups can contact one another with details of their work, news of campaigns, or requests for support.

ARC NEWS c/o Free with SAE. ARC activities as well as an PO Box 155, Manchester M60 1FT: NEWS contains reports of local group up-to-date list of events.

VEGAN VIEWS BH7 7AD: The magazine its readers. Quarterly.

6, Hayes Avenue, Bournemouth aims to act as an exchange between

Donations

We are extremely grateful to the following people who have made a donation of £4.00 or more to help us produce and distribute this magazine:

Neil Bartlett, Joan Blakey, Mrs M Britton, Cambridge University Animal Rights Group, David & Dorene Carr, Rosanna Cordoli, Pauline Croxford, Dorothy Dore, M.A.R.C., Gwen Mellor, Gary Packer, William Purves, Molga Salvalaggio, Barbara Sheringham, Michael Sutcliffe, Barbara & Audrey Turner, Dave Wetton, Andrew Wilkins and J Winder.

Extra special thanks go to M.A.R.C. and to M Cooper, Sandra Francis, Monica Harvey, Michael Maas, Mark, Pat Murgatroyd, Tim Thompson, Linda Tuttlebee and Mark Willett who are all donating on a monthly basis by standing order.

Vegan / Veggie Food in Southsea

Vegans and vegetarians visiting Southsea in Hampshire should not miss visiting 'The Orchard Cafe' which can be found at 243a Francis Avenue, Southsea (0705 614666). They specialise in a wide range of organic (where possible) vegan/veggie meals at reasonable prices. A good example being the vegan dish of the day (soup and main meal) is normally no more than £3.00.

The cafe is open Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday: 9am to 5pm, and Friday and Saturday: 9am to 9pm.

THE ROAD TO VICTORY

A Jack Russell trapped for 53 hours in a rabbit warren was rescued in an operation by the Army, the Fire Service and the water authorities. (Daily Telegraph 3.2.94)

British Coal's last 4 pit ponies retired yesterday at Ellington colliery in Northumberland. (Daily Telegraph 25.2.94)

Two men were arrested yesterday in a series of raids across Britain to halt the trade in wild birds of prey. (Daily Telegraph 28.2.94)

11 countries have agreed to help save the world's remaining tigers by working together to protect their habitats and fight the poachers who are killing them. After a 2 day New Delhi convention, the countries proposed a Global Tiger Forum that would try to raise money for a world-wide campaign to save the species. (Daily Telegraph 5.3.94)

Travel companies are for the first time boycotting a holiday destination as a result of its record on environmental issues. They are to drop the Faroe Islands, a tiny archipelago half way between Scotland and Iceland, because the inhabitants are slaughtering pilot whales. (Daily Telegraph 5.3.94)

Britain's two major cancer research charities, the Cancer Research Campaign and the Imperial Cancer Research Fund, have been severely criticised by the Charities Commission for allowing alternative treatments to be unfairly damned. (Outrage Feb-Mar 94)

A pregnant pony believed to have been used as a lure to bring out aggression in a fighting dog has confounded veterinary experts by giving birth to a foal despite her injuries. (Daily Telegraph 7.3.94)

A cat was rescued by fireman after being trapped 30 feet down a well at Headley, Hants. for two weeks. (Daily Telegraph 8.3.94)

A dog that was buried in a field after being run over by his owner has returned to the family home in Artesia, New Mexico. (Daily Telegraph 10.3.94)

The Meat and Livestock Commission have closed 2 regional offices (Taunton and Bury St. Edmunds) as well as the abattoir design services and meat industry management services. 47 jobs have been lost as a result. (Meat Trades Journal 27.1.94)

In 1992 there were 10,202,000 turkeys in U.K. farms. In 1993 there were 9,134,000 turkeys, a drop of 1,068,000. (Meat Trades Journal 27.1.94)

Almost 200 rare birds' eggs and 2 stuffed birds of

"So then, when Old MacDonald turned his back, I took that axe, and with a whack whack here and a whack whack there, I finished him off."

prey have been seized during a raid on a house in Bedworth, Warwickshire. (Daily Telegraph 11.3.94)

Wadebridge Quality Meats, a north Cornwall abattoir, has closed with the loss of 20 jobs. The medium-sized plant had a throughput of 100 bullocks, 400 pigs and 400 sheep a week. (Meat Trades Journal 27.1.94)

Britain will demand tighter animal health and welfare controls by Germany after the arrival of batches of diseased and aged sheep destined for ritual slaughter by Muslims. (Daily Telegraph 14.3.94)

The Fairfax Group meat processing company has gone into receivership. (Teletext 24.3.94)

Animal Rights Activists are applauding Pumpkin the sea-lion after his dash to freedom from a U.S. Navy training exercise. Pumpkin went AWOL a week ago from a routine exercise off the California coast in which he was clearing dummy mines. Since then he has eluded all attempts at capture. Animal Rights supporters have condemned Pumpkin's captivity as an example of improper use of sea mammals for military purposes. (Daily Telegraph 2.4.94)

A scientific breakthrough has given thousands of horse and pony owners new hope in the fight against equine grass sickness, a disease which is regarded as the deadliest threat to British horses. (Daily Telegraph 2.4.94)

Jack Daniels has dropped its sponsorship of the shark fishing championships in Cornwall, and Grolsch-Ruddles has stopped supporting the Angling Times fishing match. (Turning Point April-June 94)

Armadale City Council is the 24th Australian Council to ban the use of wild animals in circuses. (Turning Point Apr-Jun 94)

A new environment-friendly petrol containing less sulphur and benzene went on sale in Finland. It is also unleaded and oxygen-rich, which promotes cleaner combustion. (Daily Telegraph 7.4.94)

A firm link between sea lice from salmon farms and the decline of the sea trout off Western Ireland has been established. (Daily Telegraph 2.4.94)

An adopted German Shepherd dog was reunited with his owner at the end of a 100 mile walk from Birmingham to Derby. (Daily Telegraph 11.4.94)

More than 200 fish, including brown trout and salmon, were rescued by emergency teams after a river was polluted by 20,000 gallons of cow slurry. (Daily Telegraph 11.4.94)

A former employee of McDonalds Circus was fined £500 for his part in hospitalising 2 anti-circus campaigners. (Turning Point Apr-Jun 94)

A huntmaster who suffered a stroke after trying to stop his hounds attacking deer on an earl's estate claimed yesterday that he was sacked in a hard-hearted manner. (Daily Telegraph 12.4.94)

A Belgian animal rights group have had a race, in which horses pull carts through the streets, temporarily banned. (Turning Point Apr-Jun 94)

A paper at the 38th International Conference on Meat Science and Technology showed that almost a third of the population consider they are reducing meat consumption. (Turning Point Apr-Jun 94)

Calvin Klein have terminated their fur business. (Animal Times Apr-May 94)

Broccoli, cauliflower, brussels sprouts and cabbage may help to prevent or slow growth of cancer. (Daily Telegraph 13.4.94)

The Olympic Committee did not release doves this time, thanks to pressure from animal groups. (Animal Times Apr-May 94)

Due to public outrage, US Military experiments on Rhesus monkeys due to have their blood literally boiled, have been cancelled. (Animal Times Apr-May 94)

A hunter was killed when he touched a 11,000 volt power line whilst collecting decoy birds. (Turning Point Apr-Jun 94)

SAS patrols guarding the nests of Scotland's osprey population have prevented any eggs being stolen for the first time in years. (Daily Telegraph 28.4.94)

Horse butchers accused Brigitte Bardot of ruining their livelihood after a television appeal led to the French cutting their eating of horsemeat by a third. (Daily Telegraph 28.4.94)

The European Parliament voted down proposals by the Council of European Environment Ministers to extend the French bird hunting season by 20 days, so saving thousands of migrating birds from slaughter. (MEP 26.4.94)

Pakistan's government has responded to public concern by ordering the enforcement of anti-bear baiting laws. (Turning Point Apr-Jun 94)

Six cats condemned to death under the will of an 87 year old woman who left instructions that they should be destroyed if she died before them have been rescued by the ALF. Mr. Robin Webb, ALF Press Officer, said the raid had been carried out after all legal means to obtain a stay of execution had failed. He said that the six cats were all now in good, permanent, loving homes. (Daily Telegraph 3.5.94)

A diet rich in soya may reduce the risk of developing hormone-related cancers of the prostate and breast. (Independent 10.5.94)

3 Peregrine Falcon eggs were saved from the demolition of their factory nest site and safely removed to a safe site. (Today 9.5.94)

Makers of Dr. Marten boots are hoping to get a foot in the veggie market by making footwear without leather. (Today 23.5.94)

The Festival of Food and Farming which was expected to attract nearly one million visitors to Hyde Park next May has been cancelled because no main sponsor could be found. (Daily Telegraph 17.5.94)

National Dormouse Week was hailed a great success after dormice were found at 263 sites across 21 counties. (Teletext 21.5.94)

In response to PETA's anti-vivisection campaign, Gillette banned animal tests for its skin care products company Jafra, and stopped all in-house animal tests while continuing to hire out laboratories. (Animal Times Jun-Jul 94)

The Prime Minister is expected to announce today that Britain has joined a global convention on the protection of wild life which will transform international trade in drugs and rainforest products. (Daily Telegraph 3.6.94)

Brigitte Bardot, the actress turned animal rights campaigner, appealed to President Mubarak to have Egypt's pets sterilised. (Daily Telegraph 1.6.94)

The wild otter is returning to Britain. 10 years after being driven to virtual extinction, the otter has returned to many of its old habitats, including the upper reaches of the Thames. (Evening Standard 7.6.94)

Taiwan is having talks with Vietnam and Hong Kong in an attempt to stop its nationals from eating bear paws and tiger penises as 'health foods' when they travel abroad. (Daily Telegraph 10.6.94)

Animal welfare groups claimed a victory last night after Gillian Shephard, the Minister of Agriculture, joined Germany and 3 smaller European Union nations in blocking proposed new controls on the transport of farm animals. (Independent 4.6.94)

A taxidermist was yesterday found guilty of 169 breaches of the Wildlife and Countryside Act. (Times 29.6.94)

America's most popular woman designer has dropped fur. (Animal Times Jun 94)

Swiss Air and Air Canada announced they will no longer serve liver pate on any flights. (Animal Times Jun 94)

New Government restrictions to prevent sheep and cattle damaging the countryside will undermine the competitive position of the British Livestock Industry. (Daily Telegraph 15.6.94)

People who do not eat meat are 40% less likely than others to die of cancer, researchers have found. Strong evidence that a vegetarian diet does protect against all types of cancer emerged from a 12 year British study of more than 11,000 adults. (Independent 24.6.94)

The traditional British breakfast of bacon and eggs is in terminal decline, says a survey of eating habits. Only 6% of all breakfasts now comprise bacon and eggs, while cereals and fruit are becoming increasingly popular. (Daily Telegraph 25.6.94)

A student from the University of Oklahoma has developed a method of measuring toxicity without using living animals. (Animal Times Jun 94)

Soldiers with the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards have turned a corner of Catterick Army Camp in North Yorkshire into a wildlife haven. The 28 acre site has been put off-limits to all ranks after being declared a protected conservation area by the M.O.D. (Daily Telegraph 27.6.94)

The beef industry received a severe blow last night when the Government admitted for the first time that calves under 6 months can be infected with mad cow disease.... The industry feared that live calf exports would be badly hit. (Daily Telegraph 1.7.94)

Two falconers, who kept endangered wild birds of prey claiming they had bred them in captivity, were caught out by a DNA genetic finger-printing test which proved that the birds could not have been bred from the claimed parents. They were fined over £1,000 each. (Times 6.7.94)

An angler will have to undergo plastic surgery after being attacked by a stingray while fishing on a Welsh beach. (Times 15.7.94)

Anglers are to be permanently banned from digging for worms in mudflats inhabited by wild birds in the Budle Bay section of the Lindisfarne National Nature Reserve. (Times 15.7.94)

The Department of Transport has spent £225,000 on building 22 badger tunnels under the final 17 mile section of the M1-A1 link road in the Midlands. (Times 19.7.94)

A 93lb sea turtle, which was nearly blind when it was picked up off the Virginia coast, has a fighting chance of returning home after cataract surgery at National Aquarium. (Times 19.7.94)

Water companies have been authorised to spend £533m on cleaning up some of Britain's dirtiest rivers by the end of the century. (Daily Telegraph 7.7.94)

A man who soaked a dog in petrol and left it to burn to death was jailed for 4 years at the Old Bailey. (Daily Telegraph 7.7.94)

From next year, orphan lambs with unhealed navels (under about 7 days old) will no longer suffer the trauma of the market place where they can often succumb to the harsh conditions. (Agscene Spring 94)

Plans to demolish a steelyard at Romsey, Hants. were halted when barn owls were found nesting in a crane. (Daily Telegraph 11.7.94)

Further restrictions on the export of British beef are to be tabled by the European Commission. (Daily Telegraph 15.7.94)

Three Greenpeace activists, including 2 Britons, detained in Egersund, Norway, in a protest over whale hunting have been released after a day in jail. (Daily Telegraph 13.7.94)

Many sheep farmers face ruin because they cannot secure enough production quotas from the EC to run their flocks at a profit. (Daily Telegraph 13.7.94)

Battersea Dogs' Home is to be redeveloped as a £4.5m 'luxury hotel' for the strays by mid 1996. It will feature heated bed spaces, a new courtyard and a visitor reception centre. (Daily Telegraph 20.7.94)

The shy and secretive bittern, which is almost extinct in Britain, may make a come-back at the 300 acre Malltraeth Marsh on Anglesea, just purchased by the RSPB. (Daily Telegraph 26.7.94)

The Harvard School of Public Health has issued a study showing that men who reduce their meat consumption lower the risk of developing prostate cancer. (Meat Trades Journal 28.10.93)

About 1,500 Jackass penguins rescued after being trapped in an oil slick off South Africa's coast have been returned to the wild. Several thousand more have been cleaned and will be returned to their territory over the next few weeks. (Daily Telegraph 27.7.94)

Kuala Lumpur, Indonesia and Malaysia will set up the world's largest reserve, 2.4m acres of Borneo, to protect both tropical trees and animals. (Times 29.7.94)

Brittany Ferries will halt exports of live animals for slaughter on its six routes to France and Spain from August. The move follows a similar announcement from P&O. (Today 13.8.94)

ARKANGEL MAGAZINE
BCM 9240
LONDON WC1N 3XX

ARK ANGEL

FOR ANIMAL LIBERATION

ISSUE NUMBER 13 • £1.80

Arkangel Editorial

The Animal Liberation Movement is still in its infancy but, against all the odds, continues to save animals from abuse, horror and murder.

For every single animal saved, a success has been achieved, and for every animal abuse establishment closed down, whether it be a fur shop, butchers or lab, an overwhelming sense of success has been realised. The Animal Liberation Movement is here to stay and will continue to build upon these successes.

Animal abuse, most of it legalised by immoral and corrupt governments, is continuing to be attacked by a wide-ranging movement consisting of local animal rights groups, national organisations, rescue groups and hard-hitting groups such as the Animal Liberation Front, the Animal Rights Militia and the Justice Department.

The animal exports protests have brought a largely fragmented movement together with ordinary members of the public at a time when the eating of animal flesh and the consumption of dairy products is in decline. The Vegan Society has been inundated with requests for information, and veganism itself is no longer seen as the lifestyle of the weird few.

Arkangel magazine plays a central role in reporting successes achieved by our strong and committed movement. Our role is to report, not to pass judgement, and to inspire a movement which can only go from strength to strength. We must win the hearts and minds of those who choose to ignore the holocaust sweeping through the animal world, and we must teach by example those still unaware.

Those who choose to ignore the horrors of animal abuse in favour of financial gain or status will no doubt continue to be targeted by direct action until they can no longer wreak havoc upon defenceless animals. Animal Liberation is being achieved on a day-to-day basis and on an international level. With the power of compassion and a strength of purpose we can secure a safe future for animals everywhere.

Remember, Animal Liberation is an achievable reality, not an impossible dream.

On the 3rd of October 1994, the London Anti-Fur Campaign began picketing 'Noble Furs of Regent Street' every day the shop was open. Harassment and intimidation from the police, the Noble brothers and their cronies started straight away. It wasn't difficult to see what side the majority of the police were on (surprise, surprise) as they sat inside the fur shop smoking, drinking coffee and generally having a good time with the charming Noble brothers.

The police enjoyed their power trip immensely, threatening to arrest protesters for the most ludicrous things and changing their own rules when they felt like it. For example, looking at fur-wearers or even the police were deemed arrestable offences.

The Nobles had obviously never taken any lessons on shop decor or window dressing; the displays looked as if they were still the originals from 1949 when the business was started.

The "Close Down Noble Furs" Campaign

by Sophie H

Early on in the campaign, details of the Nobles' financial situation were obtained from Companies House, which showed a disastrous looking decline in sales and a rapidly diminishing bank balance. These documents also gave names and addresses of the company directors and secretaries, and periodic home visits were paid to let them know what we thought of their business.

The protesters retained their good humour throughout, helped by great support from the public. The final picket, by which time rumours that the shop was closing were rife, was on the 28th January 1995. The following day, a Sunday, an LAFC supporter filmed the shop being cleared of all fittings.

However, the Nobles have not yet been put out of business completely. They have retreated to the glamorous setting of an alley near their old shop. This is mainly a repair business where they are unlikely to attract passing trade. LAFC is now picketing another two of London's remaining fur shops, one is rumoured to be closing, the other is for sale.

Local Group Reports

ANIMAL RIGHTS CAMBRIDGE

74 Sturton Street, Cambridge CB1 2QA

Animal Rights Cambridge has been actively supporting the recent protests against the live export trade and have been demonstrating in Harwick and Kings Lynn. Last summer, they were at Portsmouth and at the vigil at Dover where they took part in a 24 hour fast to show solidarity with the animals. They collected more than 500 signatures from the people of Cambridge who said that they would not travel on any ferry taking live animals. They have also been campaigning at the Huntingdon Research Centre camp and have done various farm inspections locally and they have protested at Linton Zoo.

They are also campaigning against the makers of Premarin, a hormone replacement drug which is taken cruelly from the urine of pregnant mares. They recently had a slot on Cambridge Community radio. The group has started collecting signatures to send to the Manitoban Government and Wyeth-Ayerst in Philadelphia.

Animal Rights Cambridge meets at 8.00 pm on the fourth Tuesday of every month at The Bath House, Gwydir Street, Cambridge.

ANIMAL RIGHTS CHESTERFIELD

c/o M.A.R.G, PO Box 39, Mansfield

Animal Rights Chesterfield have produced a leaflet asking people to think carefully about the expense and work involved in keeping a pet. They advise people to obtain pets from sanctuaries and not from pet shops which only encourages the breeding of animals. They also inform people of the cruelty involved in bringing exotic animals such as monkeys and wild birds into this country. Every year millions of these animals are brought into this country thus endangering wild populations. The capture and transport involves terrible cruelty and suffering and thousands die. For a copy of the leaflet, please write to the above address.

ANTI-SHAMROCK CAMPAIGN

PO Box 307, Ship Street, Brighton, East Sussex

A 30 minute video has been produced featuring monkey trapping in the wild, scenes from inside Shamrock Farm and footage of the campaign. It is available for £6 including postage and packing. (See Campaigns Update)

ASHFORD ANIMAL RIGHTS CAMPAIGN

PO Box 33, Ashford, Kent TN24 8ZZ

The Ashford Animal Rights Campaign is a new venture which has been established to campaign against a wide range of animal cruelty and exploitation, in and around Ashford and throughout Kent.

They are planning to hold photographic inspections of hunting, angling, trapping, abattoirs, intensive farms and laboratories. They hope to be able to provide photographic materials for the animal rights movement for newsletters, leaflets, etc and would like to hear from anyone who could provide them with a camera, film, video recording equipment, etc. They also plan to hold regular high street stalls to supply free information to the public about the abuse of animals and hope to provide a support network for all local vegetarians and vegans. Donations for campaigning welcome.

AVON VEGANS

c/o Karma Cottage, 3 The Rock, Brislington, Bristol BS4 4PU

Avon Vegans has been set up as part of the South West Region Vegetarian Coalition initiative. The primary aim of Avon Vegans is to unite and socially interact with vegans throughout Avon. The group will also look at campaigning if members wish to do so. Please write to the above address, enclosing an SAE for more information and details of how to join.

BANGOR ANIMAL RIGHTS (BAR)

c/o The Greenhouse, 1 Trevelyan Terrace, Bangor, Gwynedd, North Wales

BAR is a newly formed group who would like to hear from anyone in the area interested in animal rights. For details of meetings, etc, please write to the address above. They would also like to hear from other groups in Wales and North West England with a view to supporting each other's actions.

BARNET ANIMAL RIGHTS GROUP

PO Box 76, Barnet, Herts EN4 9AW

BARG primarily covers the Barnet and Finchley areas.

They hold regular meetings on the first Wednesday of the month at 8.00 pm at the Quaker Meeting House, 58 Alexandra Grove, West Finchley, London N12, usually with a video presentation or discussion, and the occasional guest speaker. In March, they held a special video presentation on vegan nutrition. Regular leafleting sessions are held on a Saturday morning in Barnet or Finchley. New supporters are always welcome.

BELFAST ANIMAL RIGHTS
PO Box 148, Belfast BT1 2LZ
(0232) 314076

Belfast Animal Rights are at present involved in a campaign to try to stop live exports from Belfast International Airport at Aldergrove where calves and pigs are currently being flown abroad on Balkan-Air Airlines.

The group held a street collection in November and there were also collections in Lisburn and Belfast in December for the Bright Eyes Animal Sanctuary. Belfast Animal Rights produces a very informative newsletter called Ermintrude.

B.H.S.A.
c/o PO Box 355,
Basingstoke

Past activities have included letters of protests to holiday companies which promote hunt meets. For details of current events, please contact above address.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY
ANIMAL RIGHTS
GROUP

This group is pleased to announce growing support and increased activity over the last year.

CAT CONCERN (and other Animals)
PO BOX 234, Hounslow TW3 2QG

In the last year over 200 animals have been rescued, homed, treated for illness and/or neutered and spayed. 17 homes act as foster homes for rescues. The group continues to accept gifts of tins and biscuits from the public. Strict checks are carried out by volunteers before an animal is rehomed with a new owner. For further details, please contact the above address.

C H SABS / LAKELAND ANIMAL AID
PO Box 83, Carlisle, Cumbria

C H Sabs hold regular stalls and have been collecting signatures for the National Anti-Hunt Petition. Lakeland Animal Aid have held demos against Boots and circuses and the group are continuing to hold demos against McDonalds. Local group stalls are proving to be successful.

CLAW
Societies Centre, 60 The Pleasance, Edinburgh

This is an animal rights group at Edinburgh University which wants to run a campaign to publicise what really goes on in the research laboratories at the university. They would like to hear from anyone who has any information of research being carried out at the university and would also like to receive advice on how to tackle a campaign of this sort. Please write to them at the above address.

CLOSE DOWN LEYDEN STREET
CHICKEN SLAUGHTERHOUSE
(East London)

The campaign against Leyden Street chicken slaughterhouse continues - battery hens are kept there in cramped conditions awaiting a cruel end. A picket is held outside Leyden Street Slaughterhouse on the first and third Sunday of every month. They meet at Liverpool Street Underground / British Mainline station at the main entrance between 10.45 and 11.00am. Supporters welcome.

CVS
25 Sunbridge Road,
Bradford, Yorkshire

A march and rally was held last November by CVS against the last Arctic Fox farm in Britain operating at Scholemoor in Bradford. In the UK, no licence is required to farm foxes and anyone can legally slaughter the animals without qualifications or experience. The march set off from Brackenhill Park and a rally took place at Bradford University with speakers from both local and national organisations. (See article elsewhere in this issue.)

DARTMOOR BADGERS PROTECTION
LEAGUE (DBPL)
Riverside Cottage, Poundsgate, Newton Abbot,
Devon TQ13 7NV
0626 773744

The Dartmoor Badgers Protection League is asking people to write to their MP's calling for a complete halt to badger killing by the Ministry of Agriculture. They also recently protested against South West Water's plans to construct an access road through woods in Dartmouth which would destroy some badger setts and put others in peril. This project was postponed by South West Water, but unfortunately South Hams District Council has now stepped in and they are keen to build a massive road cutting immediately above the badger setts, depositing hundreds of tons of earth on the setts themselves. They are asking people to write letters of objection to the Chief Planning Officer at Devon County Council.

DBPL urgently needs volunteer badger guards to patrol badger setts on South Eastern Dartmoor and at Dartmouth.

Annual subscriptions £2, members receive a quarterly newsletter.

DARTMOOR LIVESTOCK PROTECTION SOCIETY (DLPS)

The Old Mill, Charlecombe, Combeinteignhead, Newton Abbot, Devon TQ12 4RE

This organisation was formed to help ponies, sheep and cattle in distress on Dartmoor and in the markets where they are sold. They send help to animals injured in road traffic accidents. It is hoped that now the Blackdown fencing is complete that there will be a reduction in the number of these accidents. DLPS also runs a campaign to try to stop people dumping their rubbish on the moor as animals can get caught up in wire or cut themselves on glass. For further details please write to the above address.

DEVON VEGANS

(Campaigns Unit)

c/o The Old Forge, Throwleigh EX20 2HS

This group has now finished as the organiser has moved to Rugby. The group, despite being a very small one, managed to run some successful campaigns. Four members of DV succeeded in preventing the Plymouth City Council putting ferrets down rabbit warrens to control rabbit populations. DV's anti-wool leaflet was much in demand by CALF and CIWF. Their anti-plastic ring campaign, launched by two people, led to a number of national organisations joining the campaign and some supermarkets subsequently sold cans bound in card rather than plastic. Also the DV's Fish Freedom Campaign led to a letter being read out on the BBC's Points of View programme.

FIGHT AGAINST ANIMAL CRUELTY IN EUROPE (FAACE)

*29 Shakespeare Street, Southport PR8 5AB
Tel: 0704 535922 Fax: 0704 546384*

This group incorporates the ABA - Anti-Bullfighting Agency and campaigns against bloodsports in Europe such as Bullfighting which is subsidised by the EU. They also campaign against Blood Fiestas which involve the torture of many cattle, goats, pigs, donkeys, dogs, cats and birds during public holidays in Spain. They ask people to write to their MP's to campaign against barbaric practices abroad. FAACE has a large library of video footage and stills, and campaigns by lobbying to bring pressure to bear on the Spanish government through the European Parliament, embassies, churches, etc. Donations welcome.

FRIENDS OF ANIMALS (FAUNA) PO Box 156, Cardiff, South Wales CF5 5YD

FAUNA is campaigning to make Cardiff City Council ban angling on the Roath Park lake, where many birds have become entangled in discarded and broken fishing line. Previous successful campaigns have included a plan to introduce ostrich farming in Penmark being rejected by councillors, who refused planning permission after reading FAUNA's detailed letters on the cruelty involved.

FRIENDS OF THE ANIMALS c/o 70 High Street, Leicester LE1 5YP

Stalls are held three times a week in Leicester city centre. The group raises public awareness on veganism. Local demos against Boots, McDonalds and butchers are organised. A foster home has been set up for homeless dogs, cats, mice, etc. It neuters and spays animals and organises home checks. The group is run by vegans but anyone is welcome to assist them in their work.

HERTFORDSHIRE ANIMAL RIGHTS CAMPAIGN

*PO Box 66, Broxbourne,
Herts. EN10 6LU*

HARC is run by the same people involved in the National Anti-Hunt Petition which now has over a quarter of a million signatures, and hunt bans have been secured in Somerset, Hampshire and Leicestershire.

HUNTINGDON ANIMALS RIGHTS PO Box 83, Huntingdon, Cambs. PE18 9HD

This is a new animal rights group and if anyone is interested, please contact the above address.

I.O.W. ANIMAL PRESERVATION AND ACTION GROUP

*Little Spinney, Solent Road, Cranmore, Yarmouth,
Isle of Wight PO41 0XY*

This group produces Preserve, an informative bulletin. For further details contact the above address.

LONDON ANIMAL ACTION

*5 Caledonian Road, Kings Cross, London N1 9DX
0171 837 7557*

London Animal Action was formed in September 1994 as an amalgamation of three London-wide organisations:

London Boots Action Group, London Animal Rights Coalition, and London Anti-Fur Campaign. Activists within them thought it was unnecessary to have three largely overlapping groups and instead decided to build a united front to combat all animal abuse.

The first campaign we launched was called Fur Free London, an attempt to rid the city of the last few remaining fur shops by picketing them until they close. As our first target we chose Noble Furs in Regent Street, one of the busiest shopping areas. This shop had been picketed on and off for over two years and was known to be in financial trouble. We are pleased to say the campaign succeeded as the shop closed down at the end of January after four months of daily demonstrations. We are now going on to picket other fur shops and anyone wishing to get involved should ring the hotline number below.

The weekly pickets of Boots the Chemist in Camden Town, North London, initiated by LBAG in January 1992 are continuing. Although Boots have said they are selling their prescription drugs division to BASF, the deal has not gone through yet so we still see them as a legitimate target. These demos take place every Sunday at 173 Camden High Street, NW1 from 2.30 - 5.00 pm.

LAA has been involved in other campaigns too. In November 1994 we picketed the Smithfield Livestock Show at Earls Court (this demo was organised throughout the 1980's by the Vegetarian Society and attracted large numbers but was inexplicably dropped a couple of years ago), and the Research Defence Society's AGM.

Since the beginning of the year we have been participating in the large number of live export demos throughout the country, set up a Live Exports Hotline to let people know what's happening, and organised transport from the London area.

We now have our own office which we share with London Greenpeace. We meet on the second Tuesday of every month at 7.30 pm at the Community Centre, 1a Rosebery Avenue, London EC1. These meetings are where we plan our campaigns and are open to anyone who shares our aims. Contact: London Animal Action, 5 Caledonian Road, Kings Cross, N1 1DX. Tel: 0171 837 7557. Fur Free London Hotline: 0171 281 8815, Live Exports Hotline 0181 205 0456.

LONDON VEGANS

7 Deansbrook Road, Edgware, Middx HA8 9BE

London Vegans organise various socials, catering and information stalls throughout the London area. Regular meetings are held on the last Wednesday of every month (except December) at the Millman Street Community Rooms, WC1. London Vegans produce a brilliant mailout list on the activities taking place up and down the country.

MIDLANDS ANIMAL RIGHTS COALITION (M.A.R.C.)

PO Box 43, Dudley, West Midlands DY3 3DL

M.A.R.C. is growing as a true coalition and is finding it very productive working with other groups. They have recently been joined by Wolverhampton Hunt Sabs, the Birmingham Animal Rights Campaigns Group, Dudley Animal Concern, Walsall Animal Rights and Wyre Forest Animal Concern. Two local universities have AR/Green groups which have expressed an interest in joining. They are also launching a new leaflet on the exotic meat trade which includes ostrich and bison meat.

NEWCASTLE ANIMAL RIGHTS COALITION

PO Box 1JY, Newcastle upon Tyne, NE99 1JY

Please write to the above address for further information.

NORTH WEST CAMPAIGN AGAINST BLOOD SPORTS

PO Box 292, Manchester M60 4DJ

The group organised a protest against The Waterloo Cup, the premier event in the Hare Coursing calendar, in February. This cruel event is normally attended by 2,000 people who go along to watch greyhounds coursing and ripping apart hares. The hare is currently on the threatened list and the group would like to see this kind of event banned. Please write for details of future campaigns.

NORTH WEST VEGGIES CATERING

PO Box 38, Manchester M60 1NX
(061 953 4039)

North West Veggies work along the same line as the original Veggies, providing great food at assorted Animal Rights and Green events. They would be happy to hear from anyone planning an event either in the North West, or a larger event in the North of England.

PRESTON ACTION FOR ANIMALS

PO Box 385, Ashton, Preston PR2

If anyone in the Preston area is interested in the group's activities, please contact them at the above address.

THE REPTILE PROTECTION TRUST
College Gates, 2 Deansway, Worcester WR1 2JD
0483 417550

The Reptile Protection Trust is seeking to ban the trade in pet turtles and terrapins. They would also like to see an end to the rattlesnake roundups which are annual festivities taking place in the southern states of the USA, in particular, Texas and Oklahoma. The rattlesnakes are taken from the wild by cruel methods and are then used in barbaric entertainments for the public.

The RPT lobbies relevant authorities internationally and engages in public education. To receive a copy of the fact sheet and booklet 'Reptiles: Misunderstood, Mistreated and Mass-Marketed', please send a cheque for £2.30 to the above address.

SHEFFIELD NEUTERING AND SPAYING SCHEME

193 Firth Park Road, Sheffield S5 6WU
0742 420434

This is a new group in the Sheffield area aiming to promote neutering and spaying through education and also to help people on low incomes or state benefits with the cost of getting their animals neutered/spayed. They also undertake some rescue work. They raise funds by doing car boot sales, and any saleable goods or donations are always welcome.

SOLIHULL ANIMAL AID

22 Warren Drive, Dorridge, Solihull,
West Midlands B93 8JY
0564 776984

Solihull Animal Aid organised a mass demonstration at Coventry (Baginton) Airport on 11th February to protest against live exports. The aim was to draw attention to Phoenix Aviation who have been flying week-old calves from the airport to France and Holland nearly every day. One thousand people from all over the country attended the demonstration.

Please write to the above address for further details.

SOUTH EAST ANIMAL RIGHTS COALITION (SEARC)

19a Amherst Road, Bexhill-on-Sea, East Sussex
TN40 1QH

An informative newsletter, The National Link, is available containing all the latest news. For more information, please write to SEARC.

SOUTHEND ANIMAL AID
29 Cambridge Road, Southend-on-Sea,
Essex SS1 1ET

Southend Animal Aid again organised the highly successful Earth First Exhibition in November. The aims of the exhibition were to raise public awareness of environmental and animal protection issues and to promote the existence of local and national groups in the eyes of the public and to encourage them to take a more active role. There were guest speakers at the event and videos were shown.

Please write for further details.

SOUTH LONDON ANIMAL ACTION (SLAA)

PO Box 594, London SW9 8QG

This group used to be known as South London Animal Aid but has recently changed its name to avoid confusion with the Animal Aid organisation. SLAA members took part in leafleting sessions in December at London Bridge and Victoria Stations for a cruelty-free Xmas. In January, members attended the demos against live exports at Shoreham harbour and at Brightlingsea.

Other campaigns include an ongoing campaign against Battersea Park Zoo and a recent speaker at SLAA was Annette Andre from Zoo Check.

SLAA runs a catering service called the Green Marmoset Catering Company, for which volunteers are always welcome. Donations raised through the catering service were given to several animal welfare groups in 1994. Volunteers are also needed to help with the Deptford Cat Sanctuary - please write to SLAA for details.

SLAA meets regularly on the first Thursday of every month at 7.30 pm, at the Voltaire Room, Clapham Baths, 157 Clapham Manor Street, London SW4.

SOUTH WEST REGION VEGETARIAN COALITION

c/o Devon Vegans, The Old Forge, Throwleigh,
Devon EX20 2HS

This coalition is hoping to be able to unite vegetarian/vegan groups and contacts throughout the South West of England. They want to help, support and motivate vegetarians to get together, exchange campaign information and offer each other advice. The coalition uses the term vegetarian in the loosest form possible, as no groups will be excluded.

STEVENAGE ANIMAL RIGHTS (SAR)

Box 6, Bowes Lyon House, St George's Way,
Stevenage, Herts SG1 1XY

Stevenage Animal Rights produce a very informative newsletter. Previous editions have included a feature on Glaxo's use of primates. SAR hold monthly demonstrations outside Glaxo in Stevenage. They would welcome volunteers for street stalls. Membership costs £4.50 (or a donation if you can't afford the fee) and includes the bi-monthly newsletter. They also have a range of T-shirts and badges available. A Cruelty Free Guide to cosmetics, household products and restaurants is also available.

SURREY BADGER PROTECTION SOCIETY 0883 344662

This registered charity is affiliated to the National Federation of Badger Groups. A regular newsletter published by the SBPS is available to members.

SUTTON ANIMAL ACTION 33 Lower Road, Sutton, Surrey SM1 4QJ 0181 241 8674

Sutton Animal Action is run by active animal rights campaigners who seek to draw public awareness towards all aspects of cruelty in the area. They divide any profits from their stalls between local animal sanctuaries. Their main aim is to involve more people in sabbing and demonstrations.

TAUNTON ANIMAL RIGHTS PO Box 243, Taunton

T.A.R. also includes hunt sab groups. Regular meetings and town centre stalls are held. Recent demos include protests against Boots, McDonalds and Bristol Zoo. T.A.R. also joined up with HARC against hunting on council land and much public support has been gained.

WALSALL ANIMAL RIGHTS 0922 414885

Previous action has included a picket at the Home Office to protest against the trespass law against hunt sabs. Please phone for details of current activities.

WEST KENT HUNT SABS TWK PO Box 263, Maidstone, Kent

The latest news is that Breach have just opened a shop in Maidstone. Their aim is to open a vegan cafe/bookshop upstairs, so any vegan food organisations are asked to contact Breach at the above address.

Four sabs were recently arrested by Maidstone Police for aggravated trespass.

For further details, please write to the above address.

WINCHESTER ANIMAL CONCERN 6 South Street, Ropley, Alresford, Hants

Previous activities have involved a march through the Winnal Industrial Estate in Winchester to the Webbs poultry slaughter and processing plant, which received good newspaper coverage. For details of latest events, please write to above address.

UNCAGED 14 Ridgeway Road, Sheffield S12 2SS

Uncaged are currently holding a campaign asking people to boycott Proctor and Gamble in a bid to stop the testing their products on animals - 50,000 animals die at the hands of Proctor and Gamble in America every year. Leaflets about this campaign listing which products to avoid are available at £5.00 per set of 100, as are postcards. A consumer guide on which companies do or do not test on animals is available for 50p.

YAA
Box 1760, Yeovil,
Somerset BA21 5PN
Tel: 0935 25195 &
0935 410535
Fax/Phone: 0722 327146

YAA are currently campaigning against Porton Down where animals are being experimented on with toxic gases resulting in death and serious illness. A £5 million extension has been granted which will add new laboratories and a new incinerating unit.

YAA will be holding a vigil camp from Sunday 16th April 1995, alongside the A30 London to Salisbury Road, ending with a protest march, leading off at 1400 hours, and presentation of petitions to the Porton Down Camp Senior Officer on Saturday 22nd April 1995.

YAA have produced a leaflet highlighting the charities, including the Leukaemia Research Fund, which fund animal-based research. Factsheets are available at a cost of £1 each.

Arkangel Magazine wants to make everyone aware of the ever-growing number of successes achieved by our movement, so please write in with details of what your group has been up to recently - campaigns, demos, stalls, petitions, or whatever!

Sanctuaries

CHIN UP SANCTUARY

*Gwernalt Bungalow, Llanarmon, Chwilog,
Pwllheli, Gwynedd LL53 6SW
0766 810799 (8-10pm only)*

Lee Campbell founded Chin Up in 1991 after becoming aware of the plight of intensively farmed chinchillas bred in wretched conditions for the fur and pet trades. The sanctuary takes in sick, abused or unwanted chinchillas and legally rescued animals from these fur farms. Donations are desperately needed for feeding, housing and vet care for the many creatures in their keeping, and also to campaign against polygamous breeding of chinchillas and buying from pet shops. Free advice on chinchilla care is available plus a free fact sheet (S.A.E. appreciated).

TY AGORED ANIMAL SANCTUARY

*Cribyn, Lampeter, Dyfed, Wales SA48 7NQ
0570 470589*

Ty Agored Animal Sanctuary was founded in the early 1970's, and while growing in size and repute, its aims remain the same. These are: to rescue animals in need or in distress, to advocate the neutering and spaying of pet dogs and cats, and to re-home animals whenever possible. As Ty Agored does not destroy animals, except for the terminally ill or injured, there are always many animals needing good homes. No financial help is given from public funds and the sanctuary, a registered charity, depends on donations from its well-wishers, on fund-raising events, market stalls and the income from its charity shops. All these are organised and run by the sanctuary's founder, Barbara Packham, and her voluntary helpers who, with a small but efficient kennel-staff, do their best to ensure that countless animals are given a second chance.

Illustration by Guy Troughton (from the book "Hedgehogs" by Pat Morris)

THE PHYLLIS HARVEY HORSE AND DONKEY TRUST

*"Tethers End", The Ring Road, Weetwood,
Leeds 16 (676122)*

Heidi, a starved young pony; Bimbo and Jack Frost, donkeys saved from a slaughterer; Jeremiah, an abandoned foal; and Dante, a Shetland colt bought from a butcher, are just a few of the old, unwanted, mistreated and abandoned animals this charity gives refuge to. Although primarily a rescue centre for horses and donkeys, many other creatures are also given much needed help. The Trust never resorts to euthanasia unless advised to do so by their veterinary surgeons if they feel the quality of life has gone. All the rescued animals welcome visitors and can be sponsored for £5 each. Due to the high cost of feeding, stabling and veterinary treatment, finances are continually at a very low ebb, and the centre relies on donations and on holding Open Days, details of which can be obtained from the above address.

THE CAT AND RABBIT RESCUE CENTRE

*Holborow Lodge, Chalder Lane, Sidlesham,
Chichester, West Sussex PO20 7RJ
0243 641409*

"Giving the Living a Chance at Life" is the worthy motto of this charity who take in and re-home cats and rabbits. They offer advice and help on all aspects of cat and rabbit care. For general sanctuary and cat problems, please ring Monique on the above telephone number. For advice on the rabbit side of their work please ring Donna on 0903 755909. Started in 1986 this registered charity also tries to educate the public on the necessity of neutering and spaying pets and the humane control of feral colonies of cats. Visits are by appointment only and the centre is always in need of saleable goods for much needed funds.

CREATURES WILDLIFE CARE TRUST

*11 Egham Crescent, North Cheam,
Surrey SM3 9AL : 081 395 8844*

'Creatures' is a wildlife rescue and rehabilitation centre which cares for sick, injured and orphaned wild animals and birds. Each year they look after hundreds of patients ranging from hedgehogs and foxes to blackbirds and owls. Once fully fit, the patients are released back into the wild, and those that cannot be released are found suitable alternative accommodation. No animal is ever turned away. One of the trust's objectives is to educate, and the founder, Kevin Ahronson, gives talks and slide-shows to all kinds of local groups. He also produces a regular wildlife column in the local newspaper. The trust wishes to expand with a new intensive care block which will house incubators, heated hospital cages and additional veterinary equipment. Long-term plans involve moving to a purpose-built hospital which will provide an opportunity to increase medical facilities and give additional housing for more casualties. Membership of Creatures Club is £12 for adults, £5 for children and OAP's, and family membership is £20 per year. Please write to the above address for details of volunteer work, membership, talks, or to make a donation.

CELIA HAMMOND ANIMAL TRUST

High Street, Wadhurst, East Sussex TN5 6AG
0892 783367 / 783820

The Celia Hammond Trust is the only charity whose main objective is the establishment of low-cost spay clinics for dogs and cats. CHAT has just completed the purchase of the country's first low-cost neuter clinic in Lewisham, South London, which it hopes to open within the next few months. Two and a half million stray cats and dogs struggle to survive in the streets. To combat this national scandal, CHAT will arrange for two full-time vets to neuter one hundred and fifty dogs and cats a week, with two more operating tables available when staffing increases. A bitch spay will cost £20-£25, a cat spay will be £10. Eventually, CHAT plan a nationwide service of eight clinics and are heartened by the success of a Vancouver spay clinic who, after five years, achieved an 88% reduction in the destruction of unwanted animals, and a 61% reduction in cruelty cases. This can be achieved in the UK if funding can be found.

CHAT have moved their sanctuary with 340 cats, kittens, rescued dogs, six goats, and numerous ex-battery hens to Brede in Sussex. They also operate a rescue service and recently saved sixteen cats and kittens from a demolished building. Literature is available from their Wadhurst address. Over one hundred permanent sanctuary residents can be adopted either individually or as a group.

THE HAVEN ANIMAL CENTRE S.O.S. FOAL AND EQUINE CENTRE

Seymour Farm, Curland, Taunton,
Somerset TA3 5SD
0823 481220

Although currently setting up the sanctuary for rescued ponies, this centre is also trying desperately to expose the horrific treatment of thousands of British native ponies who are exported, under barbaric and cruel conditions, to the slaughterhouses of France, Italy and Belgium. They are collecting film and video evidence to aid their objectives which are; to save as many ponies as possible from death and give them a life of ease at the sanctuary; to ensure that the current laws relating to the welfare and transport of ponies are upheld and offenders punished; and to fight for a change in the law that will end this evil trade forever. Funds are very desperately needed for this aim, as are volunteers to help run the sanctuary (manual or clerical), and fund-raisers. Annual membership of S.O.S. is £6.00 for adults, £2.50 for under-16's, £4.00 for concessions, and family membership is £15.00. For further information on petitions, newsletters, the campaign and/or donations, please call Julie or Sarah on 0823 481220, or write to the above address.

CEDARWOOD WILDLIFE CARE

Blissford Hill, Frogham, nr. Fordingbridge,
Hants. SP6 2HX
0425 657402

Dawn and Jerry Collinson devote their lives to helping and caring for injured animals at their Wildlife Care Centre at Frogham. Here, injured animals can be brought, nursed back to health by Dawn and Jerry, and released back into the wild. Over the years they have helped foxes, badgers, deer, rabbits, hedgehogs and countless birds. No animal is ever turned away, many having been shot, trapped or involved in car accidents. Once at the centre wounds can be healed, legs and wings mended and local vets are able to help with more serious problems. The centre is run as a non-profitmaking concern but financial support remains a problem, and they will continue their fine work as long as money is available.

PHOENIX ANIMAL RESCUE

P.O. Box 29, Biggin Hill, TN16 3XZ

It is the objective of Phoenix Animal Rescue to take in any abandoned, unwanted or abused animal - from guinea pigs to horses. They also hand-rear and rehabilitate wildlife such as fox cubs, squirrels, birds, etc. After regaining their health, homes are found for as many creatures as possible - always vetted and on a loan basis only. Animals which cannot be rehomed remain as permanent residents. These include cats, rabbits, guinea pigs, goats, donkeys, horses, pigs, ex-battery hens, ducks, geese, and many more.

Phoenix Animal Rescue are actively seeking permanent, safe accommodation for the animals in their care. They also urgently need sacks, tins of animal food, hay, straw, woodchips, cages, hutches, dishes, brushes, and various tools such as shovels and buckets. On the administration side, items such as new stamps, paper and envelopes are required.

Volunteers for fund-raising are urgently needed, as are saleable goods. Please ring Mike on 081 402 0705 or Andree on 081 291 6815 for details. Membership is £6 for adults, £3 for under-16's, and £10 for a family. A sponsorship scheme for the animals' keep is also available. P.A.R. is run entirely by volunteers and every penny of your donation, however small, goes towards upkeep and the funding of their rescue work.

WARNHAM ANIMAL SANCTUARY

Mayes Lane, Warnham, Sussex RH12 3SG
0403 268095

The small village of Warnham, near Horsham, has two claims to recognition; the first being that it is the birthplace of the vegetarian poet and campaigner Percy Bysshe Shelley, and the second is that it hosts the winner of the Dog World Rescue Competition at Crufts this year. Warnham Sanctuary was founded in 1979 by David Browne who some may remember as an actor in Z Cars and Dixon of Dock Green. Open to the public 364 days a year, visitors can see the cats, dogs and donkeys who are awaiting new homes.

Five thousand animals have been helped by the sanctuary so far, and no fit creature is ever put to sleep. Hundreds of unwanted pets arrive every year and are looked after by troubled and difficult young people, under the guidance of the sanctuary and various authorities, who are given the chance to love and be loved. With no office blocks, clerical staff, or huge wages to pay, all donations go to the running of the sanctuary.

THE CORNISH SEAL SANCTUARY Gweek, near Helston, Cornwall TR12 6UG (0326 22861)

The Cornish Seal Sanctuary, located in the tranquil upper reaches of the beautiful Helford river, is the largest Seal Sanctuary in Europe. As well as being a rescue centre for sick or abandoned grey seal pups, the sanctuary provides a rare chance to witness at close quarters the grace and agility of two of nature's most endearing sea mammals... the grey seal and the seal lion. At the Sanctuary as many as 30 seal pups are nursed back to health each year by a team of dedicated staff in a specially equipped hospital, before being finally returned in a fit and healthy state back to the wild. Those animals for whom their injuries are too severe or disabling, and would mean that they would be unlikely to survive in the wild, are offered a comfortable new home in our spacious outdoor pools.

The highlight of any visit to the Sanctuary is 'feeding time' which takes place up to six times each day. All of our resident seals and sea lions each have their own amusing techniques and tactics for trying to steal more than their fair share of fish.

New for 1994 is the spectacular underwater observatory 'A World Beneath the Waves' where visitors can watch the grace and agility, as well as the playful antics that these fascinating creatures demonstrate whilst swimming in their under water environment. In addition to seals and sea lions, the Sanctuary also provides a home for donkeys, goats, horses and sheep, all of which for a variety of reasons have found themselves without a home.

The Cornish Seal Sanctuary is open from 9am, 7 days a week (except Xmas day)

THE PINE RIDGE DOG SANCTUARY Priory Road, Ascot, Berkshire (0344 882689)

Rescue work began in 1958 when Bernard Cuff decided to save dogs due to be destroyed by the police. He extended his activities and acquired a 10 acre property to accommodate stray or unwanted dogs. Since then, 7,500 have been rescued and re-homed, with great care taken to ensure the dog's future is happy and secure. No dog is ever destroyed unless a Vet is satisfied that it can no longer enjoy life due to incurable illness or disease.

Dogs belonging to old age pensioners are cared for whilst the owners are unable to do so. Pine Ridge co-operates with anti-vivisection movements and offers help with Vets' fees to those who cannot afford these when a dog may consequently suffer or be killed. They are willing to contribute towards neutering and spaying to lessen the number of unwanted puppies being born. A shop doubling as an appeals office in Ascot High Street sells donated items to raise funds, and an Open Day takes place every year on the second Saturday in September. A newsletter is produced in July and December.

SOUTH NORWOOD ANIMAL RESCUE 7, Farnley Road, South Norwood, London SE25 6PA (081 653 7628)

The group would be very grateful to receive petrol coupons, stamps, cigarette cards, trading stamps, wool, ring pulls and small unwanted gifts to help raise money for feeding and vets bills. They produce a detailed and friendly newsletter describing the stories behind the many cats and dogs that find love and attention with Maureen and Colleen.

BOSWIDDLE BARN ANIMAL SANCTUARY

Boswiddle Barn, Boswiddle, Nr. Ladock, Truro,
Cornwall TR24 4NU (0872 510226)

This sanctuary is desperate for funds to support the 70 cats, dogs and Shire horses, turkeys and ducks who live there. It is possible to sponsor a Shire or you can become a friend of the Sanctuary for £4.

Pigeon Recovery

8 Vermont Road, Sutton,
Surrey SM1 3EQ
081 644 7349

We care for (and collect in the South London area) any sick, orphaned or injured pigeon. Any donation would be sincerely appreciated.

National Groups

ACTION AGAINST PUPPY FARMING

PO Box 2, Llandysul, Dyfed SA44 4EB

Dyfed is known for its puppy farming. The animals are bred only for profit therefore suffering, cruelty and neglect are involved. AAPF spreads the message not to buy puppies from a pet shop as they are usually bred in the appalling puppy farms. Donations welcome.

ACTION TO ABOLISH THE GRAND NATIONAL

PO Box 3152, London E12 5JW

AAGN campaigns to publicise the cruelty of the Grand National - highlighting the fact that 250 horses die on British racecourses every year and many others are seriously injured. Posters and leaflets are available.

ADVOCATES FOR ANIMALS

10, Queensferry Street, Edinburgh EH2 4PG

This group produces the Annual Pictorial Review, a colour booklet packed with information. AFA highlighted Glasgow University when they experimented on monkeys in head injury experiments. They finance and take part in special investigations and they campaign against all forms of animal abuse.

ALLIANCE FOR ANIMAL RIGHTS

4-5 Eustace Street, Dublin 2, Eire

Campaigns against all forms of animal cruelty. For further details, please write to the above address.

ANGLICAN SOCIETY FOR THE WELFARE OF ANIMALS

*St Augustines Vicarage, 117 Queens Gate,
London SW7 5LW*

Objectives of the society are to promote a more compassionate view towards animals in the Anglican Church. A bulletin is produced.

ANIMAL AID AND ADVICE

081 889 9714

Their main objective is to encourage responsible pet ownership. They reinforce the fact that neutering and spaying is essential to prevent unwanted litters. AAA also re-home abandoned and unwanted pets and run a fostering service.

ANIMAL AID SOCIETY

*The Old Chapel, Bradford Street, Tonbridge,
Kent TN9 1AW
0732 364546*

Animal Aid recently launched a secret investigation into the cruelty involved in the poultry industry and have published a report called 'Here's the Catch' which is available from the above address. They would welcome donations to help to fight the factory farming of poultry and also to launch investigations into other neglected areas of animal abuse.

Last December, they organised the Christmas Without Cruelty Fayre at Kensington Town Hall with over 40 stalls.

Animal Aid publishes a Journal for Action called 'Outrage'. Annual subscription is £10 waged, £6 unwaged, and £4 youth.

ANIMAL BIRTH CONTROL

*2 Festing Buildings, Highland Road,
Southsea PO4 9BZ
0705 736691*

ABC helps with the spaying and neutering of animals, and also with the costs of helping elderly people to keep their companion animals. Their main aim is to instigate an animals' charter giving animals the right to life. Due to an upsurge in animal cruelty, ABC now works with Animal Action which rescues and re-homes unwanted and abandoned animals.

ANIMAL CONCERN

*62 Old Dumbarton Road, Glasgow G3 8RE
041 334 6014*

Animal Concern incorporates the Scottish Anti-Vivisection Society. They publish a quarterly newsletter and run various campaigns including a farm animal campaign to ban all factory farming by the year 2000.

ANIMAL CRUELTY INVESTIGATION GROUP

c/o 83-87 Union Street, London SE1 1SG

This is a small group of specialist investigators who gather evidence of the cruelty involved in a range of animal welfare issues - bloodsports, vivisection, factory farming, etc. A twice-yearly news bulletin is produced.

ANIMAL LIBERATION BIKERS CLUB

*Box No 1135, Downs View Road, Hassocks,
West Sussex BN6 8AA*

The A.L.B.C. has been formed to encourage motorcyclists to take part in the fight against animal abuse. They give information on animal rights issues and local contacts. They are open to all bike and scooter enthusiasts. For further details, please send an SAE to the above address.

ANIMAL LIBERATION FRONT (PRESS OFFICE)

*BM 4400, London WC1N 3XX
Tel: 0954 230542 (H) or 0836 310763 (Mobile)*

The Press Office plays a vital role in the animal rights movement. It remains paramount as a means of providing TV, radio and newspaper coverage about why ALF actions take place. Speakers are available for meetings, etc. Merchandise is also available. Donations are always welcome to help run the office of a much needed and valuable animal rights service.

ANIMAL LIBERATION FRONT (SUPPORTERS GROUP)

BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX

Subscription to their quarterly newsletter is £24.00 a year. It provides information about current arrests and imprisonment of alleged animal rights activists. The SG raises funds, chiefly to help pay fines and help towards the travelling expenses of visiting relatives. Funds also go towards paying for books, cruelty-free toiletries, etc. A range of merchandise is available with a discount to any SG member.

ANIMAL LIBERATION INVESTIGATION UNIT

PO Box 38, Manchester M60 1FT

Animal abuse establishments are inspected, video footage taken and documents removed to build up files.

ANIMAL RESCUE

PO Box 233, Liverpool L69 7LF

Animal Rescue are running several different campaigns at the moment. One is a national campaign, launched in October, against Angora rabbit farms, and shops selling Angora products. Other recent campaigns have included a campaign to close the Pedigree Puppies Shop in Tarleton and a call for a national boycott of Blackpool to halt the exploitation of pythons being used by street photographers.

In January of this year, Animal Rescue wrote to all supermarket managing directors demanding a ban on the sale of lamb that is artificially produced with the aid of a synthetic hormone, melatonin. They are calling for a ban on intensively reared lamb and have asked the Wirral Euro MP to raise an early day motion in the House of Commons on the issue.

For further information, please write to the above address.

ANIMAL RIGHTS COALITION (ARC)

PO Box 1229, Clwyd, Wales LL16 5ZA

ARC encourages the coming together of all groups. A newsletter is provided, with a diary of events and current campaigns. ARC also sends out lists detailing addresses of current animal abuse establishments supplied by Arkangel Information.

ANTI-BULLFIGHTING COMMITTEE

PO Box 175, Liverpool, Merseyside L69 8DX

Liaises with Spanish A/R groups to persuade holidaymakers not to attend bullfights, and asks travel companies to publish a statement in their brochures discouraging people from attending bullfights. They held a demonstration last December outside the home of Frank Evans, the Manchester bullfighter.

ARKANGEL

BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX

Arkangel is a magazine which aims to provide information and support for the animal rights movement, to encourage unity, and to provide a forum for the exchange of news and views. Donations are always welcome. In order to keep Arkangel up-to-date, please would local and national groups continue to send in information about their current activities as these will be used in the next edition of the magazine.

THE ARK ANIMAL RESCUE

*PO Box 463, Beckenham, Kent, BR3 2ZH
Wildlife Aid - 081 312 9021*

This is an animal rescue centre which cares for unwanted pets and rescued animals. They also deal with hurt animals and encourage people to ring them on the above Wildlife Aid telephone number if they find any injured wildlife. Their sanctuary is run solely by volunteers and they would welcome any donations. They also run a yearly animal adoption scheme for their permanent residents. A quarterly newsletter is published. Adult membership is £6.00 annually.

BEAUTY WITHOUT CRUELTY CHARITY

57 King Henrys Walk, London N1 4NH
071 254 2929

The BWCC campaigns to end the torture and slaughter of all animals in the name of fashion and beauty. Current campaigns include FUR FREE 2000 to ban fur farming in the UK before the end of the decade, and a petition to protest against the ISO/TC 191 Humane Animal Traps Standard.

BOOTS ACTION NOTTINGHAM

BAN, 180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HW
0602 585666

The Boots Action Committee has drawn up a charter which calls on Boots to cease all animal-based research and testing. It calls upon people to boycott Boots and encourages people to write into Boots Head Office to explain the reasons for the boycott.

BRITISH ANTI-VIVISECTION ASSOCIATION

PO Box 82, Kingswood, Bristol BS15 1YF

B.A.V.A. has some useful information on medical fraud and experiments. They have recently launched their Medically Induced Plague campaign. The aims of the campaign are to abolish all animal experimentation and to increase public awareness of the hazardous nature of most medication. Posters, booklets and petitions are available. Subscriptions are £6.00 a year. Books by Hans Reusch are available by mail order.

BRITISH DIVERS MARINE LIFE RESCUE

12 Mayland Road, Corby, Northants. NN7 2DR

This is an international marine animal rescue and protection organisation, which helps to protect marine animals from the threat of over-fishing, pollution, etc. Membership is £15.00 a year with concessions for OAP's.

BRITISH HEDGEHOG PRESERVATION SOCIETY

Knowbury House, Knowbury, Ludlow,
Shropshire SL8 3LQ
Hedgehog Helpline - 0584 890287

This charity publishes a regular newsletter giving details on all aspects of hedgehog welfare. They run a Hedgehog helpline during office hours on the above telephone number. A leaflet entitled Helping Hedgehogs is available free of charge by sending an SAE to the above address. They also produce a Hogalogue of books and items of Hedgehogery for the discerning shopper.

Recently, they have been involved in gathering support for the Wild Mammal Protection Bill, and have also been protesting against an advert seen on billboards and in newspapers for Scrumpy Jack cider which depicts a tractor running over a hedgehog.

BRITISH UNION FOR THE ABOLITION OF VIVISECTION (BUAV)

16a Crane Grove, London N7 8LB
0171 700 4888

BUAV continues to run various campaigns against animal abuse around the world. They recently launched a report called 'Paradise Lost: A Review of UK Primate Research', which identifies over 50 laboratories in the UK involved in using primates. They recently organised several protests against these establishments.

Recently BUAV investigators visited animal laboratories in Poland where the conditions were among the worst on record. They are currently running a postcard campaign to highlight their findings.

They welcome volunteers in the office both during the day and for Thursday evening sessions. A quarterly newsletter called Campaign Report is distributed to members.

CAMPAIGN AGAINST LEATHER & FUR (CALF)

BM 8889, London WC1N 3XX

Leaflets are available on the leather, fur, and wool trades. Please send an SAE for further information.

CAMPAIGNERS FOR ANIMAL RIGHTS AND THE ENVIRONMENT (C.A.R.E.)

9 Soberton Road, Queens Park, Bournemouth,
Dorset BH8 9BG

C.A.R.E. are currently concerned about the parts in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill which make it a criminal offence to conduct peaceful protest. They are encouraging people to write to their MP's expressing their opposition to the Bill. Leaflets containing sample letters are available.

CAMPAIGN FOR THE ABOLITION OF ANGLING

PO Box 90, Bristol BS99 1ND
0272 441175

CAA actively takes part in fish sabs all over Britain. They have been successful in disrupting fishing matches and in forcing anglers to abandon local fishing events. They have a video available called 'Angling - the Neglected Bloodsport' at a cost of £7 (£6 of which is a refundable deposit). Annual membership costs £4, members receive a quarterly newsletter called Pisces.

CAMPAIGN FOR THE ABOLITION OF CRUEL SPORTS

Lower Coyne Street, Callan, County Kilkenny, Ireland

CACS seeks to halt the imports of greyhounds from Ireland into the UK until the Irish government increases the penalties for those convicted of blooding - the practice of feeding live animals to greyhounds. They urge people to write polite letters of protest to the Home Secretary, the Home Office, Queen Annes Gate, London SW1H 9AT.

CARE FOR THE WILD

1 Ashfolds, Horsham Road, Rusper,
West Sussex RH12 4QX

Care for the Wild is continuing its projects around the world. It has embarked on a project to move 500 elephants and their family groups to save them from being shot. This is the largest ever elephant conservation project to be undertaken.

They have recently set up a project in Sri Lanka which has now gained government approval to protect turtles from suffering and exploitation. A new project for 1995 has been set up to protect the wildlife of Kasanka National Park in Zambia from poachers.

Care for the Wild also runs a 'foster a gibbon' scheme for rescued gibbons in Thailand, and a tiger adoption scheme in conjunction with the Tiger Trust. Donations welcome.

CETACEA DEFENCE

PO Box 11, SEDO Office, Manchester M18 8GU

Principally involved in protecting the world's whales and dolphins. People are needed to act as on-the-spot investigators. Contact the above address.

CINNAMON TRUST

Poldarves Farm, Trescowe Common, Germoe,
Penzance, Cornwall TR20 9RX
0736 850291

This is a charity for elderly and terminally ill people and their pets. The trust has a national network of volunteer pet helpers who visit owners at home and provide assistance where necessary. Fostering takes place if the owner is injured or hospitalised. Last year, they helped over 3,000 people with their pets. Donations always welcome.

CO-ORDINATING ANIMAL WELFARE

PO Box 589, Bristol BS99 1RW

CAW produces a magazine with up-to-date information. For further details contact the above address.

COSMETICS INDUSTRY COALITION FOR ANIMAL WELFARE

39 Manor Road, Rusthall, Tunbridge Wells,
Kent TN4 8UD
0892 517000

This organisation has launched a new initiative to put an end to the confusion about animal testing on ingredients and finished products for cosmetics, toiletries and perfumes. The Coalition has been formed by four companies which embrace the ethic known as the 1976/78 Fixed Cut-Off Date criterion. They are seeking to get more companies to join and to bring pressure on retailers to stock the 1976/78 product. For more details please send an SAE to the above address.

CRUELTY-FREE COMPANIONS

Box CFC M, The Rainbow Centre,
180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HU

This is a non-profit making national set-up. It aims to link together people who believe in a cruelty-free lifestyle. They have 100 members. For further details contact the above address.

DISABLED AGAINST ANIMAL RESEARCH AND EXPLOITATION

PO Box 8, Daventry, Northants NN11 4RQ

A national organisation for people who are disabled or have a chronic disease. DAARE is opposed to animals being used in drug experiments. People who are not disabled are also welcome to join.

DR HADWEN TRUST
22 Bancroft, Hitchin, Herts SG5 1JW
0462 436819

The Dr Hadwen Trust is a registered charity which funds the development of new, humane techniques to replace the use of animals in medical research. The alternative methods they use include the study of human cell and tissue cultures, magnetic scanning, computer modelling and carefully controlled studies with human volunteers. They reject the use of animal experiments on moral and scientific grounds. The annual subscription to The Trust is £8 and members receive a quarterly newsletter. The Trust also runs a mail order catalogue featuring gifts and cosmetics.

DOCTORS IN BRITAIN AGAINST ANIMAL EXPERIMENTS
PO Box 302, London N8 9HD

DBAAE, founded in 1990, is a group of doctors, scientists and pharmacists who reject all animal experiments on scientific and ethical grounds. They publish a regular newsletter on the latest news in medical research and have a useful book list. Full membership is open to fully qualified medical practitioners, with a category for Friends of DBAAE supporters.

ENVIRONMENTAL INVESTIGATION AGENCY
2 Pear Tree Court, London EC1R 0DS
071 490 7040

The EIA has campaigned for most endangered species since its foundation in 1984. They expose environmental abuse and call on governments to enforce legislation. They have so far saved the lives of millions of whales, dolphins, elephants, rhinos and wild birds - but there is still much to do. For further information, please send an SAE to the above address.

FELLOWSHIP OF LIFE
43 Braichmelyn, Bethesda, Bangor, Gwynedd,
Wales LL57 3RD

The fellowship was founded 20 years ago to influence the church on animal rights issues, and calls for the creation of a world of justice, non-violence and harmony without the abuse of animals. They produce a free newsletter, prayer cards and a leaflet called 'Are Christians Vegetarians?' all of which are available with an SAE from the above address. Donations with orders are appreciated although not essential.

FOX CUBS YOUTH GROUP
PO Box 370a, Surbiton, Surrey KT6 4YN

This group is aimed at the under-17's and encourages them to join with adults to demonstrate at local hunts / shoots / angling matches. There is an annual subscription of £4. Members receive a New Members' Pack, badge, and a magazine three times a year.

FOX PROJECT
The Old Chapel, Bradford Street, Tonbridge,
Kent TN9 1AW

The Fox Project has recently moved premises to the above address. The organisation has saved many foxes' lives by humanely trapping and moving them from potential threat. They take into care orphaned foxes and set them free when they are fit and well. A newsletter is available as is a list of merchandise. Donations are welcome.

FREEDOM ANIMAL SANCTUARY TRUST

12b Dudley Road, Tunbridge Wells, Kent TN1 1LF

The Freedom Animal Sanctuary needs money to re-home animals and to realise their long-term aim of creating a sanctuary. A range of t-shirts is available to help raise funds. Donations are needed.

FRIENDS OF THE MORAY FIRTH DOLPHINS

A group existing to protect the only real population of around 150 dolphins in UK waters.

GREEK ANIMAL RESCUE
69 Great North Way, Hendon, London NW4 1PT
081 203 1956

Many animals suffer in Greece. Strays are thought of as vermin and are killed, many are thrown live over cliffs. A new shelter is being built to house 150 dogs, 40 cats, 2 mules, and a few chickens and ducks. There is a 30 minute video available featuring some of Greece's atrocities towards its animals and it also shows the shelters and the sanctuary which is provided for abused and neglected animals.

HOMELESS OWNERS WITH PETS
1a Courtland Gardens, Bassett,
Southampton SO2 3PP

HOPE campaigns for the rights of responsible people with pets, as often no pets are allowed in rented housing. They help to ensure the welfare of pets (mostly dogs) on the streets.

HUMANE RESEARCH TRUST

Brook House, 29 Bramhall Lane South, Bramhall, Stockport, Cheshire SK7 2DN
061 439 8041

The Humane Research Trust is a registered charity which stimulates and funds research into human illness using advanced animal-free technology. They enable animal lovers to support effective medical research with a clear conscience. ANIMATE is the youth and educational wing. They produce a quarterly newsletter

HUNT SABOTEURS ASSOCIATION (HSA)

PO Box 1, Carlton, Nottingham NG4 2JY
0602 590357

Hunt saboteurs use legal peaceful tactics to ensure the freedom of wild animals. They are currently encouraging people to write to the Home Secretary to protest against current anti-saboteur legislation. The HSA gives information and advice on how to form a fully operational hunt-sab group. They provide speakers for talks and give legal advice. Merchandise is available.

INTERNATIONAL ANIMAL RESCUE

Animal Tracks, Ash Mill, South Molton,
Devon EX36 4QW
0769 550277

International Animal Rescue has recently been involved in a successful campaign to stop the shooting and trapping of migrating birds in Malta. New laws came into force in January of this year which are being vigorously enforced and the Minister for the Environment in Malta has acknowledged the major role that the organisation played in the campaign.

The group has also turned its attention to helping dogs in Malta in a sanctuary and has been actively looking for volunteers to help. Donations are urgently needed. A range of merchandise is available. They also run a sponsor-an-animal scheme.

On 27th to 29th May 1995, they will be holding The International Animal Rescue Fair featuring animal welfare, gardening and craft stalls at their 60 acre animal sanctuary. Camping facilities will be available and there will be a vegetarian/vegan barbecue on the Saturday night.

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR THE PROTECTION OF HORSES

Freepost, Anne Colvin House, Snetterton,
Norfolk NR16 2QZ
0953 498682

This is a registered charity which is currently campaigning to end the suffering of thousands of horses. Many of these horses are from the former Soviet bloc and are currently being transported live in long distance road trains to Western Europe for the fresh horse meat trade. The ILPH have been petitioning the EC Council of Ministers to accept an amendment to the existing law. Donations welcome.

JUSTICE FOR DOGS

c/o Ann Harpwood, Finloren Cottage, Weythel,
Old Radnor, Powys LD8 2RR
0544 22213 - Tel. and Fax

The Justice for Dogs campaign was launched in April 1993 in response to the Dangerous Dogs Act. Plans are now being made to take a selection of cases to the Courts for Human Rights in Strasbourg. Donations welcome.

LIBEARTY

WSPA, 2 Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ
0171 793 0540

Libearty is a campaign run by the World Society for the Protection of Animals. It was set up three years ago to come to the aid of bears being exploited all over the world and has now been officially launched in the USA. Libearty has set up projects to help hundreds of bears and to physically rescue over 20 from lives of cruelty and neglect. They have recently been carrying out investigative and lobbying missions in Asia. An annual donation of £12.50 ensures 3 newsletters a year plus an introductory campaign pack.

In future, Libearty News will become more focused on the technical details of project work. To complement this, a brand new newsletter covering all major WSPA campaigns including Libearty will be sent to supporters and fundraisers.

THE MARINE CONNECTION

PO Box 2404, London W2 3WG

The Marine Connection is a campaigning organisation dedicated to raising awareness about dolphins and whales through publishing and networking. Currently they are campaigning to have the capture of wild dolphins and whales prohibited for entertainment purposes and are attempting to have two dolphins released from the Steinhart Aquarium in San Francisco. Annual membership is £7.00, and four newsletters per year are issued containing news from around the world.

McLIBEL SUPPORT CAMPAIGN

*c/o London Greenpeace, 5 Caledonian Road,
London N1
0171 713 1269*

See report elsewhere in the magazine!

NATIONAL ANTI-HUNT CAMPAIGN (NAHC)

*PO Box 66, Broxbourne, Herts EN10 6LU
0438 746372*

NAHC has recently launched a major new hard-hitting campaign to protect wild animals, which came about in response to their Killing for Kicks investigation which has exposed the worst cases of cruelty to foxes ever witnessed. They have also produced an accompanying video which has shocked hardened campaigners and politicians alike. Please write to the above address for a copy of their Special Edition Campaign Report.

In March, they presented their long awaited National Anti-Hunt Petition to 10 Downing Street the day before MP's were due to debate John McFall's Wild Mammals (Protection) Bill.

In their next Campaign Report, NAHC will be publishing a feature urging their supporters to join their local animal rights / hunt sab group. As part of their feature, they would like to publish a list of local groups, animal rescue centres and sanctuaries which are looking for new volunteers and would therefore like people to write to them with details of their groups at the above address.

NATIONAL ANTI-VIVISECTION SOCIETY

*Ravenside, 261 Goldhawk Road, London W12 9PE
0181 846 9777*

NAVS have organised the World Animal Show to be held at the Barbican Centre on Saturday 22nd April. They have been holding a campaign against circuses called 'The Animals Defenders Circus Madness Campaign'. This involved a bus tour of 100 towns at the height of the circus season. Annual Membership is £10 - a magazine called The Campaigner is issued to members. The latest edition of the magazine featured the Toxicol campaign, cosmetics testing and LDF Computer simulations and cancer research.

NATIONAL DOGSITTERS

*The Pulpits (Dog Holidays), Little Hereford,
Ludlow SY8 4AU
0584 711534 (Admin) or 0171 413 9990 (24 hrs)*

National Dogsitters provide a unique individual home-based boarding service for dogs while their owners are away and they can also offer a daycare or dog walking service. Dog owners are invited to contact them to be referred to their nearest Registered Dogsitter. People wanting to register as National Dogsitters are also invited to contact the organisation.

NATUREWATCH TRUST

*Austen House, 122 Bath Road, Cheltenham,
Glos. GL53 7JX
0242 252871*

The Naturewatch Trust is fighting to end the cruel trade of crated veal in all European Community countries. This practice is banned in the United Kingdom, but nonetheless calves are exported live to France and Holland where this method of intensive farming continues. Free leaflets are available.

NOW AGAINST LIVE EXPORTS

St Josephs, Souldern, Bicester, Oxon OX6 9LA

NOW has been very busy campaigning against the live export trade. They encourage people to write to the local press and their MP's regarding issues raised in their newsletters. An Action Pack is available with an A4 SAE. Donations appreciated.

PAGAN ANIMAL RIGHTS

c/o Billy Frugal, P.A.R., 10 Broughton Street, Hebden Bridge, West Yorks HX7 8JY

This organisation, founded 10 years ago, is open to people who care about animals - whether they are pagan or not. Membership is £3 a year, and members receive a newsletter at all the Pagan Festivals.

PEOPLE FOR THE ETHICAL TREATMENT OF ANIMALS (PETA)

*PO Box 3169, London NW1 2JF
071 388 4922*

Campaigns against all animal abuse. Current campaigns include the Chicken Out campaign and the Premarin campaign against the use of pregnant mares' urine for HRT therapy. They are also campaigning against the proposal to release 2,000 live pigeons at the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta, USA - many birds were killed at the Seoul Olympics when they flew into the Olympic flame. PETA are very supportive of animal liberation groups and produce the magazine 'Animal Times' which is aimed at the general public. They also have an Animal Rights Groups directory available.

PETSEARCH & PET OWNERS SUPPORT SCHEME

*c/o Phil Groombridge, 16 Elm Grove Road, Salisbury, Wilts SP1 1JW
0722 326046 & 327146*

Petsearch UK runs a register of lost and found animals and produces a newsletter giving details of missing pets. They also run a Pet Owners Support Scheme where members can give instructions as to who should look after their pet if anything happens to the owner. Donations welcome.

PET STEALING ALERT

PO Box 94, Cheltenham, Glos

Cats and dogs are going missing nationwide. Please contact the above address if you are suspicious of an advert offering good homes, or if an animal has disappeared in unusual circumstances.

PLAN 2000

Lynmouth, Devon EX35 6EE

Plan 2000 aims to see all animal experiments banned by the end of the century.

RESPECT FOR ANIMALS

PO Box 500, Nottingham NG1 3AS

RESPECT was set up when LYNX went bankrupt. They will continue the fight against the fur trade. Leaflets are available.

SHARK PROTECTION LEAGUE

BM L.A.P.L., London WC1N 3XX

The Shark Protection League was primarily set up to expose the horrific cruelty involved in shark angling, and to campaign against this evil sport. They will be having a yearly protest against the International Shark Angling Festival held every September in Looe, Cornwall.

They are also campaigning against the trade in shark fins for shark fin soup and will be holding a national protest on Saturday 6th May 1995 in China Town, London. The demonstration will start in Leicester Square by the fountain at 12 noon. The protest is being held in direct response to the Channel 4 documentary Shark Wars.

They aim to purchase an ex-fishing vessel and use it to save life instead of destroying it by carrying out direct action (Greenpeace style) against the shark fin fishing ships.

They produce leaflets, fact sheets and petitions free of charge in return for an SAE, however donations are welcome.

STUDENT CAMPAIGN FOR ANIMAL RIGHTS (SCAR)

*PO Box 155, Manchester M60 1FT
061 953 4039*

SCAR organised a coffin tour in March to commemorate all the hundred of thousands of animals which have been, or are being, killed in universities each year. The coffin tour started off at Liverpool University on 6th March and called at Manchester, Leeds, Sheffield, Nottingham, Leicester, Cambridge, and ended in London on 27th March. At each university, there was a demonstration and coffin procession.

SCAR also launched a petition calling upon the Secretary of State for Education to ensure that whenever students are asked to perform animal experiments for degree work, they are able to choose non-animal work without penalty for loss of marks. The petition was due to be handed in at the end of March.

TAIL ENDS

PO Box 1550, London SW4 6HP

This is a small vegan animal rescue network which needs homes for abused and abandoned animals - mainly cats and dogs. All of the money, which is desperately needed, goes towards food, vets bills, neutering and spaying.

A selection of b&w postcards depicting animals is available at 30p each. They have a fund to help set up a sanctuary.

TEACHERS FOR ANIMAL RIGHTS

c/o 29 Lynwood Road, London SW17 6HP

Please write for an information pack, but a donation to cover costs for postage and literature is essential.

VEGAN SOCIETY

*7 Battle Road, St Leonards-on-Sea,
East Sussex TN37 7AA
0424 427393*

The Vegan Society is the main UK organisation promoting veganism and is always seeking new members to help the society grow so that it can be at the forefront of the movement, showing that veganism is the way forward for animals, people and the environment. A new vegan video was launched last September called 'Truth or Dairy', presented by poet Benjamin Zephaniah, is available for £9.95 (p&p inc.). Copies of the Animal Free Shopper book are available at £4.95+p&p. Annual membership is £15 individual, £10 unwaged. Members receive a quarterly magazine called The Vegan.

VEGANS INTERNATIONAL
c/o 11 Guinea Street, Bristol BS1 6SX

Vegans International unites those who want to spread respect and love for all life. VI believes in co-operation among all organisations. They have helped set up vegan societies around the world, organised seven international festivals and united thousands of vegans to work for a kinder world. A quarterly newsletter is available to members.

VEGETARIAN INFORMATION CAMPAIGN

Greenyard, 27a Love Lane, Denbigh, Clwyd LL16 3LV

Sells a wide range of books by mail order, including vegetarian / vegan recipe books. A full colour leaflet is available to assist you in your choice.

VEGETARIAN SOCIETY
*Parkdale, Dunham Road, Altrincham,
Cheshire WA14 4QG*

An important organisation for those taking the first step towards veganism! It publishes an informative magazine, and also Greenscene - a magazine for younger readers.

VEGFAM
*The Sanctuary, Nr Lydford, Okehampton, Devon EX20 4AL
0822 82203*

For nearly 30 years, VEGFAM, a Registered Charity, has been working with and influencing the major charities to carry out projects which do not exploit animals by co-financing projects which are in agreement with this ecologically sound principle. They are also associated with a charity called Find Your Feet which has pioneered Leaf Concentrate Projects.

For further information, please write to the above address. Donations welcome.

VEGGIES
180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HU

An animal rights calendar is produced on a regular basis - the most up-to-date and comprehensive one around. Their catering facilities travel up and down the country providing vegan food. Veggies produce a variety of posters - available on request.

VIVA!
*PO Box 212, Crewe, Cheshire CW1 4SD
0270 522500*

Viva! - a new national vegetarian and vegan charity - was launched last October by Juliet Gellatley. Its first campaign, Convert-A-Parent, has targeted young people and aims to provide them with all the ammunition they need to fight parental disapproval and to encourage their parents to turn vegetarian / vegan. They have produced twelve carefully researched Viva! guides on subjects including factory farming and BSE. Annual membership fee for adult supporters is £12, family membership is £16, unwaged £9 and activists under 18 pay £4.99. Supporters receive Viva! Life quarterly.

WORLD SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF ANIMALS (WSPA)
*2 Langley Lane, London, SW8 1TJ
0171 793 0540*

Recent campaigns have highlighted the plight of live bear cubs being taken from the wild in Burma and smuggled to Korea to be fattened up to be sold to restaurants. Also they have turned their attention to the plight of cats and dogs in the Ukraine being killed to supply the fur trade.

Last September they launched a hard-hitting new advertising campaign to highlight the suffering of zoo animals. The nine week campaign, called Human Zoo, was shown in over 50 cinemas in the Greater London area. Copies of their Zoo Inquiry report are available from the above address.

Last October they launched Escape, a campaign to save mankind's closest relatives, the Great Apes. The launch was marked by the release of startling new video and photographic evidence documenting the trade in gorilla and chimpanzee meat and orphaned apes.

They are also involved with helping to save the bears with the Libearty campaign (see Libearty).

YOUNG INDIAN VEGETARIANS
*41 Lakeside Avenue, Ilford, Essex IG4 5PS
081 550 3725*

The Young Indian Vegetarians recently organised a Vegetarian Music Festival in Southall Park, London in July. For details of future events, please write to above address.

International News

AFRICA

Six countries in east and southern Africa have signed an agreement to set up the world's first international task force to curb the illegal trade in wild animals and plants. (Ceefax, 10/9/94)

ARGENTINA

The town of La Plata has banned circuses with performing animals. (Tierbefreiung Aktuell, Dec '94)

AUSTRALIA

A revolutionary procedure using human cells to test the toxic effect of chemicals has been pioneered in Australia. The procedure is expected to eventually be used to diagnose and screen for illness caused by exposure to chemicals. It is also hoped to significantly reduce the incidence of chemical testing with animals. (Animal Guardians Newsletter, July '94)

Newcastle City Council (the second largest city area in New South Wales) has banned the use of exotic animals in entertainment on council-owned or controlled land. Recently released Australian Bureau of Statistics figures for 1991-92 found that Australians have reduced their consumption of meat for the second year in a row. (Action - Animal Liberation Magazine, Sept '94)

The Tasmanian Supreme Court has held that anti-battery cage campaigner Pam Clarke was wrongfully imprisoned for 44 days in 1988 when she was jailed for refusal to pay fines imposed while protesting outside Tasmania's parliament. Now she has the right to claim damages from the magistrate who jailed her and will be awarded costs likely to exceed $5,000. (Action - Animal Liberation Magazine, Autumn '94)

Speed limits in southern Queensland are to be reduced during the koala breeding season in a bid to lower the number killed by cars. (Teletext, 20/10/94)

An opinion poll showed that 61% of adult Australians are against the use of animals in psychological research and 66% feel there are effective ways to conduct medical research other than by using animals. (Animal Guardians Newsletter, Nov '94)

The habitat of the endangered koala is to be protected in New South Wales. It is hoped this move to halt town developments which encroach on koala habitats will save the vanishing species. (Ceefax, 4/1/95)

BELGIUM

Following complaints by animal rights activists, the Interior Minister has banned a gruelling traditional horse and trap race in the village of Krombeke. (Animal Times, Xmas '94)

BORNEO

Indonesia and Malaya are to set up the world's largest sanctuary, 2.4 million acres of Borneo, to protect both tropical trees and animals. (The Times, 29/7/94)

CANADA

The Province of Ontario has stated that it is committed to banning cosmetic testing with animals. (The AV Magazine, Nov '94)

Canadian authorities have seized a Spanish trawler in a bid to protect dwindling fish stocks. (Ceefax, 10/3/95)

CHINA

China has agreed to work with other countries to try to halt the use of tiger parts in traditional medicine and the Chinese will now co-operate with the international community to help save the tiger. (Ceefax, 16/11/94)

Six more nature reserves are to be created to help conserve the nation's dwindling number of giant pandas. (Teletext, 27/12/94)

A man has been executed for selling Giant Panda skins and his associate was jailed for life. (Teletext, 29/12/94)

A man who broke into a zoo, shot dead a tiger cub and stole its carcass has been executed. (Ceefax, 18/1/95)

FRANCE

Following objections from animal rights protestors, police have banned an art show in Paris which would have featured spiders, snakes, scorpions and toads in a cage eating each other. (ARC News, Jan '95)

GERMANY

A wild boar which was due to be killed in Niedersachsen as part of measures against swine fever has been spared by a court decision. A lone wolf roaming free in the state of Hessen was given legal protection following massive protests at a decision by the forestry minister that it could be shot. (Recht fr Tiere, Summer '94)

A move to bring in a slaughter campaign against magpies and other members of the crow family has been rejected by the regional parliament in Kiel. (Recht fr Tiere, Winter '94)

The German Agriculture Minister has banned "poultry baron" Anton Pohlmann from ever keeping birds again after Pohlmann was charged with cruelty to animals for gassing 60,000 chickens to death. Pohlmann, who sells almost a fifth of all eggs in Germany, killed the birds after a salmonella outbreak.

The featured speaker at a chinchilla breeders' convention in Sachenheim bailed out at the last minute when protestors surrounded the convention hall. The speaker was scheduled to kill 3 chinchillas "humanely" during his presentation. (Animal Times, 'Jan/Feb '95)

Germany has announced an 8 hour limit on the journey time of animals being taken for slaughter. (Ceefax, 6/3/95)

HOLLAND

According to official figures there were 780,703 animal experiments in Holland in 1993, 16,697 (2.1%) less than in 1992.

A judge has provisionally suspended a licence granted to Harlan Sprague & Dawley to build a lab animal breeding facility in Horst.

The import of wild-caught apes for use in experiments has been prohibited in the Netherlands. (Proefdiervrij, Oct '94)

INDIA

Judges in India requested that butchers at a New Delhi slaughterhouse be secretly videotaped as they killed cows - and because of the cruelty and lack of hygiene revealed by the video, the government approved a bill banning the slaughter of cows and the possession or sale of beef in India. (Pro Animal, Jan '95)

ISRAEL

Following picketing by the animal rights group "Anonymous", a fur store in Tel-Aviv has gone out of business. (Anonymous Newsletter, Sept '94)

The local authority in Tel Aviv is now operating a free-of-charge neutering service for feral cats. Following a conference on "Preventing violence in society through humane education", organised by Concern for Helping Animals in Israel (CHAI), the Chief of the Israeli police has instructed all police stations in the country to take all reported incidents of cruelty to animals seriously and to investigate them. Also, the Knesset (Israeli Parliament) Committee of the Interior and Environment resolved to bring the subject of animal cruelty in Israel up for discussion by the full Knesset and recommended to the Minister of Education that children spend at least one hour per week in class addressing the issue of cruelty to animals and how to prevent it. The Ministry of Education has decided to allocate funds towards the CHAI "Kids Caring About Animals" program, which will bring Jewish and Arab children together to learn about and help animals, and it also agreed to distribute to all elementary schools in the country a humane and environmental newsletter produced by CHAI. (Pro Animal, Jan '95)

ITALY

The city of Rome has appointed an official animal rights advisor who looks after the welfare of wild and domestic animals on the street, in hospices and at circuses. (Animal Times, June/July '94)

A new law has shortened the hunting season, so it now comes to an end on January 31st instead of March 10th. This is good news for the majority of birds, which don't begin their migration flights until February. (Tierbefreiung Aktuell, Sept '94)

The mayor of Rome has ordered the city's zoo animals to be replaced with plastic models. (Animal Times, Xmas '94)

Benetton now has its own cruelty-free logo for cosmetics that have not been tested on animals and contain no animal ingredients. The logo launch took place last September in Bolzano, the first province in the world to ban vivisection. (Animal Times, Jan/Feb '95)

KENYA

The Kenyan Wildlife Service has said that, since the ivory trade was banned in 1989, elephant numbers have shown a fragile but steady recovery. (Ceefax, 10/2/95)

MEXICO

Keiko, the Orca whale who 'starred' in the film 'Free Willy', is to be rehabilitated back to the wild, following a campaign by animal protectionists to free him from captivity at a marine park in Mexico City. (BBC TV Newsround, 8/2/95)

NEW ZEALAND

The cost and threat of protests from anti-vivisectionists stopped the Cancer Society erecting billboards to promote Daffodil Day, which raises money for animal research. (Evening Post (Wellington), 23/8/94)

OMAN

A Ministerial Decision has been issued by the Government of Oman banning the importation of rhino horn and the Government also plans to prohibit the sale of rhino horn at a later date. This is an important decision, as there is a strong tradition of making dagger handles from rhino horn in the country. (TRAFFIC Bulletin, Oct '94)

NORWAY

Demand for whale meat in Norway seems to have dramatically decreased, with 1994 prices falling to less than two thirds of those in 1993. (Vesterlen, 13/7/94)

The Norwegian Vegetarian Society, founded just two years ago, now has 150 members, with the number steadily increasing. According to a poll taken in 1993, 1% of the Norwegian population is vegetarian and 0.1% vegan.

A report by the Ethical Committee of the Norwegian Department of Agriculture stated that fur farming methods could not be justified and should be phased out. (Norwegian Animal Rights Update, Jan '95)

PACIFIC NATIONS

A campaign has been launched by 26 nations in the Pacific to save the marine turtle from extinction. The nations want a ban on the commercial sale of turtles. (Ceefax, 6/3/95)

SINGAPORE

Singapore has banned the sale and public display of medicines that contain tiger parts and derivatives. (Daily Telegraph, 17/9/94)

SLOVAK REPUBLIC

The Minister of Education has officially confirmed and signed a declaration that excludes any use of animals in basic and secondary education. The declaration specifically forbids dissecting any kind of animal and bringing animals to school for educational observations. This success was accomplished by Sloboda Zvierat (Freedom of Animals), the first organization to promote animal rights publicly in the Slovak Republic. In October '93 it launched a campaign called Teaching Compassion, which included public actions, spreading information in the media, and gathering 75,000 signatures on a petition demanding the abolition of animal use in education. (Animals' Agenda, July/Aug '94)

TAIWAN

On October 27th, Taiwan's Wildlife Conservation Law was amended to create increased penalties for illegal traffic in wildlife. The Law has already significantly reduced the trade in endangered species of local birds since its introduction in 1989. (TRAFFIC Bulletin, Oct '94)

Following reports of hundreds of dogs being snatched off the streets and buried alive in mass graves, the government of Taiwan has asked experts from the World Society for the Protection of Animals to conduct a week-long seminar to look at ways of replacing existing inhumane methods of stray control. (WSPA Press Release, 23/3/95)

USA

The Cornell University dining service is now offering vegan main courses at every meal in each region of the campus. Over 140 Subway fast food shops in Florida have begun selling vegan burgers and Hillary Clinton has ordered 70 cases of them for the White House. (Vegetarian Voice, Summer '94)

The US Army had planned to amputate the toes of mice, chipmunks and other small herbivorous mammals in order to identify them during a wildlife study, but these animals will now be identified with a waterproof marker instead. (PETA, 16/7/94)

A U.S. Dept. of Agriculture protocol now requires veterinarians to use anaesthesia before removing the ovaries of heifers destined for export from Mexico to the US and states that incisions made during these operations should be sutured in a proper manner. US veterinarians had been performing such ovariectomies without anaesthetic and then clamping the gaping surgical incisions with huge hog rings. The protocol also specifies that the heifers should be identified with a single brand on the back, instead of two face-brands as had previously been the case.

A Mississippi dog dealer suspected of trafficking in stolen pets has been ordered to surrender his Class B dealer license by the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, which means he is permanently barred from selling dogs and cats to research institutions. (Animals' Agenda, July/Aug '94)

Following extensive lobbying by People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, Wal-Mart Stores Inc. has announced that it will no longer sell hamsters, gerbils and birds, and that, except for fish, it is getting out of the pet business. Wal-Mart, the USA's largest retailer, will discontinue orders for pets in its 600 stores that carry animals. (Dallas Morning News, 1/8/94)

On August 29th the California Governor signed into law a bill that outlaws the tripping of horses in Mexican-style rodeos. (San Gabriel Valley News, 30/8/94)

A University of Virginia professor has developed an interactive videodisc which lets students dissect computer "frogs", so avoiding the killing of real ones.

The American Broadcasting Corporation has withdrawn financial support for the infamous Alaskan Idarod Trail Sled Dog Race, in which dogs are sometimes raced until they collapse. (Animal Times, Aug/Sept '94)

A new law in California outlaws the acceptance and sale of downed animals (those too sick or injured to stand) at stockyards and auction markets, and it requires that downed animals at these facilities be moved humanely or euthanized immediately. Downed animals suffer painful injuries and neglect, are left for days without food or water, and are often dragged to slaughter with chains or pushed with forklifts, all of which abuses are made illegal.

Tim Rivers' mule-diving show (in which mules are forced to jump 30 feet, plunging into a tank of water at 30 miles per hour) has been banned from the state of Illinois after being ruled inhumane by a judge in a case brought by the local Animal Welfare League.

The Governor of Michigan has signed into law one of the toughest and most progressive animal cruelty laws in the US. Persons convicted of animal cruelty can be required to receive mental health treatment and be fined up to $2,500 or jailed for up to 4 years. (Animals' Agenda, Sept/Oct '94)

"Animal-friendly" car license plates have been introduced by the State of New Jersey. Proceeds from the plates will be used to fund the state's low-cost spay-neuter program. (Bergen County Animal Shelter Society, Oct '94)

Following a 7 year campaign by the Progressive Animal Welfare Society, Ivan the Gorilla, in a concrete box in Tacoma, Washington shopping centre for over 20 years, has at last been moved to a zoo, where he can meet other gorillas and have more freedom. (P.A.W.S. Press Release, 12/10/94)

Following a campaign by a poultry welfare group, Bob Evans Farms have made a corporate decision to stop their annual "International Chicken Flying Meet", in which 70 to 80 chickens are pushed with a toilet plunger out of a fake mailbox. (United Poultry Concerns, 17/10/94)

Salvador P. Trippy, Inc., a downtown Seattle fur salon, has closed its doors after 65 years in business. There is now only one fur salon left open in downtown Seattle. (Seattle Times, 26/10/94)

The Coca-Cola Company has decided to withdraw its sponsorship of cockfighting after numerous letters from animal advocates. (United Poultry Concerns, 28/10/94)

Animal rights activist Kim Trimiew, was released on August 29 after spending 193 days in the Spokane County Jail, when the judge finally realized that holding her any longer would not force her to testify to the grand jury about happenings at a 1991 animal liberation raid on Washington State University. (The AV Magazine, Nov '94)

Following campaigns by animal rights activists, Jack Lewis Furs of Memphis, Tennessee has gone out of business and three clothes stores in New York have decided to no longer line the collars of their coats with fur. (The Militant Vegan, Nov '94)

A dog-fight organizer captured on his own videotape using a kitten and a stray dog as bait for pit bulls was sentenced to ten years in prison in early November. (Fairfax Journal, 7/11/94)

5.4 million Americans bought furs in 1993, down from 7.6 million in 1989, and the number of mink farms in the USA has declined from 1,027 in 1988 to 502 in 1993. (New York, 7/11/94)

The US navy has agreed to transfer 5 male bottlenose dolphins (captured for use in its military programme) to a sanctuary, from where it is hoped to rehabilitate them back to the wild.

Officials in Pompano Beach, Florida, under pressure from the local animal rights group, have decided to continue the current ban on horse-drawn carriages. On October 17 the city council of Biloxi, Mississippi, passed an ordinance banning horse-drawn vehicles, following a campaign by local AR groups. (Animals' Agenda, Nov/Dec '94)

Since 1985, 30 million Americans have become vegetarian - and the US consumption of beef has gone down by 30%, and of veal by 70%. (Recht fr Tiere, Winter '94)

Thomas E. McElroy Furs of Chicago, which opened for business in 1928, is closing down soon. (Chicago Tribune, 2/12/94)

The University of California at Berkeley has become the first major US public university to provide a vegan main course at every meal. A survey revealed that 5% of the university's dorm residents are vegan (AR-NEWS, 5/12/94)

Hog-dog rodeos, where dogs are set on wild boars, have been banned in Lafayette County, Florida following court action by PETA. (Animal Times, Xmas '94)

The 1994 World Farm Animals Day, held on October 2nd, was the largest ever, with nearly 200 memorial events all over the USA and other countries to raise public consciousness about the evils of factory farming. (Pro Animal, Jan '95)

On November 8th voters in Oregon and Arizona approved ballot measures aimed at protecting wildlife in those states. The Oregon initiative prohibits hunters from laying bait for bears in order to ambush them and from using hounds fitted with telemetry collars to hunt bears and cougars. These restrictions will virtually end the "sport" hunting of cougars in Oregon and halve the number of bears killed for "sport" there annually. With this vote Oregon joins two other states, California and Colorado, where citizen initiatives have already limited the hunting of bears for "sport" - and pressure from animal activists in recent years has prompted wildlife agencies in New Mexico, Utah, Florida, and Arizona to curtail bear-hunting seasons voluntarily. In Arizona voters approved a ban on the use of leghold traps, body-gripping traps, snares, and poisons on public lands - and because public lands make up more than 80% of Arizona, the passage of this measure effectively ends commercial fur trapping in the state. Arizona's vote was the first successful attempt in 64 years to outlaw the leghold trap by citizen initiative. (Animals' Agenda, Jan/Feb '95)

Designers of the Franklin Roosevelt memorial in Washington D.C. have scrapped plans to exhibit a bronze statue of Eleanor Roosevelt wearing a fur coat. She will now be depicted wearing a cloth coat instead.

Faced with a widespread problem of chained, neglected dogs, the town of Muamelle, Arkansas enacted an ordinance that prohibits the tying or chaining of dogs to dog-houses or other stationary objects and requires that all dogs be housed in approved enclosures. (Animal Times, Jan/Feb '95)

Directors of a city-owned golf course at Scottsboro, Alabama have cancelled plans for a series of mass goose hunts after the city mayor's office was swamped with protest calls. Instead of killing the geese, workers will try alternative methods of keeping them off the course. (Mobile Register, 6/1/95)

New York nightclubs are turning away patrons who arrive in fur coats. (Newsweek, 9/1/95)

The nation's largest fur chain, Evans Inc. of Chicago, had over 120 outlets at the end of the '80s. Now they are down to 78. (People Weekly, 13/2/95)

American Airlines has decided to remove pate de foie gras from its menu because of complaints by animal rights campaigners. (Teletext, 28/2/95)

Ohio State University, where research projects involve 40,000 animals a year, has been made to reveal names and proposals of vivisection following a court order. This has led to many vivisection proposals being withdrawn and has discouraged many of the medical students there from taking part in animal research.

The Governor of Alaska has cancelled a wolf killing programme after calling it "inhumane" and "mismanaged". Of 134 wolves snared, 37 were found alive and shot, while also snared were 35 moose, 14 caribous, 4 golden eagles, 26 red foxes and other animals. (ARC News, March '95)

American Express has withdrawn a T.V. commercial featuring a Hong Kong shark fin restaurant after animal protectionists protested because of the cruelty involved in the production of the soup - fishermen cut off the fins and throw the sharks back to die slowly. (Teletext, 12/3/95)

The Vegan Society presents...

who, what, where, when, how and why vegan

a dynamic new video

Truth or Dairy explains just why it is that some people have decided to go against the grain of popular burger, shake & fries culture and attempts to answer that most difficult of questions:

"If you give up eating meat, fish, milk, eggs and cheese, is there anything left except a few poxy vegetables?"

Truth or Dairy is presented by poet Benjamin Zephaniah, and features a star-studded cast including The B52s, Consolidated, Uri Geller, Casey Kasem, k.d. lang, Moby, River Phoenix, Martin Shaw, Heather Small (M-people), Spice Williams, Daisy the pantomime cow and a nice man who runs a fruit 'n' veg stall in Camden High Street.

Running time: 22 minutes

Please rush me copy/ies of Truth or Dairy @ £9.95 each (p&p incl.).

I enclose cheque/PO for £ payable to 'The Vegan Society'

Name

Address

Postcode

Return to: The Vegan Society
7 Battle Road, St Leonards-on-Sea, East Sussex TN37 7AA. (0424 427393)

Sabbing News

This issue of Arkangel has seen the nature of sabbing change from peaceful, lawful action against the cruelty and bloodlust perpetrated by the bloodsports brigade to a criminal act where imprisonment and heavy fines await those unfortunate enough to be prosecuted under the new laws. The people who attempt to disrupt the killing of deer, foxes, hares and other hapless creatures have remained resolute. They have not stopped sabotage just because a new law has been introduced, but continue to save lives. However, the beginning of the 1994/5 hunting season showed that the hunt supporters could not wait for the new laws, preferring instead to use violence. One difference to previous years, however, was the willingness of some police forces to assist hunt supporters in their attacks on hunt saboteurs. There has always been collusion between police and hunt supporters but just prior to the Criminal Justice Act the blatant bias towards the hunters appears to have reached new depths.

In late August, Mr. Richardson, his nine year old son Charlie and their dog went to protest peacefully against bloodsports at a dressage day held by the Woodland Pytchley hunt near Cranford in Northamptonshire.

On three occasions during the day a local landowner had attacked protesters who had gathered to take part in the protest against the hunt. He saw a group sitting on a grass verge, pulled up in his car just in time to avoid running them down and got out, set about the group and insisted that the grass verge was his property. Police attended the scene and took statements from protesters. While they were busy doing this, he returned to the dressage arena and attacked another protester, punching him in the face and smashing his video camera. The landowner then drove back along the road and on seeing Mr. Richardson, his son and the dog leaving the area, drove straight at them in a deliberate attempt to run them over. Mr. Richardson managed to push his son out of the way and pull the dog from underneath the landrover as he and a friend were struck by the irate lunatic, bouncing onto the bonnet.

The following Tuesday one of the saboteurs who had been on the receiving end of the attack had the tyres of his motorbike slashed while it was parked outside his front door. Two days later police arrested two saboteurs - one for biting the attacker's hand and faking an attack by smashing his own camera and rubbing gravel into his own face! The other was arrested for kicking the landrover and causing dents in the bodywork. After all these incidents the police decided that the landowner had done nothing illegal and took no action against him.

On 2nd September thirty saboteurs went to stop the slaughter of wild birds at a grouse shoot on Kildale Moor in North Yorkshire but ended up the victims of serious assaults by 'hunt steward' boss Simon Longworth. He punched Karen Edmondson in the mouth, knocking out one of her teeth and loosening another, while another saboteur was kicked in the crotch by the steward's leader. More saboteurs were assaulted by other hunt heavies but for once their leader was arrested for assault by Northallerton police. What had the saboteurs been doing earlier that day? Well, one of their member, Steve Davis used his first aid training to revive a hunter who had fallen off her horse at a meet of the Middleton Hunt close to the moors. Nicola Hogg was choking to death on a piece of chewing gum and would have died if the sabs had not been there. The other members of the hunt just watched her going blue!

This is not the first time that sabs have tended to ill or injured riders, some of whom have been dangerously ill. They at least know that the sabs are not the demons their propaganda machine would have the public believe, but genuinely peaceful, principled people.

A classic success story of the hunt saboteur movement at its best is the abandonment of Britain's largest annual hunting festival. In September the Northumberland Beagling Festival organisers announced they would not be holding any events in 1994 due to the sabbing which the Tyneside Hunt Saboteurs and the HSA have continued every year since 1987. Despite persistent violence directed at sabs by the hunt supporters and their first use of private security against saboteurs, this premiere hare hunting festival, which was heavily promoted by the BFSS and their "Campaign for Hunting", has closed and hopefully will not return to the shameful hunt calendar.

In late September the notoriously violent Albrighton Hunt added another violent assault to an already long list of attacks on sabs. On this occasion, Wolverhampton sab Mark Sheldon was taken to Telford hospital following an ambush on the saboteur van by a convoy of hunt vehicles, led by two tractors. A hunt supporter lifted the van into the air using the front forks of the tractor while the sabs who were left outside the vehicle found themselves under attack by the hunt scum. Mark was hit on the head with a hammer by a hunt supporter and was taken to Telford hospital for treatment. Police are (supposedly) investigating the attack.

Just before the introduction of the Criminal Justice Act saboteurs and journalists who were making a programme about the act went to a meet of the Crawley and Horsham Hunt. As soon as they arrived hunt heavies moved in and hospitalised two sabs - one needing four stitches to a head wound. The heavies beat up the photographers with the journalists and tore the film out of their cameras. The local police force stood by and watched the attacks taking place. One of three officers who were nearby at the time of the attack was heard to say: "We stayed out of it because it is just not feasible to get involved"!

SABOTEURS IN WESTMINSTER

The Hunt Saboteurs Association joined with other groups to protest at the injustice of the provisions in the Criminal Justice Bill dealing with hunt violence. While saboteurs took part in the many demonstrations against the new law over the summer and autumn, the HSA took the issue into the Houses of Parliament to explain to the MP's who exactly was responsible for the majority of violence at hunt meets. They launched an eight page booklet, "Thugs, Wreckers and Bullies", at a press conference in the House of Commons, which gave clear evidence of the reality of country sports violence. The launch was hosted by Nottingham's Labour MP, Alan Simpson, who is, as far as we know, the only MP to go out with sabs to see for himself what happens. He stated what we all know - the majority of sabs are decent people who try to save animals from savage deaths and who face threats, intimidation and physical violence from the hunt heavies. Jo Harris of Portsmouth sabs, who has suffered a year of violence and sexual harassment from the Hursley Hambleton hunt thugs, told the press of her experiences. Another contributor was Lynn Sawyer, a former hunt supporter who turned against the cruelty of hunting and had become appalled at the violence and lying propaganda perpetrated by her former friends. Despite the efforts of the HSA to present a balanced view to the legislators, two months later Howard had his way.

SABOTEURS BECOME CRIMINALS

The Criminal Justice Act became law in November and between the Act's introduction and the beginning of February 1995, 98 Saboteurs have been arrested. However, very few forces are involved in enforcing the new act. Apart from one arrest in Yorkshire, two in Dorset and three arrests in Wiltshire, the majority of the arrests have been in Northamptonshire at the Woodland Pytchley hunt, in Kent at the Ashford Valley hunt, in Hampshire at the Meon Valley Beagles and the Garth hunt, in Northumberland at the Tynedale hunt and most notoriously at the Essex Foxhounds.

The dubious honour of being the first saboteurs to be arrested under the new laws probably falls to a group of saboteurs from Cambridge and Northampton who attended the opening meet of the Woodland Pytchley hunt on November 5th at Stoke Albany in Northamptonshire. Five minutes after the hunt began two protesters from Cambridge were arrested for trespassing and blowing hunting horns. Both were on a public footpath and neither had a hunting horn in their possession.

While saboteurs continued to harass the hunt, local police officers spent a most disagreeable afternoon trying to remove three protesters from a tree. They were not attempting to sabotage the hunt, but were staging a protest against the Criminal Injustice Act and blowing a tin whistle. The police surrounded the tree, and tried to climb up and pull the protesters down. Fortunately they were such incompetent tree-climbers they gave up and decided to call the fire brigade to bring the protesters down. At that point the sabs came down voluntarily and were arrested and charged with Section 68!

The hapless police inspector sheepishly admitted that this was the first hunt meeting he had policed and seems to have made a right mess of it, since sitting in a tree does not appear to fit the definition of criminal trespass as described in the act. Despite the police actions the day was seen as a success in that the hunt was sabbed all day and the sabs did not believe the hunt killed a fox. The saboteurs pleaded not guilty to the charges and will contest any finding against them through the system and if necessary as far as the European Court of Human Rights. The experience has made them even more determined to continue the disruption of the Woodland Pytchley hunt.

The following weekend ten campaigners from Kent, Wiltshire and Northumberland joined two more saboteurs from Northamptonshire in the Criminal Injustice stakes. One of the two protesters arrested in Northamptonshire was surprised to learn that walking away from a hunt across a private field constituted interference with the hunt, while the other was arrested for videoing the hunt - a practice which Inspector Nicholls of Corby Police had said a few days earlier would not constitute an offence! Members of the Ashford Hunt Saboteurs were arrested for walking into a field near the Ashford Valley foxhunt and the Swindon Hunt saboteurs were lifted for being at a meet of the Old Berks foxhunt.

However, on the same day saboteurs at the Tynedale foxhunt faced unpleasant harassment from hunt followers near Corbridge. A group of saboteurs were repeatedly attacked by a carload of hunt heavies while Hexham police refused to intervene - even when one saboteur had his nose broken. During the day two saboteurs were arrested for aggravated trespass. One, Daniel Morrow, was arrested while hunt scum were beating him up.

Recently Daniel was found guilty at magistrates court and given a conditional discharge for one year, together with a bill for £100 for court costs. In an excellent gesture of support a member of the public unknown to the sabs, who was in the court gallery, paid off the bill. Therefore Daniel is the first saboteur to be convicted of Aggravated Trespass - and let's hope he is the first to receive compensation from the police for wrongful arrest!

INJUSTICE IN ESSEX

On Saturday 19th November, hunt saboteurs from across Britain gathered together for a 'national hit' on the Essex Foxhounds, as part of the national week of action against the Criminal Justice Act. All week, peaceful protests against sections of the law that criminalise people with different lifestyles to Howard, Major and the rest of the Tory rabble took place without difficulty. The Saturday protest against the new anti-sabbing laws was quite different.

The Essex hunts are notoriously violent towards sabs, and the Essex police force do not usually intervene to stop this, however severe the trouble. Since 1992 the Essex force have allowed 'hunt stewards' to remove saboteurs who were standing or walking along public footpaths. The form of removal often involved quite serious assaults. The partiality displayed by the police prior to the introduction of the Criminal Injustice Act became outright hostility towards sabs at this protest. This time the police behaved as hunt stewards, preventing sabs from even walking along public roads at times, with the result that most did not see much of the hunt. The vast majority of the violence on Saturday was from the police, rather than the actual hunt. One female saboteur had to be rushed to hospital by paramedics, after a policeman handcuffed her, and then beat her (while handcuffed) with a metal ended stick. Many people were arrested while trying to photograph this and other examples of police brutality. The police on many occasions tried to confiscate such evidence - nevertheless, photographic and video evidence has been obtained, including footage of the incident already mentioned.

Over 30 arrests were made, with 22 people charged, some under the new Act. Two have ironically been charged with grievous bodily harm (GBH) and were initially held in police custody. A further protester was remanded into custody because his identity could not be verified.

Although some police forces have taken action against saboteurs and are enthusiastically using the new laws to arrest people, many forces are not using the new laws. However, we should not be lulled into a false sense of security - it is most likely that the other forces' reluctance to act is governed only by their desire to save money. As soon as Criminal Justice Act cases are taken to the High Court on appeal they will know how to arrest sabs without being sued for wrongful arrest. Then we will see all forces using the new laws and criminalising sabs at will.

RAISING THE STAKES

As the number of saboteurs arrested under the new laws increases, and while the hunt thugs attack and injure saboteurs and hunt monitors with impunity, many activists will be driven to stop hunting through other illegal means. Already the country has seen the emergence of the Justice Department, a group of activists who have become disillusioned with the political process which denies the majority's disgust of bloodsports in favour of the politicians' landowning, wealthy friends and their brutal hirelings. Since the emergence of 'JD' on 6th October 1993, parcel bombs, exploding poster tubes and mousetrap devices have been sent to bloodsports enthusiasts (among other animal abusers). In a press release in February 1994 the Justice Department explained why they took such action:

"80% of the population are opposed to bloodsports; clearly the majority of local councils - which have banned hunting - did so because the majority voted for that, now we're told it's not proper to go with a democratic decision. So be it.

We never had faith in the political system, so used direct action to fight the many obscenities inflicted on the animal kingdom, and proved its worth.

Now we hope and anticipate more will join the war being fought by so many good people outside the hopelessness of asking people with nasty habits nicely to stop destroying animals' lives. They insult humanity so deserve to be insulted and humiliated.

They deserve more, we think... soon they'll get it.

JD & Co."

The Animal Liberation Front has also increased economic sabotage of hunt targets and in a climate where previously legal activities of sabbing are punished with imprisonment, there is a real likelihood that some saboteurs will prefer the anonymity of ALF or JD style actions to their obvious and visible presence at hunts. It is doubtful that Michael Howard envisaged increased economic sabotage as the end result of bowing to the pressure of the BFSS but it is an inevitable consequence. Howard should realise that animal rights activists won't be bullied into leaving the struggle. The only way he will reduce the level of illegal activity against hunters is to do the decent thing and criminalise hunting itself. In March the Home Secretary has a clear opportunity to equalise the injustice of the current law by supporting the Wild Mammals (Protection) Bill's second reading.

WILD MAMMALS (PROTECTION) BILL

The Wild Mammals (Protection) Bill, a private members' bill, will be introduced to the House of Commons on Friday 3rd March by John McFall, Labour MP for Dumbarton. The bill proposes to ban hunting with hounds amongst other cruelties inflicted on our indigenous wildlife.

We know that the bloodsports brigade are well organised by the BFSS and BASC in writing letters to the local papers, in telephone polls and in writing to their MP's to support their appalling pastime of murdering wildlife. No doubt they will be encouraged to write to their MP's asking them oppose the bill and on the day of the vote scum like Nicholas Bonsor will try crude methods to talk out the bill, just as two other Tory scum read passages from a telephone book and an encyclopaedia to prevent the second reading of a private members' bill banning the live export of calves to foreign crates. Nevertheless we can all write a letter to our local MP's to encourage them to support the bill. With the widespread action against the veal trade becoming stronger and stronger the MP's will be keeping an eye on the feeling of their constituents towards the live exports issue. Letters asking for their support on another animal liberation issue will probably be treated with more care than usually is the case. One can also point out that JD and ALF actions against hunt property and the continued sabbing of hunts in defiance of the new laws will also stop when the hunting stops. However, members of the sleaze party are likely to behave with their usual arrogant disregard for animal rights and help their blood-soaked friends and relations to continue the killing.

Write to your MP at:

The House of Commons, London SW1A 0AA, and send copies of any replies to:
ACIG, PO Box 8, Halesworth, Suffolk IP19 0JL

By the time this issue of Arkangel appears, no doubt more sabs will have been arrested under the C.J.A. and more and more cases will go through the courts with the inevitable result of activists facing criminal convictions. Nevertheless, saboteurs will continue to sabotage hunts until hunting ends and groups such as the ALF or the JD will continue to target bloodsports enthusiasts for damage attacks. If one takes a realistic view of the future, it seems inevitable that the state will continue to crack down on our voice of protest until our opinions become the opinions of the majority in power. It is now more likely than ever that the Labour Party will take power at the next election and they have made it clear that they intend to stop hunting with hounds. It is to be hoped that they will remain true to their party manifesto and treat the Leave Country Sports Alone Campaign charlatans (Labour Party hunt scum) with the contempt they deserve. In the meantime the sabs will be in the field, saving lives.

SCOTLAND'S NATIONAL TRUST BANS FOXHUNTING

While members of the Royal Family gallop around the countryside in search of wildlife to terrorise and slaughter, their subjects in Scotland have been banging another nail into the bloodsports coffin.

In a decision which has stunned the English National Trust, the National Trust for Scotland has banned foxhunting on their land. The Scottish trust's ruling council has withdrawn permission to the Fife Hunt to hunt over the Hill of Tarvit, near Coupar, the only place where a hunt crossed its land.

The reaction of the BFSS was predictable. Mr. Peter Voute, acting director, said: "The National Trust for Scotland has taken an administrative action to stop access to the Fife Hunt over the Hill of Tarvit, which it has not hunted over for the past five years." Not bothered? Who are they trying to kid? One thing's for certain - access to land to hunt on continues to diminish, never increase.

It seems probable that the Scottish body acted to pre-empt a damaging row of the kind that has occurred south of the border - where the ruling council continues to ignore both overwhelming public opinion and the wishes of its members.

Some readers might wonder how ballots during the past five years in the south have failed to get stag hunting banned on National Trust land if a majority of members are opposed to it. Well the trick's in the voting system - and this is how it's done! First, the council tries to convince members that the proposal (to ban hunting) is going to cause the Trust all sorts of problems - technicalities, legalities and statistics abound - and then the member has to complete the most complicated ballot paper imaginable (when I posted mine I still wasn't sure which way I'd voted - Ed.). But, to make it easier for the bewildered member, those nice National Trust people give them an easy solution - they can simply tick a box which gives the Chairman their vote! Many thousands of members do just that. And guess how the Chairman uses these tens of thousands of votes? So each time, while a huge majority of voters who actually vote call for a ban, the status quo remains. Democracy? (Let's hope the Tories never catch on to this one!)

News from the ALF Press Office

by Robin Webb

Freedom of Speech - R.I.P.!

My article in Arkangel 12 opened with the news that I had been raided by the Hampshire Police and then, two weeks later, nicked by the Special Operations Unit from New Scotland Yard ("The Boys Named SOU" - with apologies to Johnny Cash).

To recap, on 5th August last year I was visited at home by the Hampshire Police who wanted to question me about a claim by the Poultry Liberation Organisation (PLO) that they had contaminated battery eggs at Tesco stores throughout Sussex, Hampshire and Dorset. Refusing to answer questions, I gave them the name and phone number of my solicitor and asked them to leave, which they did.

But... they returned later that night with members of the Cambridgeshire police and a brand new search warrant. Taking a considerable amount of property, from the PLO statement to the fax machine/answerphone, they left not too long before midnight saying that I would be interviewed even if they had to arrest me to do so. The next day I spoke at the National Anti-Hunt Campaign's rally in Trafalgar Square, without managing to get arrested for incitement! Incidentally, if anyone out there has video footage of any or all of the speakers that day (apart from ARNI) please contact the NAHC or the ALF Press Office, thanks.

Back to the story, which at least increased the circulation of Arkangel by one. I quote from a statement by DS (now DI) Alan Betts: "At 12.57 hours on Friday 9th December 1994, I went to 'Time for Change', Fawcette Road, Southsea, Hants where I purchased Arkangel Magazine No 12 for £1.80 from a male shop assistant". Mind you, he must have been busy because a later statement says he didn't read it until three days later.

Exactly two weeks after the search by the Hampshire police I was arrested down on the South Coast and hit with the ludicrous firearms charges. Managing to get out on bail I was not allowed to travel more than 20 miles from Cambridge which, with other strict conditions, was intended to severely inhibit the work of the ALF Press Office.

At last, after several delays, the intrepid Hampshire constabulary eventually arrested me by appointment at Cambridge police station on 7th November... the arrest was on "Suspicion of conspiring with others to cause members of the public to shun purchasing eggs from Tesco".

Exercising my right to remain silent, despite an almost overwhelming desire to laugh each time I thought of the reason for arrest, I was eventually released on police bail until 5th January 1995. They probably thought my existing bail conditions were sufficiently Draconian. Nearer the time, they wanted me back earlier in the day but wouldn't even tell my solicitor why! We subsequently agreed to 10am on Friday 6th January; I surrendered to bail at the appointed time. Unfortunately, I hadn't taken time to fully tidy up in case I was late for my appointment so you can imagine my dismay when they re-arrested me and took me straight back home to search it all over again!

At least it has given Margaret more space at home as this time they took virtually everything ranging from all the Press Office merchandise (T-shirts, etc) to my Council Tax bill with as much paperwork as possible in between. One very incriminating video cassette they took was entitled "Into the 1990's"... no, sorry, it wasn't instructions on how to blow up vivisectioners - it was about the Romney, Hythe and Dymchurch Railway in Kent! Writing about Kent, they've also taken some of the Elvis Presley videos that had a trip down there when Keith and Viv were arrested in 1991... would the attraction be "Jailhouse Rock"?

One thing they seem to want to prove is that I've taken money from the ALF or the ALF Supporters Group or the Press Office for my own use including my mortgage! If only there were that kind of money available - it's not the RSPCA you know! Once they check the account books (hopefully they won't lose them) it should be clear even to them that such a suggestion is a non-starter. Maybe they judge everybody by themselves?

Meanwhile, the search finally completed, the Elvis and railway videos (not forgetting the Council Tax bill) carefully listed and placed in the hired cars which they'd used to travel up to Cambridge the night before - staying in an expensive but none-too-impressive hotel (strange how some people think high prices are synonymous with quality) - we left my home to travel down to Winchester, thus allowing me to sample the delights of their police station. Refusing to question me that evening, despite my protestation that I wasn't tired, they shut me in a cell.

Saturday morning began with a Superintendent authorising a further 12 hours detention without charge, then, shortly afterwards, a new Custody Sergeant came on duty who decided that I couldn't have my belt or shoes and laces in case I harmed myself. Having been under arrest for about 24 hours at the time I didn't consider that to be reasonable, especially when taking into account that my tie, razor and spare blades were left in my cell! Wishful thinking? I decided to go on hunger strike, which was probably just as well due to there being no vegan food available... and they weren't getting me any.

Later that day I was at last interviewed but remained silent, no thanks to Michael 'CJA' Howard. Charged at last, I discovered that my alleged crime had been to fax a copy of the PLO's statement to a news agency. Part of the charge is that "With intent to cause economic loss... (I) claimed that another had... contaminated or interfered with (goods) contrary to Section 38 (2) of the Public Order Act 1986". This section was added to the original Bill as it was going through Parliament in the wake of the Mars Bar hoax. Had I "claimed that another" had placed a bomb or kidnapped a vivisector it appears that I would have been in the clear! British law excels itself once again - in the Animal Liberation movement we all know that an ass would have far more sense...

Appearing in Winchester magistrates court the following Monday, bail was strongly opposed. Rather than concentrate on the fact that I had faxed a press statement to a news agency, the police and prosecution spoke fervently about arson, incitement, parcel bombs, the IRA, conspiracy and threats to, or intimidation of, witnesses. As I have been free since last August when the Hampshire police first tried to question me, and the only witnesses of any note are those at the news agency with whom I am perfectly happy and the police who really shouldn't allow themselves to be intimidated by me, I can't really see where threats or intimidation come into it. So, here I am in Winchester prison, the latest charge carrying a maximum 10 years with each of the three set-up firearms charges having a maximum 5 years, plus further as-yet-unspecified charges to follow; I could be here for a while yet!

Special thanks should be extended to DCI Desmond Thomas, DS (now DI) Alan Betts, DC Frances Payne and DC Tony Hewitt of the Hampshire police for their diligence in dealing with my case that weekend. They should be commended for thoroughness above and beyond the call of duty while many of their colleagues were carrying out the humdrum task of trying to catch the three Parkhurst escapees on the Isle of Wight.

Since then, I appeared on 18th January in the magistrates court where, once more, I was remanded in custody following the police/prosecution repeating their concerns about arson, etc, with the additional claim that I am the Justice Department - for which I certainly haven't been charged(!) - and the description of me as "the Gerry Adams of the ALF". This was, of course, before Mr Adams was described by a former Northern Ireland minister as a brave man who had contributed much to the peace initiative. An application on 8th February for bail to Judge in Chambers (Crown Court) was refused and on 15th February the court set my committal hearing for 9th March. I had already been committed on the firearms charges last December. Meanwhile, an appeal fund has been set up to buy a ladder or, if donations are generous enough, a helicopter; cheques/PO's should be made payable to 'Robin Webb' and sent c/o ALF Press Office making clear that the donation is for the Robin Webb Escape Fund...

What's Happening to the Press Office?

That's been discussed with the ALF SG and we've thought it best to limit the activities of the Press Office until the results of these charges are known. It is NOT being silenced! Press releases on contamination hoaxes are definitely out for the time being, although of course, the Press Office has no control over what anonymous individuals decide to do. Releases on other types of action could be the subject of similarly obscure charges so will have to be avoided for the time being. However, the activists and the animals will still have a voice. John Curtin, who acted for a while as 'unofficial spokesperson/ex-ALF activist' before the Press Office was resurrected in October 1991, has volunteered to speak to the news media and will be able to be contacted on the usual mobile phone number: 0836 310763. John was very effective in the past; all I can say is, "Best of luck - go for it!"

Justice Department III

Despite regular arrests of people who the police claim to be the Justice Department, the actions have continued to snowball. Since last August, the time of my last report, the Department has carried out its own brand of justice 42 times to the end of 1994. Hoax devices were placed at targets in Hampshire on 9th September, one at the Hursley and Hambledon Hunt kennels, with another at a public house used by the same hunt. Three short days later, the same county saw the emergence of an off-shoot from the Justice Department; AC/DC (Anti-Cartmell/Dowsett Campaign) formed to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the SEALL's Wickham 19. Powerful incendiary devices placed under the vehicles of two prominent figures from Wickham labs completely destroyed both cars. A whole wave of devices were sent out on 20th October beginning with 13 (unlucky for some) of the now infamous mousetraps. The hunting fraternity and vivisectors scored 6 each with one going towards the live exports campaign at Shoreham. 19 letters booby-trapped with razor blades were dispatched at the same time, the result this time being hunt 8, vivisectors 7, Garetmar Kennels and Webbs Poultry 2 each.

The J.D. moved to a larger scale on 14th November when rat traps primed with razor blades were sent to 2 eminent quarries; Prince Charles, to highlight the anger at the continued legality of hunting, and Michael Howard, Home Secretary, for introduction of the Criminal Justice Act which outlawed many forms of hitherto lawful protest. The Irish connection followed on 22nd November when the J.D. decided to set up in the Republic having heard that Captain Mark Phillips was visiting that country to both practice and promote hunting. Seeking to disprove claims from the Irish Republic that "there is no opposition to hunting there" the Justice Department sent devices to the two host hunts, the North Galway and the Galway blazers, while advising the cossetted captain, "To go home ASAP".

The final known actions of 1994 were against hunts on 25th December (Christmas Day to some), with a sophisticated hoax device wrapped in festive paper being left at the kennels of Chiddingfold, Leconfield & Cowdray foxhunt in Petworth, West Sussex. That was detonated by a controlled explosion donated by Santa's bomb squad as was a similar device left at the home of prominent hunt member Nick Fawcett who has caught the J.D.'s attention on several occasions.

As I have explained in previous editions of Arkangel, I'm not allowed to give you full details of such actions but... for those of you who are interested in the Justice Department I can recommend the Winter 94 / Spring 95 issue of 'Liberator'. Amongst much else of interest it contains a history/background on the Justice Department and a detailed listing of their actions to date... maybe ARNI gave them the information? The magazine is available from Liberator, PO Box 80, Chichester, West Sussex, PO19 4GH, for £2.00 which includes post and packing. Please leave the payee section of cheques/PO's blank as - for several reasons - they don't have an account yet. I found it a fascinating read.

Live Exports - The Last Stand?

Well, what can I say about the beginning of the end which we witnessed as the year began? People power on the streets, the police truncheoning women, children and anyone else who got in the way, the right-wing press swinging the epithet 'rent-a-mob' from our side to the police, and the trucks... yes, the trucks themselves being stopped. Not by placards, not by lobbying MP's, but by people who were angry and determined enough to stand and fight.

Remember that night when it was reported that 250 passionate campaigners had forced the miserable trucks into retreat in Shoreham? Remember the following night when the numbers had doubled to 500, with the evil convoy again repulsed? Remember realising at last... at long, long last... that an end to this obscene trade was within our grasp; that victory was being experienced; that history was being made?

And then the third night, the trucks eventually got through with their cargoes of despair. Some of you thought of that as a defeat. It wasn't. It was another night of outstanding victory. The numbers again doubled, this time to 1,000. That was a victory. The numbers doubled in spite of Compassion in World Farming (CIWF) urging people to stay away. That was a victory. The need to open a partly-built bypass as a back route to take the convoy of torment accompanied by 20 police personnel carriers crammed with officers in full riot gear as an escort, more than 20 police motorcyclist outriders, the lifeboat launched before the ferry sailed, a police dinghy with divers in the harbour and more than 1,000 police 'on the ground'... while a mere 200 officers were deployed to find three Parkhurst escapees on the Isle of Wight. Those were victories. People, ordinary people... animal rights campaigners, local residents, people who cared... stood and fought against overwhelming odds. They really fought for the animals. That was a victory. There is no shame on our side. The shame enshrouds those who invoked the full power of the State to fight against compassion, against justice, against the will of the people. That shame will never be washed away.

Since those nights we have seen determination at Plymouth (despite Chris Deacon's early appeals for people to stay away), at Brightlingsea, at Coventry and elsewhere. The major ferry companies pulled out originally because YOU deluged them with letters, YOU demonstrated at the docks, YOU got up petitions, YOU organised boycotts, the ALF (YOU?) took action against them and the Justice Department (YOU?) sent them presents through the post. Now it's YOU at Shoreham, YOU at Brightlingsea, YOU at Coventry, YOU at Plymouth, YOU at Belfast, YOU keeping watch and YOU about to see the final destruction of this obscenity through YOUR efforts. As Carla Lane said of the campaigners at Shoreham: "They have done more in the space of a few days to bring this cruelty to public attention than people like me have done by peaceful discussion over years".

My one, rather selfish, regret is that I was unable to participate in, unable to experience, the beginning of a success I've helped in a small way to fight for. My 20-mile travel restriction got in the way at first but I was soon even more confined. Yes, I would love to be out there helping but, sitting in my cell here, reading the newspaper reports and your letters about what's going on out there - I don't give a damn any more because I KNOW we are really winning at last. Nothing can stop us now, no police, no political double-dealing, no half-truths or half-promises can stand between us and justice for our brothers and sisters of other species. I am in here for the simple reason that we are winning and they cannot stop us. They don't know what to do. They have lost control of the situation. Animal Liberation is an achievable reality. Don't listen to the faint-hearted, don't listen to the "stop the calves - but not the sheep" brigade, don't listen to those who wish to compromise. We have no right, no authority, to compromise with the lives of others. We are on the first rung of the ladder to attaining our dreams. To all of you out there - be strong, don't stop. The future is ours. Thanks so much.

Prisoner Support

I was remanded by the court on Monday 9th January, processed through prison reception by 8.30pm that evening and on the wing by 9pm. By Thursday evening that week I had received 20 letters and cards, including two from Gurj and one from Keith. Margaret had been swamped with calls back home, among them messages of support from Angie and Gurj. I have also had a lot of welcome visits. If you are mad enough to want to visit me please call Sally on 0243 527651 to check the rota. Thanks!

Being on the receiving end (as I write this I have been here for over 6 weeks) I can tell you that your support for prisoners is really appreciated. Your news gives us a buzz. Letters from outside are a lift and even a card with a few words on means a lot. Believe me, scenic postcards of Brightlingsea must carry some of the most boring pictures in the world but it's still a lovely thought for people to send them and an even warmer feeling to receive them. I am trying to reply to everyone but please be patient - I have to do things like write this article as well. Arkangel are waiting for it now and surely I'm in enough trouble without upsetting them (smile!).

A couple of small requests; please remember to put your name and address on letters as my address books are littered in police stations up and down the UK. Also, without wanting to sound unappreciative, if you have to choose between writing to me or going to somewhere like Shoreham or Coventry to fight the battles then PLEASE go and fight. To know we are really on the road to victory is support enough. That said, many thanks to all of you who have written, it's meant a lot. Thanks also to those who have travelled to visit, sometimes a long way. It's been really good to see you all.

A 'National' Disgrace

Although Arkangel exists to promote unity within the Animal Protection Movement and I have spent much time and energy promoting similar attitudes, I had begun to think that such efforts were becoming futile. However, in view of the recent escalation of vitriol from the so-called 'Nationals' against the grass-roots I would go further. Many of the people who are being employed by national organisations are no longer part of our movement, they: care more about promoting their respective organisations than getting on with the job in hand; do not represent the majority view of their members; do not recognise the work and effectiveness of the grass-roots; and most certainly fail to speak up for our non-human brothers and sisters whom they are being PAID to represent. In short, they are a disgrace.

Am I being too harsh? Let us examine just a few facts that are probably just the tip of the iceberg. Compassion In World Farming (CIWF) had been arranging banner demos at Shoreham, not far from their HQ, for about two months with no national publicity and no effect. On the first night of the trucks being turned back, the local CIWF contact told people not to shout, just to quietly hold up banners and even went so far as to help the police remove blocks of wood from the roadway in an effort to get the lorries through on their journey to hell. Subsequently, paid directors and senior staff at CIWF (Joyce D'Silva, Phil Lymbery, Peter Stevenson and, to a slightly lesser degree, John Callaghan) used the national media to call upon people not to go to Shoreham, at the same time condemning the demonstrators for their actions. (What are they going to do about Carla Lane and the others who they have used so much in the past?)

In short, they called on people NOT to stop live exports! Who do they think they represent? Since then, of course, they have realised that it really is CIWF members, local residents and the grass-roots who are grabbing the headlines and stopping the trade so the same motley crew of paid turncoats are once again claiming that CIWF organised it after all!

Let us take a look back in time at the director of CIWF, Joyce D'Silva. Her cookery book was (and, I believe, still is) dedicated "to Ronnie Lee... in liberation". At the time CIWF introduced voluntary regional representatives, Joyce asked me to be responsible for the eastern region. Since those days of impassioned support for animal liberation it is D'Silva who has personally struck off at least three CIWF local contacts who are associated with me: Margaret Webb went first, guilty of being married to the ALF Press Officer (a sexist decision by D'Silva to say the least!). Next was Lilian Buckner for inviting me to speak at the three national anti-live exports rallies organised by NOW Against Live-Exports (you will all know that Lilian and Jim work their hearts out for the animals... and NOW doesn't pay salaries!) Last, so far as I know, was Joan Court who was present with me at a meeting of our local group, Animal Rights Cambridge, which I had been asked to chair as it was about live exports. Phil "we are not promoting vegetarianism" Lymbery stormed out of the meeting having refused to speak when the meeting would not allow me to vacate the chair. During January, a dedicated campaigner up north took part in a one-hour radio phone-in programme which also featured a sheep farmer and Phil Lymbery. Rather than highlight the dire plight of non-humans, which he was being paid to do, Lymbery spent most of the time condemning the demonstrators at Shoreham. Shades of Mark Gold who has also sided with farmers on radio in the past.

All of the above is, of course, true. I say that because, after I spoke at a rally on live exports in Trafalgar Square during 1993, Joyce D'Silva accused me in letters to various people of saying untrue things about CIWF. What had I said? On checking a video of my speech I found that, horror of horrors, I had said that CIWF were calling for an 8-hour maximum journey time. But, surely that's what CIWF had said themselves in their magazine Agscene? Right first time!

Then of course there's the League Against Cruel Sports (LACS). Well, you all know that John Bryant will condemn anything his own side does... even writing to the press deploring the peaceful occupation of the British Field Sports Society's offices. Incidentally, rumour has it that his boss, Jim 'call me James' Barrington, had occupied the BFSS offices himself in the past. It seems as if the newer staff are being well trained in similar attitudes. Some years ago I knew Kevin Saunders, a good hunt sab who had 19 stitches for a wound inflicted by a huntsman's crop. A little later he set up an umbrella group, Saffron Walden & District Anti-bloodsports Society (SWABS) to bring together all like-minded campaigners from sabs to RSPCA members. Local councillors were also involved and Kevin invited me to speak at SWABS's first AGM. Later again, Kevin, together with his partner Carol, moved to Cornwall to set up a wholefood business which appears to have become a victim of the recession. The next time I saw him was on South West regional TV, billed as LACS, condemning attacks against Boots the Chemist in Bodmin, Penzance, etc, and explaining how many years such actions would set the movement back. What interest has LACS got in Boots the Chemist? Answers on a postcard in the usual way. Since then Kevin's reported remarks about 'terrorists' and the need for peaceful, lawful campaigns appear to have been scripted by Mark Gold, John Bryant, Phil Lymbery... but, of course, I'm sure they're not!

Mark Glover is yet another one eager to condemn. Some have rather uncharitably suggested that, when LYNX was bankrupted, RESPECT was formed as another bandwagon to ensure he still had a salary. In fairness, there seems to be no evidence to support such a rumour... unless you know better? There is more, much more, unfortunately. However, I would like to get back to more positive things. At least they can't accuse me of anonymous criticism...

How Long Will the War Last?

Chris Tucker's heartfelt article about goldfish in the last issue of Arkangel closed with a quote based on one of my speeches, which unintentionally, makes it seem that I was only calling for an end to all animal experiments rather than animal liberation so that Chris's goldfish could, quite rightly, be included in the fight for freedom. That speech was, as Chris pointed out, made at a national march against vivisection. That's why I concentrated on an end to animal experiments.

Vivisection, as we all know, is only a part of the war, and a war it most certainly is. The war waged by members of our species against our brothers and sisters who lack a human voice is the longest, bloodiest, most barbaric war there has ever been or ever will be. Countless millions of innocents murdered year after year after year, with all the casualties without exception on just one side... so far. Yes, we've seen the odd matador (aren't they all odd?) gored by a bull, the occasional blood-junkie killed when falling from a horse and a breeder of animals for laboratories catching a fatal disease from rats. But these have all been accidents; the truth remains that no one on the animal abusers side in this war has yet to be seriously harmed in the fight for freedom.

That said, let us be under no illusion of what is meant by Animal Liberation. Let us be sure we know what we are fighting for. Let us be sure we are clear in our minds when this war will end. It will end when the last mouse has left the last laboratory; when the last slaughterhouse stands empty and still as a monument to the atrocities of the meat industry; when the last whaling ship is no more than a rusting hulk; when the last safari park has closed the souvenir shops and allowed the captives to become the owners of the land and... yes... when the last tadpole or goldfish has been freed from its glass prison - then the war will be over. Until that time, until that day when all in this world are truly free, we have to continue to fight this war on behalf of those who cannot fight for themselves.

The Press Office - Until My Arrest

Clearly, the 20-mile travel restriction and daily reporting to my 'local' police station (a 25 mile round-trip) was intended to cripple the ALF Press Office both in its ability to function and to raise funds. How much longer will it be until they realise that we cannot be beaten? Newspaper and magazine interviews and press reports were dealt with on the phone (who needs a fax machine anyway, except the Hampshire police?), and radio was easily dealt with the same way. One memorable item was a very long, live interview on the radical Belfast radio station 101FM. This may have been the last straw for the authorities as 101FM was raided and closed down almost immediately afterwards! Talk about censorship...

Television was almost as easy. The studios of BBC Radio Cambridgeshire contain a small TV studio from where they can link up to any BBC region in the UK. I even did an interview about live exports and the Welsh farmers for BBC-TV Wales. For ITV stations the satellite studio that Anglia TV has in Cambridge was used to cover the country yet again. For a 'Close-up North' BBC2-TV programme a crew came down to Cambridge, but having seen a video of the programme, I'm not too sure why they bothered. May I just make clear to those who saw the show that the flash car I was driving belonged to the BBC producer and the house I was filmed in wasn't mine either! I also took part in a one hour phone-in (live) which was broadcast as a follow-up to the 'Close-up North' slot. Strangely, I was the only guest on the phone-in who kept losing contact with the studio...

So, they realised the Press Office wasn't going to be stopped. It didn't prevent them trying. The day after my latest arrest, while I was still at Winchester police station, a detective said (off the record!) that bail conditions had failed so they had to lock me up to shut me up. I must admit that it came as a shock - not by what they said but by the fact that they were honest enough to admit it!

As I have said time and time again, you can imprison individuals but you cannot imprison an ideal. The sooner the animal abusers and their protectors finally realise that fact, the better it will be for all concerned. We are just going to win. It's not nice being a loser, but the other side had better get some practice in because that's what's going to happen.

The Beginning of the End

The police are still trying to deny direct action "the oxygen of publicity" but it continues... certainly regularly enough for them to have probably the best job security in the country!

Just a smattering from the last few weeks saw a timed incendiary at an hotel which was to host a hunt's AGM; 10 cats liberated from vivisection at Cambridge University; at least a couple of vivisectioners' vehicles torched; a live-exporter's car somehow rather badly damaged at Brightlingsea; and the usual work up and down the country for glazing firms and locksmiths.

Live exports is about to go; just keep the pressure up on all fronts. Once that obscenity falls then allow the momentum to steamroller on to the next area of abuse and keep on at that until it goes. You've got the animal abusers on the run, now is the time to pursue them and pressure them until their filthy businesses have been annihilated... never again to rise from the ashes.

Take heart, take strength, take action. The real fight has just begun...

Report

by the South East Animal Rights Coalition (SEARC) on the protests by the 'Peoples Campaign Against the Export of Live Animals' at the Port of Shoreham, Hove, East Sussex

by Mike Nunn (SEARC Co-ordinator)

Monday, 2nd January

About 250 protesters prevented five transporters from entering the Port of Shoreham. The animals were destined for export to Dieppe by the Northern Cruiser - an unreliable rust-bucket. The demonstrators instituted a sit-down at the entrance to the main approach road; as they couldn't shift the activists, the police ordered the vehicles to leave the area altogether as the safety of the drivers could not be guaranteed.

Tuesday, 3rd January

600 protesters prevented five animal transporters from entering the port despite a heavy and often brutal police presence.

One activist jumped on top of the cab of the leading transporter as it moved forward behind a line of police who were dragging up people of all ages and throwing them to one side or on top of other protesters. He warned the driver that he would shatter the windscreen if the vehicle continued to move forward. The driver ignored the warning and the screen was shattered, but only enough to immobilise the vehicle.

During the sit-down a woman activist from the Brighton area (a mother of two) was thrown to the floor by the police and then kicked in the head, with the consequence that she was unconscious for the 40 minutes that she lay in the road waiting for an ambulance. Another woman activist (a mother of two young children) again from the area, was lifted up by four policemen and dropped on the road, with the result that she had to be taken to hospital for a check-up as her head was severely bruised in the process - Both women returned to the protest on the same night.

Wednesday & Thursday, 4th & 5th January

On both nights, between 600 and 700 demonstrators thwarted the attempts of over 1,000 police to pen them in by using hundreds of crowd control barriers and multi-layer police cordons. The activists swarmed all over the A259 coastal road, causing general disruption and a halt to the traffic flow. However, the transporters got through on both occasions. On the Wednesday it was at the cost of having to rip out kerb stones and knock down walls, to enable the vehicles to enter the port by driving the wrong way down a one-way road, supposed to be reserved for emergency exits from the port.

Friday & Saturday, 6th & 7th January

Animal rights demonstrators from all over the UK, including three from Glasgow, swelled the level of protest to a media estimate of over 1,000 on both nights. There were several incidents of police brutality against people who were simply around quietly participating.

The main coastal road was again blocked for several hours as hundreds of protesters dispersed in groups for up to a mile beyond the police cordons, in an attempt to stop the shipments. Unfortunately, because of the heaviest police presence to date, animal transporters did get through. Later in the night about 60 activists assembled outside the Metropole Hotel, where the police were being fed and watered, and gave their opinions of those inside scoffing, whilst others sat down inside the foyer of the hotel to protest. At this point in time 70 people had been arrested at the demonstrations - with many being released without charge whilst others were charged with minor offences.

Sunday, 8th January

About 600 protesters again eluded over 1,000 police by moving out of police cordons to continue their protest, although another shipment of live animals was sent to Dieppe.

Monday & Tuesday, 9th & 10th January

At 10am on both mornings, mainly local residents blocked the main approach road to the Port of Shoreham, disrupting business at the port for several hours. They were joined by several hundred more protesters towards the evening as the time drew near for transporters to enter the dock. However, there were no sailings during either night.

Wednesday, 11th January

About 30 activists assembled outside the port at 1am in case the ship was loaded to embark on the early morning tide, whilst hundreds of others had dispersed earlier after receiving police assurances that a sailing was not planned. From 10am about 100 people, mainly locals, again blockaded the port entrance preventing traffic from passing through. However, by 11.30am, with scouts reporting over 60 police vehicles entering the outskirts of Brighton, it was obvious the disruption would be short-lived and it wasn't long before hundreds of police descended upon the scene to usher the protesters behind barriers. Most of the demonstrators immediately dispersed for lunch and to prepare for the afternoon's events.

At 3.45pm, nine transporters, protected by six riot vans front and rear and carrying calves (in two sealed lorries), two-year-old cattle, and elderly sheep, raced past about 500 protesters and entered the port. This was the first occasion that Shoreham residents had seen any animals loaded for export and the sight left many in tears, embracing each other for comfort. Several very emotional protests against the trade were made on Southern Counties Radio that night.

Immediately after the convoy had passed, cars full of demonstrators descended upon the Shoreham Port Authority office, situated about two miles along the A259 coast road. Others formed a march to the office, swelling the numbers to about 250. A very healthy demonstration ensued with protesters giving positive opinions of port authority staff as they sped away in their cars under police protection.

Thursday, 12th January

At 10am, protesters began to block the main port entrance but were prevented from doing so as police numbers again swelled to over 1,000 - at a further cost of £165,000. The Northern Cruiser, having developed mechanical trouble at Dieppe, failed to leave the port and the evening's sailing from Shoreham was cancelled. Protesters numbered at least 400.

Friday, 13th January

Word was leaked that a dispute had developed between the port authorities and the police; because the former failed to notify the latter of the previous evening's sailing cancellation - resulting in £165,000 being wasted. Another alleged dispute was said to be between the local police chiefs and others who objected to the brutish attitude of the 'Met' police and other forces from outside the area. Certainly, when only the Surrey and Sussex police were present, there was little, if any, recorded violence.

Demonstrations continued throughout the day. By 6pm there were still only an estimated 60 police present trying to control about 500 protesters. Many folk were inspecting areas inside the port, whilst islands on the busy A259 carriageway were overflowing with people urging drivers to toot their support - which they did in unison, including drivers of a fire appliance on a routine run, an ambulance arriving to take up station opposite the port, numerous buses and private coaches passing through, and hundreds of private motorists. At times the combined noise of the demonstrators' drums and whistles and vehicles horns was deafening.

Scouts reported that the destined consignment had been returned to a nearby lairage and unloaded. At about 7pm, one of the several 'heavies' hired by the port authorities was identified as he tried to manipulate his car past the wrecked fencing that was strewn on to the private port road. He was immediately surrounded by about 200 activists who made attempts to open a door of the vehicle - presumably keen to pass on a message... Anyway, police arrived upon the scene and fought their way round the car with the 'heavy' still inside where he stayed for over 3 hours until the police were able to push the vehicle to safety. Incidentally, the vehicle had a different front number plate to the rear one and displayed no tax disc.

By 9pm, many thousands of pounds' worth of high tensile aluminium port perimeter fencing had been broken down, trampled upon and generally mangled.

Saturday, 14th January

At 7am, with about 30 activists present, nine transporters suddenly tore into the docks at breakneck speed. One vehicle was not allowed to board the ship as it had a broken trailer bar. As it left the docks, whilst protesters' attempts to board the vehicle were thwarted by the driver's mate brandishing a timber club, other activists blocked the road with their cars. Unfortunately, the transporter rammed one car, taking off its front. Undismayed, others jumped into their vehicles and raced to catch up with the transporter which was, by now, being escorted by a police patrol car. Confusion reigned as the transporter reeled three times round a roundabout before finally eluding the pursuers who were hemmed in by police vehicles. Five people were arrested. The demonstration continued throughout the day. As evening approached it became obvious that hundreds of protesters had turned up (estimated at 600) even though it was known there would be no further sailings that weekend. During the evening the A259 dual carriageway was blocked both ways by large groups of activists sitting down on it. Whilst the limited number of police were busy moving people off the road, a group of marauding activists dismantled about 40 police crowd barriers and slung them over a wall and down a bank. A couple of hundred yards up the main road found another group breaking down wooden dock perimeter fencing to barricade the road elsewhere.

Sunday, 15th January

At 10am, about twenty activists began to pay home visits to three members of the board of the Shoreham Port Authority Trust. As alarmed neighbours appeared on the scene at the sound of the noise, the reason for the demonstration was explained to them - none of them dissented against the events, many agreed with them!

Monday & Tuesday 16th & 17th January

Bad weather prevented any shipments of animals leaving Shoreham port on either day but didn't prevent up to 300 demonstrators, during the morning and evening, carrying on the protest.

Wednesday, 18th January

About 200 police ensured that six transporters, carrying mainly lambs, made steady progress into the port despite the desperate efforts of a hundred or so mainly local residents to prevent them, with many of them being dragged out of the path of the leading lorry as they attempted a sit-down.

Thursday, 19th January

In spite of gale force winds, demonstrators began gathering from 9am in anticipation that, with high tide at 12.30pm, an attempt would be made to get a convoy through their lines. However, as the numbers of protesters mounted to about 230 and police vehicles entered the port complex, so the weather worsened with torrential rain and hailstorms soaking many folk 'to the skin'. By 12 noon, channel gales had risen to Force 9 and with police vans loading up and driving off it became obvious that a sailing would be impossible. In spite of this, many protesters drove 2 miles down the road to protest at the Shoreham Port Authority office. The evening sailing of the ship, the Northern Cruiser, was also abandoned.

At about 5pm it was announced that the Shoreham Port Authority had decided not to renew the contract with ITF, the shipping company involved, after it expired at the end of March 1995. In spite of the news, about 100 demonstrators gathered at the port entrance in atrocious weather. During several interviews, broadcast on TV and radio later that night, several demonstrators said the local campaign would continue until they were quite positive that the trade had ended and even then they would support the national campaign by attending protests at other ports.

Friday, 20th January

About 100 demonstrators maintained a watch at the port entrance throughout most of the day in spite of the severe weather. By 9pm the protest had swelled to over two hundred and fifty.

Saturday, 21st January

Once again, full national media coverage was given to a demonstration against the export of live animals held in the Brighton area. The event was held during such stormy weather that many elderly protesters were finding it difficult to keep their feet, whilst children's pushchairs required two adults to hold them down as over 1,500 people marched through Brighton town centre, returning to the sea front for a rally, where representatives of CIWF and the RSPCA intended speaking. However, the rally was ignored, with the majority of the marchers carrying on to Shoreham Port, about a mile and a half down the road.

Sunday & Monday, 22nd & 23rd January

In spite of the fact that no shipments of animals were to be made over the weekend and Monday, due to gale force winds and the refusal of the authorities to police the area at the weekend as the police could not guarantee safe passage of a convoy, a round-the-clock vigil was maintained throughout this period. During Sunday afternoon about 40 activists went to the country manor house owned by the Managing Director of ITF, the company shipping the animals out of the country wherever they can. Once the police appeared in force they decamped to Shamrock Primate Prison and then moved on to the private house of the Port Authority Manager, Phillip Lacey.

Tuesday, 24th January

As usual, people began appearing in considerable numbers from 9am onwards, even though a shipment was not expected to leave until 4pm. By 2.30pm the protesters numbered about 250, with the majority having been lined up in small splinter groups for up to half a mile from the port entrance road, making hundreds of yards of police crowd control barriers around the entrance useless.

At this time 28 police mini-buses had been counted into the port area, with others located, supposedly secretly, elsewhere. Half an hour later, with the protest mounting to about 400, eight animal transporters accompanied by a heavy police escort was sighted on the approach road. The road was then closed for about half a mile each way as a mass of activists surged towards the convoy. Several serious attempts to sit down in front of the police riot vans leading the convoy almost succeeded, however, simply because of the sheer weight of the police presence they couldn't quite pull it off. In spite of this, the transporters were halted temporarily, allowing people to try to climb up the lorries. One man succeeded but was eventually dragged down again and arrested along with four others.

By this time the scene was totally chaotic with several cab side windows and headlights of the transporters being smashed. One lorry was immobilised as someone cut through the brake air pipe. Once the convoy had passed into the port complex about 200 of the demonstrators moved two miles up the road to protest outside the Port Authority office, where the traffic was continually held up by re-crossing the busy main road at different points, causing general disruption to the heavy traffic flow. Overall, this was the most serious protest to date.

Wednesday, 25th January

Effective though Tuesday's events proved to be, they were eclipsed by the protest held today: As the convoy of transporters and police arrived in the port area, between 700 and 800 demonstrators flooded out on both sides of the dual carriageway. About 150 activists sat down in front of the leading police vehicle, bringing it to a halt and allowing others to crowd on and around the transporters. Lorry windscreens, side windows and headlights were smashed as police, dressed in riot gear, again lost control of the situation, chasing fleet-footed activists backwards and forwards and down side streets. On every occasion they were followed by a riotous crowd.

Many folk were manhandled by the police, with one elderly woman in particular sustaining a heavily grazed face. This person was later shown on TV with blood streaming down her face. Confronted by an immovable sit-down on one side of the dual carriageway, the convoy lurched over the central reservation onto the opposite road, eventually making a still stuttering progress into the port. Seventeen people were arrested.

About 400 protesters again decamped to the port offices to continue the protest. Office staff had to leave the premises in an escorted convoy. It was noted that all the sheep transported within the past two days could have been destined for Halal slaughter as they were full-grown animals and, upon inspection, were found to be quite elderly - probably ewes that could no longer give birth.

Thursday, 26th January

In order to disrupt port business, protesters tried to block the main port entrance, however, the police appear to have been tipped off as they were, for once, in the right place at the right time, and managed to end the disruption easily.

Despite this disappointment, demonstrators continued their round-the-clock vigil, growing in numbers to over 200 by the late evening. News came out that the owner of Chailey lairage, where animals destined for shipment out of Shoreham are supposed to be rested and inspected, a man named Roy

Pattenden (01273 400818) was fined £900 on charges of causing unnecessary cruelty. The RSPCA inspected his premises some time last year and found one sheep dead, another so sick it had to be put down, and all of his flock infested with maggots (he was also fined in 1994 for a similar offence).

In response to the conviction about 40 activists demonstrated outside the farm during the afternoon, with some managing to gain access to the barns and photograph the condition of the housed calves awaiting transportation. It was reported on local radio that, as a protest against the 'violence' from protesters, when any occurred, the local members of CIWF present at demonstrations would immediately form up and march off in protest - all three of them.

Friday, 27th January

Whilst about 60 activists maintained a watch at the main entrance throughout the night, at 5.30am, and against police advice, seven transporters accompanied by several cars full of port authority thugs - who have only recently responded to pressure and removed balaclava helmets as part of their standard dress - tore down the narrow pot-holed, one-way, side road, supposedly reserved for port emergencies, and into the port complex.

Notes: A local business person offered to cover the cost of six coaches to take demonstrators down to Plymouth Docks, once live exports end at Shoreham. Many local residents - who had never attended a demo in their lives until two weeks ago - have asked if they may book a couch seat.

It is difficult to analyse - for the benefit of initiating the campaign elsewhere - the main reason for such an unprecedented level of participation by local residents, but, after much consideration, the conclusion of this reports' author is that heavy leafletting and petitioning by Brighton animal rights folk played a significant role.

In the first report I neglected to mention the following sequential anecdote relating to a meeting on Tuesday January 24th that may be of interest. During an evening meeting to discuss the campaign at a Brighton pub, as a joke, someone asked: "Has anyone got a couple of limpet mines?" The following afternoon, four hours prior to the sailing, the Sussex Police Sea Search vehicle was noted entering Shoreham Docks. As activists journeyed down the coast road past the harbour complex to demonstrate at the port offices, a Sussex Police inflatable was seen cruising towards the Northern Cruiser.

Saturday, 28th January

As the Northern Cruiser had not returned to Shoreham, and the police - whose information had so far been correct - issued a statement saying they: "Could not cover weekend animal transporter convoys due to the number of protesters at these times", about 40 activists protested outside the private home of Mr. White, acting chairperson of the Shoreham Port Authority Board, who supports live exports from the port.

Sunday, 29th January

The homes of several people involved in the export of live animals from Shoreham were visited, including Mr. White's house, Vicki Petts' home (a member of the board), and the manor house home of J. Revell, the Managing Director of ITF. It was reported that windows were smashed, a door stoved in and various other physical protests were made. A nursing home owned by Mr. Revell, was also visited.

Monday, 30th January

Protesters began to assemble from 7am onwards in anticipation of a shipment on the 10.20am high tide. Meanwhile, down the road at the port authority offices, the building was cleared and the busy main road temporarily closed as yet another, the 12th, suspect bomb was inspected. It was found to be a hoax. At 10am, with about 200 demonstrators present and despite the efforts of about half of them to effect a sit-down, 10 transporters entered the port complex. Five people were arrested.

Tuesday, 31st January

People began to assemble in numbers from 8.30am onwards. By 10.30am, 32 police mini-buses, including several riot vans, were counted into the port area, with others being stationed on all the side roads leading off the A259 dual-carriageway. By this time activists numbered around 300; with a group of about 150 gathered just beyond the police barriers and others in small groups spread out up to a quarter of a mile down the road. Once the transporters were sighted the large group rushed forward down both sides of the dual-carriageway, which had just been sealed off. This new move by the protesters confused the police enabling about 80-90 people to stage a sit-down whilst other activists began to re-form and create another sit-down on the other carriageway as the convoy of police and transporters lurched across the central reservation. However, by sheer weight of numbers, the column got through to the port complex. Eventually, the protest resumed outside the port authority offices. The ship left the port despite a danger warning being given, as the gale had now risen to Force 8/9 (Force 6 is supposed to be the maximum that a ship transporting live animals may put to sea in).

Wednesday, 1st February

During the night about 30 activists tore down newly erected 10 foot high tensile aluminium gates and about 200 feet of fencing. The gates were thrown into the sea. About 200 protesters again attempted to stop a convoy getting through by staging several sit-downs, but were outnumbered about 3:1 by police.

Thursday, 2nd February

Over 300 protesters made determined efforts to stop the convoy with, as usual, several being arrested. However, the convoy still got through. The harbour board manager, Phillip Lacey, offered to resign.

Friday, 3rd February

Fencing that the Port Authority had salvaged and re-erected was again taken down. Activists were now roaming the complex every night, carrying out sabotage. The local Adur and Hove councils slapped a stop order on the shipping company preventing them from using the docks for exporting live animals, at least on a temporary basis, as they do not have planning permission. Between 400 to 500 protesters tried to stop the convoy but were again out-weighted by sheer numbers, including about 200 riot police.

A shrine for Jill Phipps was set up at the roadside on the police crowd barriers. On Friday evening protesters boarded 4 dinghies and rowed to the animal transporter ferry as she moved towards the harbour entrance, with the intention of boarding her. However, she appeared to pick up speed and the activists were forced to abandon the attempt for fear of being swamped; although, being right up against the side of the vessel, they were able to pass on personal messages to the crew members gawping over the side. Shoreham Harbour Board said they would suspend animal shipments for a week, while legal matters were sorted out.

Saturday, 4th February

As the police had guaranteed there would be no sailings throughout the weekend, many activists decided to join their comrades outside Coventry Airport, but as no flights were expected over the weekend just 4 car-loads of folk made the 340 mile round-trip. During an incident outside the airport 5 demonstrators were arrested, none from Shoreham. During the evening over 1,200 people attended a public meeting in Hove. The event was organised by SALE (Shoreham Against Live Exports), an organisation formed by people never before involved in animal rights activities until the Shoreham protests began.

Sunday, 5th February

Protesters disrupted the morning service at a local church that is usually attended by a Director of ITF. As 'blessings' were asked by the congregation for themselves, activists asked about blessings for the animals that one of the parishioners was inflicting pain and suffering upon.

Tuesday, 7th February

A High Court judge ruled that ITF had a right to ship live animals out of Shoreham provided that a suitable berth could be found, but allowed the ban for the current week to stand.

Wednesday, 8th February

The port authorities allowed the Northern Cruiser to dock.

Thursday, 9th February

The day began with the news, over Southern Counties Radio (SCR), that the port authority board would shortly announce the result of a meeting held the previous evening to discuss the possibility of finding a suitable berth for the ferry. At noon they announced they would give their decision at lunchtime. At 1.30pm they said they would give their findings within the hour. Five minutes later SCR announced that several animal transporters were approaching Shoreham docks accompanied by a heavy police presence, whilst other police vehicles were arriving in numbers at the port entrance. Within minutes the convoy had rushed past the 60 or so protesters into the harbour complex.

It appears that, without the consent of some of the board members, the management had reneged on the agreement to stop the ferry sailing for a whole week, and removed a large bollard to facilitate what was described by representatives of a company working in the port, as an unsafe berth that prevented other ships their rightful free access within the harbour.

Friday, 10th February

At 4pm, with 400 protesters outside the docks awaiting a further shipment, about 150 of them suddenly sat down on the main road, bringing traffic to a halt on both carriageways for about half an hour. As the police encircled the sit-down, the activists broke up the demonstration and surged over hedges down the private road leading to the locked gates, where the convoy would have to pass through, and again enacted a sit-down as the convoy slowly edged towards them. Due to superiority in numbers the police managed to get the vehicles through, where upon about 200 people returned to the main road to bring the busy 'rush hour' to another halt. This series of tactical moves by the protesters totally confused the police who lost complete control of the situation, with groups of them running backwards and forwards over a distance of about half a mile along the main road, and up and down the side roads as skirmishes broke out between themselves and the activists. Later in the night activists returned to the port complex, damaging fittings and effects.

Saturday, 11th February

A protester, who had spent 18 hours up a 100 foot communications tower sited adjacent to the port, was taken into police custody as he alighted from the column. 12 activists, arrested the previous evening for various public order offences, were released on bail by Brighton magistrates until March 1st. Only one was embargoed from attending demonstrations at the port. Many protesters made the journey to Coventry Airport to join the March of Remembrance for Jill.

Sat/Sun/Mon, 11/12/13th February

There were no sailings on any of these three days, so other forms of protest were exercised, including paying visits to the homes of a Director of ITF and others connected with exporting animals out of Shoreham. A further visit was made to the above mentioned church, where the vicar said prayers for Jill Phipps and the 12,000 lambs and 10,000 calves that a local environmental officer said had passed through Shoreham since the beginning of January.

Tuesday, 14th February

Whilst over 20 activists from the Brighton area attended the service at Coventry Cathedral for Jill, about 200 again disrupted the area around the port for over two hours, accompanied by the contents of 30 police mini-buses and a couple of riot vans, as nine animal transporters entered the port. Three people were arrested.

Wednesday, 15th February

Today, similar numbers of police and protesters were present to yesterday, whilst a transporter convoy approached the port. In an effort to stop the lorries, about 100 activists had moved a mile up the route usually taken by the convoy and secreted themselves in shops, ready to run out as they approached; but the police must have been tipped off as they took a different road for the first time. However, instead of entering the port, the transporters drove straight back to the lairage. It was assumed at the time that the prevailing gale force winds prevented the ship from sailing. Three people were arrested - one for stroking the nose of a calf.

During the evening rush hour, about 200 activists suddenly appeared out of side roads in the port area and blocked the dual-carriageway. Then, after the few police who were present ran after the bulk of the protesters into the heart of the port complex, the dozen activists who remained took up a 100 or so police barriers and threw them down a steep bank into the Hove Lagoon. As police reinforcements arrived, groups of people created absolute chaos for them for a couple of hours by rushing in and out of the port complex and back onto the still busy road.

Thursday, 16th February

As today the gales were even more intense than the day before, many protesters neglected to attend to receive the convoy as it arrived early at the port in time for the ship to sail on the 11.40am high tide, believing that it would be cancelled for the same reason as the day before. Unfortunately, their assumed reason for the cancellation was wrong and the shipment was made. It appears that the actual cause for yesterday's abandonment was that another ship occupied the newly allocated berth, therefore the Northern Cruiser could not dock in time to load up and sail on that tide. The police were again out in force, with over 40 of their vehicles being counted. Two people were arrested for no apparent reason.

Friday, 17th February

In a vain attempt to subdue the resilience of the campaign, the police changed tactics today. Firstly, groups of riot police mingled with over 300 protesters in an attempt at intimidation, as they awaited the arrival in the area of the convoy. By raising the level of their numbers they managed to prevent people from either sitting down in front of the convoy or getting anywhere near the transporters. Once the vehicles had passed into the port a column of over 30 protesters' cars displaying posters crawled along the main coast road to the 2 mile distant Port Authority offices, bringing traffic to a virtual halt for over an hour on the west-bound lane.

Later, about 100 activists protested vehemently against the ship - about 100 yards distant - as she prepared to load the nine transporters. For about 3 hours during the evening over 200 people dictated the traffic flow on the A259 dual-carriageway, blockading the road at eight different points. Whilst this exercise was proceeding, others were busy shaking from its concrete-based settings the newly re-erected fencing that runs down the inner port road and setting up road blocks using great lengths of timber and concrete boulders. This was another instance when the police totally lost control of the situation despite drafting in van loads of riot police.

In the local magistrates court a precedent was established which, in future, will prevent the court from stopping people charged with non-violent acts attending further demonstrations. This also means that most of those already dealt with can apply to have the ban lifted. A significant victory for moral justice that others may wish to note... A number of protesters from Brighton journeyed to Portsmouth and took the ferry to Cherbourg, joining a demonstration against live exports at the port, organised by an animal rights group from Paris.

Saturday, 18th February

Local dignitaries from Brighton & Hove Council (including both mayors), the Brighton MP Andrew Bowden, and over 1,000 people attended a service at St. Peter's Church in Brighton in remembrance of all live exports. Afterwards, about 1500 people, including the officials, marched the three miles from the church along the A259 coast road to Shoreham Port. Many of the exercises instituted against the port complex the previous night were repeated again tonight.

Noticeably, media reports of the protests against the convoys as they approached the port have been increasingly inaccurate regarding numbers and detail, presumably upon instruction by authority in the hope of discouraging participation. As an example: whereas attendance levels of 3/400 have been maintained, Southern Counties Radio reports total 'about 50'. Such events as sit-downs and night-time activities are never reported at all - a sure sign that the campaign is making progress!

Sunday, 19th February

Visits were again made to several people connected with the export of live animals out of Shoreham, and similar procedures followed as outlined previously.

Monday, 20th February

From 10am onwards, about 30 activists assembled on a side road leading from the A23, north of Brighton, waiting for animal transporters to join a heavy police presence, prior to proceeding in convoy to Shoreham. Over 400 protesters made their feelings felt as the cavalcade proceeded down the slip road leading into the port. Further down, about 30 activists made a determined effort to stop the convoy by setting linked police crowd barriers across the road and laying down in front of them. These people expected to be treated roughly and they certainly were, either by being dragged off the road or picked up and dumped on the pavement. There were three arrests. As the Northern Cruiser entered the lock in preparation for sailing, the Brighton group Sea Action formed a cordon across the lock exit with their inflatables and delayed the ship's departure for an hour and a half. However, it did just manage to get away, minutes before it lost the tide. The police impounded the dinghies on behalf of the port authority but couldn't arrest anyone as the action took place on private property and nobody in authority was available to request that they did so.

David Revell, Managing Director of ITF, resigned from the ITF board because of threats to his family. Speaking on SC Radio, he said his parents' home had been attacked on several occasions, with windows being smashed, etc. Because of their nervous state Mr. Revell's parents applied for counselling but, upon hearing the reason for the request, the local Social Services Department couldn't find anyone willing to give it. Mr. Revell also said that his own home, a nursing home that he owned, and a business owned by his wife, had been continually bombarded in a similar, if not far worse, manner, and that his family were often spat upon when out shopping or whatever. His brother resigned from the ITF Board a week earlier. In response to a vote of no confidence by the students of Northwood College, Worthing, West Sussex, Phillip Lacey, Manager of Shoreham Port Authority, resigned as chairman of the board of governors.

Tuesday, 21st February

By the time the police arrived at the side road adjacent to the A23 where the transporter convoy forms up, about 30 vehicles belonging to the protesters had been spaced all along the side road, making it impossible for the police to use it. This delayed the convoy whilst the police took about an hour to fathom out an alternative side road suitable for the purpose. About 300 demonstrators were waiting for them when they arrived at the port. After the convoy had passed through and the police were 'off guard', port traffic was brought to a temporary halt as activists sat down in the road. A little while later - and much to the embarrassment of the police - 25 demonstrators, wearing comic police helmets, jogged down this road, mimicking the arrow style that heads the convoy (a recent procedure adopted by the police). The 200 or so protesters still present fell about laughing and applauding whilst a similar number of police stared grim-faced at the group, who then did an exaggerated, 'Evenin' all' gesture for the media by bending their knees and making blank faces.

Wednesday, 22nd February

Gale force winds prevented a sailing, but protesters were still out in force at different points around Brighton demonstrating, checking lairages, etc., and occupying lay-bys in case the police tried to get a convoy through. Meanwhile, about 300 protesters were busy disrupting the traffic flow in the port and on the A259. At one time vehicles were brought to a halt on this dual carriageway at 8 different points.

Thursday, 23rd February

About 400 protesters were confronted by a similar number of police as they tried to prevent the convoy getting through. It is evident that tension is mounting daily between the opposing sides, with the police becoming increasingly violent and the demonstrators increasingly outraged at the violence. Many of the folk now being arrested are people who, prior to this campaign, have never attended a protest demonstration in their lives. Three people were arrested.

Later in the afternoon, 30 activists paid a visit to the offices of the harbour authority's solicitor in Brighton. During a debate in the foyer of the offices with the solicitor and another partner, the name and address was confirmed of the solicitor acting for ITF. The activists immediately vacated the premises and hurried across to their offices, just across the road, where they began a noisy demonstration. A senior policeman and others soon arrived and entered the offices; it was obvious their help had been requested. After about an hour, with all lighting extinguished and blinds hastily drawn earlier, a police mini-bus arrived. About a dozen police alighted and formed a protective column as seven solicitors and clerks were shepherded out of the office and into the police mini-bus presumably to be driven off to their respective homes. One person was arrested, being dragged by her hair towards a police car and bundled in.

Later still, in the night, activists paid a visit to the home of a member of the Shoreham Harbour Board who appears to sympathise with the export of live animals trade. It was reported that the cost of policing the campaign at Shoreham to date now exceeds 3 million pounds.

Friday, 24th February

It was reported on national radio that the White Hart pub in Henfield, near Brighton, was severely damaged by fire during the early hours of the morning. Directors of ITF are said to frequent the pub and the landlord claims to have received a warning to stop serving them or suffer the consequences. In view of this and the fact that a telephone warning about a fire bombing was given to the landlord, the police are saying it looks as if it is the work of animal rights activists. However, although the initial warning may have emanated from AR sources, as a scare, the probability is that it is the work of the farming community, as it is apparently well known that a dog lives at the establishment.

Due to activists parking their vehicles on roads on Brighton outskirts where it may form up, the police are now having to use a road about 20 miles from Brighton to set up the transporter convoy. About 1,000 protesters were present as the convoy passed into the port today. Attempts were made to sit down in front of the vehicles but these were brushed aside by a probably equal number of police, many of whom were the bully-boys in riot gear. It was impossible to make an accurate assessment of the number of police vehicles as they were everywhere in the area - many were police from the metropolitan region and others were from Hampshire.

In spite of the presence of several police camera teams and infiltrators, the police were taken completely by surprise when, instead of dispersing as they appeared to be doing, protesters suddenly reappeared from all sides and began marching the two and a half miles down the A259 to the Port Authority offices. It took about 20 minutes for a few of the police to catch up with the head of the demonstration, however, with numbers now swollen to well over 1,000, there was nothing they could do to stop the protesters. On arrival, a noisy demonstration ensued. After half an hour, the police were again caught off their guard as the whole mass of protesters formed into a column and marched back towards the port. Word was passed around that the marchers would try to turn right at a set of traffic lights and enter the western slip road that leads to the port and, as anticipated, police had been notified and were blocking the entrance. However, this was merely a ruse on the part of the march organisers and, as the police had neglected to block this road as well, they were able to direct the march down their intended path of turning left at the traffic lights and marching through the Shoreham shopping centre. It was announced on local radio that traffic had been delayed for an hour and a half in both directions. To the east, the traffic delay extended over 16 miles along the coast road to the port of Newhaven. The extent of the queue to the west was not reported but was probably several miles long.

Considerable mayhem was instituted throughout the port complex well into the night by several hundred activists. 17 activists were arrested for various public order offences during this 24 hour period. The tension between the police and the local protesters continues to mount as they find themselves and their neighbours increasingly subjected to police brutality.

Sunday, 26th February

It was reported on SC Radio that the charity Animal Line, which is based at Haywards Heath and is owned by the script writer Carla Lane, a regular protester, is calling for an inquiry after the body of a sheep was found at Shoreham Port. The organisation carried out a post-mortem on the animal yesterday afternoon. A manager of the charity said the sheep was pregnant and he found the results of the post-mortem very disturbing, saying: "All the right-hand organs; her lungs, her kidneys, and her liver were very congealed. And on the outside; on the left of her body, she'd lost a lot of fleece and there were a lot of cut-marks, etc. It all proves that she'd actually been trampled". Meanwhile, the solicitor acting for the port authority, Robert Hinton, said: "If it were found, when a full determination had taken place and the evidence has been collected, that this sheep had been trampled to death, that would be very much regretted". The comment is an indication of the high profile and apparent concern now given to every incident relating to the export of live animals. A few weeks ago several animals were trawled up by local fisherman but the findings hardly raised a whisper from officials involved in the trade. The change in response could be due to the fact that home visits are regularly made to all involved as their addresses become known.

Monday, 27th February

After protesting against the trade as a further convoy of animal transporters passed into the port, again protected by a ridiculously heavy police presence, about 200 demonstrators celebrated outside the port authority offices when their solicitor gave out the news that the resignation of Phillip Lacey, manager of the port, had been accepted by the board. Jubilation was compounded when it became known that Mr. Lacey would be leaving the post immediately.

Tuesday, 28th February

Whilst about 200 protesters demonstrated against the convoy of 9 transporters and dozens of riot vans as it entered the harbour complex, coach-loads of others were joining the mass lobby of their MP's in London, outside and inside the Houses of Parliament.

Wednesday, 1st March

Bad weather and doubts surrounding a shipment being cancelled due to Force 8 gales mounting Force 10 being predicted, were probably responsible for only about 150 protesters being present as the convoy entered the port complex. However, the ship still sailed illegally in gales that exceeded the limits for transporting live animals, leaving within a minute of missing the tide altogether. It was also noted that the transporters arrived very early, probably because the police are having difficulty in assembling the escort and lorries as activists are parking on all possible meeting places within 20 miles of Brighton.

Thursday, 2nd March

About 250 people protested in their usual active manner against the convoy as it passed into the port. It is now visibly obvious that the transporter drivers are becoming increasingly nervous at passing through the protest lines, even though, apart from an occasional successful dash by an activist onto or against a vehicle, they are too well-protected by the riot police to suffer anything other than a healthy torrent of abuse. For instance; whenever a gap develops between 2 transporters in the nose-to-tail formation of the convoy. Quite often, activists manage to slow down the convoy as it proceeds down the sloped road into the port and, because they are so close, drivers often have to make emergency stops. This allows a big enough gap to develop to make wide screens vulnerable to attack, as has happened here and en route. Drivers accelerate quickly to fill the gap and, because on several occasions an accompanying riot policeman has slipped on the smooth road surface, it is surprising that none of them have yet found themselves beneath the wheels of a transporter.

Friday, 3rd March

Because of forming-up on slip-road problems, the police are now having to travel up to 30 miles outside Brighton in groups of 2/3 riot vans and motorcyclists and link up with 1/2 animal transporters. These small convoys then appear to come together in transit as they approach the Brighton precincts. This complicated procedure obviously causes difficulties for the police and involves far more expense, man power, and vehicles. For instance; today, instead of the usual motorcycle escort of about 6 forming up as the convoy passes into the port, having completed their escort duties, no fewer than 22 were recorded, some coming from the metropolitan area 60 miles distant!

About 100 activists moved a mile up the road from the other demonstrators at the port entrance to meet the convoy as it turned into the A249 approach road. This action caused the police to divert the procession down an alternative route, causing more confusion for them. However, the contents of at least 60 riot vans and hired mini-buses ensured the convoy went through. As with the previous Friday, after appearing to leave the scene, the protesters numbering about 400 suddenly formed-up on the main road and began marching off to Hove town centre. The police, having lost complete control of the situation, could do nothing more than simply catch up with the march and meekly saunter alongside, to the accompaniment of much jeering from the marchers. Unfortunately, in their enthusiasm to outwit the police and reach the centre quickly, the marchers made the mistake of turning from the busy dual-carriageway, where they were causing east-bound traffic to come to a halt, and turned into a side road. This gave the police the opportunity to seal off both ends, leaving the march isolated in the middle. But the activists again turned the situation to their own advantage by contacting the media and noisily demonstrating as they contentedly waited for them to record the scene. Eventually, it was the police who lost patience with the situation for, after a very senior officer failed in an appeal to disperse them - receiving in response little else but verbal abuse - they simply walked off, leaving the protesters to form up elsewhere.

Later in the afternoon about 40 activists demonstrated outside the offices of the solicitors acting for ITF.

Saturday, 4th March

The practice of ITF of not making shipments during weekends because of the police continually refusing to safeguard transporters through lack of available manpower, gave protesters another opportunity to process a march. On this occasion over 2,500 (yes 2,500!) demonstrators assembled at the port entrance, including activists from Brightlingsea, Plymouth, Portsmouth and Southampton. The noisy demonstration set off on the route agreed with the police but soon began to deviate by taking a short cut to Hove shopping centre. The march then returned to the port entrance but continued on through the port complex itself. As police concentrated on keeping with the procession, other activists, following some way behind, built barricades across the road by heaving rail sleepers and concrete blocks into the paths of oncoming vehicles, bringing trade in the port to a standstill.

Monday, 6th March

The Northern Cruiser had been anchored outside the port over the weekend, waiting to tie up at the only suitable berth. However, the 100 or so protesters who braved the gale force winds were rewarded with the news that the captain of the ship currently occupying the berth was alleged to have said he would be loading up with goods bound for the Falkland Islands over the next two days and the ship would not move away from the berth until it was ready to sail, thereby preventing a live animal shipment for at least two days. But later in the evening information leaked out that the ship had moved away from the berth to allow the Northern Cruiser to unload empty transporters, with the police saying there would be no sailing that night.

Believing that, in the past police had colluded with ITF to get a shipment through, protesters activated numerous telephone trees with such success that, by midnight - two hours before high tide - over 300 of them had gathered at the port, blocking the entrance, just in case. Sure enough their suspicions were justified, as later Chief Inspector John Rodway made a statement to the protesters saying: "As a result of your feelings and the feelings of other people who have spoken to me and what I have observed, I genuinely feel that there would have been a breach of the peace here tonight if lorries had come through. I've now therefore given instructions to stop any convoys coming into this port tonight, and those lorries that had intended to come into the port have been turned around and have been sent back to lairage".

Summary

This latest example of 'People Power', with over 300 people being mobilised and motivated to attend a protest within an hour or two's asking and in the middle of a winter's night, illustrates that, far from dying down - as the authorities would have you believe by suppressing newsworthy events - this campaign is continually escalating in strength of purpose, both by increasing numbers of people participating and the depth of their activities. Now, the question to be asked is: not if live exports from the Port of Shoreham will be stopped, but when...?

However, that is not to say we do not need your support. We need it more than ever; as ITF intend to shortly introduce a ship with a three-fold capacity increase. But with already stretched police resources and your help, we could make such successes as last night a regular occurrence - so come and join us.

For latest information regarding attendance times for demonstrations at the port, ring a 24-hour hot line; C.A.L.F.

An extensive diary of the Shoreham campaign will be available some time after its victorious conclusion.

Shoreham Report Update

Wednesday, 15th March

The newly formed local group 'Campaign Against Live Freight' (CALF), announced that their membership had reached 600 - with an average of 20 people joining daily.

Saturday, 18th March

About 300 Shoreham protesters, including five full coaches, attended the march and rally organised by the Coalition Against Animal Exports in London. Meanwhile, a children's march, supported by about 200, walked around the streets of Hove.

Monday, 20th March

Confusion reigned yet again for the police today. Whilst about 30 riot vans, choc-a-bloc with police, waited for the protesters at all the side roads leading to the A259 dual carriageway that flanks the port complex, about 250 activists had taken advantage of newly realised rights of way all through the port and assembled opposite the berth used by the transporter ship. Eventually, the police got their act together and began to arrive in serious numbers.

Live Export Protests at Coventry Airport

by Solihull Animal Aid

We were outraged when we learnt that Christopher Barrett-Jolly, MD of Phoenix Aviation, had been given permission to fly young calves from Coventry Airport to the horrors of veal crates in Holland and France - he had previously been flying them out of Bournemouth Airport which is privately owned but, thanks to the attentions of the animal rights movement and public pressure, he was forced to stop flying from there. A few days later a large and noisy demonstration was held outside Coventry Council House following which it was announced that the Council would not allow Mr. Barrett-Jolly to fly calves from the airport. BJ threatened to sue the Council for £8.2 million if they did not honour their 'informal' agreement. The matter went to the High Court where it was decided that this disgusting trade could carry on until some time in January when the matter would be looked at in more detail. That hearing is now taking place on 20th March! There have been demonstrations at the airport most days and more and more security staff and police are being employed - current costs are around £35,000 a day!!!

On Wednesday, 1st February, Jill Phipps lost her life trying to stop the disgusting trade from Coventry Airport. She had been campaigning with us at the airport since last November and was a leading light there; always encouraging others to do what their hearts told them and to join our demonstrations. We are all missing Jill so much and will always remember her. The protest will get stronger in her memory and we will stop the live exports, for the animals and for Jill.

On Saturday 11th February, we held the largest ever demonstration ever at Coventry Airport. People from all parts of the country responded to our call in terrific numbers with over 1,000 demonstrators turning out on what must have been the wettest day of the year! We were all completely soaked as the rain drove down for the whole day. The march assembled at Siskin Drive which is on the opposite side of the airport to the entrance used for the calves. We heard a range of excellent speakers including Mark Glover from Respect for Animals who helped to organise the march and Zab Phipps, Jill's brother who made a wonderful speech straight from the heart. He called on us all to join the campaign against live exports and to come to the airport to stop the veal calf flights. We were all strengthened by his words and he made us more determined than ever to stop this appalling cruelty. The march then streamed out and marched around the airport perimeter fence to the veal calf entrance led by four campaigners carrying an empty veal crate covered in wreaths in memory of the calves that die every day in the crates. Zab followed carrying a wreath for Jill which was laid at the side of the road where Jill lost her life. Next came giant red 'ban live exports' flags and banners, followed by marchers carrying placards and banners. It was a very moving sight. When the march arrived at the veal calf gate there were two minutes' silence for Jill and then thousands of purple ribbons were tied to the airport fences and gates - each one representing a calf that had gone to the veal crates.

Purple, the imperial colour of justice, has been adopted for the live exports campaign. The purple ribbon symbolises the justice that we want for the animals exported to cruel and unnecessary deaths and the justice we want from the Government by listening to its people and banning live exports. The purple ribbon was officially launched by Respect for Animals (in association with Solihull Animal Aid and with thanks to the Solihull Ratepayers) at our Coventry March. We would like everyone to wear the ribbons with pride and to show their solidarity with the campaign and with the animals. The colour you need is dark imperial purple for the ribbon, you can find it in dress-making shops; wear your ribbon with pride and remember the 3 million animals exported to die from this country every year. Ribbons are also available from Respect for Animals in Nottingham.

On February 14th, Valentines' day, Jill's funeral took place in Coventry Cathedral. Over a thousand people came from all parts of the country to show that they cared about Jill and what she stood for. There were very moving words from Justin, Jill's partner, and everyone went away more committed than ever before to finish what Jill had worked for. It was a service to remember Jill, and everyone in that Cathedral will always remember her.

We are desperately in need of more protesters at Coventry - the people of Coventry just don't want to know!! Come whenever you can - usually there are four flights a day Monday/Friday - at weekends we often pay BJ a visit at his home!

A Few Facts About Veal...

The Dairy Cow and the Veal Trade

The heifer (female cow) will give birth to her first calf when she is approximately two years of age. Her calf is then taken away from her a day or two after birth. About 10% of calves die before they are six months old. The heifer, developed for high milk yields, is then milked to capacity - up to 45/50 litres (10/11 gallons) a day - 10 times the amount a calf would drink. The heifer is milked for ten months after her calf's birth. During this time she is already pregnant, having been artificially inseminated, and she is only rested for a scant few weeks before her next calf is born. The heifer is put in calf about 12 weeks after the birth of her calf so she gives birth to a calf every year. The dual burden of pregnancy and lactation makes the heifer susceptible to disease - mastitis (infection of the udder) occurs in 1/3 of our cows. Every year over 17 million shots of antibiotics go up the teats of our cows!

BST, a genetically-engineered milk-boosting hormone has been licensed for use in the USA. The EU will decide in December whether to allow BST to be used here. It is claimed that milk yields are increased by 10%-20% when BST is used but it can double the time the cow's metabolism is stressed after calving, increases the incidence of painful mastitis, often results in tender swellings at the injection site and may cause bloat, swollen knees, lameness and anaemia. Dairy cows are slaughtered at an early age - 25% before they are 3 years old. Only 25% live for more than 7 years; a cow's natural life-span is twenty years. Approximately 30%/40% of British beef comes from specialist beef herds. The remainder comes from our Dairy herds. The dairy cow's meat is tough and is used for burgers, pies and in other processed foods. Heifer (female) calves are kept for dairy herd replacement and bull (male) calves are mainly reared for VEAL. Whilst some may be reared for beef, generally, calves from dairy cattle are unsuitable for beef. Around 500,000 calves are exported live usually to France, Belgium and the Netherlands to be reared for VEAL. If a calf is not exported before it is 14 days old, British regulations require it to be given solid food to help it to develop - hence the export of very young calves.

Veal Crates

The system of rearing calves in veal crates is practised extensively in France and Holland. Calves are confined in wooden crates 5 feet long by 2 feet wide. The floors are slatted and the calves permanently tethered for life in these crates with no bedding. The crates are always in sheds or similar buildings and are usually kept dark or with very little light. The calves are fed a mainly liquid diet of milk with added chemicals and disease-preventing drugs and are kept in high temperatures to stimulate their thirst but they are then denied water which is far more thirst quenching than milk. The calves crave fibrous foods but these are also withheld in order that their flesh remains white - no meat from ruminant animals is naturally white. This liquid diet causes constant diarrhoea and, to prevent their feet rotting away in their own slurry, the floor of the crate must be slatted. As they are completely unable to move around in their crates they fatten and grow very quickly. This appalling system has been banned in the UK since 1990 because of the extreme cruelty involved.

Loose House or Group System

In the UK, calves reared in this system must be given some solid food after they are fourteen days old and must have sufficient room to be able to turn around. This system is also practised on a small scale in France and Holland. The calves are housed in pens within barns; there are usually 6 to 10 calves per pen. The floors are solid and they have access to bedding. The areas very quickly become dirty and slippery and the calves are particularly susceptible to disease. The flesh of calves reared in this system is a light pink colour compared to the crate-reared calves whose flesh is unnaturally white.

Slaughter

Calves are slaughtered between 14 and 26 weeks and about 50% of their meat is returned to this country to meet the demand for Veal meat. Both systems of rearing Veal prevent the animals from living in their natural environment and subject them to fear, pain, stress, disease and physical discomfort.

Both systems of production must be banned.

Arkangel Back Issues, T-Shirts and Cards

Back Issues of Arkangel: Numbers 2,3 & 4 are still available and FREE OF CHARGE! (But please send 50p per magazine to cover the postage.)

T-Shirts: Two different designs are available - the pictures from the covers of Arkangels 7 (as shown here) and 8. They come in B/W and are XL only. £6.00 inc. p&p.

Cards: A set of three cat 'surimpressions' postcards donated by Brigitte Jacques. Prices are: 35p each, 3 for £1, 50-99 cards 20p each, 100-499 cards 15p each and 500 cards or more 12p each. Please add 25p p&p for orders less than 50 cards.

A5 Size Cards: Printed on recycled paper featuring the brilliant and unique cover design of Arkangel 11 (with envelopes) 50p each inc. p&p.

Order from:

Arkangel, BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX. Please make cheques payable to 'Arkangel'.

TAIL ENDS

Set up in 1992 by several vegans, Tail Ends is a small animal rescue group run entirely on a voluntary basis; joining forces with the independent network of individuals operating throughout the country on shoestring budgets to provide a non-destructive alternative to the 'traditional' option provided by larger welfare bodies whose solution to unwanted animals is euthanasia by the thousands. Having been involved in most aspects of the AR movement for many years and seen the suffering inflicted on animals, we were inevitably drawn into the grassroots (hands on) side of it; a side, incidentally, that's regarded cynically by a few in the movement.

Whilst continuing as individuals to campaign for radical change as a whole, the aims of Tail Ends itself are four fold:

1) To care for and (where possible) relocate abused or abandoned animals and to hospitalise sick, injured or orphaned wildlife within the London area, equipping them for release to take their chances in the wild in the event of their complete recovery. Euthanasia is only considered as a last resort for those animals in which severe, prolonged disease has failed to respond to any treatment.

2) to provide homeopathic and herbal treatment in preference to allopathic medicine wherever possible or appropriate (in keeping with the vegan ethic); to encourage the use of vegan diets for those animals that can adapt to them readily - we find that even the oldest dogs make this transition happily (and often prefer it to a lifetime of Chum!), but of course one has to look at each case individually. For example, cats are a more complex proposition than dogs, some adapt and some don't (NB; a vegan supplement must be provided with their meal as feline bodies cannot manufacture their own taurine).

3) To neuter and spay rescued animals before re-homing where appropriate and to encourage neutering and spaying of companion animals wherever possible. We also provide a contribution towards the cost of the operation for people on low incomes, but this is entirely dependent on our available funds.

4) To found a sanctuary base outside London as a permanent home for those animals who cannot be rehomed because of their advanced years, illness or insurmountable behavioural problems.

Because we work from our home our space is limited; to a large extent our progress towards achieving our goals has been slow, hampered as it has been by financial setbacks and a continually increasing influx of animals without adequate facilities to provide for them. We are no longer able to demand so much from our foster homes and good permanent homes (particularly for problem animals) are few and far between. So, as in everyone else's case, our begging bowls are always out, not just for money but for good homes. Funds are extremely limited so public support is essential (we are not a charity) either to help with running costs or towards our project for the summer when we hope to erect two large aviaries, funds permitting.

We have found it is all too easy to get disillusioned when there are so few messages of hope in a movement that seldom sees positive steps towards alleviating the suffering of animals, but when, like us, you see a dog that has been close to death for a week open its eyes and weakly wag its tail, or you see a bird fly after two months of paralysis when you'd been convinced it wouldn't even survive, then there is nothing to equal the magic of those brief moments when you remember exactly why it was you got involved in the first place.

We do not like the idea of enslavement ('pet' keeping), but since we live in a world where exploitation and domination are fact, then the option available to us within a rigid system of 'power over' is to remove its victims to a life that is better; this usually means they become someone's companion animal. Unfortunately, the romantic notion that one can, for example, open a bird cage and let its prisoner fly free into the sunset is simply that. Releasing domesticated captive animals usually means almost certain death. Many of them are not adapted to this climate and have not sufficiently developed the survival skills which their wild siblings possess.

In our view, animal rescue work is just one essential facet of a multi-faceted movement pressing for monumental changes in human attitudes towards animals; it is as important a part as that of the radical activist or campaigner, neither of which are mutually exclusive. Animal rights, by its very nature, is both a personal and political issue and it is important to dispel the view that those in the movement should be fighting for collective change alone; acknowledging that animals have rights also means acknowledging their individual needs. Our aim has always been to encourage people to act themselves and join the network of individuals taking steps on their own initiative to rescue animals from suffering. It isn't easy and is often heartbreaking, and perhaps we'd think twice with the benefit of hindsight, but just saving ONE animal from a lifetime of suffering, albeit perhaps for its few remaining days, makes all the difference to that individual. When it dies, at least it leaves this life (we hope) with a different cast in its eye than the empty look with which so many of us in the movement are familiar.

Tail Ends sells a small range of recycled stationery, cards and re-used labels to support its work. An occasional newsletter is produced subject to available funds and time. Please write to Tail Ends, PO Box 1550, London, SW4 6HP.

WHAT THE PAPERS SAY

A SELECTION OF CUTTINGS FROM THE PAST FEW MONTHS

Mob lays siege to minister's farmhouse

DEMONSTRATORS yesterday staged a protest at Agriculture Minister William Waldegrave's farm.

More than 100 activists marched from Chewton Mendip, Somerset, to 1,000-acre Rookery Farm a mile away where they banged drums, chanted slogans and waved placards.

However, the minister, who has been sent two letters booby-trapped with razor blades in a hate campaign over veal-calf exports, was not at home.

As the protest, organised by the group Criminal Justice Bill Solidarity, became rowdier, police moved in to protect the farmhouse and after 30 minutes most of the group dispersed.

Mr Waldegrave has been the target of criticism since it emerged that calves born at Rookery Farm had eventually found their way to veal crates in France.

However, the MP for Bristol West, who had given instructions that the demonstrators be allowed to stage a peaceful protest yesterday, says he has no veto on what happens to his calves once they are sent to the livestock market.

When he was appointed to his ministerial post, Mr Waldegrave resigned as a director of the farm which he jointly owns with his wife Caroline and father Geoffrey, the 12th Earl of Waldegrave.

DAILY MAIL 16/1/95

HUNT followers are not in the game of retaliation, a senior follower has claimed following an incident in which saboteurs found their van with three tyres slashed.

The attack followed anti-hunt demonstrators straying on to private farmland at the weekend - putting them into possible conflict with the new Criminal Justice Act.

However, as the protesters left the land on the Suffolk/Essex border when requested by the landowner, the police made no arrests.

The recently-introduced Act transfers to the police the role of prosecuting people committing aggravated trespass - trespassers with the intention of disrupting a lawful activity.

EAST ANGLIAN DAILY TIMES
15/11/94

Calves demo

Housewives and pensioners marched with radical activists through central London in a 2,000-strong protest against the export of live calves. It was organised by the new Coalition Against Animal Exports, which comprises 230 local animal rights groups.

THE OBSERVER

19/3/95

ANIMAL rights extremists planted the firebomb uncovered in a Belfast city centre store this week.

Sunday Life can reveal that the device was left by the Animal Liberation Front - and not truce-busting paramilitaries.

Sources disclosed that a call of responsibility was made to the "ALF Press Office" in England.

But it was never publicised because Robin Webb, who runs the bureau, was in police custody.

The device was found by a member of staff at Woolworth's in High Street on Wednesday.

Shoppers looked on as Army experts moved in to make the firebomb safe.

Police later described the device as "crude and amateurish", but said that it was capable of detonating.

They said it had been planted recently, raising the possibility that the IRA and loyalist ceasefires had been broken.

And an RUC spokesman admitted that detectives had not been able to establish a motive for the attack.

But a source in the animal rights movement revealed that the ALF said it was behind the firebomb attack.

"I have been told that a call was made to the ALF press office in England on Wednesday evening," he said.

"The caller said that Woolworth's was targeted because it was selling cosmetics that had been tested on animals.

EXCLUSIVE

BY DARWIN
TEMPLETON

"It seems that because of Mr Webb's position, the call was never passed on."

A Woolworth's spokeswoman said that they did not sell "cosmetics" and said that none of their body and hair care products were tested on animals.

But the animal rights involvement in the incident will heighten fears that the ALF is set to renew its campaign

● A SECOND firebomb was found in another city centre store yesterday afternoon.

The "crude" device was found by a customer in the Habitat furniture store around 4pm.

Army experts made the device safe and it was taken away for forensic examination.

Detectives will now be examining the possibility of a link with the Woolworth's device.

Meat losing appeal for the young

MEAT-EATING will vanish as a mass-market activity within a generation or two, it was predicted yesterday. Young people are turning to vegetarianism in increasing numbers, writes David Nicholson-Lord.

At the launch of what is claimed to be the biggest campaign to promote vegetarianism mounted in the UK, Peter Cox, a former chief executive of the Vegetarian Society, said that a quarter of young women in the 16 to 24 age group, who would be a key influence in future consumption patterns, now regarded themselves as vegetarian.

According to a recent Gallup survey, 2,000 people a week have been making the switch to vegetarianism, with 45 per cent citing health benefits. The number of vegetarians is put at 4.3 per cent, or nearly 2.5 million people. This rises to 11 per cent, or 6 million, if people who have given up red meat are included.

The campaign, backed by the Vegetarian Society and the Vegan Society, will include a six-month "vegevangelical" roadshow to 50 towns and cities to promote The Realeat Encyclopaedia of Vegetarian Living, written by Mr Cox and published yesterday by Bloomsbury at £16.99.

INDEPENDENT 14/9/94

Animal liberation activist charged

A leading animal rights activist was charged yesterday over threats to contaminate eggs in supermarkets, writes Michael Durham. Robin Webb, 50, press officer of the Animal Liberation Front, who was arrested at his Cambridgeshire home, will appear in court at Winchester, Hampshire, tomorrow.

In Shoreham, West Sussex, police charged 18 demonstrators arrested during the fifth night of protests against the transport of live calves and lambs to the Continent

GUARDIAN 8/1/95

Queen's men take on hunt wreckers

By CHESTER STERN

ROYAL guardsmen are being used by fox hunts in the war on saboteurs.

The use of members of the Queen's Household Brigade emerged when three soldiers from the 1st Battalion The Irish Guards gave evidence against saboteurs in Chichester, West Sussex. The guardsmen were based at Pirbright, Surrey, 30 miles from where the Chiddingfold, Leconfield and Cowdray Hunt was in action when protesters clashed with supporters.

Bombs

And last night an Army spokesman said soldiers could 'moonlight' if their commanding officer gave permission.

Alastair Jackson, of the British Field Sports Society, said: 'There is a particularly vicious group of hunt saboteurs in the area who have made bombs and sent razorblades through the post.'

In the court case, two protesters were cleared of criminal damage and using threatening words. The Government is seeking to make some forms of anti-hunt trespass a criminal offence.

MAIL ON SUNDAY
7/12/94

Hunt bomb

An explosive device was left at a hotel in Hedge End, near Southampton, where the annual meeting of the Hursley Hambledon Hunt was due to take place. It was detonated safely by explosives officers last night. No one was hurt.

DAILY TELEGRAPH
31/1/95

Firebomb blamed on hunt backers

By KATHRYN KNIGHT

SUPPORTERS of fox-hunting are suspected of planting an incendiary device that exploded yesterday under the car of an anti-hunt campaigner.

Toni Gellard, 23, a member of the Three Shires Hunt Saboteurs, was at home with her boyfriend when the device exploded on the Conniburrow Estate, Milton Keynes. It caused no damage.

The Hunt Saboteurs Association blamed fox-hunt supporters. Tony Humphries, a spokesman for the association, said: 'We've had house visits and vehicles smashed before, but this is a much more sinister development.'

The latest incident comes after a family said they believed they may be the mistaken targets of the Animal Liberation Front after two incendiary attacks in a week.

Army Ordnance officers carried out a controlled explosion yesterday at the home of Julian and Nicola Lewis in Chideock, Dorset, after a postman found a package on the doorstep.

Detective Inspector Rob Ormsby said that initially the package was connected to the front door handle by a piece of string, which had fallen off. It was 'capable of causing quite serious injury,' he said. A gas aerosol can exploded outside the front door last week, damaging the door of the house where they live with sons Michael, 13 and Carl, 5.

The box containing the latest device bore the letters ALF, possibly standing for Animal Liberation Front. Mr Lewis, a carpenter, said: 'We've never been associated with any of the activities normally targeted by the Animal Liberation Front. If anything, they've frightened our two rabbits.'

TIMES 3/10/94

Veal protesters raid airline chief's home

By EMMA WILKINS

ANIMAL rights activists attacked the home of the man responsible for flying calves to the Continent yesterday in protest at the death of the woman campaigner under the wheels of a lorry.

More than 40 demonstrators threw bricks and stones, breaking all the ground-floor windows at the home of Christopher Barrett-Jolley, managing director of Phoenix Aviation, in Frankton, Warwickshire. Jill Phipps, 31, fell beneath the wheels of a lorry delivering veal calves to Coventry airport for transport to Europe on a Phoenix flight.

Mr Barrett-Jolley's wife Maria, 45, was at home when 36 panes of glass in the windows of the £250,000 Georgian house were shattered. A police officer who attempted to arrest a protester was knocked to the ground.

The activists, believed to be members of the Animal Liberation Front, broke through a perimeter fence in the two-acre grounds. Two press photographers were forced to hand over film as the activists shouted 'Jolley, come out and answer our questions. You're not so jolly now.'

The activists dispersed when three vans containing riot police officers and a squad of patrol cars arrived. Superintendent David Whitehouse of Warwickshire police, said the protesters were intent on causing malicious damage.

A group of 40 protesters held a silent vigil for Ms Phipps last night outside Coventry airport.

A policeman was last night in hospital with head injuries after he was struck by a brick during an animal rights demonstration. A second officer was hit in the back by a missile.

The violence happened as police tried to move 200 protesters staging a sit-in to block the path of nine lorries carrying veal calves and sheep to Millbay docks, Plymouth.

TIMES 3/2/95

Protesters turn back calves cargo

ANIMAL rights protesters forced lorries loaded with calves to turn back from a ferry port last night. The animals had been due to sail to France from Shoreham, West Sussex, the only British port willing to transport live animals for slaughter.

About 250 protesters blocked the road leading to the ferry terminal and two lorries eventually turned back. Some protesters were slightly injured as about 50 police tried to force them back.

Superintendent Mark Jordan, who was leading the police operation, said afterwards: 'I was not prepared to endanger the safety of the people here.' One lorry that beat the blockade earlier was on a dummy run and was carrying no animals.

ANIMAL rights activists are believed to be responsible for attacks on three Wellington High Street shops in the early hours of Friday morning.

Superglue was sprayed into front door locks of Boots the chemists, the butchers' shop of C. Webber & Son on the opposite side of the road and the gunsmiths Country Sports at Brooks Place just off High Street.

All three had to call in locksmiths to open their jammed doors with Boots and Webbers' opening being delayed by about 30 minutes and the gunsmiths by more than an hour.

All three shops were similarly attacked in February. Boots and Webbers were also targeted in January.

TIMES 3/1/95

Arkangel Comment

This is the part of the magazine where you get to have your say. We try to print everything we can - providing it is to do with Animal Liberation, and is not intended to further some other aim - political or otherwise. The articles do not necessarily represent the views of the editors.

Please remember - an article submitted on computer disk (in ASCII / Text format please) will save us a lot of typing, but we welcome your thoughts in any form (especially if they are typed with double-line spacing, or neatly hand-written)!

Viva!

the Vegetarians International Voice for Animals!

by Alex Bourke

To save animals from suffering and death was the reason for the launch of Viva! last October. 'Vegetarians International Voice for Animals' aims to become the number one campaigning vegetarian and vegan charity in Europe. It's already rattled the Meat and Livestock Commission's cage who compared its first campaign, called 'Convert-a-Parent', to the Hitler Youth! With the Children's Crusade Against Cruelty demos against live export in March, Viva! showed the world that tomorrow's citizens demand a more compassionate future.

Viva's philosophy is straightforward - to create huge numbers of vegetarians and vegans fast by targeting the most receptive groups, children and young adults, and via them, their parents and friends. Maximum media coverage is achieved through a determination to tackle issues head on. Unlike some organisations, Viva! isn't afraid to say that the barbarity of animal slaughter must stop. At local level, Viva! is creating activists on the streets and in schools, equipped with comprehensive, upbeat campaigning materials that are so convincing "even Hannibal the Cannibal would go veggie".

Viva's giant Convert-a-Parent leaflet, aimed at teenagers but useful to anyone, is the complete guide on how to deal with patronising, aggressive, ignorant friends and parents. It reassures them that going veggie is good for humans, good for animals, good for the developing world and good for the planet.

All information in the leaflet is taken from 12 Viva! Guides, each one covering a different aspect of vegetarianism and veganism factually and scientifically - and often wittily. From nutrition to animal rights, mad cow disease to factory farming, the authors include vegan GP David Ryde, Peter Cox, Michael Mansfield QC, Gary Glitter and Margi Clarke. They cost 40p each plus 10p postage, or the full set is £4.80, post free. There are bulk reductions for groups to sell on stalls. Books for Life is Viva's mail order catalogue of 100 vegetarian/vegan and animal rights books.

For a new charity, Viva's media coverage has been extraordinary. It has been featured by hundreds of newspapers and radio stations, and TV broadcasts include the main BBC news. Its founder is Juliet Gellatley (30), former director of the Vegetarian Society, who transformed vegetarianism with her controversial campaigning tactics. The MLC tried but failed to ban her campaigns and were trashed by her so many times on TV and radio that now they refuse to debate with her. A detailed action programme for the future includes building a network of 100 school speakers.

Viva! is now planning four national campaigns (which you can guarantee will hit the news), make a training video for its school speakers, and produce a powerful video for teenagers which will be seen by a minimum of 25,000 in the first year alone. An important element of Viva's work is its determination to expose what goes on behind the closed doors of Britain's food industry. We have, and desperately need, special investigators who are - legally - investigating the truth behind factory farming, genetic engineering and slaughter.

For details of Viva!, a list of guides and booklist, send 29p worth of stamps to:

Viva!,
PO Box 212, Crewe, CW1 4SD
Tel: 01270 522500.

Vaccination and the Great Genetic Research Swindle

by Patrick Rattigan

A few years ago, the drug company Bayer placed an advertisement in the national Sunday press appealing for public support for its genetic research programme. The ad contained the words "...unfortunately there are still 20,000 illnesses for which there are at present no available remedies". 'Still'; there were 40,000 to start with but Bayer, Glaxo, Roche and the rest selflessly burnt the midnight oil and got it down to 20,000. The reality, of course, is quite different; 20,000 and rising, so we are told, at the rate of 400 per year. The question is: where are the new diseases all coming from? Poisoned de-natured food, airborne pollution, the water supply used as a tip - all are strongly suspect, but there is another face in the identification parade which is in a different class - vaccination.

8th International Vegan Festival

The 1995 V.I. Festival will be on August 6th-13th at the lovely San Diego State University, which has picturesque scenery and modern air-conditioned facilities. There is great weather in San Diego which is close to beaches and the Mexican border. Nearby Balboa Park covers 5 sq. km and amongst the trees you will find 13 museums, art galleries, a space and science centre and sports facilities. The week of the festival will be filled with a variety of events including lectures, workshops, demonstrations, social activities, vegan meals and plenty of free time to enjoy your holiday. Childcare is available during the lectures, often by vegan celebrities.

America is a great place to find cheap vegan shoes. At any of America's 2,500 Payless Shoe Stores prices go from $5.00 upto $20. So leave some space in your suitcase or backpack.

For information on alternative accommodation such as camping or hotels, please send an international reply coupon to the American Vegan Society. However, you will maybe have more fun by staying on campus with all the other vegans, as at previous festivals people often stayed up very late talking or having a party.

The reason for the different category is the mode of ingestion. The other culprits, dangerous and lethal though they are, all go through the regular channels of reception. Junk food and liquid, exhaust gasses, even the lethal weed, all give the body some chance. They are all subject to the body's defence mechanisms in the respiratory tracts, digestive system and so on. The vaccines, a cross section of animal-derived proteins, viruses, mucus, pus, blood, faeces, urine, formaldehyde, carbolic acid, mercury, aluminium, etc. are injected directly into the bloodstream and thence to the major bodily organs. The assault on the brain, immune system, cranial nerves, cells, and tissues is a no-contest.

In his book 'Vaccination, Social Violence and Criminality - The Medical Assault on the American Brain', the medical historian Dr. Harris Coulter PhD observes: '...when the baby is 9 months or a year old, the parents at length realise that he cannot see, hear or speak, or is mentally retarded. Since no other cause for such a condition can be determined, the physician decides that it was present at birth. But by this time the baby will have received 3 DPT shots... capable of causing blindness, deafness, loss of speech, epilepsy and mental retardation...' Add MMR vaccines, BCG, Hib, and the rest; add asthma, glue ear, MS, ME, meningitis, leukaemia, cot death and heaven knows how many thousands of others.

Last week the 'medical correspondents' paraded the latest gene star; he had discovered the 'asthma gene', the gene which causes asthma. We all begin to see, I hope, just what an everlasting river of gold this new medical stunt is going to be. In the UK alone, 55 million people all with a different constitutional make-up, all with different tendencies which will, if the rules of healthy living are ignored, will all manifest to a greater or lesser degree signs of ill health; but it is not junk food, junk medicine and the rest which is causing the plague of ill health, it is 'faulty genes'.

If the genes really are abnormal in the new born, which petro-drug, pesticide, solvent dye, vaccine or other product of the vivisection lab caused the malformation in the embryo or the reproduction mechanism in the parent or grandparent? Not a question the 'gene research' mad-hatters will be addressing.

The anti-vivisection movement is losing the PR battle in the arena of genetic research. Once again, because the roots of the argument are not being addressed.

Copies of 'Vaccine Legacy-The Modern Plague' and 'Cancer. Cure and Cover-up' at £1.50 each pp; 2 for £2.00 pp are available from:

Pat Rattigan,
1, Quarry Bank Road, Chesterfield, S41 0HH.

KILLER VIRUS IN BRITISH VIVISECTION LABS?

by Mike Nunn

According to a recently formed group, People's Awareness Campaign (PAC), and a programme called the Plaque Monkeys, screened by Meridian TV on Tuesday 2nd January, monkeys carrying the deadly EBOLA virus have been exported to Britain. Victims of EBOLA, for which there is no known cure, develop severe headaches and their blood begins to clot. This leads to massive haemorrhaging and causes the skin to 'liquify'.

As Shamrock Farm (GB) Ltd, Small Dole, near Brighton, East Sussex, - target for the World Day 1995 march through Brighton on April 22nd - are the major importers and exporters of wild-caught monkeys in the European Union (around 7000 annually), animal activists in the area have been warning about the potential danger of an outbreak of EBOLA at Shamrock and have received excellent publicity in the local and national press, with extensive reports on the disease and photographs of demonstrations, etc.

On Saturday, 4th February, demonstrators in the nearest town to Shamrock, Henfield, donned biohazard suits and handed out leaflets on the deadly virus.

At the demonstration, retired scientist Graham Ennis - who is a scientific adviser to the group - called the current situation, with regards to the importing of primates "insane". He likened it to playing Russian Roulette with a loaded gun.

The group have called upon MP Michael Forsythe, Minister of State at the Home Office, to revoke Shamrock's import licence due to the danger of EBOLA being brought into the country. The United States Military has classified EBOLA as a bio-safety level 4 virus - even Aids is only graded at level 2. Terry Hill, who worked undercover at Shamrock for 9 months in 1992, said: "It is no use Shamrock saying the primates are specifically bred for research. I made photocopies of the post-mortem book. Time and time again monkeys came in with diseases. We are concerned that a monkey with EBOLA could be brought in - it takes just one".

Activists have now called upon Sussex University, Brighton, to end secrecy over what species are kept in the building at Falmer in Brighton (a vast new animal house), and to publicly state whether this includes monkeys imported from Africa. It is known for a fact that the university have experimented on primates in the recent past (1984). According to a report in the 5th January edition of Brighton & Hove Leader, a spokesperson for the ALF said: "We have been trying to find out what animals the university keeps for years. They will not say, but it is likely that they hold monkeys as they are near to the biggest monkey holding station in Europe. EBOLA is incredibly lethal but Britain is still importing free-caught monkeys from Africa. People have a right to know what is in there. We have launched a campaign to make people aware of the threat from EBOLA and we demand that Sussex University say what animals are kept in the animal house".

The University of Sussex has declined to respond to the Animal Liberation Front's demand for information about what species are kept at Falmer. It would only say the following in a written statement: "The threatening tactics employed by the fringe of the animal rights movement make it inadvisable for us to participate in public debate about our important experimental work". The University says it has been advised to adopt this stance by the security services.

WINDMILL WHOLEFOOD & GREEN SHOP

337 Smithdown Road, Liverpool L15 (051 734 1919)

Windmill is a workers' co-operative which stocks wholefoods including many organic lines. They also sell organic beers, wines and ciders which are all vegan, household products and recycled paper, t-shirts, books and magazines, and have vegan/veggie takeaway food and lots more besides. They are open Monday to Saturday, 9am - 6pm. Late night is Thursday until 8pm. On Wednesdays there is a 10% discount for students, unwaged and pensioners (not applicable to books, magazines and alcohol).

Stay in Touch

by Simon

Why an article about this book review? I'm certainly not suggesting that you go out and buy it (ask your local library to get it instead). However, maybe - like with me - it struck a chord when you read those few examples of what animals will do, and that, I would suggest, is good. Why? Because in a nutshell, it reminds us of one of our most powerful and noble reasons why we fight for animals rights in the first place - emotional empathy. We can relate to all of the examples cited, and probably many more, because we are an animal species as are elephants, rats, cats and dogs. We know that they are sentient beings, just like us, and that they can feel, just like us.

The trouble is that in our sophisticated, high-tech world we are in danger of losing touch with this powerful inner-feeling. We replace it with facts and figures about animal abuse; with arguments to highlight the flaws in establishment thinking and with increasingly confrontational situations to achieve a concrete result in our struggle to end all animals' suffering. All of these have their place, no doubt about that, but a good old emotional gut reaction is like a welcome tonic. A beautiful view, a soothing piece of music, a friendly gesture - it's all the same. They are emotional and they are nice; and so can we be.

We remind ourselves of a positive reason why we do not differentiate between which species of animal we want to help. It is a bigger picture than simply foxes, fur and whales (all branches make a tree). It is more than simply facts and figures. We also remind ourselves that we are intrinsically good people trying to do our bit to make the world a better place. There is no need to guilt-trip each other and score points. Occasionally it is good to pat ourselves on the back, each of us in our own way.

It is good to stay in touch.

If chimpanzees could talk...

THE OBSERVER 13/11/94

Parrots blush, gorillas grieve, dogs feel guilt and pigs terror: Nicholas Wollaston reads about ANIMALS' EMOTIONS

A baby elephant was swept away by a flooding river in Burma. Its mother swam in pursuit, picked it up in her trunk, reared up and left it on a rocky ledge high above the torrent, where it screamed with fright while she was washed further downstream. But somehow she climbed up the bank and came hurrying back, uttering 'the grandest sounds of a mother's love I can remember' - as the Englishman 'Elephant Bill' recalled.

It's such a good story that Masson and MacCarthy tell it twice in When Elephants Weep. Nobody who has heard the squealing terror of pigs in an abattoir or seen the joy in a dog's eyes at the mention of 'walkies' could doubt animals have emotions, but scientists generally dismiss anthropomorphism as sentimentality. A lobster feels nothing, they say, when it's dropped into boiling water; puppies don't really mind having their tails cut off.

Charles Darwin was one of the first to suggest that nobody knows what goes on in an animal's head. 'Who can say what cows feel', he asked, 'when they surround and stare intently on a dying or dead companion?' Elephants are known to shed tears of grief and chimpanzees have died of a broken heart. A young gorilla, released from a cage into a pen with a view of a mountain forest like the one where she had grown up, burst out sobbing. A band of mountain goats 'can leap and whirl and slide down the snow for sheer joy of life; and a panda was seen to trot up a hill and come somersaulting down, again and again, just for fun. Dogs often act guiltily and ask for forgiveness. Parrots that accidentally fall off their perch have betrayed embarrassment by blushing under their feathers. A chimpanzee once sat staring at a sunset till darkness fell, and a female macaque showed all the pleasures of orgasm. Why, if not for the aesthetic thrill, should a pair of coyotes howl in harmony, not unison, or a gorilla, given a chance to go outside and play, prefer to stay indoors listening to Pavarotti on TV?

In their passionate, convincing book Masson and MacCarthy plead for proper understanding of animals' feelings which may be as complex as our own. We can't speak their language; we have no right to deny them the power of sentience and self-consciousness. We owe them at least the respect that we pay ourselves. Like us they belong to an endangered species on an endangered planet, and we are the ones doing the endangering.

When Elephants Weep by Jeffrey Masson and Susan MacCarthy (Cape £16.99)

Group Update Group Update Group Update Group Update Group Update

Action for Animals

Action for Animals is a new Exeter-based group. Their aims are to use the media locally to bring animal abuse to people's attention. They plan to produce a regular 'action pack' to send out, informing people about current issues and what they can do - eg. boycott, letters, demos, etc.

For further information please write to:
Action for Animals,
PO Box 163, Exeter EX1 3YS.

Greyhound Protection Trust

This group has been newly set up to provide some protection for exploited and abused greyhounds and to heighten public awareness of the suffering involved in greyhound racing. The group supports a proposed ban on the 'sport'. Funds, support and information are desperately needed.

Please write to:
GPT, c/o ICA, PO Box 1135, Downsview Road,
Hassocks, West Sussex BN6 8AA.

A Personal Tribute to Jill Phipps 1964-95

by a Friend

It is with great sorrow and heaviness of heart that I come to write this tribute. I only knew Jill for a few years and yet in that time I came to respect her determination and especially her compassion. Jill was a beautiful young woman at the height of her powers who loved and cared for all life; at 31 she was much too young to die and I am sure she will always be remembered with love by everyone who had the privilege of meeting her.

Jill was part of a close and loving family. She shared her home with her son Luke; her much loved partner Justin; Spider and Lucy (two rescued dogs); and over the years many rats, cats and other animals. Jill loved her family but she didn't turn her back on the millions of other humans and animals that needed her help. Over the years she campaigned actively against vivisection, environmental destruction, hunting, zoos, circuses, homelessness, the meat and dairy industry, in fact anything that causes needless suffering and misery.

Jill's peaceful protests took many forms, from providing a home for a stray dog, to handing out leaflets, to sabbing a hunt, to standing in front of a lorry load of young calves destined for a short hellish life in veal crates. When Jill stood in front of the lorry that killed her, she understood the risks but typically for her she assumed that the police and the lorry driver would respect life as much as she did, unfortunately this was not true and in the end Jill gave her life for her beliefs and for others who could not defend themselves - this is the greatest act of bravery that is possible by a human being. Jill is not a martyr, she is a hero and her actions will inspire and give courage to everyone who knew her and to many thousands of people who never met her. Jill's bravery and compassion will go down in history and she will never be forgotten.

As I've already said, I only knew Jill for a short time but in that time she showed me only kindness, whether helping me move into my new flat when she had only met me the day before, or watching my back on a hunt sab. Meeting Jill has enriched and changed my life, I can't express how much I wish she was still alive but nothing will bring her back. Now it is up to all of us to make sure that her death has not been in vain, the only fitting tribute for Jill will be an end to the live export trade and to all animal abuse - together we can make Jill's bravery into a turning point in history, it's in our hands now.

Examine your heart and conscience, if you eat meat - stop! If you care for the veal calves - think about where they come from (the by-products of the dairy industry) and act accordingly; don't use products tested on animals, don't go hunting or fishing, don't support zoos or circuses - in fact look at every aspect of your life and think about how it affects other people, animals and the environment - live a compassionate life in tribute to Jill and because it is the right thing to do. Jill's death has begun to wake people up to the reality of the suffering our society is based on.

When the Earth has been ravaged and the animals are dying, a tribe of people from all races, creeds and colours will put their faith in deeds not words to make the land green again. They shall be known as The Warriors of the Rainbow, Protectors of the Environment. Jill was one of those people.

THE ROAD TO MISERY

by Juliet Gellatley

The last few weeks have been truly amazing. For the first time ever, farm animal welfare has dominated the news every day for over a month.

Last October, P&O Ferries stopped carrying live animals which were to be killed or kept in veal crates. Stena Sealink and Brittany Ferries followed suit. These companies used to carry 90% of all live animals and so this decision has had a huge impact on the meat and dairy industries and shows that campaigning by people like you works.

Because British people have been prepared to act on their feelings, demonstrating at ports and airports, we have a real chance to ban live exports. But there's been a bigger effect. For the first time, many people are beginning to think of farm animals as living, feeling creatures that react to pain just like you and I. This has led to thousands more people going veggie and to many vegetarians going vegan.

Why have so many people gone vegan? Well, the calves that are shipped to Holland and France for veal are the unwanted babies of dairy cows who are forced to give birth every year to make them produce milk. Just like a woman, cows only make milk when they have a baby. The calves are taken from their mothers at a week old, or even younger, and are shipped off to be crammed into tiny crates where they can hardly move. After a few months they are killed for veal meat.

Even if the campaign against live exports is successful we will still be left with a problem which no one seems willing to answer - what do you do with the 400,000 unwanted calves that are born each year in Britain. Shoot them? Expand our own veal trade? Because one thing is certain, so long as people drink milk and eat cheese these innocent little creatures will continue to be a 'problem'. There is only one answer and it's a simple one - give up dairy products. If you are vegetarian and can't go vegan at the moment, remember you're still doing a huge amount to save animals compared to meat eaters. But we should all be aware that being a vegan is the only certain way to end all farm animal cruelty.

PORTON DOWN

TORTURE TOWN

Porton Down can be easily missed as you drive along the A30 joining Salisbury to Andover. This isn't because it's small or well hidden, quite the opposite. The vast perimeter fence is about all the public get to see of Europe's largest vivisection laboratory. The sinister goings on in the Porton laboratories are protected by acre-upon-acre of Salisbury Plain downland, not to mention the state-of-the-art military security! The untouched downland is a haven for both flora and fauna alike, and on first impression you may be mistaken for thinking that it is some kind of sanctuary... unfortunately you couldn't get any further from the truth... Porton Down is more like a hell on earth, for its animal inmates.

Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down grew.

Porton Down is the world's oldest chemical warfare establishment and from its very beginnings it has always been a world leader in its field. In its early years it focused upon chemical weapons, initially to produce gas with which to counter the German Offence and also to produce protective clothing. Today, the complex of approximately 200 buildings spans 7,000 acres of land and is in many respects, a self contained community employing in the region of 700 people. It is protected by the military and the area is ringed with fences and signs bearing slogans such as - MOD PROPERTY - DANGER! - KEEP OUT!

The following is an extract taken from 'Spycatcher' by Peter Wright, former British Intelligence Officer. "On one occasion I went down to Porton to see a demonstration of a cigarette packet which had been modified by the Explosives Research and Development Establishment to fire a dart tipped with poison. We solemnly put on white coats and were taken out to one of the animal compounds behind Porton by Dr. Ladell, the scientist who handled all MI5 and MI6 work. A sheep on a lead was led into the centre of the ring. One flank had been shaved to reveal the coarse pink skin. Ladell's assistant pulled out the cigarette packet and stepped forward. The sheep started, and it was restrained by the lead, and I thought perhaps the device had misfired. But the sheep's knees began to buckle, and it started rolling its eyes and frothing at the mouth. Slowly the animal sank to the ground, life draining away, as the white coated professionals discussed the advantages of the new modern toxin around the corpse. It was the only time in my life when my two passions, for animals and intelligence, collided, and I knew at that instant, that the first was by far the greater love. I also knew then, that assassination was no policy for peacetime."

In The Beginning

It was with some urgency that the War Office compulsorily purchased 3,000 acres of downland near the tiny village of Porton, Wiltshire, in 1916. The war against Germany had taken an unexpected turn with the introduction of poison gas, a weapon against which the allies were ill prepared.

Initially, a few wooden huts were erected to enable the scientists to conduct their experiments, returning each evening to their accommodation at the local inn. It was from these small beginnings that what we now know as the

There was no move to close Porton at the end of the war, instead its development was given priority and its scientists became the highest paid in the land. New chemical weapons were developed, tested and even used in combat. It was as if the frightful experiences of the war had accounted for nothing.

The experimentation continued on a grand scale and the methods used were some of the cruellest imaginable. Animals were often tethered or penned in the open or in trenches and then bombed, sprayed or otherwise exposed to the various formulations of gasses. Chemicals were also squirted directly into their faces, rubbed into their skin and even applied to open wounds. Other animals were used under more controlled, but no doubt equally painful, conditions in the laboratory.

Even at the time, these experiments caused considerable public outcry, not only among civilians, but also with the many soldiers at Porton, who often made their distaste known to the scientists who were conducting the experiments. Perhaps this was out of the growing sense of affinity with the animals; as many human 'guinea-pigs' were also required to test equipment prototypes and to assess whether the effects upon the animals were comparable to humans.

It would be tempting to think that these practices are merely the product of a more barbaric past, yet there is sufficient evidence to suggest that similar types of experiments are still being conducted. Undoubtedly these will be of a more sanitised form with some of the 'cruder variables' removed. However, the general thrust of the experiments remains the same.

Hidden Crimes

During its 80-year existence, the CDE at Porton Down has undoubtedly been one of Britain's most prolific users of animals for experimental purposes. The exact level of experimentation at Porton Down can only be guessed at due to the secrecy and unreliability of the official records. We can be sure however, that many millions of animals have been used at Porton Down since 1916.

The Porton Mouse

The scale of the experimentation is well illustrated by the fact that as early as 1917, animal breeding colonies were established in order to keep pace with the demand. These facilities have now been developed to the extent that Porton Down produces its own strain of laboratory mouse. A primate colony has also been established. Over the years, all manner of species have been used in experiments at Porton, including mice, rats, sheep, guinea-pigs, rabbits, monkeys, goats and dogs.

During the 1930's the scientists at Porton began to turn their attention to a new area of deadly research, the development of so-called GERM or BACTERIOLOGICAL warfare. Biological weapons work differently to the choking, burning and poisonous effects of gas, their effect is both more deadly and longer lasting.

Lethal bacteria, once released into the environment can continue to grow and spread their deadly influence. No scientist competent enough to be employed in the development of such weaponry, can fail to understand the implications of their work, but few would be prepared to take responsibility for its application. Had they been obliged to do so, then perhaps their research would have advanced no further.

Instead, biological research progressed at a pace in Britain and elsewhere. The most popular first source of enquiry was Anthrax, a highly infectious and deadly disease which can kill within a few hours of contamination. Anthrax proved the subject of one of the most infamous experiments ever conducted by scientists based at Porton Down.

Gruinard Island

In 1942, a team of bacteriologists led by Dr. Paul Fildes, transported canisters of anthrax spores grown at Porton to a remote part of Northern Scotland. The site chosen for the test was the tiny island of Gruinard, to which 30 sheep bought from local crofters were transported. An anthrax bomb was then exploded on the island and the effects observed. Sure enough, within a day, the sheep began to die, although some were not so lucky and took a week or more before finally succumbing to the deadly virus. Similar tests were conducted on the island in the months that followed.

Once their work was completed, the scientists returned to Porton, leaving behind probably the most deadly and contaminated piece of land in the world. Yet despite intensive efforts, it took the Porton scientists more than 40 years to eventually feel confident enough to declare this 1.5 sq. mile embarrassment to be habitable again. It is doubtful though that there are many people who would be willing to take a risk and see if they are right!

It is not considered unthinkable that anthrax might have been used against Hitler's Germany. On the contrary, Britain produced 5 million cattle feed pellets contaminated with anthrax spores which, if used, would have caused havoc and widespread suffering to the Germans. Britain was not alone in producing such weapons, but it was not above producing them either.

The most commonly used justification for why research into chemical and biological weapons should continue is defence. It is interesting to note that Porton Down began its life as a Chemical Warfare Establishment and was then subsequently transformed into the Chemical Defence Establishment. Similarly, a few scientists who originally reported to the Government's Microbiological Warfare Committee, became the nucleus of the CDE's sister organisation, the Microbiological Research Establishment, which was founded at Porton Down at the end of World War 2.

These were important facades not least because Britain was (and still is) a signatory to International Treaties which prohibit the possession of chemical and biological weapons. The official justification for continuing with this kind of research goes something like this - in order to be able to defend ourselves against chemical or biological attack, we must first invent the weapon to be used against us so that we can develop a defensive response! This strategy, if it is to be believed, is the equivalent of developing a drug to combat a disease which does not yet exist...

War Games

The basis of all Porton's work is military inspired and primarily for military benefit. In the event of a major chemical or biological attack, the protective equipment and vaccines would be used for military staff and key civilians. Even if it were possible to guess the nature of an enemy biological weapon and to produce and stockpile sufficient quantities of a vaccine, there is no way that such a vaccine could be administered to the general population quickly enough in the event of a surprise attack. In this situation, the concept of defence is meaningless.

The dishonesty of this approach is born out by the fact that despite having signed international agreements opposing the use or development of chemical and biological weapons, Britain and many other countries continued to work on the development of such weapons throughout the inter-war years and beyond. The British contribution was often not of a direct nature, but the close co-operation between the scientists at Porton and their counterparts in the US and other allied countries meant they were partners in an offensive research programme. This is not to suggest that Britain was different to any of the other major powers who were also pursuing similar programmes.

Over all, this means that tens and probably hundreds of millions of animals worldwide have already died in the most agonising ways in the quest to develop new ways of destroying our own species. It is known for example that between 1952 and 1970, over 2,000,000 animals were used by the Microbiological Establishment alone. The waste of so many millions of animals to produce these frightening weapons is simply unforgivable.

Whatever may be going on at Porton Down, we are usually assured of two things. Firstly, that it is for 'defensive' and not 'offensive' purposes, and secondly, that it is often a matter of National Security. Those who give such assurances also assume that every right thinking individual will be willing to forgo any moral or humanitarian concerns that they might otherwise have for the animals under experimentation, simply because the matter is one of Defence and/or National Security.

Yet, as if to confirm its own lack of confidence in this position, the British Government stubbornly refuses to reveal even the most basic information about the experiments being conducted at Porton Down.

In July 1986, Mr. Harry Cohen MP, asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many dogs and Rhesus monkeys had been used in gas tests at Porton Down during the previous 12 months. The Government refused to provide this information on the grounds that 'to do so could in many cases enable an informed observer to gain a useful insight into the scope and direction of CDE's work to the detriment of National Security'. Such is the seriousness with which successive Governments have viewed the secrecy of the experiments conducted at Porton Down that only those completed during its early years have been comprehensively published. Scientists working at Porton Down may only freely publish the results of their work if it is not deemed to be a matter of National Security. Apparently, such experiments make up only a small percentage of the total. A recent computer search conducted by the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection revealed only nine published experiments from Porton Down during the last two years.

Mice & Men

One of these published papers revealed how G.D.D'Mello, conducted a series of experiments to assess the effects of sodium cyanide upon the swimming performance of guinea pigs. The guinea pigs were placed in a tank which was 305 cms long and 10 cms wide and was filled with water to the depth of 28 cm. The purpose of this test was to see if the animals could swim to the safety platform at the opposite end of the tank and to what extent their performance was impaired when dosed with sodium cyanide. Some animals were also treated with another chemical to see if this reduced the effects of the sodium cyanide, which it did. A number of animals died immediately as a result of the cyanide injection. Many others failed to reach the platform within 30 seconds or turned around and began swimming in the wrong direction. The scientist concluded that although the other substance known as PAPP did offer protection against the effects of sodium cyanide, the experiment was of little direct relevance to the treatment of cyanide poisoning in humans.

Conclusion

Very little information about the experiments conducted at Porton Down has ever been made publicly available. This is perhaps not surprising as its laboratories must have housed some of the most ghastly and cruel experiments ever undertaken in Britain. Unlike most other centres of research, Porton Down specialises in the study of substances which have been developed to kill, mutilate and disable other living things. Millions of animals have become the first victims of the terrifying future scenario of chemical and biological war, while others have been sacrificed to test nerve and riot control gasses and also the wounding effects of ballistic weapons.

All of these dreadful experiments are conducted at taxpayers' expense, but not necessarily with their consent. It is for this reason that Porton Down remains the most secret laboratory in Britain to date.

For further information about the fraud of vivisection contact:

The British Anti-Vivisection Association
PO Box 82, Kingswood, Bristol, BS15 1YF

This article is based on a leaflet available from;

Y.A.A.
PO Box 1760, Yeovil, Somerset BA21 5PN

PSYCHO ANALYSIS

by Keith Mann

The one aspect of animal abuse that tends to play on my mind more often than the others is vivisection. I feel a little uncomfortable saying that because, however short-lived and brutal the treatment of, say, battery hens or lobsters is, their suffering is beyond comprehension, and as far as the individuals are concerned it is the worst thing that could ever happen. We all have our pet hates, so to speak, and this is mine; there is something about vivisection which strikes a deeper chord. And I want to talk about it. I have to debate the reasons for this with myself because it is difficult to understand my discrimination against baited badgers and goldfish in bowls. It is all very wrong, as much as it is possible to be in fact, but as our species evolves its attitudes towards other animals things will be put right. They are being put right; a great deal of progress has already been made in a remarkably short period of time.

Taking vivisection aside, this is a practice which, if we are to believe the people who supply the statistics (the same people who carry out the experiments) causes around three million animals to be put to death in some of the most detestable ways every year in this country, not forgetting those animals that live on through the years in long-term experiments. Assuming, as I do, they are lying about this number on the grounds that they are renowned as liars and it's in their interests to do so, this is probably half the true figure. But no matter 3,6,9,1 million, it's an awful lot of suffering and it's a relatively small number of people responsible.

There are around 17,000 licenced vivisectioners (or animal technicians as they prefer to be known) thinking, I suppose, that this somehow makes what they do less evil. There are 334 laboratories licenced to brutalise animals; mammals, birds, fish, though again not all participate. The main suppliers of the necessary materials; the cages, food, bedding, etc. come from around 15 sources and the animals from 25. These people are solely responsible for making a profit from their wares. If vivisection were outlawed tomorrow the only losers would be this small community. No one outside it would be affected adversely and most people would fail to notice anything had changed. If pharmaceutical companies wanted to continue producing new drugs and other chemical preparations, as indeed they would, there would be no problem. It would simply mean that they would then have to test their stuff properly but it would cost them more. They can well afford it and in return fewer people would suffer and die by having been contaminated by something that worked quite well in another species in crude, artificial laboratory experiments. And there's now the additional problem of the Ebola virus which adds considerable weight to the argument that messing with these creatures is not good for people. Alternatively, they could move their operations abroad where opposition is not so fierce, but they could only run so far and hide for so long because what they do will always be wrong and will continue to cause the same inherent species-barrier type problems for however long it goes on. And that will probably be their ultimate downfall. The law in this country is no excuse for them continuing to torture animals. They don't have to do these things to meet legal requirements that their products are safe for humans. They just have to meet legal requirements that their products have been safely tested by using animals. This practice is not only unethical but must be, by definition, breaking the next law down the list; the criminal law.

This 'secret society' has no intention of abandoning its programme of extermination just because it is cruel and unnecessary. If they dared open the doors of their laboratories and let the truth be known they would be abhorred by the masses; but it isn't fair that the people who know what's happening and where should have those animals wait for the masses to mobilise. It is probably a safe bet that it will be sometime yet before enough people reject the products that are tested on animals to such an extent that the producers find it a better position financially to abandon the convenience of animal experiments.

Boycotts have an effect; the Boots campaign is a particularly good example for they are on the high street and have their own laboratories and stocks of beagles. They experiment with their own products using animals, for just about every concoction they sell began its life being fed into one species or another in gross quantities. They, of course, deny they test their cosmetics on animals, but why shouldn't they? They didn't get all overcome by compassion otherwise they wouldn't continue to sell aftershave, suntan lotion and all that stuff as well as drugs and cough mixtures, etc. which either they or some other bunch of bastards tested on animals. Boots are an excellent focus for the anti-vivisection campaign, and maybe the boycott is a contributory factor in the company abandoning the drugs division. They will not publicly admit as much and they won't admit to how much harm the campaign of economic sabotage is doing so that's a good start.

It is clear to see the effect caused by the relatively small number of people pursuing the campaigns of economic sabotage and revenge, harassment, retribution or whatever makes you feel best. Hyline Rabbits is the most recent and appropriate example because they were honest enough to tell the truth about their demise; the teams of burners, breakers, bombers and burglars who have made business a bit of a bummer over the years and which finally brought this chapter to an end in June 1994 after a particularly intensive period of activity in the preceding few months. Unfortunately, without this sort of commitment in the boycott campaigns, their true worth will never be met. If 'animal lovers' are not able to shed their lives of bleaches and washing products of environmental and animal unfriendliness, then who will? The 'vegan police' were reported as saying 'the offending rate is sadly high - it needs sorting. Detector vans will be on patrol in all areas by the weekend'.

Within the spooky world of the vivisectors and their providers there are a hard core of suppliers who keep the stunted and shrinking monster of vivisection alive. Most of these, excluding the animal suppliers, have other outlets for their products, more legitimate businesses, so the vivisectors are not their sole source of income. Those who supply the science diets, the boring sludge in pellet form, the metal workers who make the cages, washers and racks, the plastic cage and isolator makers, the animal carrying boxes, clothing, tattoo and mutilation equipment firms all have other outlets for other products so all isn't lost by avoiding the vivisectors. Whereas although times are hard, if the bees started stinging things could deteriorate significantly. That would be illegal though and it's not good to incite criminal activity, that isn't of course what I'm doing, but some government boot boys might suggest otherwise and then they'll send me to jail again. Of course, if like-minded people choose to attack from that angle then that is entirely their business. Septic people and their companies can be treated or destroyed by perfectly legal methods and some of these might well be devious, underhand and downright out of order, but what's good for the goose...

There are many more opponents of vivisection than participants; there are, more importantly, more active opponents than participants, and so great potential to cause havoc can be wrought amongst their ranks if there is the desire to do so. I lie here sometimes wondering how things might be if every one of the shits involved in this business had to live with as much torment as even those laboratory animals suffering just the mildest level of discomfort (mild, moderate and severe being their prescribed levels, physical, emotional and psychological of course and left wondering every day "what's next?"). Constantly having their minds occupied, like their roof-tops, by those f.....g animal libbers.

Shamrock Farms and most of those involved in what's going on there are well occupied with our lot; workers cars damaged, bomb hoaxes, lock-ins, dodgy parcels through the post, demos, World Day 1995, their staff infiltrated by one of the good guys (albeit working for a less than competent animal welfare organisation), and lastly having all that police and press around isn't good for any business, especially not one which imports and supplies primates to vivisectors. It is only a matter of time before they call it a day and everyone on either side of the compound gates knows it. Before civil disobedience was deployed to take on Hyline Rabbits in a renewed campaign by local activists, they succumb to the bee-sting and no doubt, the knowledge that any day now that lot will be loose around the place up to all sorts on a regular basis.

Like the dairy industry, the end of vivisection always used to feel like a distant dream. But not any more! There is something in the air! The veal/live export campaign has shaken the dairy industry to its roots and shattered the milk myth virtually overnight; and at long last the dairy cow is getting the attention she so desperately deserves. Vernon Coleman has the confidence to work towards the abolition of vivisection by the year 2000, that probably gives him the worthy distinction of being the world's most optimistic anti-vivisectionist. Given that the scum fought tooth and nail to protect their licence to continue torturing the 16,000 or so animals used per annum in cosmetic experiments until 1998 at the very least purely because they want to, doesn't auger well for them volunteering away the other 3 million or so without some serious persuasion. I admire Vernon Coleman's confidence but I fear, even if we had all the arguments countered, which we do, an interested government, which we don't, and the vast majority of the population in opposition, albeit passive, which we won't have as long as people think their worthy of and are to benefit from what the scientists do to animals then it's going to take something more.

I really do believe we have the power to see off the vivisectors sooner rather than later if we believe in our phenomenal potential and have the will to do it, if we use our imagination, and, trickiest and most difficult of all from the moderate softly, softly perspective, if we work at it together. One mass movement of angry, compassionate, dedicated and determined people with one purpose and no facility to compromise would be too much for that bunch of lying, sadistic, 'wanna-be gods' to contend with. The politicians are not going to stop them for they are preoccupied with collecting money and being important, so it is our problem and those responsible for all that savagery they call science. They simply can't be permitted to go on for the next 30 years publishing catalogues of the myriad different species they have interfered with and butchered, slowly reducing the numbers year by year so we all feel good. NAH! There have to be better ideas floating around.

April 22nd - World Day Events at Brighton

As Shoreham, East Sussex, is now firmly established as the place where the 'Peoples Campaign Against The Export Of Live Animals' began in earnest, regardless of whether or not animals are still being shipped out of the port, World Day commemoration events at East Sussex have been revised to include a mass demonstration by local residents and animal rights folk against the export of live animals in general. Accordingly, the Brighton rally and hall facilities have been cancelled. The revised 'programme of events' is now as follows:

For the march; assemble Preston Park, Brighton (just off the A23) from 1pm for a 2pm start (plenty of parking nearby). The march will proceed through the centre of Brighton and finish at the sea front on the A259. For the protest against the export of live animals; assemble at the Port of Call pub (less than 2 miles west along the A259) from 6pm onwards.

We anticipate considerable support for World Day 1995 at Brighton: Groups already committed to attending are coming from several towns in Kent, East and West Sussex, Wales, and Kidderminster, Cambridge, Luton, Plymouth, Andover, Birmingham, Manchester and elsewhere.

Luton Animal Rights are organising a coach and have seats available, price £6.00. Details: Anne Phair - 0582 504955 (evenings). Please advise 'Coaches' at the Bexhill address if you are organising a coach from your area as we need to arrange parking with Brighton police.

The 1994 World Day march against Shamrock was held over a 2 mile long route through Brighton town centre. It was so active it lasted for 3 hours. There were seven sit-downs, with wreath-laying ceremonies accompanied by a minute's silence at the doors of Boots the Vivisectors, McDonalds and other animal abusers. Nearly everyone participated in the sit-downs and yet there were no arrests. Whilst this was truly an activists' march the participants behaved in a thoroughly responsible manner, resulting in excellent feedback from the public at the stalls which have been held throughout the summer.

Join us in Brighton on April 22nd, 1995 and help to make these 1995 World Day demonstrations even more effective.

An active campaign by the ALF and other groups has recently forced the closure of Hyline Rabbits, proving the abusers can be stopped. We need your help to close Shamrock Farm (UK) Ltd., the major importers of primates caught in the wild in the European Union. Please join the already committed and send us an assurance that you and/or your local animal rights group will be attending the demonstrations on April 22nd 1995, by writing to:

WD 1995, 19a Amherst Rd., Bexhill, East Sussex TN40 1QH, or by ringing 0424 730154.

We look forward to hearing from you.

ARCTIC FOX FARM CLOSES

'Ban Bradford Fur Farm' (BBFF) was set up about a year ago to raise public awareness about a fur farm which was being operated, unbeknown to the local residents, on a council estate in Bradford.

For approximately 5 years, John Lalor of Scholemoor, Bradford has kept the last known arctic fox farm at the bottom of the garden behind his house to the bewilderment of his neighbours.

Arctic Foxes in Summer and Winter coats

Lalor, who was convicted last year of stabbing one of his sons, does as he pleases on the farm; the law does not even require him to seek a licence. The highlight of the campaign was a demonstration held on 5th November 1994 with over 200 people attending. Shortly after this demonstration Mr. Lalor announced the closure of his fox farm. Our thanks to all those who supported the campaign.

However, campaigners are still concerned that other operations could still be existence. This farm was discovered purely by chance. It was characterised by a 7ft perimeter wall of corrugated iron. To the onlooker it looks like a scrap yard. The group believes the Scholemoor foxes have been sold onto unknown buyers and want to know where they are.

If you have any information about these foxes or any other similar establishments then please contact:

*Bradford Anti-Fur Campaigners, CVS Building, 19/25
Sunbridge Road, Bradford, West Yorkshire BD1 2AY.*

Big Mac Faces the Facts!

by the McLibel Support Campaign

It's "the best free entertainment in London", according to the Daily Telegraph. And it's now scheduled to be the longest running libel case in British history. This is the 'McLibel' Trial, the mammoth legal battle between two unwaged campaigners (Helen Steel and Dave Morris) and the $24 billion-a-year fast-food multinational, McDonald's. The case is based on a leaflet entitled "What's Wrong With McDonald's" which was produced by London Greenpeace in the mid-1980's. 180 witnesses are giving evidence in court about the effects of the company's advertising and the impact of its operating practices and food products on the environment, on millions of farmed animals, on human health, on the Third World, and on McDonalds' own staff. The trial began in June last year and will probably not finish before the end of this year.

Since there is no right to Legal Aid in libel cases, Helen and Dave are representing themselves against Richard Rampton QC and a team of solicitors hired by the burger giant. Despite their lack of legal training, the cross examination skills they have acquired are proving very effective. Since June, a procession of sober-suited McDonald's executives from both sides of the Atlantic have taken the stand in the High Court. They can't walk away from the witness box the way they've walked away when confronted by critics in the past, and have to come up with answers to the Defendants' questions. So the Corporation's business practices have been put under an intense spotlight.

NUTRITION

"Kiss of Death" - The Defendants made great strides when the trial began with evidence on nutrition. They asked Dr Sydney Arnott (McDonald's expert on cancer) his opinion of the following statement: "A diet high in fat, sugar, animal products and salt and low in fibre, vitamins and minerals is linked with cancer of the breast and bowel and heart disease". He replied: "If it is being directed to the public then I would say it is a very reasonable thing to say." Dave then pointed out: "That is actually a quote from the London Greenpeace Factsheet which is the subject of the action". Rampton had characterised this section as the central and most "defamatory" allegation, which if proven would be the "kiss of death" for a fast-food company. On the strength of the supposed scientific complexities surrounding this issue the Defendants had been denied their right to a jury.

Dr Neal Barnard, President of the US Physicians' Committee for Responsible Medicine, said on behalf of the Defence: "Many products sold at McDonald's are high in fat and cholesterol, and low in fibre and certain vitamins", and as a result these products "...contribute to heart disease, certain forms of cancer and other diseases" (including obesity, diabetes, and hypertension). He quoted the director of a major study into heart disease, Dr William Castelli, who said: "When you see the Golden Arches you're probably on the road to the pearly gates".

According to Dr Tim Lobstein of the Food Commission, McDonald's line that their food can be eaten as part of a balanced diet is "meaningless". He said: "You could eat a roll of sellotape as part of a balanced diet". Rather than using the word 'balance', he would suggest greater consumption of healthy foods.

Expansion and Subversion - Peter Cox, former Chief Executive of the Vegetarian Society, gave evidence for the Defence as an expert on the marketing of food. He quoted from 'Behind the Arches', a book authorised by McDonald's in 1987, as evidence that McDonald's were engaged in "a strategy of subversion" by trying to alter the dietary preferences of whole nations, "very often for the worse". Mr Cox read the following quotes from 'Behind the Arches':

In Japan, McDonald's faced "a fundamental challenge of establishing beef as a common food". Their President, Den Fujita, stated "the reason Japanese people are so short and have yellow skins is because they have eaten nothing but fish and rice for two thousand years": "if we eat McDonald's hamburgers and potatoes for a thousand years we will become taller, our skins become white and our hair blonde". The book says that Fujita "aimed virtually all his advertising at children and young families", and that he said "we could teach the children that the hamburger was something good". The book concludes that rather than adapt to local tastes and preferences "McDonald's foreign partners made major changes in marketing in order to sell the American system".

Just what do they mean by 'Nutritious'? - There seemed to be agreement amongst McDonald's representatives as to what nutritious meant. Ed Oakley, Senior Vice-President of McDonald's UK, is responsible for the nutrition guides currently available in McDonald's stores. When asked what 'nutritious' means in the guide he stated: "Foods that contain nutrients". Asked if there was any food he knew of that is not nutritious he said: "I do not know if you would call it food or not, but you could put up an argument for black coffee or black tea or mineral water". Asked, "What about Coca Cola?", he said "Coca Cola has a good source of energy, no question of that"; he was then asked if he thought it was nutritious, to which he stated, "Yes, it can be". David Green, Senior Vice-President of Marketing (USA), has a similar view on what nutritious means. He also thinks Coca Cola is nutritious, he said that it is "providing water, and I think that is part of a balanced diet".

ADVERTISING

McDonald's has a $1.4 billion a year advertising budget. In the UK, McDonald's advertises on TV to children, in particular 2 to 8 year olds, most weeks of the year. Mr Hawkes, UK Chief Marketing Officer, hoped that teaching them McDonald's songs would "keep the memory of McDonald's at the forefront of their minds so they can again ask their parents if they can come to McDonald's". The company doesn't target 8 to 15 year olds so much, Mr Hawkes said. "At that age they do not pester their parents to go to McDonald's."

Extracts from the corporation's official and confidential 'Operations Manual' were read out giving an insight into the company's strategy: "Children are often the key decision-makers concerning where a family goes to eat". Offering toys is "one of the best things... to make them loyal supporters". Ronald McDonald "is a strong marketing tool". "Ronald loves McDonald's and McDonald's food. And so do children, because they love Ronald. Remember, children exert a phenomenal influence when it comes to restaurant selection. This means that you should do everything you can to appeal to children's love for Ronald and McDonald's". Sue Dibb, an expert for the Defence on the effects of food advertising on children, did not think that this "direct exhortation to managers to use children's emotions and particularly their love for Ronald McDonald to bring them into the store" was "ethical".

Juliet Gellatley, former Director of Youth Education of the Vegetarian Society, currently Director of VIVA, gave evidence for Helen and Dave about the effects on young people of McDonald's advertising. As Director for Youth Education she gave talks to about 30,000 children of all ages at 500 classroom debates on vegetarianism and related issues. Juliet stated that McDonald's claim that they don't exploit children because "children are never encouraged to ask their parents to bring them to McDonald's" is "farcical". "Clearly the main purpose of advertising aimed at 2 to 8 year olds is precisely to encourage children to ask their parents to take them to McDonald's, otherwise what would be the point in advertising directly to such young children".

During the evidence of David Green (McDonald's Senior Vice President of Marketing in the USA), a video compilation of McDonald's US children's ads was shown featuring 'Happy Meals' free toys promotions, Ronald McDonald and the 'McDonaldland' characters. The company's 'Hamburger Patch' portrayed happy burgers growing on plants. Mr Green said that the truth (i.e. slaughterhouses) "would not be very appetising". Ms Gellatley said that younger children are "not aware that the products come from once living creatures". A "false view" is given by ads such as "dancing Nuggets that sing happy songs" and that are "happy to be eaten" etc., "without giving them any real information or facts about what those products are". In reality, of course, they are "broiler chickens who are very intensively farmed". But "Ronald McDonald is like a Father Christmas figure to them... he certainly wouldn't factory-farm chickens or slit the throats of cows" nor cause children "any ill-health".

DESTRUCTION OF RAINFORESTS

Internal company documents (mistakenly disclosed by McDonald's solicitors) were read to the court in which McDonald's admitted the purchase in the UK in 1983/4 of beef imported from Brazil, a rainforest country - something which the company had always denied. Mr Oakley, Senior Vice-President, said he was aware that McDonald's UK had purchased Brazilian beef. He said that McDonald's 'policy' of not using beef which originated outside the EU was not brought in until "around the mid-80's - maybe 1986".

A letter from the US Corporation to a member of the public in the UK in 1982 stated "McDonald's has a long standing policy of buying all of our products from suppliers in the host country where we are doing business" ... "as a result we can assure you that the only Brazilian beef used by McDonald's is that purchased by the six stores located in Brazil itself". Mr Oakley said he thought the letter was referring to the finished products (hamburgers), it was not "talking about raw ingredients". He denied that the purchase of Brazilian beef for use in the UK was in breach of McDonald's policy saying "No, it was not. We still bought the hamburgers locally. We did not buy the ingredients locally".

The Brazilian beef imports were kept secret from the World Wildlife Fund (whose President, Prince Philip, had apologised for accusing McDonald's of being connected with cattle rearing and rainforest destruction in Brazil), from the BBC (who were sued the following year), and from Friends of the Earth (in meetings in 1985).

EMPLOYEES & TRADE UNIONS

The Employment section of the Trial, probably the largest section, is due to begin in April. Paul Preston, UK President, has already said he does not consider the current starting wage of £3.10 an hour for crew members to be low pay. However, when asked, he refused to reveal his own salary. When asked why the company couldn't pay higher wages to crew members out of the $1 billion profits it made last year, he claimed that "people are paid a wage for the job they do", even though he had earlier agreed that crew members worked hard and their job was more physically demanding than his own.

PACKAGING, RECYCLING & WASTE

One of the 'McFact' cards available throughout the UK publicised a scheme to recycle polystyrene waste from 4 stores, where customers were asked to put polystyrene packaging into a separate bin, "for recycling into such things as plant pots, coat hangers and insulation material for use in homes, even fillings for duvets". Mr Oakley admitted that despite the scheme continuing for several years, the company did not recycle any of the waste and in fact the polystyrene was "dumped".

Dumping waste 'an environmental benefit'! - In some countries the company had abandoned or limited the use of polystyrene packaging, in part because it was not biodegradable and took up a lot of space in landfill sites. Mr Oakley stated that there was "no landfill problem in the UK". Questioned as to whether he believed that "as long as there is room in the dumps, there is no problem with dumping lots of McDonald's waste in the ground?" Mr Oakley said "and everybody else's waste, yes, that is true". He said "I can see (the dumping of waste) to be a benefit, otherwise you will end up with lots of vast, empty gravel pits all over the country." Asked if he was "asserting it is an environmental benefit to dump waste in landfill sites" he stated: "It could be" ... "yes, it is certainly not a problem".

FOOD SAFETY & ANIMAL WELFARE

The court is currently listening to evidence on these topics. McDonald's have admitted being held responsible for a serious food poisoning outbreak in Preston in 1991, when several customers were hospitalised as a result of eating burgers contaminated by potentially deadly E.Coli 0157H bacteria. They also admitted responsibility for a similar outbreak in 1982 caused by the same type of bacteria, which affected 47 people in Oregon and Michigan, USA.

Ed Oakley stated that he had responsibility for animal welfare. He claimed that the company "had a very real feeling that animals should be kept and slaughtered in the most humane way possible" and so had published an animal welfare statement two years ago. When questioned about this so-called policy, Mr Oakley admitted that the "animal welfare policy is, in fact, just a policy to comply with the laws of the various countries in which McDonald's operate", and added "we do not go beyond what the law stipulates".

Dr Neville Gregory, McDonald's expert, said McDonald's egg suppliers kept chickens in battery cages, 5 chickens to a cage with no freedom of movement and no access to fresh air or sunshine. Mr Oakley said McDonald's had thought about switching to free range eggs, but, not only are battery eggs "50% cheaper", but, he claimed "hens kept in batteries are better cared for". He said he thinks battery cages are "pretty comfortable"!

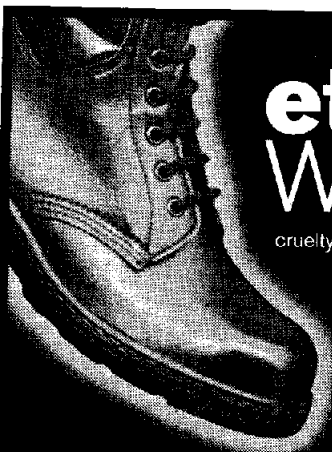

The court case has attracted over 200 articles in the press, as well as international TV and radio coverage. This is an exhausting legal battle for Helen and Dave, but it's an excellent opportunity to step up the pressure and publicity against McDonald's at a time when the public are interested and concerned about the issues in the case. April 15th this year is the Corporation's 40th ANNIVERSARY and an International Day of Action. Let's make it a highly memorable occasion for them. Please picket your local store on that day.

You can watch "the best free entertainment in London" by going to Court 35, Royal Courts of Justice, Strand, London WC2, most days from 10.30am. Ring 0171 713 1269 for details.

McLibel Support Campaign,
5 Caledonian Road,
London N1 9DX, UK.
Tel/Fax 0171 713 1269.

Donations welcome
(cheques to 'McLibel Support Campaign')

ethical WARES

cruelty-free footwear and clothing

a stunning range of outdoor and leisureware combining the finest synthetic materials with quality craftsmanship and design. Suitable for vegans, vegetarians and all those who care about the environment

For a FREE full colour catalogue call or fax 01708 739293 or write to:
Ethical Wares, Dept AA,
84 Clyde Way, Rise Park,
Romford, Essex RM1 4UT

Some Recommended Reading

ALF Supporters Group Newsletter - BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX £1.50. Contains information concerning A/R prisoners and defence funds, articles and news. Quarterly.

Turning Point - PO Box 45, Northolt, Middlesex UB5 6SZ £1.50. Excellent animal rights/liberation magazine which currently needs support.

ROAR - BM Box 5834, London WC1N 3XX. Informative A/R magazine. Send SAE for details.

The Vegan - Donald Watson House, 7 Battle Road, St. Leonards-on-Sea, East Sussex TN37 7AA £1.75. A must for those already vegan or those seeking a vegan lifestyle. Quarterly.

The Animals Contact List - £2.00. Veggies, 180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HW. The list provides a co-ordinated means by which groups can contact one another with details of their work, news of campaigns or requests for support.

ARC News - c/o PO Box 1229, Clwyd, Wales LL16 5LZ Free with SAE. Contains reports of local group activities as well as an up-to-date list of events.

Vegan Views - 6 Hayes Avenue, Bournemouth BH7 7AD. The magazine aims to act as an exchange between its readers. Quarterly.

Donations

We are extremely grateful to the following people who have made a donation of £4.00 or more to help us produce and distribute this magazine:

M Anderson, S Bay, Berkshire Animal Concern, Bob Brierley, MD Carritt, Malcolm Door, Ethical Wares, Claire Fisher, Digby Gordon, Kathryn Gillard, C Harrison, Linda Hugill, Jane Hearn, Jean Latimer, Rudiger Mahn, Seonaid McInnes, DC Mills, Phillip Odgers, William Samuel Purves, Dave Plews, PR Querinci, LM & S Shaw, Carol Stevens, Sheila Sheppard, Michael Sutcliffe, Mark Shaw, Barbara Sheringham, Montserrat Thompson and Alan Wilson.

Extra thanks go to LM & S Shaw, William Samuel Purves and Jane Hearn, and to M Cooper, Sandra Francis, Monica Harvey, C Humphries, Michael Maas, Mark, Pat Murgatroyd, Tim Thompson, Montserrat Thompson, Mark Willett and Dave Wetton who are all donating on a monthly basis by standing order.

Animal Awareness Day

Saturday, 8th July,
11.30am ~ 4pm

Herne Bay Park
Herne Bay, Kent

organised by the Herne Bay & Whitstable
Animal Rights Group
(01227 364262)

THE ROAD TO VICTORY

Workers in Merseyside are helping animals and plants identified as needing help by the Governments Species Recovery Plan, in an effort to restore the habitat of 23 species (Times 27.9.94)

A dog-owning gamekeeper and a dog owner have been jailed for a total of 9 months for pit-bull terrier fighting. Victor Grant Wilson, 28, of Shafton, Barnsley, was jailed for 6 months and banned from keeping a dog for life. George Woodbridge, 45, at the Burton Constable Hall, near Hull, a gamekeeper for 30 years, was jailed for 3 months. He also lost his job. Threats have been made against him and his family. (Dog World 5.11.93 & Our Dogs 5.11.93)

Ospreys and Red Kites have had their best breeding season for a century, say the RSPCA. Numbers breeding are at an all time high. (Times 8.1.94)

Barbara Packham of Ty Agored Animal Sanctuary has been found not guilty in the Crown Court of stealing dogs and cats from an animal abuser, Jean Lewis, an unlicensed breeder with a history of animal abuse and a 10 year ban on keeping animals. Barbara Packham rescued the animals after a 3 year campaign in which the authorities failed to do anything. The dogs were in such a state that it wasn't possible to identify their breed. One dog had to be destroyed. (Our Dogs 18.2.94)

Seven police forces are hunting armed gangs taking illegal bets on illegal hare-coursing around Britain. The gangs, some with shotguns and knives, some from known criminal gangs, are making tens of thousands of pounds profit. The largest arrested group was one of 19 individuals. (Times 14.11.94)

William Waldegrave, Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has attacked over half the European Union Member States for opposing recently agreed laws on animal protection. The laws were to have set limits on times between watering and feeding, 15 hours and 22 hours respectively. (Independent 20.9.94)

Britain's animal welfare movement gained a significant success when major ferry companies agreed to stop the mass transport of live farm animals. Over the past few years, sheep exports have risen by more than 50% each year, to the present 2 million plus. Calf exports, most to veal crates, accounted for 400,000. The RSPCA and CIWF have spent hundreds of thousands of pounds on adverts. (Independent 7.10.94)

Detectives questioned members of the Association of Radical Midwives (ARM) after mistaking the meeting for an Animal Rights Militia (ARM) meeting. Delegates were interrogated until the mistake was spotted. (Sunday Mirror 2.10.94)

The Women's Institute, which has a membership of 276,000, has twice asked the Government to stop live exports, in 1957 and 1973. Now they are pressing the Government to stop this inhumane practice, on which the W.I. gets more letters than any other subject. The W.I. is asking its members to write to their MP's. (East Anglian Daily Times 28.10.94)

How fishermen blow their own minds

Francis Whelan, 30, was jailed for 4 years for burning to death a Rottweiler guard dog and endangering a hotel, with 6 months for arson of the dog and 12 months for arson being reckless as to whether property was being damaged. (Dog World 15.7.94)

Workers began clearing scrub from dunes on Merseyside's coast in a national effort to restore natterjack toad population. (Times 27.9.94)

Sefton Council has maintained its ban on circuses with performing animals since 1990, despite a challenge from Circus Harlequin. (Bootle Times 3.11.94)

Lymington Magistrates saw a near hour-long LACS video in a private prosecution against Jeffrey Colbert, 41, Keith Colbert 32, and John Fleming, 30, in which they were charged with causing unnecessary suffering to a Parson Jack Russell, and procuring a fight between 2 animals. (Dog World 26.8.94)

Taipei Customs Officers have seized 2 tonnes of elephant tusks in Taiwan, worth more than £4.9m. (Times 5.10.94)

Freshfields Animal Sanctuary is to expand after winning planning approval for new kennels for dogs. It received money from IFAW. (Liverpool Echo 26.10.94)

Derek Earsdon, 60, a farmer, was jailed for 6 months and costs of £1,250, and banned from keeping animals for 25 years for cruelty to animals. He already had a present ban of 20 years. (Dog World 26.8.94)

The 8th Earl of Yarborough, 30, was attacked on his way to a hunt meeting in his Mercedes by 9 hooded protesters in a van. They dented his car, smashed windows and followed him. (Mail on Sunday 25.9.94)

A Gallup survey, backed by the Vegan & Vegetarian Societies, puts the number switching to vegetarianism at 2,000 a week. The number of vegetarians is put at 2.5 million. Peter Cox is running a 6 month road show promoting The Realeat Encyclopaedia of Vegetarian Living. (Independent 14.9.94)

Police shot dead a woman who threatened to kill her cat in a shop in Oregon, after she ran at them with a knife and the cat. The cat ran off. (Evening Standard 22.8.94)

Angler Carl Hourihane, 20, is feared drowned after being swept off rocks by waves near Bridgend, Glam. (The Sun 7.3.94)

Red Lea Kennels owner Alan Stone, 51, of Preesall, Blackpool, Lancs, was ordered to pay £3,000 for suffering caused to a dog at his kennels. His 20 year old daughter, Sally, and Alan Stone were found guilty of allowing a dog to suffer while on their premises in Little Tongues Lane, and were given conditional discharges for 12 months. The licensing authority may take their license away following the conviction (Dog World 24.6.94)

Dog show judge and Chihuahua breeder Annette Lawlor who has shown at Crufts for 10 years is being charged by the RSPCA with causing unnecessary suffering to 37 dogs at her Low Hill home in Wolverhampton. (Mail on Sunday 16.1.94)

Kylie Parkinson, 22, from Ipswich, was fined £250 by Ipswich magistrates, and banned from keeping animals for 10 years, for causing unnecessary suffering to her German Shepherd dog. She was also ordered to pay £489.50 costs. (Dog World 4.3.94)

Britain is to act unilaterally to protect live export animals. Road hauliers will be guilty of criminal offence unless keeping to specified journey stops. (Times 14.12.94)

Dr. Micheal Festing, Medical Research Council Toxicology Unit, has agreed that tests on animals are 'often worthless'. (Independent 21.11.94)

Rome Zoo's animals should be replaced with plastic replicas, according to the city's mayor. He plans to phase out all animals by the year 2000 because they are 'quite mad, schizophrenic' and need rehabilitation. Visiting figures have plunged and children leave feeling 'depressed, sad and anti-zoo.' (Daily Mail 30.8.94)

The Prince of Wales is accused of hypocrisy, after 100 MP's signed a motion criticising him for taking his children foxhunting. (Times 8.12.94)

Howard Jones, 65, of Lower Machen, Gwent, a Master of Foxhounds, lost a libel claim and costs against Clifford Pellow and LACS. (Times 8.12.94)

The Southern Ocean Whale Sanctuary came into operation after 30 years of campaigning, and will concentrate mainly on protecting minke whales. (Times 7.12.94)

Alaska has suspended its secret wolf cull, aimed at killing 75% of wolves in the Alaska Range Mountains, after video pictures showed the suffering caused to the wolves in snares. An official's attempts to kill the trapped wolves with a gun initially failed. The cull, begun last winter, killed 124 of the 3,500-6,000 intended victims. (Daily Telegraph 5.12.94)

Tanzania agreed to ban the stalking of elephants, after 3 semi-tame elephants were shot by hunters. (Times 14.12.94)

Islanders on Unst, a Shetland Isle, rescued 7 beached killer whales. In Orkney, 12 sperm whales died after becoming beached. Last year, environmentalists rescued 6 sperm whales that had become trapped. (Times 8.12.94)

Southport Zoo, checked on by Animal Aid, was given a 'Pitiful Exhibit Award' for one of its cages. Described as totally unstimulating, Animal Aid is calling for a complete zoo boycott. (Liverpool Echo 21.3.94)

Caribbean turtles have again been spotted eating off Scotland. The one-ton, 10 foot long creatures swim from the Caribbean to feed. Four of the seven worldwide species feed off Scotland. (Times 6.10.94)

Gough Island, in the Atlantic Ocean, is expected to be listed as a world heritage site. The uninhabited island has 2 indigenous land bird species, at least 8 native insects and superb penguin and seal colonies. UNESCO is expected to approve the request. (Times 19.10.94)

Hérons have increased in numbers in England and Wales to 6,500 breeding pairs, 3 times the number of the mid-60's. (Times 19.10.94)

A new strain of salmonella that is resistant to 5 antibiotics, is spreading. It infected 1,200 people last year, a 4 fold increase in 2 years, and can kill. Most sufferers had eaten take-away sausages, burgers, or chicken, and many required hospital treatment. A researcher said that the routine use of anti-biotics for growth promotion and sickness prevention in farm animals 'may contribute to the development of organisms resistant to anti-biotics'. Under-cooked meat and meat paste was implicated. (Times 19.10.94)

Over 100 people were affected by food poisoning, and more than a third had to be admitted to hospital, because of bacteria linked to pasteurised milk from a local dairy. The outbreak was similar to one in Sheffield and one at a McDonalds restaurant in Preston, Lancs. (Times 19.10.94)

A black Labrador is recovering after having a cancerous growth removed from its iris by laser. An eye specialist and a vet performed the operation. (Times 22.10.94)

The last known female small blue macaw, a captive bird, is being prepared for freedom in an attempt to mate it with the last known male of the species which is not in captivity. The birds are both from a north east region of Brazil. (20.10.94)

Police in Northern India have seized 1,366 rare animal skins worth more than £600,000, including a 14 foot tiger pelt. (Times 8.11.94)

A butterfly collector was convicted of trapping and selling a rare species. Trevor Carter, 46, of Boston, Lincs, was fined £490 plus £80 costs. Ronald Crouthers, 66, of Dorking, Surrey, was convicted of offering 7 rare butterflies for sale. (Times 4.11.94)

Abattoirs must find £2m to pay for public health controls imposed by European Law. (19.10.94)

The Boots company is expected to sell its drugs business to BASF, the German chemicals group, against an offer of £800m from a management consortium. The sale follows the sudden withdrawal of Manoplax, its heart drug. (Times 14.11.94)

The population of nightjars is on the increase. The male bird population has risen by 50% in the past decade. Storms in the 1980's which brought down coastal forests have increased the birds' natural habitat. (Times 10.11.94)

Pretoria has backed down on plans to allow trade in elephant skins and meat, and has withdrawn the plans at the Fort Lauderdale meeting in Florida. Many saw the plan as a poachers' green light. (Times 16.11.94)

A shark which outgrew its tank has been released into the sea by the Sea Life Centre at Hastings. (Times 5.10.94)

The Labour Party has made proposals to end the live export of animals from Britain, putting the Government under pressure. (Independent 20.1.95)

25 people were arrested and dozens were injured after police forced through animal-laden trucks to Brightlingsea. 800 protesters gathered at the port. Labour's animal welfare spokesman wants hauliers with cruelty convictions banned from trading, at present, animals are classed as agricultural products. A meeting at the local community centre attracted 1,500 people. (Independent 20.1.95)

1,500 animal rights supporters blockaded the port of Brightlingsea and stopped the export of 400 sheep. 6 lorries and a police convoy were confronted by protesters, including wheelchair-bound ones. 10 protesters were arrested. (Independent 17.1.95)

Vegetarians suffer 20% less premature mortality, 30% less heart disease and 40% less cancer than meat eaters. The survey of medical evidence, by the research manager of the Vegetarian Society also found such diets protected against diabetes, hypertension, bowel disease, gall stones and other disorders. The evidence also showed a 5.4% level of obesity in vegetarians, as opposed to a 19.5% level in meat eaters. (Independent 24.1.95)

The drug involved in the treatment of HRT which is derived from pregnant horse urine, has become the latest consumer boycott. Wyeth, the market leader in the treatment, is said to be terrified at the boycott. Other firms which produce treatments not obtained from horses (a synthetic substitute taken from Mexican yams and soya beans) say sales have grown. (Today 26.1.95)

Sussex Police are within 2 weeks of having to apply for emergency funding to meet the cost of anti-veal trade demonstrations. It has cost them up to £150,000 a day in Shoreham, for 1,000 police. (Independent 17.1.95)

Cooks should be rigorous about kitchen hygiene when making egg-based dishes, researchers warn. They found that after eggs were broken, salmonella bacteria were found on fingers, kitchen tools and surfaces, even after washing with soap and hot water. (Independent 24.1.95)

Police operations at the port in Brightlingsea are costing £40,000 a day. (Independent 23.1.95)

The Sussex port of Shoreham was celebrating after the harbour announced it was to ban live exports.

After a heated three and a half hours long debate, the board caved in to demonstrators' demands and said that when current contracts expired, they wouldn't be renewed. Livestock exporters said if others followed the Shoreham lead, the decision would devastate the industry. (Independent 20.1.95)

Britain was hoping for stricter rules governing the treatment of animals in the EU. William Waldegrave was asking for action from the new farm commissioner, Franz Fischler of Austria. Although Mediterranean countries oppose new rules, some northern countries are sympathetic. (Independent 23.1.95)

Fireman were called out to rescue a barn owl that had become entangled in a television aerial, in Chatham, Kent. (Times 22.2.95)

Furious Hampshire farmers are claiming anti-live export campaigners are putting farmers out of business, blaming CIWF 'townies'. Portsdown dairy farmer Michael Bezeley claimed the misguided campaign would cost local farmers a lot of money. (Daily Echo 3.1.95)

Animal rights activists pledged to fight attempts to bypass ferry bans after exporters threatened to use Swansea Airport to fly out animals. Respect for Animals claimed airports would be mad to participate in the trade. (The News 11.1.95)

Animal rights activists have threatened the life of Agriculture Minister, William Waldegrave. They sent him a letter booby-trapped with razor blades, and bombarded his home and office with threats. Avon & Somerset Police have stationed a riot van outside his house and the sorting office examine all his mail. (Mail on Sunday 15.1.95)

A first batch of 8 Canadian grey wolves has been re-introduced to Yellowstone Park, 60 years after being systematically exterminated. They will be released after being acclimatised. Nearly $7m has been spent on research. There are hopes that the wolves will set up a thriving population. (Independent 14.1.95)

The Charity Commission is investigating the Jourdain Society, a birds' egg enthusiast club. It follows a police operation that seized 11,000 eggs, including those from golden eagles, ospreys and peregrines, from 7 countries. Charges may be pressed. (Independent 15.1.95)

250 protesters forced lorries loaded with calves to turn away from Shoreham. The calves, destined for France, were turned back. Protesters said they were delighted. (Daily Echo 3.1.95)

Avonmore Foods closed down its German meat processing subsidiary, Harzland Fleisch Service, after 2 years of difficulty in the German meat market. (Independent 14.1.95)

The consumption of all meats is down. Consumption of milk is down from 3.95 pints per person a week in 1982 to 1.75 in 1992; butter from 3.17 ounces to 1.44 ounces; eggs from 3.51 to 2.08. (Independent 14.1.95)

The Dept. of Transport refused flight permits for calves to be exported. In Shoreham, police wasted £155,000 after no one told them the ferry hadn't sailed from France. (Independent 13.1.95)

The number of fur retailers has dropped from 500 in 1980 to 57 in 1992, and the numbers of mink farms has dropped. (Mail on Sunday 15.1.95)

China and other Far East states are backing a CITES convention in Florida to ban trade in animals and the products of tigers, giant muntjac, and rare breeds of ox and tortoise. (Times 18.11.94)

Irish Republic farmers are demanding action against anti-live export demonstrators. John Donnelly, President of Irish Farmers, called demonstrators 'mobs of extremists'. A judge was considering whether to force Shoreham to accept the trade. Nottinghamshire police investigated 4 incendiary devices underneath haulage lorries involved in exports. (Independent 7.2.95)

The Daily Express Women's page reports on animal demonstrations and women in particular. Since Emmeline Pankhurst, women have been demonstrating. Recently, it has become more widespread, from New Age Travellers to the Blue Rinse Set. (Daily Express 9.2.95)

Animal rights campaigners have stopped villagers in Southern India from trapping foxes, draping them with jewellery and garlands and parading them as part of an ancient harvest festival (Daily Telegraph 1.2.95)

Pressure is mounting on MP's to ban hunting when debate comes up in March. The bill to ban fox hunting, hare coursing, stag hunting and rabbit snaring will not necessarily lead to legislation. Opinion polls suggest

92% said it was important that their MP supported the bill, while more than half under the age of 24 said they were less likely to vote for an MP who didn't support it. (Independent 12.2.95)

A Ghanaian labourer collapsed and died when a 340lb basket of fish he was carrying on his head proved too heavy for him. (Daily Telegraph 10.2.95)

Elephants, a symbol of good luck in Thailand, are to be banned from the capital, Bangkok, after animal lovers said its polluted air was harmful to them. (Daily Telegraph 10.2.95)

Australians and Vanatu Islanders were racing to rescue 27 dolphins trapped in a lagoon. (Times 4.1.95)

Entomologists have discovered Britain's 640th species of spider on a Cheshire bog. Brigitte Bardot has threatened officials with court action if they cull pigeons. She has proposed chasing the birds away, or feeding them contraceptives. (Tonight 11.1.95)

A businessman tried to smuggle more than 100,000 skins of endangered snakes, worth more than £59,000, into Britain. The skins, from some of the rarest snakes in the world, were destined for Mexico to be made into belts, Isleworth Crown Court were told. (Daily Telegraph 14.2.95)

Threats of violence have forced the head of a livestock export firm, International Traders Ferries, to resign yesterday as animal rights protesters staged another wave of demonstrations against shipments of calves and lambs to Europe. He said "I have given up because threats to me and my family have got completely out of hand. I have been terrified." (Daily Telegraph 21.2.95)

Police seized thousands of pounds worth of illegal Chinese medicines containing tiger bone, rhinoceros horn and other parts from endangered species in raids across Britain. (Daily Telegraph 8.2.95)

British and Omani divers have rescued a 20 ton hump back whale that was trapped and bleeding in fishing nets for 29 days. (Times 20.2.95)

Leonard Miller, an angler, was drowned after he was thrown from a dinghy near Brightlingsea, Essex. (Daily Telegraph 30.1.95)

A dog has been rescued after spending 18 days under the rubble of the Kobe earthquake in Japan. (Daily Telegraph 6.2.95)

Reducing fat intake cuts the risks of ovarian and breast cancer, a Canadian study of 450 women has found. An increase of saturated fat of 10g per day was associated with a 20% increase in cancer risk. For ovarian cancer, eggs were linked to the increase, whereas vegetable fibre was linked to a decreased risk; an extra 10g of vegetable fibre per day from an average of 8g, reduced the risk by nearly 40%. For breast cancer, for every 5g increase in saturated fat, there was a 50% increase in risk of dying from the disease. Also, those with the highest 25% intake of Vitamin C and beta carotene have less than half the mortality risk of those with a lower intake. (Pulse 22.10.94)

Toothpicks are to be banned from South Korean restaurants after complaints that they kill animals fed with leftovers. (Sunday Express 29.1.95)

The University of East Anglia has got a new laboratory, funded with £170,000 from the Humane Research Trust, to study cataracts. The trust is funding work because the University team, led by Dr. George Duncan, Head of Cell Biology, is committed to doing so without resorting to animal experiments. The Humane Research Trust's activity is part of a trend sweeping biological and medical research. A new European Union Body, the European Centre for the Validation of Alternative Methods, is pushing non-animal research, and in the UK the number of approvals for animal 'procedures' fell from 3.6m in 1987 to 2.8m in 1993. (Times 20.2.95)

The Dulwich MP and Streatham MP are backing a Private Members' Bill seeking the abolition of bloodsports. LACS has also sent a video to all 651 MP's showing hunt cruelty, which the BFSA claims show 'non-traditional hunters.' (Dulwich Guardian 14.1.95)

Animal rights protesters prevented livestock lorries boarding a ferry. Activists smashed lights and windscreens, others sat in front of the lorries. 6 of the 8 lorries were turned away. One driver, Jeremy Francis, 36, claimed his £120,000 vehicle had been smashed to pieces. The previous day, activists had turned the lorries away. (Times 4.1.95)

A machine that removes the oil from the feathers of oil-spill bird victims has proven its worth. The machine cuts the time taken to remove the oil from half an hour to seven minutes. It holds the birds head while sprays coat the bird in detergent and a helper cleans its head with a toothbrush. Trials are taking place in Holland. (Sunday Express 29.1.95.)

ARKANGEL MAGAZINE
BCM 9240
LONDON WC1N 3XX

ARK ANGEL

NUMBER 14 £1.80

The Arkangel Editorial

The Animal Liberation Movement continues to gain strength, and the day when all animals are liberated from persecution and murder draws closer.

More and more groups are being formed, both in this country and abroad, with the emergence of organisations such as the Shark Protection League, the Shellfish Network, Campaign Against Leather & Fur, Pisces (formerly the Campaign for the Abolition of Angling), Campaign for Cows and the British Anti-Vivisection Association, amongst others. In the future there will be groups to cover every aspect of animal abuse. One of the most important events to occur in recent times has been the formation of ARC (Animal Rights Coalition) which has the capacity to link every animal rights group in the country to form a massive coordinated network. The power-base once held by certain national societies, who have a tendency to dictate and dominate, can now be pushed to the fringes of the movement and localised, smaller groups can come to the fore. We have the power of commitment and the will to achieve animal liberation - let's make full use of it!

This issue contains an advertisement for the Vegan Society's video 'Truth or Dairy'. We urge everyone to purchase a copy of this important film and to show or lend it to others. Veganism and Animal Liberation are inextricably linked.

Animal Liberation and the Internet

You will see in the Sabbing News section of the magazine that the HSA now have a presence on the Internet. This means that, if you have Internet access (either personally or through work, school or college) you can access their latest information or e-mail them about your group's activities.

There is a huge amount of stuff about animal liberation on the Internet - from all over the world. Another interesting site is the ANIMAL LIBERATION FRONTLINE Information Service whose stated aim is to "...provide an uncensored clearing house for information and news about animal liberation activities and activists."

We are pleased to find that articles from Arkangel have been posted on the Internet for a potential audience of millions - keep it up whoever you are!

So, whether you're an activist, or at school doing a project on animal rights, do a search for 'animal liberation' and start cybersurfing. Isn't technology wonderful sometimes?!!

We regret that we are unable to include our regular contribution from Robin Webb in this issue. This is due to the strict bail conditions which have been imposed upon him. However, if anyone would like to write to Robin they can do so c/o the ALFPO address which can be found in the National Groups section of the magazine. Please spare some time to write to the animal liberation prisoners currently languishing in jail, put there because of their compassion and their dedication to end the cruelties inflicted on animals. What a sick society that imprisons the carers and encourages the abusers, and what corrupt governments which allow it to happen.

Arkangel Magazine considers no effort too small in the fight for Animal Liberation. Whether collecting signatures on petitions, giving out leaflets in the street, or telling others about animal abuse, it all helps to raise awareness. EVERY single kind of campaigning is important - whether it be peaceful demonstrating or direct action - if it brings us closer to our goal of Animal Liberation! Although the movement is far from united in its methods, it shares the same aims and objectives.

For all those groups who feel isolated in a great sea of animal abuse, remember, Animal Liberation is the tide that will wash away the horrors of animal cruelty once and for all. That time is fast approaching!

Arkangel T-Shirt

The artwork on Arkangel Magazine covers has become legendary - and rightly so. Our friends who produce them (and many of the illustrations inside) never cease to amaze us with their unique, biting designs. A t-shirt featuring the cover from Arkangel 10 is available for only £6.50 (inc. p&p, XL only) - cheques payable to Arkangel please.

Local Group Reports

ANIMAL RIGHTS CAMBRIDGE

74 Sturton Street, Cambridge CB1 2QA

Animal Rights Cambridge have been actively supporting the protests against the live export trade, attending demonstrations at various docks, Thurleigh (a disused MOD airport proposed as a new venue) and at Peter Gilder's farm in Bourton-on-the-water. The group organised a sponsored dog walk which raised £560 for Greek Animal Charities. As well as regularly attending the Leyden Street Chicken Slaughterhouse demonstrations, the group have also supported local hunt saboteurs, Earth First local activists, Animal Aid Cambridge and the Shark Protection League's demonstration in China Town, London in May.

Animal Rights Cambridge meet at 8pm on the fourth Tuesday of every month at The Bath House, Gwydir Street, Cambridge.

ANIMAL RIGHTS CHESTERFIELD

c/o MARG, PO Box 39, Mansfield

Animal Rights Chesterfield have produced a leaflet asking people to think carefully about the expense and work involved in keeping a pet. They advise people to obtain pets from sanctuaries and not from pet shops which only encourages the breeding of animals. They also inform people of the cruelty involved in bringing exotic animals such as monkeys and wild birds into this country. Every year millions of these animals are brought into the UK thus endangering wild populations. The capture and transport involves terrible cruelty and suffering causing thousands to die. For a copy of the leaflet, please write to the above address.

ANTI-SHAMROCK CAMPAIGN

PO Box 307, Ship Street, Brighton, East Sussex

A 30 minute video has been produced featuring monkey trapping in the wild, scenes from inside Shamrock Farm and footage of the campaign. It is available for £6 (inc. postage and packing) from the above address.

ASHFORD ANIMAL RIGHTS CAMPAIGN

PO Box 33, Ashford, Kent TN24 8ZZ

The Ashford Animal Rights Campaign was established to campaign against a wide range of animal cruelty and exploitation in and around Ashford and throughout Kent.

They intend to hold photographic inspections of hunting, angling, trapping, abattoirs, intensive farms and laboratories, and thereafter provide material for newsletters and leaflets, etc. They also plan to hold regular high street stalls to supply free information to the public about the abuse of animals, and hope to provide a support network for local vegans and vegetarians.

AVON VEGANS

*c/o Karma Cottage, 3 The Rock, Bislington,
Bristol BS4 4PU*

Avon Vegans has been set up as part of the South West Region Vegetarian Coalition initiative. The primary aim of Avon Vegans is to unite and socially interact with vegans throughout Avon. Please write to the above address, enclosing an SAE for more information and details of how to join.

BANGOR ANIMAL RIGHTS

c/o The Greenhouse, 1 Trevelyan Terrace, Bangor, Gwynedd, North Wales

BAR is a newly formed group who would like to hear from anyone in the area interested in animal rights. They would also like to hear from any other groups in Wales and Northwest England, with a view to supporting each other's actions. For details of meetings, etc., please write to the above address.

BARNET ANIMAL RIGHTS GROUP

PO Box 76, Barnet, Herts EN4 9AW

BARG primarily covers the Barnet and Finchley areas. They hold regular meetings on the first Wednesday of the month at 8pm at the Quaker Meeting House, 58 Alexander Grove, West Finchley, London N12, and usually have a video presentation or discussion, and the occasional guest speaker. Regular leafleting sessions are held on a Saturday morning in Barnet or Finchley. New supporters are always welcome.

BARNSELY ANIMAL RIGHTS

c/o 1 Cloughfields Road, Hoyland, Barnsley S74 0BJ

This recently formed group is mainly concerned with rehoming unwanted dogs, cats, etc., but will assist in all truth or dairy who, what, where, when, how and why vegan

Vegans

are weirdoes who don't eat or wear any bits of animals or any things that have come out of animals. They also don't wash their hair with them or spread them over their faces as moisturiser. Strange though it may seem, some of these people manage to be healthy enough to run marathons, win the Krypton Factor, live to be 100, compete in triathlons, win the 100m at the Olympics and record the longest-running number one hit single in British history.

Truth or Dairy explains just why it is that some people have decided to go against the grain of popular burger, shake & fries culture and attempts to answer that most difficult of questions:

"If you give up eating meat, fish, milk, eggs and cheese, is there anything left except a few poxy vegetables?"

In its own curious fashion this video also tackles the most burning issues of today:

- Why are almost one million 2 day old chicks killed in Britain every week?
- Why are meat eaters 12 times more likely to die from a heart attack than vegans?
- If 20 million people will die as a result of malnutrition this year, why is 57% of Europe's grain fed to cattle?
- If there are 1.6 billion cows on the planet, and each of them farts up to 200 litres of methane a day, and methane is 25 times as potent as the chief global warming culprit carbon dioxide, how long will it be before half of Britain is under water?
- Why can't half a million people in Britain digest milk?
- Is it really logical to destroy 55 square feet of rain forest to make one beefburger?

Truth or Dairy is presented by poet Benjamin Zephaniah, and features a star-studded vegan cast including The B52s, Consolidated, Uri Geller, Casey Kasem, k.d. lang, Moby, River Phoenix, Martin Shaw, Heather Small (M-people), Spice Williams, Daisy the pantomime cow and a nice man who runs a fruit 'n' veg stall in Camden High Street.

A Word ♦ Pictures production for The Vegan Society UK, 1994

Running time: 22 minutes

Return to: The Vegan Society 7 Battle Road St Leonards-on-Sea East Sussex TN37 7AA. (0424 427393)

The

Vegan Society

presents

truth or dairy

who. what. where. when. how and why vegan

a new video only £9.95

VEGAN PRISONERS SUPPORTERS GROUP

P.O. Box 194 ENFIELD Middlesex EN1 3HD.

(working for Animal Rights prisoners of conscience)

Vegan Prisoners Supporters Group (VPSG) gives moral support and practical assistance to Animal Rights prisoners.

This is achieved by providing prisoners with:

- access to a 24-hour contact number (this is given after initial communication via the VPSG P.O. Box number above);
- help to obtain a proper nutritional vegan diet;
- help to obtain vegan toiletries;
- help to improve access to vegan items in prison shops;
- literature/information on veganism relating to animals, environment, health and nutrition
- assistance in the removal of Category "A" status where necessary.

We also give advice and moral support when needed to family members.

We aim to provide assistance wherever and whenever possible to prisoners.

This work incurs a lot of expense through the use of the phone and postage. So if you can support the VPSG with a donation or stamps, it would be really appreciated.

 List of Animal Rights Prisoners is available upon request (please enclose SAE)*

SUBSCRIPTION FORM

Arkangel

for Animal Liberation

Arkangel Magazine aims to unify the Animal Liberation movement by providing a forum for debate and exchange of ideas, and information about pro-animal actions at local, national and international levels.

I wish to SUBSCRIBE RENEW MY SUBSCRIPTION to Arkangel Magazine

☐
☐

please tick

Minimum Subscription Rates:

(for the next 4 issues, including postage)

Normal UK rate: £7.20:

Unwaged: £6.00:

Outside UK (no cheques!): £15.00:

I also enclose a donation of £

☐
☐
☐
☐

Please make cheques and postal orders payable to

Name:

Address:

Postcode:

Arkangel Magazine is produced by a small group of volunteers. It carries no paid advertising, and the cover price is set to meet the cost of printing and postage.

'ARKANGEL'

BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX

animal rescue where possible. Barnsley Animal Rescue visits all potential new homes before and after rehoming and have applied for charitable status.

BELFAST ANIMAL RIGHTS

PO Box 148, Belfast BT1 2LZ : Tel. 01232 314076

Much of Belfast Animal Rights' time at the beginning of the year was taken up with the anti live exports campaign; trying to stop the shipment of calves and pigs through Belfast International Airport at Aldergrove. The Northern Ireland Groups Against Live Exports was set up and began a 24 hour vigil at the airport which was to last for six weeks before the flights stopped, although the airport authorities have refused to state whether this cessation of animal abuse is permanent. Given the unique problems involved in blockading Aldergrove Airport, with its two cargo entrances, one public entrance and five via the RAF camp, all within the security zone, NIGALE efforts were a significant contribution to an unprecedented campaign.

Belfast Animal Rights produce a very informative newsletter called Ermintrude and together with the Vegetarian Society of Ulster run the Rainbow Shop in Lombard Street, Belfast. For any information, details of the group etc., please write to the above address.

BASINGSTOKE HUNT SABOTEURS ASSOCIATION

c/o PO Box 355, Basingstoke, Hants.

Past activities have included letters of protest to holiday companies which promote hunt meets. For details of current events, please contact the address above.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY ANIMAL RIGHTS GROUP

This group is pleased to announce growing support and increased activity over the last year.

CAT CONCERN (and Other Animals)

PO Box 234, Hounslow TW3 2QG

Cat Concern is involved in the rescue, re-homing and treatment for illness and/or neutering and spaying of a wide variety of animals. The group have a list of homes available for fostering rescued animals and will carry out strict checks on any potential new home and owner.

For further details contact the above address.

CH SABS / LAKELAND ANIMAL AID

PO Box 83, Carlisle, Cumbria

CH Sabs hold regular stalls and have been collecting signatures for the National Anti-Hunt Petition. Lakeland Animal Aid have in the past held demos against Boots, and continue to demonstrate against circuses and McDonald's. Local group stalls are proving successful.

CLAW

Societies Centre, 60 The Pleasance, Edinburgh

This animal rights group based in Edinburgh run a campaign to publicise what really goes on in the research laboratories at the university. They would like to hear from anyone who has any information of research being carried out at the university and would also like to receive advice on how best to tackle a campaign of this sort.

CLOSE DOWN LEYDEN STREET CHICKEN SLAUGHTERHOUSE

(East London)

The campaign against Leyden Street chicken slaughterhouse continues - battery hens are kept there in cramped condition awaiting a cruel end. A picket is held outside the slaughterhouse on the first Sunday of every month. The meeting place for anyone interested in joining the picket is Liverpool Street underground / British Rail station between 10.45am and 11am at the Bishopsgate exit.

DARTMOOR LIVESTOCK PROTECTION SOCIETY

The Old Mill, Charlecombe, Combeinteignhead, Newton Abbot, Devon TQ12 4RE

This organisation was formed to help ponies, sheep and cattle in distress on Dartmoor and in the markets where they are sold. They send help to animals injured in road accidents. It is hoped that now the Blackburn fencing is complete, there will be a reduction in the number of these accidents. DPLS also runs a campaign to try to stop people dumping rubbish on the moor as animals get caught up in wire or cut themselves on glass and other sharp products. For further details please write to the above address.

FIGHT AGAINST CRUELTY IN EUROPE

29 Shakespeare Street, Southport PR8 5AB

Tel: 01704 535922 Fax: 01704 546384

This group incorporates the Anti-Bullfighting Agency (ABA) and campaigns against all bloodsports in Europe, including bullfighting and blood fiestas, particularly in Spain. They ask people to write to their MPs to campaign against barbaric practices abroad. FAACE has a large library of video footage and stills, and campaigns by lobbying to bring pressure to bear on the Spanish government through the European Parliament, embassies, churches, etc.

Earlier this summer, courageous animal rights investigator Vicki Moore, while on a secret mission at a fiesta in Spain was savagely gored and thrown by a terrified bull rampaging down a street trying to escape a cascade of flying darts launched by a savage Spanish crowd.

FRIENDS OF ANIMALS

PO Box 156, Cardiff, South Wales CF5 5YD

FAUNA have campaigned to make Cardiff City Council ban angling on Roath Park Lake, where many birds become entangled in discarded and broken fishing line. Previous successful campaigns have included a plan to introduce ostrich farming in Penmark being rejected by councillors, who refused planning permission after reading FAUNA's detailed letters on the cruelty involved.

FRIENDS OF THE ANIMALS

c/o 70 High Street, Leicester LE1 5YP

This group raises public awareness of veganism and holds stalls three times a week in Leicester city centre. They also organise demos against McDonald's and butchers. A foster home has been set up for homeless dogs, cats, mice, etc. and the group also neuters and spays animals and organises home checks. Friends of the Animals is run by vegans but anyone is welcome to assist them in their work.

HERTFORDSHIRE ANIMAL RIGHTS CAMPAIGN

PO Box 66, Broxbourne, Herts EN10 6LU

HARC is run by the same people involved in the National Anti-Hunt Petition which now has over a quarter of a million signatures, and hunt bans have been secured in Somerset, Hampshire and Leicestershire.

HUNTINGDON ANIMAL RIGHTS

PO Box 83, Huntingdon, Cambs. PE18 9HD

This is a new animal rights group and anyone interested should please contact the above address.

IOW ANIMAL PRESERVATION AND ACTION GROUP

Little Spinney, Solent Road, Cranmore, Yarmouth, Isle of Wight PO41 0XY

This group produces Preserve, an informative bulletin. For further details contact the above address.

KENT ACTION! AGAINST LIVE EXPORTS

PO Box 177, Deal, Kent CT14 8GB

Kent Action! Against Live Exports had led a difficult campaign in Dover as they have never had the support of the local people. They have to rely on protesters travelling to Dover but remain determined to continue the fight until the live export trade is ended. KALE will be please to welcome any new protesters and would be grateful for any donations to finance the ongoing campaign.

KINGSTON ANIMAL ACTION

*PO Box 370a, Surbiton, Surrey KT6 4YN
01932 242136*

Local events that the group has been involved in include McDonald's demos, campaigning against the zoo at Chessington, holding stalls and going hunt sabbing. They have organised a Christmas Fayre for the 9th December at the Richard Mayo Hall, Kingston at 10am-4pm. They have also been active further afield on live export demonstrations and marches, and have been supporting the pickets of fur shops in central London.

LONDON ANIMAL ACTION

*5 Caledonian Road, London N1 9DX
0171 837 7557*

London Animal Action has been quite busy over the summer months. Pickets of Boots have now ended following the sale of their pharmaceutical division to BASF, but members have been active against circuses, fur shops, vivisection charities, live exports, grouse shooting and McDonald's. They have also held many stalls at green fairs and on shopping streets.

They have regularly attended live exports demonstrations with vans from London turning up at Shoreham, Coventry, Dover and Brightlingsea. Circus King were in London during the summer and shot a London activist in the back. Large numbers of pickets and large scale removal of advertising posters ensured a very poor turnout for their performances. A sponsored cycle ride in aid of the Cancer Research Campaign was heavily leafleted by antivivisectionists, and there was an excellent response from the public and the cyclists. Several vehicles went up from London to the Yorkshire Moors for the start of the grouse shooting season on the Glorious Twelfth.

NORTH WEST VEGGIES CATERING

*PO Box 38, Manchester
M60 1NX*

One of their most important campaigns has been Fur-Free London. Pickets have continued during the summer, although to a lesser degree, and at the time of writing at least four fur shops or departments have closed down due to their actions. They hope to step up the campaign again during the winter. Please write for details of London's remaining fur businesses or if you want to get involved.

They publish a monthly newsletter, 'London Animal Rights News', which is intended to coordinate activities between the numerous local animal rights and welfare groups in the London area, but anyone is welcome to subscribe.

LONDON VEGANS

7 Deansbrook Rd., Edgware, Middlesex HA8 9BE

London Vegans organise various socials, and catering and information stalls throughout the London area. Regular meetings are held on the last Wednesday of every month (except December) at the Millman Street Community Rooms, 50 Millman Street, London WC1. London Vegans produce a brilliant mailout list on the activities taking place up and down the country.

MIDLAND ANIMAL RIGHTS COALITION

PO Box 43, Dudley, West Midlands DY3 3DL

MARC is growing as a true coalition and is finding it very productive working with other groups. They have been joined by Wolverhampton Hunt Sabs, Birmingham Animal Rights Campaign Group, Dudley Animal Concern, Walsall Animal Rights and Wyre Forest Animal Concern. Two local universities have AR / green groups which have expressed an interest in joining. They are also launching a new leaflet on the exotic meat trade, which includes ostrich and bison meat.

NEWCASTLE ANIMAL RIGHTS COALITION

PO Box 1JY, Newcastle upon Tyne NE99 1JY

Please write to the above address for further information.

NORTH WEST CAMPAIGN AGAINST BLOODSPORTS

PO Box 292, Manchester M60 4DY

Please write for details of future campaigns.

North West Veggies work along the same lines as the original Veggies, providing great food at assorted animal rights and Green events. They would be happy to hear from anyone planning an event either in the North West or a larger event in the North of England.

PRESTON ACTION FOR ANIMALS

PO Box 385, Ashton, Preston PR2

If anyone in the Preston area is interested in the group's activities, please contact them at the above address.

SHEFFIELD NEUTERING AND SPAYING SCHEME

*193 Firth Park Road, Sheffield S5 6WU
01742 420434*

This group in the Sheffield area aims to promote neutering and spaying through education and also to help people on low income or state benefit with the cost of getting their animals neutered/spayed. They also undertake some rescue work. They raise funds by doing car boot sales, and any saleable goods or donations are always welcome.

SOLIHULL ANIMAL AID

22 Warren Drive, Dorridge, Solihull, West Midlands B93 8JY : Tel. 01564 776984

Please write or phone for information.

SOUTH EAST ANIMAL RIGHTS COALITION

19a Amhurst Road, Bexhill-on-Sea, East Sussex TN40 1QH

SEARC produce an informative newsletter called the National Link, containing all the latest news. For more information please write to SEARC.

SOUTHEND ANIMAL AID

*29 Cambridge Road, Southend-on-Sea,
Essex SS1 1ET*

Please write for further details and information.

SOUTH LONDON ANIMAL ACTION

PO Box 594, London SW9 6YA

SLAA have been quite busy - attending demos against live exports at various ports, McDonald's, Glaxo's new labs in Stevenage and joining the Shark Protection League demo in London's Chinatown against the trade in shark fins.

The group organised a public meeting in June against the live export trade. The meeting was well attended and benefited from excellent speakers, including Celia Hammond, Juliet Gellately from Viva!, Andrew Tyler from Animal Aid and Wenda Shehata from the Shoreham Harbour Protest Fund.

The group is currently involved in the campaign to ban angling at two ponds on Clapham Common, London. An angry backlash from the aggressive anglers has caused Lambeth Council to re-vote on the issue. SLAA would welcome any volunteers to help fight this campaign.

SLAA runs a catering service called the Green Marmoset Catering Company, for which volunteers are always welcome. The group meets on the first Thursday of every month at 7.30pm in the Voltaire Room, Clapham Baths, 157 Clapham Manor Street, London SW4.

STEVENAGE ANIMAL RIGHTS

*Box 6 Bowes Lyon House, St. George's Way,
Stevenage, Herts SG1 1XY*

SAR holds monthly demos outside Glaxo in Stevenage. They would welcome volunteers for street stalls. Membership costs £ 4.50 (or a donation if you can't afford the fee) and includes their bi-monthly newsletter. The group produce a cruelty-free guide to cosmetics, household products and restaurants, and also have a range of T-shirts and badges for sale.

SURREY BADGER PROTECTION SOCIETY

01883 344662

This registered charity is affiliated to the National Federation of Badger Groups. A regular newsletter published by the SBPS is available to members.

WEST KENT HUNT SABS

TWK PO Box 263, Maidstone, Kent

Please write to the above address for further details.

WEST SUSSEX WILDLIFE PROTECTION

PO Box 99, Chichester, West Sussex PO19 4GL

This group, together with the re-launched Bognor and Chichester Action for Animals group, launched a campaign in 1994 to get wildfowl shoots stopped at Whites Creek, Pagham Harbour, West Sussex. A successful outcome was realised at Easter this year when an eleventh hour fax was received from the landowners backing down, thus preventing a demonstration planned for Easter Sunday from tarnishing their image.

WSWP are also active in fox hunt sabs. Anyone interested in further details can contact them at the above address.

WINCHESTER ANIMAL CONCERN

6 South Street, Ropley, Alresford, Hants.

For details of latest events, please write to the above address.

YEOVIL ANIMAL ACTION

PO Box 1760, Yeovil, Somerset BA21 5PN

Tel: 01935 25195 / 410535

Fax: 01722 327146

YAA are currently campaigning against Porton Down where animals are being experimented on with toxic gases resulting in death and serious illness. A £5 million extension has been granted which will add new laboratories and a new incineration unit.

YAA have produced a leaflet highlighting the charities, including the Leukaemia Research Fund, which fund animal-based research. Factsheets are available at a cost of £1 each.

YORK ANIMAL RIGHTS GROUP

c/o The Peace Centre, Clifford Street, York

01904 642493

York Animal Rights meet on the second Tuesday of each month at 8pm and are keen to welcome new members or anyone interested in helping to run their regular stalls. This group, together with a Northern Coalition of groups including Leeds, Hull, Newcastle, Sheffield and Scarborough form the core of the regular demonstrators protesting at the weekly demos against the largest veal calf exporter, Albert Hall Farms at Strensall, York. Although the protesters have been subject to both verbal and physical abuse they remain determined to carry on regardless until Albert Hall Farms go out of business.

Sanctuaries

Widewalls Animal Sanctuary Advent, Camelford, Cornwall PL32 9PY (01840 212300)

Widewalls in Cornwall is urgently appealing for money and volunteers. The sanctuary is within one month of closure unless over £1,000 can be raised to cover overdue debts. This is not an exaggeration, things are really as serious as that! We also urgently need volunteers to help us build winter shelters for our 30 horses. The sanctuary is situated on the edge of Bodmin Moor which can be a bleak place for animals in the winter. We need to ensure the shelter of our current residents and to be able to care for the numerous animals that pass through our hands each winter. Please don't disregard this appeal. We urgently need financial donations and willing volunteers. Donations of building materials, animal bedding and food would also be gratefully received. If you can help us in any way then please, please, please contact us urgently. Thank you.

Cedarwood Wildlife Care Blissford Hill, Frogham, Fordingbridge, Hants. SP6 2HX (0425 657402)

Dawn and Jerry Collinson devote their lives to helping and caring for injured animals at their wildlife care centre at Frogham. Here, injured animals are nursed back to health and released back into the wild. Over the years they have helped foxes, badgers, deer, rabbits, hedgehogs and countless birds. No animal is ever turned away, many having been shot, trapped or hit by cars. At the centre, wounds are healed, legs and wings mended, and local vets are able to help with more serious problems. The centre is run as a non-profit-making concern and financial support remains a problem - they will continue their fine work as long as money is available.

Cedarwood Wildlife Care is in need of volunteer drivers to pick up casualties from the Southampton/New Forest/Bournemouth areas and take them to Cedarwood.

Sussex Horse Rescue Hempstead Farm, Uckfield, E. Sussex TN22 3DL (01825 762010)

Rescues horses and ponies from neglect and abuse. Open to the public, and horse sponsorship is available. The centre raises funds through various events including gala days, open days, etc.

Hillside Animal Sanctuary Hillside, Hall Lane, Frettenham, Norfolk NR12 7LT (01603 736200)

Hillside campaigns to raise public awareness of the plight of caged hens and thereby reduce the demand for the supply of battery eggs. They urge you to write to the major supermarkets (cards for this purpose are available from the above address) condemning their sale of battery eggs. Merchandise and animal adoption scheme available.

Bury's Stray Cat Fund 111 Fornham Rd., Bury St. Edmunds, Suffolk IP32 6AS (01284 752712)

A registered charity since 1980 whose aims are to reduce the suffering of the stray and feral population of cats, encouraging neutering to prevent unwanted litters, to rescue as many cats and kittens as they can and re-home where possible. They also seek to reduce the number of feral cats by trapping, neutering and returning them to a more suitable habitat. They help the elderly who can no longer care for their pets and assist with the cost of neutering in the case of extreme hardship.

Hopefield Animal Sanctuary Sawyers Hall Lane, Brentwood, Essex CM15 9BY (01277 201110)

The sanctuary provides homes for a wide variety and a large number of animals. The workers would be most grateful for any DIY help and if you can help please contact the sanctuary. They've also been given the use of a shop by the local council and would welcome items to sell in it. An adoption scheme and merchandise are available, please contact above address for various fund-raising events.

Animal Samaritans c/o Malcolm Murkin, 14 Grasdene Rd., Plumstead, London SE18 (0181 854 9662)

Animal Samaritans is a charity fighting for the right of all creatures to enjoy health and happiness. It is run entirely by volunteers and raises funds to help local animals in distress. Many unwanted or feral cats are fed by members, injured birds are treated and released back into the wild, and homes are found for hundreds of unwanted animals including dogs, cats, rabbits, gerbils, etc. If you want to know more about Animal Samaritans, they have speakers available for meetings, organisations and clubs.

South Norwood Animal Rescue

7, Farnley Road, South Norwood, London SE25 6PA (081 653 7628)

This group would be very grateful for donations of petrol coupons, stamps, cigarette cards, trading stamps, wool, ring-pulls, and small unwanted gifts to help raise money for feeding and vets' bills. They produce a friendly, detailed newsletter which describes the stories behind the many cats and dogs that find love and affection with Maureen and Colleen.

Freshfields Animal Rescue Centre

*East Lodge Farm, East Lane, Ince Blundell,
Liverpool L29 3EA (0151 931 1604)*

The shelter costs £1,500 a week to run and the staff would welcome any help in fund-raising. They would also be extremely grateful for any pet supplies, greens for herbivores, tools, overalls, roofing felt, bread for fowl and any saleable goods for their charity shops. They would also be most grateful for offers to home rescued animals but run a strict vetting service.

We care for (and collect in the South London area) any sick, orphaned or injured pigeon. Donations would be sincerely appreciated.

Boswiddle Barn Animal Sanctuary

*Boswiddle Barn, Boswiddle, Nr. Ladock, Truro,
Cornwall TR24 4NU (0872 510226)*

This sanctuary desperately needs funds to support the 70-or-so cats, dogs, horses, turkeys and ducks who live there. You can sponsor a Shire Horse, or you can become a Friend of the Sanctuary for £4.

The Trade in Bears' Gall Bladders

One of the biggest threats to bears, along with the continual destruction of their habitat, is the lucrative trade in bear gall bladders. The bile from bears' gall bladders is used as a cure in traditional Chinese medicine even though herbal substitutes are available. One gall bladder fetches an average price of $5,000 and thousands of wild bears are killed every year to supply the demand. This has put a price on the head of every living bear.

Bears in North and South America are also being hunted for their gall bladders. There are currently more than 10,000 bears, mostly taken from the wild, enduring a living hell on bear farms in China and Vietnam. The bears are kept in tiny cages and are regularly 'milked' for their bile. This is done via a metal tap with a tube running into the bear's gall bladder. This is an extremely painful process for the bears, leaving them so exhausted that they cannot even move. Some bears, bred for farming, will be sold on to supply China's new money making venture - bear parks. In November 1994, NGOs (Non-Governmental Organisations) in Hong Kong and China met with the China Wildlife Conservation Association (CWCA), a branch of the Chinese Government's Ministry of Forestry, to discuss the issue of bear farming in China. Echoing the conclusions made by Dr. Chris Servheen, co-chair of the IUCN Bear Specialist Group, at the symposium in Seattle, the CWCA conceded that bear farming adds to the trade in wild bear products rather than compensating it. This was a major turn around from the position held at the East Asiatic bear conference in Beijing in August where the majority of bear specialists were arguing that the farming of bear bile protected bears in the wild from being poached for their gall bladders. However, the Chinese Government have now distanced themselves from the promises made by the CWCA, who they say had no right to make such claims.

For further information regarding this campaign please contact:

Libearty,
WSPA, 2 Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ
(0171 793 0540).

National Groups

Action Against Puppy Farming

PO Box 2, Llandysul, Dyfed SA44 4EB

Dyfed is known for its puppy farming. The animals are bred only for profit, therefore suffering, cruelty and neglect are inevitable. AAPF spreads the message not to buy puppies from a pet shop as they are usually bred in appalling puppy farms. Donations are welcome.

Action to Abolish the Grand National

PO Box 3152, London E12 5JW

AAGN campaigns to publicise the cruelty of the Grand National, highlighting the fact that 250 horses die on British racecourses every year and many others are seriously injured. Posters and leaflets are available.

Advocates for Animals

10 Queensferry Street, Edinburgh EH2 4PG

This group produces the Annual Pictorial Review, a colour booklet packed with information. They finance and take part in special investigations and they campaign against all forms of animal abuse.

Alliance for Animal Rights

4-5 Eustace Street, Dublin 2, Eire

This group campaigns against all forms of animal abuse. For further details, please write to the above address.

Anglican Society for the Welfare of Animals

St. Augustines Vicarage, 117 Queens Gate, London SW7 5LW

The objectives of this society are to promote a more compassionate view towards animals in the Anglican Church. A bulletin is published.

Animal Aid and Advice

0181 889 9714

This group's main objective is to encourage responsible pet ownership. They reinforce the fact that neutering and spaying is essential to prevent unwanted litters. AAA also re-home abandoned and unwanted pets and run a fostering service.

Animal Freedom (formerly Fox Cubs)

PO Box 370A, Surbiton, Surrey KT6 4YN
(01932 242136)

This group, aimed mostly at younger activists and campaigners, produces an excellent quarterly magazine also called Animal Freedom. The magazine gives general information and news on current campaigns, a wide range of groups (including the green and environmental scene), and, perhaps most importantly, encouragement to young veggies and animal rights activists. Membership costs £4 per year - apply to the above address.

Animal Aid Society

The Old Chapel, Bradford Street, Tonbridge, Kent TN9 1AW (01732 364546)

Animal Aid have been involved in the battle against live exports and are soon to produce a dossier of breaches of the animal cruelty laws, thereby pressuring the police to enforce the legislation. Animal Aid also published, earlier this summer, their investigation into the sheep industry, entitled 'Silence of the Lambs'. This report revealed the true horrors of multiple births of lambs to ewes where nature designed them to carry one lamb only, delivering it in March or April when milder weather should ensure the lamb's survival. Farmers now employ special feeding and breeding regimes to force ewes to produce lambs during the winter months as well. Tragically, many of the lambs die from exposure, disease and malnutrition in their first days. Anyone requiring a copy of the report should send an SAE (A5 size) to the above address. There is an accompanying video to 'Silence of the Lambs' at £7.00. Animal Aid are organizing a Christmas Without Cruelty Fayre at Kensington Town Hall on Saturday 16th December. Animal Aid publishes a journal for action called Outrage. Annual subscription is £10 waged, £6 unwaged and £4 youth.

Animal Birth Control

2 Festing Buildings, Highland Rd., Southsea PO4 9BZ (01705 736691)

ABC helps with the spaying and neutering of animals and also with the costs of helping elderly people to keep their companion animals. Their main aim is to instigate an animals' charter giving animals the right to life. Due to an upsurge in animal cruelty, ABC now works with Animal Action, which rescues and re-homes unwanted and abandoned animals.

Animal Concern

62 Old Dumbarton Rd., Glasgow G3 8RE
(0141 334 6014)

Animal Concern incorporates the Scottish Anti-Vivisection Society. They publish a quarterly newsletter and run various campaigns including a farm animal campaign to ban all factory farming by the year 2000.

Animal Cruelty Investigation Group

c/o 83-87 Union Street, London SE1 1SG

This is a small group of specialist investigators who gather evidence of the cruelty involved in a range of animal welfare issues such as bloodsports, vivisection, factory farming, etc. A twice-yearly news bulletin is produced.

The Ark Animal Rescue

PO Box 463, Beckenham, Kent BR3 2ZH

Wildlife Aid - 0181 312 9021

This is an animal rescue centre which cares for unwanted pets and rescued animals. They also deal with injured animals and encourage people to ring them on the above wildlife aid telephone number if they find any injured wildlife. The sanctuary is run solely by volunteers and they would welcome any donations. They also run a yearly animal adoption scheme for their permanent residence. A quarterly newsletter is published. Adult membership is £6 annually.

Animal Liberation Bikers Club

*Box No 1135, Downs View Rd., Hassocks,
W. Sussex BN6 8AA*

The ALBC has been formed to encourage motorcyclists to take part in the fight against animal abuse. They give information on animal rights issues and local contacts. They are open to all bike and scooter enthusiasts. For further details, please send an SAE to the above address.

Animal Liberation Front (Press Office)

BM 4400, London WC1N 3XX

The Press Office plays a vital role in the animal rights movement. It remains paramount as a means of providing TV, radio and newspaper coverage about why ALF actions take place. Speakers are available for meetings, etc. Merchandise is also available. Donations are always welcome to help run the office of a much needed and valuable animal rights service.

Animal Liberation Front (Supporters Group)

BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX

Subscription to their quarterly newsletter is £24 a year. It provides information about current arrests and imprisonment of alleged animal rights activists. The SG raises funds, chiefly to help pay fines and help towards the travelling expenses of visiting relatives. Funds also go towards paying for books, cruelty-free toiletries, etc. A range of merchandise is available with a discount to any SG member.

Animal Rescue

PO Box 233, Liverpool, L69 7LF

Animal Rescue are running several different campaigns at the moment. Please write for further details.

Animal Rights Coalition (ARC)

PO Box 339, Wolverhampton WV10

(01902 711935)

ARC encourages the coming together of all groups. A newsletter is provided, with a diary of events and current campaigns. ARC also sends out lists detailing addresses of current animal abuse establishments supplied by Arkangel Information. They urge all animal rights groups to contact them.

Anti-Bullfighting Committee

PO Box 175, Liverpool, Merseyside L69 8DX

Liaises with Spanish A/R groups to persuade holidaymakers not to attend bull fights, and asks travel companies to publish a statement in their brochures discouraging people from attending bullfights.

Arkangel

BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX

Arkangel aims to provide information and support for the A/R movement, to encourage unity, and to provide a forum for the exchange of news and views. Donations are needed. In order to keep Arkangel up-to-date, please would local and national groups continue to send in information about their current activities as these will be used in the next edition of the magazine.

Beauty Without Cruelty Charity

57 King Henry's Walk, London N1 4NH

(0171 254 2929)

The BWCC campaigns to end the torture and slaughter of all animals in the name of fashion and beauty. Current campaigns include FUR FREE 2000 to ban fur farming in the UK before the end of the decade, and a petition to protest against the ISO/TC 191 Humane Animal Traps Standard.

British Anti-Vivisection Association

PO Box 82, Kingswood, Bristol BS15 1YF

BAVA has useful information on medical fraud and experiments. The aims of the campaign are to abolish all animal experimentation and to increase public awareness of the hazardous nature of most medication. Posters, booklets and petitions are available. Subscriptions are £6 a year. Books by Hans Reusch are available by mail order.

British Divers Marine Life Rescue

12 Mayland Rd., Corby, Northants. NN7 2DR

This is an international marine animal rescue and protection organisation, which helps to protect marine animals from the threat of over-fishing, pollution, etc. Membership is £15 a year, with concessions for OAPs.

British Hedgehog Preservation Society

Knowbury House, Knowbury, Ludlow, Shropshire
SL8 3LQ. Hedgehog Helpline 01584 890287

This charity publishes a regular newsletter giving details on all aspects of hedgehog welfare. They run a hedgehog helpline during office hours on the above telephone number. A leaflet entitled 'Helping Hedgehogs' is available free of charge by sending an SAE to the above address. They also produce a 'Hogalogue' of books and items of hedgehogary for the discerning shopper. Recently the group have published a new leaflet entitled 'Creating a wildlife garden', which contains many useful tips.

Campaign Against Leather & Fur (CALF)

BM 8889, London WC1N 3XX

Leaflets are available on the leather, fur, wool and silk trades. Please send an SAE for further information.

Campaigners for Animal Rights and the Environment (CARE)

9 Soberton Rd., Queens Park, Bourne, Norfolk
Dorset BH8 9BG

CARE are concerned about the parts in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act which make it a criminal offence to conduct peaceful protest. They are encouraging people to write to their MPs expressing their opposition to the Act. Leaflets containing sample letters are available from the above address.

Campaigning for the Abolition of Cruel Sports

Lower Coyne Street, Callan, Co. Kilkenny, Ireland
CACS seeks to halt the imports of greyhounds from Ireland into the UK until the Irish Government increases the penalties for those convicted of blooding - the practice of feeding live animals to greyhounds. They urge people to write polite letters of protest to the Home Secretary, The Home Office, Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AT.

Care for the Wild

1, Ashfolds, Horsham Rd., Ruse, W. Sussex
RH12 4QX. (01293 871596)

Care for the Wild is continuing its projects around the world. They have recently received a request for help from the Prince Edward Island Stranding Network, formed in 1990 by Patricia Gray, to rescue dolphins and whales washed up on the Canadian shoreline in ever increasing numbers. Care for the Wild is committed to providing what help it can and needs donations to help provide urgently required equipment. For further information, please write to the above address. They also run foster schemes for gibbons in Thailand, baby elephants in Kenya and an 'adopt a tiger' scheme in conjunction with the Tiger Trust.

Cetacea Defence

PO Box 11, SEDO Office, Manchester M18 8GU

Principally involved in protecting the world's whales and dolphins. People are needed to act as on-the-spot investigators. Contact the above address.

Cinnamon Trust

Poldarves Farm, Trescowe Common, Germoe,
Penzance, Cornwall TR20 9RX (01736 850291)

This is a charity for elderly and terminally ill people and their pets. The trust has a national network of volunteer pet helpers who visit owners at home and provide assistance where necessary. Fostering takes place if the owner is injured or hospitalised. Donations always welcome.

Cosmetics Industry Coalition for Animal Welfare

39 Manor Rd., Rusthall, Tunbridge Wells,
Kent TN4 8UD. (01892 517000)

This organisation has launched a new initiative to put an end to the confusion about animal testing of ingredients and finished products for cosmetics, toiletries and perfumes. The Coalition has been formed by 4 companies which embrace the ethic known as the 1976/78 Fixed Cut-Off Date criterion. They are seeking to get more companies to join and to bring pressure on retailers to stock the 1976/78 product. For more details please send an SAE to the above address.

Cruelty-Free Companions

Box CFCM, The Rainbow Centre,

180 Mansfield Rd., Nottingham NG1 3HU

This is a non-profit making national setup. It aims to link together people who believe in a cruelty-free lifestyle. For further details please contact the above address.

Dartmoor Badgers Protection League

Riverside Cottage, Poundsgate, Newton Abbot,
Devon TQ13 7NV (01364 631231)

DBPL was formed to prevent the unjustified slaughter of badgers in the Devon and Cornwall area. They provide information and advice on how you can help to stamp out these disgusting offences, as well as badger snaring and trapping. Any donation would be gratefully received. All funds go directly towards helping injured and orphaned badgers, and various DBPL campaigns.

Disabled Against Animal Research and Exploitation (DAARE)

PO Box 8, Daventry, Northants. NN11 4RQ

A national organisation for people who are disabled or have a chronic disease. DAARE is opposed to animals being used in drug experiments. People who are not disabled are also welcome to join.

Dr. Hadwen Trust

22 Bancroft, Hitchin, Herts. SG5 1JW
(01462 436819)

The trust is a registered charity which funds the development of new, humane techniques to replace the use of animals in medical research. Annual subscription is £8 and members receive a quarterly newsletter. The trust also runs a mail order catalogue featuring gifts and cosmetics.

Doctors in Britain Against Animal Experiments

PO Box 302, London N8 9HD

DBAAE, founded in 1990, is a group of doctors, scientists and pharmacists who reject all animal experiments on scientific and ethical grounds.

Environmental Investigation Agency

2 Pear Tree Court, London EC1R 0DS
(0171 490 7040)

EIA has campaigned for most endangered species since its foundation in 1984. For further information please send an SAE.

The Farm Animal Appeal

46 Kensington Place, Brighton, Sussex BN1 4EJ
(01273 790037)

The Farm Animal Appeal was established by a group of protesters from Shoreham opposed to the export of animals to Europe. Originally the group bought animals from market to save them from imminent slaughter and then progressed to setting up a centre, Brook Farm, to provide a natural environment for all rescued animals. A non-profit making organisation, FAA's initial funding was provided by sales of the book ~ 'The Siege of Shoreham'. The majority of their income is provided through subscriptions, donations and fund-raising events. Fact sheets and educational packs are available and a recently introduced adoption scheme allows people to sponsor an individual animal. For details and membership please contact the above address.

Fox Project

The Old Chapel, Bradford St., Tonbridge,
Kent TN9 1AW

Fox Project has recently received charitable status. Although primarily involved with foxes, their expanding ambulance network covers most wild animals, consequently the charity has been registered as 'The Southern Wildlife Ambulance Network (SWAN)'. 'Fox Project' has been retained as a working title. The organisation has saved many foxes' lives by humanely trapping and moving them from potential threat. They take into care orphaned foxes and set them free when they are fit and well. A newsletter and merchandise are available from the above address.

Freedom Animal Sanctuary Trust

12b Dudley Rd., Tunbridge Wells, Kent TN11 1LF
Freedom Animal Sanctuary needs money to re-home animals and to realise their long-term aim of creating a sanctuary.

Greek Animal Rescue

69 Great North Way, Hendon, London NW4 1PT
(0181 203 1956)

Many animals suffer in Greece. Strays are thought of as vermin and are killed often by being thrown live over cliffs. There is a 30 minute video available featuring some of Greece's atrocities towards its animals and shows the shelters and sanctuary which are provided for abused and neglected animals.

Homeless Owners with Pets

1A Courtland Gardens, Bassett,
Southampton SO2 3PP

HOPE campaigns for the rights of responsible people with pets, as often no pets are allowed in rented housing. They help to ensure the welfare of pets (mostly dogs) on the streets.

Hunt Saboteurs Association (HSA)

PO Box 1, Carlton, Nottingham NG4 2JY
(01602 590357)

Hunt saboteurs use peaceful tactics to ensure the freedom of wild animals. They are currently encouraging people to write to the Home Secretary to protest against current anti-saboteur legislation. The HSA gives information and advice on how to form a fully operational hunt-sab group. They provide speakers for talks and give legal advice. Merchandise is available.

International Animal Rescue

Animal Tracks, Ash Mill, South Molton,
Devon EX36 4QW (01769 550277)

Earlier this year, IAR finally took over the running of the Manoel Island Dog Sanctuary in Malta. The sanctuary had previously been in control of a cruel and contemptuous man who kept the rescued dogs in staggeringly awful conditions; so bad that 31 dogs had to be immediately destroyed when the sanctuary was raided by IAR, Maltese Government officials and vets. Happily, thanks to much hard work by IAR volunteers, the sanctuary is running properly and the dogs now well cared for. Obviously, this operation proved to be expensive so any donations would be gratefully received. IAR continues to research cases of animal cruelty and welfare all over the world. The Animal Tracks Sanctuary is open daily to the public and visitors and volunteers are always welcome.

Jewish Vegetarian Society

855 Finchley Rd., London NW11

The JVS is an International Movement and membership is open to everyone. Annual membership fee is £10, family membership £12.

Justice for Dogs

c/o Ann Harpwood, Finloren Cottage, Weythel,
Old Radnor, Powys LD8 2RR (01544 22213)

The Justice for Dogs campaign was launched in 1993 in response to the Dangerous Dogs Act. Donations welcome.

Justice for Kangaroos

54 Allison St., Digbeth, Birmingham B5 5TH
(0121 6432445)

This group has been founded to campaign against the use of kangaroo and other 'exotic' meat in UK restaurants. JFK hope that if people can be dissuaded from feasting on kangaroo, ostrich, alligator, etc. they may realise that cows, sheep, pigs, chickens and all the other animals and fish regularly served up have a right to life too. JFK are a non-profit making organisation and can provide information on all aspects of the exotic animals meat trade.

Liberty

WSPA, 2 Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ
(0171 793 0540)

Liberty is a campaign run by the World Society for the Protection of Animals to come to the aid of bears being exploited all over the world. Liberty has set up projects to help hundreds of bears and to physically rescue many from lives of cruelty and neglect. An annual donation of £12.50 ensures 3 newsletters a year plus an introductory campaign pack.

The Marine Connection

PO Box 2404, London W2 3WG

The Marine Connection is a campaigning organisation dedicated to raising awareness about dolphins and whales through publishing and networking. The group publishes 4 newsletters a year providing regular information on campaigns and conferences around the world. MC helps with the funding of a rehabilitation and release project for captive dolphins in Florida. The group are also involved with UK Strandings Network, a setup to protect cetaceans around the UK shores and waters.

Marine Action Society International

01304 830873

MASI is a new maritime organisation created to campaign against human, animal and environmental abuses. The groups strategy is to expose abusers and bring them to public attention; together with education, research and general information. Their current campaigns include whaling and cetacean abuse and the anti-live export trade.

McLibel Support Campaign

c/o London Greenpeace, 5 Caledonian Rd., London N1 (0171 713 1269)

See report elsewhere in the magazine!

National Anti-Hunt Campaign (NAHC)

PO Box 66, Broxbourne, Herts. EN10 6LU
(01438 746372)

NAHC has launched a major new hard-hitting campaign to protect wild animals and produced a video which has shocked both hardened campaigners and politicians alike. Please write to the above address for a copy of their Special Edition Campaign Report.

National Anti-Vivisection Society

Ravenside, 261 Goldhawk Rd., London W12 9PE
(0181 846 9777)

NAVS produce a magazine entitled 'The Campaigner' which is issued to members. For details of membership and any other information on its campaigns please contact the above address.

National Dogsters

The Pulpits (Dog Holidays), Little Hereford,
Ludlow SY8 4AU

Admin: 01584 711534 or 24 hours: 0171 413 9990
National Dogsters provide a unique individual home-based boarding service for dogs while their owners are away and they can also offer a day care or dog walking service. Dog owners are invited to contact them to be referred to their nearest registered dog sitter. People wanting to register as National Dogsters are also invited to contact the organisation.

NOW Against Live Exports

St. Joseph's, Souldern, Bicester, Oxon. OX6 9LA
NOW has been very busy campaigning against the live export trade. They encourage people to write to the local press and their MPs regarding issues raised in their newsletters. An action pack is available with an A4 SAE. Donations appreciated.

Pagan Animal Rights

c/o Billy Frugal, P.A.R., 10 Broughton Street, Hebden Bridge, W. Yorkshire HX7 8JY

This organisation, founded 10 years ago, is open to people who care about animals - whether they are pagan or not. Membership is £3 a year and members receive a newsletter for all the pagans festivals.

People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA)

PO Box 3169, London NW1 2JF (0171 388 4922)

PETA campaigns against all forms of animal abuse. Current campaigns include the Chicken Out campaign and the Premarin campaign against the use of pregnant mares urine for HRT therapy (see report elsewhere in the magazine).

Petsearch & Pet Owners Support Scheme

c/o Phil Groombridge, 16 Elm Grove Rd., Salisbury, Wilts SP1 1JW (01722 326046)

Petsearch UK runs a register of lost and found animals and produces a newsletter given details of missing pets. They also run a Pet Owners Support Scheme where members can give instructions as to who should look after their pet if anything happens to the owner. Donations welcome.

Pet Stealing Alert

PO Box 94, Cheltenham, Glos.

Cats and dogs are going missing nationwide. Please contact the above address if you are suspicious of an advert offering good homes, or if an animal has disappeared in unusual circumstances.

Pisces

(formerly Campaign Against Angling)

PO Box 90, Bristol BS99 1ND (01179 441175)

Pisces continues to campaign against the bloodsport of angling. The organisation produces a magazine entitled 'Pisces' which covers all aspects of the campaign to end this cruel 'sport' and includes coverage of national anti-angling campaigns, local groups reports and updates from the Shellfish Network and the Shark Protection League. The magazine also highlights the plight of wildlife which continue to be victims of lost and discarded tackle by careless anglers. Write to Pisces at the above address for further information and action packs detailing how individuals can help with their campaigns.

Plan 2000

Lynmouth, Devon EX35 6EE

Plan 2000 aims to see all animal experiments banned by the end of the century.

Arkangel 14

Reptile Protection Trust

*College Gates, 2 Deansway, Worcs. WR1 2JD
(01483 417550)*

RPT is seeking to ban the trade in pet turtles and terrapins. They lobby relevant authorities internationally and engage in public education. To receive a copy of the fact sheet and booklet 'Reptiles: Misunderstood, Mistreated and Mass-Marketed', please send a cheque for £2.30 to the above address.

Respect for Animals

PO Box 500, Nottingham NG1 3AS

Respect for Animals is committed to bringing an end to live exports. It aims to put the subject of live exports firmly on the political agenda and is targeting 40 key constituencies, regarded as vulnerable, with the aim of replacing the Government. Respect continues to support a boycott of Dover and of vets that sign export certificates. The group produces a bulletin on the live export issue detailing the state of the campaign. Details of all Respect for Animals initiatives and campaigns can be obtained from the above address.

Shark Protection League

BM L.A.P.L. London WC1N 3XX (01589 173033)

The Shark Protection League was primarily set up to expose the horrific cruelty involved in shark angling and to campaign against this 'sport'. Every September the group will hold a protest against the International Shark Angling Festival in Looe, Cornwall. They are also campaigning against the trade in sharks' fins for sharks' fin soup. This May, SPL held a successful demonstration, in London's China Town, against this mindless slaughter which threatens sharks with extinction. SPL produce leaflets, fact sheets and petitions free of charge in return for an SAE, however, donations are always welcome.

The Shellfish Network

Box 66, c/o Greenleaf Bookshop, 82 Colston St., Bristol BS1 5BB. (0117 9425524)

The Shellfish Network aims to increase public awareness of the cruelties involved in the production of shellfish for food. See article elsewhere in this magazine!

Student Campaign for Animal Rights (SCAR)

*PO Box 155, Manchester M60 1FT
(0161 953 4039)*

SCAR have launched a petition calling upon the Secretary of State for Education to ensure that whenever students are asked to perform animal experiments for degree work they are able to choose non-animal work without penalty or loss of marks. The petition was handed in at the end of March.

Tail Ends

PO Box 1550, London SW4 6HP

This is a small vegan animal rescue network which needs homes for abused and abandoned animals, mainly cats and dogs. All of the money, which is desperately needed, goes towards food, vets' bills, neutering and spaying. They have a selection of merchandise available from the above address.

Teachers for Animal Rights

c/o 29 Lynwood Rd., London SW17 6HP.

Please write for an information pack, but a donation to cover costs for postage and literature is essential.

Uncaged

14 Ridgeway Rd., Sheffield S12 2SS

Uncaged works to raise awareness, especially of the general public, to the horrors of vivisection. The group held a successful march against vivisection and a cruelty-free fair in Sheffield in June and hopes to build this into an annual national event. Write for further details of campaigns, etc.

Vegan Society

Donald Watson House, 7 Battle Rd., St. Leonards on Sea, E. Sussex TN37 7AA (01424 427393)

The Vegan Society is the main UK organisation promoting veganism and is always seeking new members to help the society grow so that it can be at the forefront of the movement, showing that veganism is the way forward for animals, people and the environment. A video entitled 'Truth or Dairy' is currently available for £9.99 (p&p inc.). Annual membership is £15 individual, £10 unwaged. Members receive a quarterly magazine.

Vegans International

c/o 11, Guinea St., Bristol BS1 6SX

Vegans International unites those who want to spread the message of respect and love for all life. (See article elsewhere in this magazine).

Vegetarian Society

Parkdale, Dunham Rd., Altrincham, Cheshire WA14 4QG

An important organisation for those taking the first step towards veganism! It publishes an informative magazine, and also Greenscene, a magazine for younger readers.

Vegfam

The Sanctuary, Nr. Lydford, Okehampton, Devon EX20 4AL (01822 82203)

For nearly 30 years, Vegfam, a registered charity, has been working with and influencing the major charities to carry out projects which do not exploit animals by co-financing projects which are in agreement with this ecologically sound principle. They are also associated with a charity called

'Find Your Feet' which has pioneered Leaf Concentrate projects.

Veggies

180, Mansfield Rd., Nottingham NG1 3HU

An animal rights calendar is produced on a regular basis, the most up-to-date and comprehensive one around. Their catering facilities travel up and down the country providing vegan food. Veggies produce a variety of posters, available on request.

VIVA!

PO Box 212, Crewe, Cheshire CW1 4SD
(01270 522500)

VIVA!, a national vegetarian and vegan charity, was launched last October by Juliet Gellatley. The group produces a magazine called 'VIVA! Life', which has all the details of their campaigns, including CRATE (Campaign to Resist Animal Transport to Europe) which aims to show the link between what people eat and the horrors of the export trade. VIVA! have taken part in countless media interviews and continue to build their youth education programme and aim to strengthen international ties, with a view to bringing an end to animal suffering. VIVA! have produced various guides on subjects including factory farming and BSE. Annual membership fee details from the above address. Supporters receive VIVA! Life quarterly.

World Society for the Protection of Animals (WSPA)

2, Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ
(0171 793 0540)

WSPA is involved in many issues concerning the plight of animals across the world. Amongst their projects are education and neutering programmes, providing emergency veterinary care and supporting animal shelters worldwide. Recent campaigns have included a letter writing project, urging supporters to write to the Congolese authorities, asking them to ban cherrotine, the favoured ammunition of chimpanzee and gorilla hunters. Although it is illegal to hunt mankind's closest relative in almost all African countries, they are still being killed in huge numbers to provide luxury 'bush meat' for the daily markets across Central Africa. WSPA's Escape campaign is helping to fund chimp and gorilla sanctuaries in Cameroun and Congo. This summer saw the launch of WSPA's Holiday Horrors campaign. This is a package designed to provide information to people, appalled by the animal suffering they see when abroad, to help them to know what to look out for and what they can do to help.

Young Indian Vegetarians

41 Lakeside Avenue, Ilford, Essex IG4 5PS
(0181 550 3725)

For details of future events please write to the above address.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

AUSTRALIA

The oil firm Oil Japan Esso-Kai has donated about £450,000 to the Australian Koala Foundation. (Animal People, April '95)

Wyang City Council in New South Wales has banned circuses with exotic animals from performing on council-owned or controlled land. Prior to the ban, Animal Liberation screened a video showing circus cruelty to a meeting of Wyong Councillors. (Action, Aug. '95)

Koala-cuddling by visitors to Australian zoos is to be banned because it causes stress to the animals. (Teletext, 3/9/95)

BALTIC SEA

A multi-million dollar project is to be launched to clean up the Baltic Sea. The Sea has become degraded after 5 decades of untreated industrial discharge, sewage and industrial seepage, and many of its diverse animal and fish populations are now threatened with extinction. (Ceefax, 9/6/95)

BANGLADESH

Bangladesh has announced a £1 million effort to protect and increase the numbers of tigers in the Sundarbans Forest, home of about 450 royal Bengal tigers which are often targets of poachers. (Animal People, April '95)

BRAZIL

The Brazilian government is recruiting "green agents" as part of an effort to protect the environment. It is hoped as many as 60,000 university students will be "green agents" in 1996. The volunteers will distribute information to raise awareness of the need for environmental protection. (Ceefax, 9/6/95)

CANADA

In response to extensive campaigning by animal protectionists, the Biodome of Montreal has cancelled its plans to add Beluga whales to its exhibits. (Zoocheck Canada, 29/3/95)

Six leading restaurants & delicatessens in Ottawa have taken paté de foie gras off their menus. (Humane News, March/April '95)

The Ontario Government has passed new regulations to improve the treatment of downed livestock in Ontario. The new regulations require veterinary examination and certification for the movement of non-ambulatory animals (i.e. those unable to stand or walk) from the farm etc. and govern the management of casualties that occur in transit, at auction markets and at abattoirs. (Humane News, May/June '95)

The Canadian government has begun efforts to save the decreasing number of grizzly bears by increasing fines for poaching and restricting hunting in British Columbia. (Ceefax, 8/7/95)

CANARY ISLANDS

Two lions, which suffered years of abuse in cages 9ft by 6ft on the roof of a bar on the island of Tenerife, are to start a new life at a wildlife park in Kent, where they will join 5 other lions. (Teletext, 3/4/95)

CENTRAL AMERICA

Nicaragua, Honduras and El Salvador have designed a unified strategy to combat the illegal flow of wildlife from Central America to markets across the Northern Hemisphere. After more than a year of planning, high-ranking officials from these nations have agreed to implement an anti-smuggling programme that includes tactical military support. (Animals' Agenda, Aug. '95)

CHINA

The Xishuangbanna Intermediate People's Court has sentenced 5 men to death for killing 16 endangered Asian elephants and smuggling 11 pairs of tusks out of China. The accused, two of whom are policemen, used semiautomatic rifles and a machine gun to kill the elephants and to injure 4 others. (Animals' Agenda, March/April '95)

Officials in western China are cracking down on international smuggling of falcons. (Ceefax Newsround, 21/4/95)

China is to set up 14 new nature reserves as part of an effort to save the Giant Panda. (Daily Telegraph, 31/5/95)

A man who killed a panda and tried to sell its fur has been sentenced to life imprisonment. (Teletext, 22/6/95)

EGYPT

The Egyptian government has banned hunting in its desert for 5 years to protect dwindling desert life - including all varieties of gazelle and fowl. New regulations are also to be adopted to control desert tourism, often done in 4-wheel drive vehicles. (Humane News, March/April '95)

EUROPE

Eleven European nations have agreed to a moratorium on dumping offshore oil rigs at sea. (Ceefax, 1/7/95)

FRENCH GUYANA

Thousands of sloths, armadillos, monkeys, tarantulas and other animals, all facing death after a man-made dam flooded their rainforest habitat, have been rescued and relocated in another part of French Guyana's rain forest in an operation funded by the French government and EDF, the electricity company which built the dam. (Independent, 21/5/95)

GERMANY

The German state of Hessen has forbidden the breeding of white cats or cats with no tails (Manx), because some white cats go deaf as kittens and Manx cats are troubled by spina bifida and other problems. It is expected that similar bans will eventually be enacted in other German states. (FIFe News, Spring '95)

Over £7 million damage has been caused in an arson attack by animal liberationists on a huge intensive poultry farm being built near Gehrde for chicken-baron Anton Pohlmann. (Neue Oz, 24/7/95)

Animal rights activists convinced Schwabengarage, the world's largest car dealership, to cancel an animal act scheduled to "entertain" crowds at its open day. Clowns were hired to replace two bicycle-riding bears from the Moscow Circus. (Animal Times, July/Aug. '95)

At Weterhausen in the Harz Mountains, 100 animal rights campaigners disrupted a chaffinch singing competition, prior to which the birds are kept for months in dark, cramped cages. The contest eventually had to be abandoned. (Tierbefreiung Aktuell, Aug. '95)

HOLLAND

The number of supporters of Proefkoneen, an anti-vivisection organization for young people, doubled in 1994. (Proefdiervrij, April '95)

Medical students at Erasmus University in Rotterdam are now using bicycle inner tubes and fig leaves, rather than rats and frogs, to practice their dissection skills. The students fill the tubes with foam rubber to get a feel for cutting into a human body and they've discovered that the veins in fig leaves are similar to those in humans. (Animal Times, May/June '95)

HONG KONG

Two marshes have been declared as Wetlands of International Importance under the Ramsar Convention. The marshes are home to some 300 species of birds as well as many other animals and plants. (Ceefax, 9/9/95)

INDIA

The Chief Minister of Punjab has ordered the closure of a slaughterhouse in Patiala District following protests by the Jain community and others. He stated, "My conscience does not allow me to sacrifice thousands of buffaloes in the slaughterhouse". (Compassionate Friend, May '95)

INDONESIA

The Indonesian government has allocated $125m to preserve the country's coral reefs, which are in critical condition. (Ceefax, 25/8/95)

INTERNATIONAL

Canada and Sweden are testing the use of wolf urine to make scent barriers that might keep moose and elk off busy roads. (Animal People, April '95)

ISRAEL

The first centre for animal rights in Israel, the Anonymous Educational and Environmental Awareness Centre, was opened at the beginning of March. (Anonymous Newsletter, May '95)

Another fur store on Ben-Yehuda Street in Central Tel-Aviv has closed following weekly pickets. (Anonymous Newsletter, May '95)

During a school field-trip a young girl refused to take part in one of the activities which involved riding on the back of a small donkey. She was threatened with detention and later with suspension. But, after Anonymous sent letters of protest and threatened legal action in terms of her right of freedom of conscience, the school backed down and held an animal rights day in which she presented a lecture, distributed leaflets and gave a radio broadcast discussing animal rights. (Anonymous Newsletter, May '95)

The import of dolphins to Israel in commerce or for "entertainment" has been banned. (Animal Times, July/Aug. '95)

IVORY COAST

The Ivory Coast has signed an international convention that bans the trade in ivory. (Humane News, March/April '95)

JAPAN

The Fuji film company, having substituted seaweed for gelatin in the production of its photographic films and papers, now claims that it does not use any animal material in its products. (Animal Liberation, 31/3/95)

LEBANON

Following pressure from Brigitte Bardot, environment minister Pierre Pharaon has promised to ban hunting in 1996 if he is still in office. The Lebanese government had earlier reversed a decision to bring in a hunting ban. (Ceefax, 9/9/95)

MEXICO

The Kemp's Ridley Turtle appears to be making a comeback. The Ridley's population had been decimated nearly to extinction by shrimp trawlers' nets in which they become entangled and by poachers who remove their eggs from a Mexican beach. Regulations mandating the installation of turtle excluder devices on shrimp trawlers and efforts to dig up and protect the eggs in guarded corals may prevent the Kemp's Ridley Turtle from becoming extinct. (Animals' Agenda, March/April '95)

NAMIBIA

The Namibian government has taken measures to protect lions and wild dogs which are facing extinction. A protection list has been drawn up prohibiting either species from being killed. (Ceefax, 9/9/95)

NORWAY

Four days before the start of the whaling season the Norwegian government cut the whalers' quota from 301 to 232, saying that an overestimation of the Minke whale population had led it to set too high a quota. Whalers claimed they would lose about £5,000 for each of the 69 whales they were not allowed to kill. (Animals' Agenda, Aug. '95)

SOUTH AFRICA

Three poachers were shot and killed in the Kruger National Park during a battle with a game ranger after they had been caught poaching giraffe and buffalo for their meat. In a separate incident game wardens shot and killed a poacher who had killed 4 white rhinos in KwaZulu-Natal's Umfolozi game reserve. (Animals' Agenda, March/April '95)

SPAIN

A Spanish Vegan Society (la Asociación Vegana Española) has been formed and is publishing its own magazine every 3 months. (Veganismo, Spring '95)

SWITZERLAND

The International League of Doctors for the Abolition of Vivisection continues to gain support and now has 1,600 doctor members in 83 different countries. (Animals' Agenda, Aug. '95)

TONGA

The government of Tonga has rejected a request by the Japanese to hunt whales in its pacific waters. (Ceefax, 27/5/95)

TURKEY

A Ukrainian show featuring performing seals and dolphins has been banned from operating in Turkey after protests by animal welfare groups. (Ceefax, 17/6/95)

UKRAINE

Dolphins formerly used by the Soviet navy are now forming part of a "dolphin therapy" scheme to help children with neurotic disorders. (Ceefax, 2/9/95)

U.S.A.

After 8 years, the California Desert Protection Act has been approved. It is the largest land preservation law to pass Congress since 1980 and desert areas totalling 7.3 million acres are now protected as Wilderness Areas. (Humane News, March/April '95)

Office Depot discontinued its television commercial featuring scenes from the Calgary Stampede Rodeo after receiving many letters of protest from animal protection campaigners. (Animals' Agenda March/April '95)

Following a protest organized by PETA, a Maryland housing organization decided to drop plans to trap and kill beavers living on its property. (Animal Times, March/April '95)

Several top models have signed PETA's "Models of Compassion" petition, declaring they would speak up for animals by refusing to wear fur. (Animal Times, March/April '95)

The Iams and Timberland companies have dropped their sponsorship of the 1,000 mile Alaskan Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race, during which 6 dogs collapsed and died in 1993. (Animal Times, March/April '95)

After receiving permission from the property owners, Animal Advocates of upstate New York sawed off all 4,000 six-inch spikes from a six-foot high, half-mile long fence on which deer were being impaled. (Animal Times, March/April '95)

After PETA exposed the abuse of horses whose urine is collected to make Premarin, the most commonly prescribed oestrogen-replacement drug, 63% of U.S. doctors who responded to a survey said they would now be more likely to prescribe synthetic oestrogens. (Animal Times, March/April '95)

The states of Virginia and Vermont have now joined Maine in passing legislation prohibiting greyhound racing. (Greyhound Network News, Spring '95)

The city of San Jose is issuing vouchers for the free spaying/neutering of cats, including ferals. (Animal People, April '95)

"This was the single worst season since the 1930s," said Robert Meltzer of fur traders Evans Inc. after sales at the 12 Evans stores fell by $6.2 million during the third quarter of 1994. And at the Danish Fur Sales auction in December, an industry barometer, the average mink pelt price fell to $20.15 from the 1993 figure of $29.91. (Animal People, April '95)

Hours before the scheduled start of a day of protest against the sale of coyote fur garments by the 300-store Eddie Bauer chain was to begin, the firm announced "Due to declining customer interest in this style, we will no longer carry it. We have no further plans at this time to carry fur-trimmed garments." (Animal People, April '95)

Two dolphins kept in an undersized tank at the Steinhart Aquarium in San Francisco are to join others of their kind at a state-of-the-art oceanarium elsewhere, according to the new director of Steinhart. (Animal People, April '95)

As of mid-March, 375 deer had been killed during the winter cull in the 11 DuPage County Forest Preserves, down markedly from the 642 killed the previous winter. County officials said the drop was due to the midwinter cessation of rocket-netting, after video surreptitiously obtained by the Chicago Animal Rights Coalition showed deer suffering in the nets. Nearby Highland Park, Illinois, on Feb. 17 extended a 60-day moratorium on deer-culling until 1st Sept. (Animal People, April '95)

After killing 37,000 laughing gulls over the past 4 years, the New York Port Authority has been testing non-lethal means of keeping gulls away from Kennedy International Airport - because the federal agencies that grant the killing permits are withholding them pending resolution of a lawsuit against the killing brought by the Fund for Animals. (Animal People, April '95)

Oregon animal shelter intakes fell from 116,490 in 1991 to 88,898 in 1993, euthanasias dropped from 79,713 to 53,577 and adoptions went up from 19,105 to 25,866. (Animal People, April '95)

Mobil Oil agreed to cap all stacks at company refineries by May 1, to prevent accidental bird deaths, following a campaign by PETA. (Animal People, April '95)

Columbus, Ohio city council has voted to bar novelty animal acts, such as wrestling bears, boxing kangaroos, and diving mules. The ordinance also increased the penalty for cruelty to animals from $750 to $1,000. (Animal People, April '95)

A District Judge has issued a permanent injunction under the Endangered Species Act to keep the Pacific Lumber company from logging a 237-acre portion of the Owl Creek Forest in Humboldt County, California, which may host the rare marbled murrelet. (Animal People, April '95)

Hunter and rock musician Ted Nugent agreed to pay $75,000 to Heidi Prescott, national director of The Fund for Animals, in an out-of-court settlement of a defamation suit after Nugent had made disparaging remarks about her during a radio interview. Heidi plans to use the money to fight hunting and protect animals. (The Fund for Animals, 4/4/95)

On April 6, the intentional tripping of any equine for sport or entertainment was banned in the state of New Mexico. (Sangre de Cristo Animal Protection Inc., May '95)

Wall Street firm Morgan Stanley has scrapped the traditional crab race at its annual party after receiving complaints. (Animal Times, May/June '95)

At least 17 U.S. fur stores went out of business last winter, according to a list published by the Humane Society of the United States and the Coalition to Abolish the Fur Trade. (Animals' Agenda, May/June '95)

At least 8 fashion designers have now dropped furs from their lines. (Humane News, May/June '95)

The Bald Eagle, which was once near to extinction, is now no longer classed as an endangered species following an increase in its numbers. (Teletext, 14/7/95)

The U.S. Food Lion supermarket chain has confirmed that its products are not tested on animals. (Animal Times, July/Aug. '95)

Quincy, Massachusetts has become the fourth city in the U.S. to ban animal circuses. A new ordinance, passed unanimously by the city council, forbids the display of animals for public entertainment. (Animal Times, July/Aug. '95)

In response to a campaign launched by the American Anti-Vivisection Society, the University of Pennsylvania Medical School has decided to close one of its laboratories where narcotics and other drugs were tested on dogs. The decision follows similar resolutions by medical schools at Yale, Stanford and the University of Chicago. (Animals' Agenda, Aug. '95)

Spay Day USA (Feb. 28th), a national campaign to reduce companion animal overpopulation, was a great success with about 28,000 animals being spayed or neutered, thanks to the hard work and cooperation of thousands of groups and individuals across the country. Vets played their part by making their services more accessible and offering low-cost or free surgery. (Animals' Agenda, Aug. '95)

VANUATU

Five protected areas for endangered turtles are being set up by Vanuatu's environmental authorities. It is hoped these areas will reduce the traditional slaughter of endangered sea turtles on the island of Malekula, where some 50 turtles are killed each year for a feast to celebrate the yam harvest. The protected areas cover around 34,500 acres of Malekula island. (Ceefax, 26/6/95)

VIETNAM

A 2-year plan to save the country's 300 elephants has been agreed by the Vietnamese government and the WWF. The plan will focus on building up the elephant population which WWF claims could be wiped out in 1 to 5 years if something isn't done now. Thousands of elephants were killed during the Vietnam war and the population has continued to fall since then. (Ceefax, 8/7/95)

Farmers in Vietnam have halved the quantity of pesticides they use, following trials where unsprayed crops grew well. (Teletext, 4/9/95)

ZIMBABWE

Zimbabwe has cancelled a proposed cull of 8,600 elephants because of fears it might encourage an increase in illegal sales of ivory. (Ceefax, 15/5/95)

The Live Exports Diary

Dover, 19th June: While some protesters joined the demonstration in Brussels, 80 protesters were present at Dover's Eastern Docks, with more people spread out along the A2 and at the top of Jubilee Way. One convoy of 9 transporters passed through.

Shoreham, 23rd June: 63 protesters leafletted passengers at the Port of Newhaven against Stena Sealink's decision to resume carrying livestock from Rosslare to Fishguard. Stena are gravely concerned about these demonstrations which will grow in size.

Wales, 28th June: Farmers at Carmarthen Market were taken by surprise when over 50 protesters demonstrated at one of the locations where live exports begin. This received excellent media coverage all day, being the first item on each of the three main TV channels. Front page status in the Welsh national press was also received.

York, 28th June: Protests took place last Monday and Wednesday evenings at Albert Hall Farm, with only a couple of transporters driving in and out. While seeking spiritual solace en route to the pub, the local vicar of Strensall and a great supporter of the Hall family, failed to avoid a crowd seeking rights for God's creatures. He was serenaded to and from his public devotions with an alternative version of All Things Bright and Beautiful.

Brightlingsea, 2nd July: A public meeting was held where the results of the Brightlingsea postal survey, randomly addressed to 500 people on the electoral roll, were released. With an 80% response rate, it ended months of speculation on the feeling of the town concerning the export trade. Some of the figures include: 97% thought that people disagreeing with shipment of live animals should be allowed to protest. 86% approved of nonviolent demonstrations. 77% are against the trade. 62% thought the police should stop the lorry owners sending the animals through the town. 58% disagreed with the use of the Public Order Act.

London, 8th July: Respect for Animals launched a 4-part high profile campaign to a crowd in the region of 500 at Trafalgar Square. Impressive hard-hitting speeches were delivered by well known campaigners to animal protesters from all over England.

Birmingham, 8th July: Probably the largest animal rights demonstration to date has heralded a major success by the Coalition Against Animal Exports. Over 300 people attended from Wales, NW and NE England.

Dover, 8th July: A rally was held at the end of the Shoreham/Brightlingsea to Dover walk, 20 protesters having marched the whole distance. Almost 6,000 leaflets were distributed to passers-by on the walk. For the last leg from Folkestone, many hundreds joined the march.

Shoreham, 3rd July: The Campaign Against Live Freight office and homes of its prominent members were raided by the police. It transpires that the whole exercise was a deliberate attempt to intimidate, disrupt and destabilise the organisation. Solicitors have been instructed to act on the group's behalf.

York, 5th July: Early in the evening at Albert Hall Farm, two people managed to dash under one of the transporters. It took three policeman quite a few minutes to remove the demonstrators. The police emerged looking dirty, greasy and dishevelled. Their vanity at stake resulted in aggressive police tactics for the rest of the evening.

Dover, 7th July: Last week protests were held in the village of Bridge, a route used by the animal transporters, which received a good response from the locals. A delay was also caused by a protest outside Capel lairage. The 7th July saw the best turnout at the Eastern Docks since the protests started, with about 250 protesters, the majority from Shoreham and elsewhere.

Yorkshire, 11th July: A protest took place at one of the main entrances on the first day of the Great Yorkshire Show at Harrogate. Leaflets were handed out and a petition against live exports was signed by visitors and even some farmers. Although verbal abuse was forthcoming from a few farmers, the overall reaction was felt to be encouraging.

Brightlingsea, 11th July: An old 42-seater coach without any front wheels was dumped in the road in front of the wharf gates. The road was completely blocked off. The ECO Cowboys, who were visiting Brightlingsea, were chained together inside the vehicle. Some were welded to the underside of the coach while others sat on the roof. As police cut away the protesters with boltcroppers, crowbars and saws, the screams sent shivers through Brightlingsea protesters on one of the hottest days so far. The coach was removed by lifting gear.

Coventry, 14th July: Christopher Barrett-Jolley's company Pheonix Aviation went into liquidation at 5pm on Friday, 14th July. Proud B-J insists that it has nothing to do with protests and smugly claims the reason for his downfall was Coventry Council, who kept increasing their prices.

Dover, 17th July: The number of protesters was swelled by a party of 70 primary school children who joined the demonstration at the end of a long walk to St. Margaret's Bay and back. Quite spontaneously, they chanted "Ban Live Exports" to transporters entering the docks.

Dover, 26th July: 50 protesters at Petham lairage were outnumbered by police who claimed they delayed the transporters entering the lairage because they couldn't guarantee their safety. At 11pm the protesters were cautioned under Section 14, and were dispersed. 20 of them then went to visit Mr. Skinner at Coxhill Farm. He and his bodyguards greeted them with iron bars so they didn't stay too long.

Plymouth, August: A protest was staged outside a local Italian Restaurant which includes 11 Dutch veal dishes on its menu. The vocal protesters sang to the proprietor asking him to remove veal from the menu - until he threatened them with a visit from the MAFIA!

Brightlingsea, 5th August: A regular demonstration was held outside the home of wharf owner, Earnest Oliver, who lives 7 miles from Brightlingsea. A large crowd assembled outside his home just as he was departing for his weekly drink at the Kings Head pub in Brightlingsea. However, when Oliver came out and saw the protesters, he went back in for his camera and started taking snaps. Mr. Oliver required police assistance when he eventually left for the pub.

York, 6th August: A mass protest at Albert Hall Farm was well attended by groups from all over the country. After the speeches by various organisations in a residential area nearby, designated by the police who feared obstruction of the highway, the protesters returned to the farm to find that barriers had been placed across the entrance with security increased to four men, instead of the usual two. Thousands of purple ribbons were attached to the fence and surrounding trees and shrubs.

Stoke-on-Trent, 29th July: 200 young people with a vision of a better future and committed to ending the suffering of farm animals, joined a march organised by VIVA!, and distributed thousands of leaflets to passers-by. Press and media coverage before and after the event was extensive.

Shoreham, August: More than 100 protesters carrying banners gathered outside the Shoreham Port Authority building to welcome the new manager and hand him a petition and letter from local residents. Early indications are that he is on our side and will do all he can to lawfully discourage the trade from returning. Hove Council have now publicly condemned the trade and will fight any attempt to resume live exports from Shoreham.

Plymouth, August: A visit was made to Hugues Inizan of Choakford Farm, Plympton. As three lorries and trailers loaded with calves were leaving, protesters successfully managed to make one lorry take the wrong route. Hugues, accompanied by a couple of heavies, drove out of the farm narrowly missing protesters and shouting threats in French and English. Only 10 days earlier he had been found guilty of ABH. Police arrived to escort the other two lorries and trailers onto the A30. The lorries went through Dover the following day, no doubt to Inizan's veal finishing farm in Le Folgoet.

Boughton-on-the-Water, 28th August: Nearly 200 noisy people from all over the UK attended the protest here which received excellent media coverage. It is believed that £40,000 was forked out to police the protest (which included a helicopter).

Dover, 29th August: A papier mache sheep, pig and calf were chained across the A20 near the Eastern Docks causing disruption until a boorish motorist ran the calf over. The Sea Sabs were cautioned and warned about the hazards of obstructing traffic. The sight of the arrested paper animals being driven away in a police van was difficult to forget.

Brightlingsea, 30th August: Seven Sea Sabs in paddle boats caused havoc in front of the Caroline, with one rib chasing the ship as it sailed into the port. The police, aided by a helicopter and two launches, only just managed to prevent Sabs in the water reaching the ship. A navigational warning to stop the ship was ignored by the captain. An expensive day out for the police.

Dover, 30th August: On Bank Holiday Monday 40 protesters were at Dover Docks at 6am for the shipment on the Northern Cruier. The Cap Canaille had sailed at 3am, delayed from the previous Saturday due to mechanical problems. 35 protesters were at the docks from midnight on the 30th August to 4am on the 31st for this sailing.

Dover, 2nd September: 20 protesters visited Eurotunnel to express their disgust at their continuance of bringing empty transporters back through the tunnel.

Coventry, 4th September: A live export protest was held at Gloucester market, frequented by the Gilder Brothers.

Manchester, September: Manchester Airport has banned the import and export of live animals from next year because of expensive facilities needed under new EU rules.

Coventry, September: At Bourton recently, Peter Gilder and his sidekicks showed their true colours by almost throttling one protester with his megaphone strap before smashing it to the ground and stamping on it, breaking two umbrellas and knocking several people about. As a result, Mr. Gilder has been charged with criminal damage!

Dover, 21st September: Despite the large numbers banned, there have been several days with good turnouts at the docks. Tony Benn visited the Eastern Docks then made a rousing and positive speech at the Leisure Centre where banned protesters were also able to listen.

Ipswich, 30th September: 400 people joined the dignified and silent march through the town, to the tolling of a ship's bell. Children in animal masks led the main banner 'Stop Death Journeys', and a dedicated group marched all the way from Brightlingsea! Leaflets outlining action initiatives were handed out on the route.

Brightlingsea, 4th & 5th October: On Wednesday and Thursday nights, larger demonstrations than normal took place, with protesters angry that the animals had been left cramped in their lorries for hours on the wharf. About 400 protesters turned out on both these nights and this meant that confrontations took place and events became more heated than usual. On Wednesday night, a lorry driver's windscreen was hit, and on Thursday night the same thing happened to the infamous 'No Fear' lorry.

York, October: Protest evenings are now very quiet at Albert Hall Farms. It is understood that North Yorkshire force have told Geoffrey Hall they can no longer afford to police the protests, the cost of which to date is reputed to be £250,000.

For further information concerning the campaign against live exports please contact any of the following:

Brightlingsea:	01206 304726
Coventry:	01564 776984
Dover:	01304 374064 / 01843 227186
Midlands ARC:	0121 643 2445
Plymouth:	01752 228098 / 01752 500337 / 01378 549700
Shoreham:	01273 795399
York (Albert Hall Farm):	01423 563148 / 01472 851637 / 01652 628215

The events listed above represent a small selection of actions taken from 'The Animal Protesters' Bulletin' available from:

Liz Long,
13 Roseneath Road, London SW11 6AG
(0171 223 3829)
A donation of £5 for 10 issues would be appreciated.

Arkangel Back Issues, T-Shirt, and Cards

Arkangel Back Issues: Numbers 2,3 & 4 are still available and FREE of charge! (But please send 50p per magazine to cover the post-age.)

T-Shirt: One design available - the cover of Arkangel number 10 'Terminangel'. It comes in B&W and is XL only. £6.50 (inc p&p).

Cards: A set of three cat 'surimpressions' postcards donated by Brigitte Jacques. Prices are: 20p each, 6 for £1, 100+ cards 10p each. Please add 25p p&p for orders of less than 50 cards.

A5 Size Cards: Printed on recycled paper featuring the brilliant and unique cover design of Arkangel 11 (with envelopes) 50p each inc. p&p.

Order from:

Arkangel, BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX
Please make cheques payable to 'Arkangel'.

Sabbing News

CRIMINAL INJUSTICE

On the 3rd November 1994, sections 68 and 69 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act came into force. These are the infamous sections effectively making hunt sabotage a criminal offence. In reality the new law has not deterred saboteurs one bit, in fact it has probably increased the number of people involved in direct action against bloodsports. It has succeeded in uniting people affected by the CJA such as hunts sabs, anti-road protesters, squatters, ravers, travellers and general animal rights protesters. This has led to an influx of new people into hunt sab groups. Also, a large number of police forces around the country are refusing to use the new act, claiming it is unworkable. As of May 1995, 154 people have been arrested or reported for summons under the CJA. Only 11 have been convicted, while 67 cases have been dropped before coming to court, with 76 pending. The heaviest sentences given have been £200 fines, with no-one having been sent to jail, even though the Act allows magistrates to impose a three month jail sentence. The CJA has failed to stop hunt sabotage just as the 1986 Public Order Act failed to stop it.

NORTHERN IRELAND

If we think we've had a bad deal where the law is concerned, sabs in Northern Ireland have had to contend with draconian laws and biased policing for many years. The Prevention of Terrorism Act has been used for trivial offences or allegations which means sabs have very few legal rights whilst in custody. RUC officers have also been extremely biased towards the hunt, turning a blind eye to assaults on sabs and being uncooperative to the point of corruption with sabs' solicitors.

Despite these obstacles, Belfast sabs have been very busy, successfully sabbing a number of hare-hunts throughout Northern Ireland. The previous season also saw the very first fox-hunt sabs in the Republic of Ireland, with groups from Galway and Dublin sabotaging the prestigious Galway Blazers. Sabbing in Eire looks like it will continue into the 95/96 season with renewed vigour.

SCOTLAND & WALES

Hunt sabotage in Scotland has also been extremely successful during the last season. Edinburgh hunt sabs and other Scottish groups have been regular visitors to a number of fox-hunts, especially the Duke of Buccleuch's foxhounds. Hunts along the border have also been targeted in conjunction with sabs from the north of England. The CJA was used a fair bit towards the end of the season, with eleven Edinburgh sabs facing charges under the Act.

Wales sabs have had a good season with hunt violence having subsided from the heights of previous years and no arrests being made under the CJA so far. A 'Wales Week' of action is planned for the coming season to which all sab group are invited.

ENGLAND

Hunt sabotage in England has been ticking over nicely in most regions with no real increase in the number of arrests. What has happened is that the CJA is now being used more instead of the old Section 5 of the Public Order Act (Harassment, Alarm or Distress). Sabs from Essex and Cheshire seem to have had the worst deal.

ESSEX POLICE EXPOSED AS LIARS

The much-hated Essex Constabulary have been on their usual form, taking time out from beating up old ladies at Brightlingsea to regularly harass hunt saboteurs. Essex sabs have responded tactically, moving around a lot and visiting neighbouring hunts in Kent and Hertfordshire. The season saw a number of mass hits on Essex hunts, bringing a virtual standstill to bloodsports throughout Essex on a number of occasions.

As mentioned in Arkangel 13, one such hit on 19th November 1994 saw violent scenes stirred up by the police and 31 arrests. Two hunt saboteurs were charged with violent disorder and spent over a month each in custody for allegedly attacking a police officer. Press coverage at the time reported that one police officer had his arm broken and another was kicked unconscious. The cases came to court in June 1995 and resulted in humiliation for Essex police as the case against one sab was thrown out of court because there was no evidence that he had committed any offence. He had in fact just been picked out of the crowd at random by the police officer, Sergeant Hayter, who had himself attacked several sabs during the day and left a woman semiconscious. The other defendant was found not guilty of causing actual bodily harm to a police officer but was convicted of resisting arrest, and plans to appeal against this. The arresting officer who was reported as having had his arm broken, had in fact just sustained a minor sprain to the wrist. The doctor who treated him at the time told the court that the policeman, PC Crawley, had told him that the injury was caused by someone falling on him. Further cases from the day have been hampered by the difficulty of finding a magistrate in the Chelmsford area who is not connected in some way with hunting.

The Essex police have been exposed as liars, which comes as no surprise to those familiar with them, and their heavy-handed tactics against saboteurs has totally backfired and become counter-productive. Another mass hit in Essex in January succeeded in stopping no less than three Essex foxhunts. The Fox and Hounds public house which was the meet for one of the hunts later had all its windows smashed. A month later there was yet another country-wide hit on Essex hunts, stretching police resources and successfully preventing any kills, with only a few arrests for minor offences.

CHESHIRE ATTACKS

The Cheshire Beagles are still hunting, but remain underground and very elusive. This is the hunt at which Alan Summersgill killed saboteur Mike Hill in February 1991. Cheshire sabs bumped into them a couple of times including New Years Day, and quickly sent them homeward bound. Other hunts sabbed in Cheshire include the Cheshire Forest foxhounds, the Cheshire foxhounds and the Royal Rock Beagles.

A few days after a successful big hit on the Cheshire FH on the fourth anniversary of Mike Hill's death some sinister events took place. Two Liverpool sabs had their homes visited by masked thugs armed with baseball bats and knuckle-dusters. Luckily one of the sabs was out at the time and the other managed to prevent them gaining entry to the house. A few days later two masked intruders attacked a sab at her home in Manchester, leaving her with fractured ribs, facial bruising and concussion.

BIG EARS

Our beloved Prince of Wales, the well-known lover of wildlife, rode with the Cheshire FH shortly afterwards, and sabs were there to make known their feelings about him. One of the supporters there that day was Anthony Kirkham of Ridley Farm, Ridley, Cheshire, who together with Geoffrey Park of The Elms, Tushingham, Whitchurch, Cheshire, was convicted of violent disorder (Section 2 of the 1986 Public Order Act) two weeks later. They were sentenced to twelve months each but were released on bail pending appeal. Another Cheshire hunt supporter, Christopher Thorne of Holmes Capel pleaded guilty to a charge of causing alarm and distress after verbally abusing and pushing around two hunt monitors from the League Against Cruel Sports in Cheshire. These cases contrast with the fact that Cheshire sabs have not had one conviction against them last season, despite almost one hundred arrests during the season.

DORSET SCUM GETS OFF LIGHTLY

A supporter of the Cattistock foxhounds in Dorset pleaded guilty in Dorchester Crown Court to assault occasioning actual bodily harm to a Weymouth sab. This man is well known for his violent behaviour on Dorset foxhunts and the Ytene minkhounds. Paul Martin, 30, received a conditional discharge with £70 costs, with no compensation to be paid to the victim of the attack, which occurred when he was an "official steward" for the hunt. This was despite the victim of the assault being on medication following head injuries sustained in the attack. The judge for the case was clearly pro-hunt from his attitude and vocabulary which explains the extremely light sentence.

AMERICAN HUNTERS TARGET YOUNG PEOPLE

Worried by the fact that American children are turning their back on shooting in ever-increasing numbers, hunters have managed to get state and federal wildlife agencies to spend taxpayers' money on indoctrinating young children into hunting. Children as young as eight are taken on hunts and encouraged to kill animals such as doves, rabbits, pheasants, squirrels, deer, elk and Canada geese. The idea is for experienced blood junkies to brainwash the children into thinking that it is good to kill animals and teaching them how to shoot, often letting them practice on squirrels. The California Department of Fish and Game, who sponsor twenty-nine hunts, release captive-bred exotic pheasants directly in front of kids with guns to reduce their chances of missing. The Missouri Department of Conservation sponsors a deer hunt for children aged eleven and over.

THE INGLORIOUS TWELFTH

Things haven't quite got as bad over here as they are in the USA, but the 12th August saw the start of the grouse shooting season and hunt saboteurs were out in force, notably in Cumbria and on the North Yorkshire moors. For some reason - some sources suggest it was due to an infection amongst the grouse population - there was not very much shooting going on anyway, but whatever shooters there were soon packed up when sabs arrived. Shoots aren't being neglected during the rest of the year, but will be targeted throughout the season, with there also being a whole week devoted to sabbing shoots in late August.

VIOLENCE AT MINKHUNT

Ten hunt saboteurs on the Ytene minkhunt in Dorset received hospital treatment after an ambush by hunt thugs armed with sticks, cudgels and a slingshot. Out of twenty-three sabs attending the meet, only four escaped injury. The attack was probably due to the fact that the Ytene mink-hunt had been forced to go home for the two previous weeks due to the presence of large numbers of sabs. Apparently the police were aware that the ambush was going to take place and did nothing to try to prevent it. The one police officer present warned sabs not to go near the hunt because of the number of hunt heavies that were there, and that he wasn't going to be around to pick up the pieces. Shortly afterwards the attack took place and the police officer had mysteriously disappeared. Cameras were also smashed in the attack and sab vans were damaged.

FREE SHOOTING FOR MP's

With the recent controversy over cash for questions, several Tory MPs have been declaring free shoots they have been on, paid for by various companies. James Paice (SE Cambridgeshire) has had free shooting off Bass Breweries and Littlewoods Pools, and Sir Cranley Onslow (Woking) has been a guest of Phillips Petroleum on a shooting party. Bernard Jenkin (Colchester North) has also been at it with RT Steward, a local transport company.

HUNT SABS ON THE INTERNET

The Hunt Saboteurs Association is now on the Internet. Anyone wishing to contact them is welcome to e-mail them on hsa@gn.apc.org, though this may have changed recently. The World Wide Web site is <http://envirolink.org/arrs/HSA/hsa.html>.

INTERBEING

WINTER
1995 ~ 6 magazine

no. 9 SPECIAL ANIMAL ISSUE with Thich Nhat Hanh, H.H. Dalai Lama etc. etc.

ARTICLES, STORIES, POEMS, REVIEWS, PICTURES
and
NEW SERIAL by Martine Batchelor
THROUGH WESTERN EYES
Part One - Staying Perplexed in Korea

(Free Advertisement)

Please send £1.50 for a sample copy or £6 (financial difficulty £4.50) to subscribe for one year (3 issues) - cheques to LNEB
LEEDS NETWORK OF ENGAGED BUDDHISTS
91 Clarendon Road, LEEDS LS2 9LY 0113-2444 289

What the Papers Say

A Selection of Cuttings from the Past Few Months

Animal activists suspected of firebomb attack on meat firm

A MEAT wholesaler's depot was firebombed in Gloucestershire yesterday in an attack thought to have been the work of animal rights activists.

Police investigating the blaze at A.F. Ensor in Cinderford found more than 20 incendiary devices, some of which had failed to go off.

A lorry tractor unit was burnt out and four other lorries were damaged in the attack. Petrol and paper were strewn inside the main building, causing minor damage. The total damage was estimated at between £30,000 and £40,000.

Police were trying to trace a man who made a 999 call to the fire brigade at 3.30 am from a telephone kiosk in the area. Inspector David Morgan of Gloucestershire police said: "We are investigating whether the attack has an animal rights connection."

No group has admitted the attack.

Army bomb disposal experts dealt with the unexploded devices.

Last month, similar attacks on two milk tanker depots in Macclesfield and Crewe, Cheshire, caused more than £2 million worth of damage. Incendiary devices destroyed or damaged 38 tankers.

These attacks were also blamed on animal rights extremists.

A RESTAURANT was daubed with red paint by animal extremists because it sells frogs' legs.

Tim Webb, owner of Jonti's Bistro in Ampthill, had to pay £1,000 to redecorate the front of his restaurant after attacks by the Animal Liberation Front on Sunday night.

An ALF spokesman, who would not give his name, said: "It was a drop of paint thrown over the building as a friendly warning. It was a shot over the bows but we might do something more drastic next time. We disagree with frog legs being sold because the legs of the animal are sliced off while it is still alive."

But Mr Webb says he is strongly against cruelty to animals and will not sell veal in his bistro because of the way calves are treated.

He said: "If these people have a problem they can call me and tell me their problem. If they can prove the frogs I am selling are being inhumanely treated, I will take them off the menu. I support the ideals the ALF are working for, but not the way they go about it. This was bloody pathetic."

Mr Webb was sent a

Paint bomb attack on restaurant threatening note from the ALF in June warning him to take endangered species off his menu. He was selling ostrich and was planning to introduce crocodile and kangaroo.

"When I started a more exotic menu I went through the menu with Greenpeace and they had no arguments. I will not support cruelty to animals but equally I will not run a vegetarian restaurant."

Living in the shadow of the ALF

THE South West farming community was this week on alert after animal welfare groups took their anti-live export campaign to individual farmers.

In a series of raids on three farms in the South Hams members of Plymouth-based Animal Concern Today tied purple ribbons to boundary fences and left placards at three farms saying "we export live animals". Animal Liberation Front initials were also discovered by worried farmers.

But there were fears that all livestock farmers were at risk of a witch hunt after one of those targeted said he had never had anything to do with live exports.

A spokesman for Animal Concern Today said that by highlighting individual involvement in live export, they would be "publicly shunned".

ACT leader Chris Deacon described those singled out as "legitimate targets". He said the "exposure" would continue but insisted it would be peaceful.

But one of the first victims of the "outing" campaign, Modbury sheep and

by ALISON BARBER Farming Correspondent

cattle farmer Wilf Walters, cast doubts on the justification for any of the protests when he "categorically denied" any involvement with live export.

Mr Walters returned to his farm on Sunday afternoon to find "thousands of ribbons" tied to his fence and signs daubed across the driveway.

"When I first saw them, I thought one of the neighbours was having a party and then I saw the signs," he said.

"One of the signs said 'ribbons today', as if we were supposed to expect something worse tomorrow. I have young children. I barely slept Sunday night. What are they likely to do next. Our animals have never to our knowledge gone to live export. I wouldn't know how to go about it. They've made a mistake."

He said some of the signs were signed with the initials of the extremist Animal Liberation Front group, a claim Animal Concern Today dismissed as "rubbish".

Abattoir animals let loose

An animal rights sympathiser set a herd of cattle free from a slaughterhouse, saying it was wrong for the animals to die.

Victor Golding, aged 20, visited the Shrewsbury abattoir with other ex-employees and opened gates to let out 15 cows yesterday.

Unemployed Mr Golding, who claims to have links with the Animal Liberation Front, was arrested, but released without charge.

EXPRESS AND STAR

3/6/95

FIREBOMBERS raided a chicken farm causing £200,000 worth of damage to eight trucks. Animal liberation activists are suspected to be behind the attack at Mayfield Chicks, Ewood Bridge, Haslingden, Rossendale, which breeds chickens for the food industry. Cab windows had been broken and incendiary devices tossed inside.

EVENING NEWS 17/4/95

EXPORTER Roger Mills yesterday vowed to carry on shipping live animals to the Continent after his Land Rover was damaged for the third time outside the port of Brightlingsea.

Speaking at Colchester police station where his vehicle had been taken by police, exporter Mr Mills, 53, said: "It is an open situation and that contract will continue. I will still be exporting after six months."

The controversial trade brought more than 40 people on to the streets of Brightlingsea yesterday morning to protest against lorries entering the port.

Mr Mills, who travels to the port every day, ran the gauntlet of the protesters and was forced to shunt a gate with his Land Rover, damaging its front, in order to escape from them.

His brother-in-law, Colin Howard-Stones, then produced a camera and took pictures of several protesters.

EAST ANGLIAN DAILY
TIMES 1/6/95

BEDFORDSHIRE ON SUNDAY 30/7/95

Police seize Green Anarchist magazines

DETECTIVES have seized magazines produced by the Oxfordshire anarchist Paul Rogers as part of a nationwide investigation.

Undercover officers from Hampshire Police swooped on the Frontline Bookshop in central Manchester on Thursday confiscating three publications including the magazine Green Anarchist, once edited by the campaigner Paul Rogers who lives at various addresses in Oxford.

The magazine reports on environmental issues and campaigns, including letter bombings by animal-rights groups.

Paul Rogers, an animal-rights and anti-pornography campaigner, phoned The Oxford Times to say police were pursuing a campaign against the Animal Liberation Front.

But he would not say who now edits Green Anarchist.

Police also took copies of Scumbuster magazine and Eco defence by David Foreman from the Manchester bookshop, which they suspected may contain instructions on bomb-making.

THE OXFORD TIMES 7/7/95

WESTERN MORNING NEWS 7/6/95

Arkangel 14

Deadly messages — but just who is sending them?

ANIMAL rights extremists will stop at nothing to transmit their chilling messages to their targets.

Not content with causing financial mayhem to farm-based industries, they relish leaving sinister threats and their own "signatures" to taunt their victims.

But while the letters "ALF" — representing the best-known group, the Animal Liberation Front — are often those daubed at scenes of carnage, police frequently remain baffled as to who is actually behind the activities.

Activists work in strictly-guarded cells and all communications are carried out through a magazine.

Their criminal activities are investigated by Special Branch officers, who concentrate purely on extremists — not peaceful animal welfare groups.

These specialist officers rely on intelligence to track down members of the ALF or another group calling itself the Justice Department. Many believe the two are linked.

The ALF says it does not know who the Justice Department's members are, but it acts as its mouthpiece, giving warnings and making claims on its behalf. The Justice Department is judged by the ALF to be more ruthless.

Animal rights activists have been blamed for a new wave of letter bombs. WMN Crime Correspondent DEBBIE POGUE reports on the shadowy fanatics at the extreme end of the the animal rights lobby.

"The ALF takes every precaution not to harm life. The Justice Department argues that if the animal could fight back there would be a lot of dead animal abusers already," an ALF spokesman has said.

Between October 1993 and the end of last year, the Justice Department waged an aggressive campaign, fire-bombing shops and sending explosives and syringes in the post.

It was also linked with one of the worst of the West-country's most recent attacks — at the Treburley abattoir, near Launceston, last October.

Damage, expected to run into hundreds of thousands of pounds, is still being assessed following a petrol bombing which left the slaughterhouse gutted and five refrigeration lorries destroyed.

Yesterday a Special Branch officer with Devon and Cornwall police said he was sure the two organisations were linked.

He said the job of the police was made more difficult because the ALF was not an actual organisation.

Normally, ALF press officer Robin Webb claims responsibility on behalf of the activists, but he is serving a jail sentence for claiming battery-farmed eggs at Tesco stores had been contaminated.

A message on his telephone answering machine yesterday said he was unavailable because of his "enforced absence".

As well as the Special Branch officers, New Scotland Yard's animal rights national index officers liaise with forces nationwide to gather information and intelligence.

"We treat these incidents like any other crime," the Westcountry Special Branch officer said. "But because they rely on concealing their identity, we have to rely much more heavily on intelligence."

Fire-bombs wreck 38 milk tankers

David Ward

POLICE were last night investigating whether militant animal rights activists were responsible for fire-bomb attacks which wrecked 38 milk tankers and other vehicles at two depots in rural Cheshire.

If a link is established it could mark a violent twist in the campaign against the export of live veal calves as protesters target the dairy industry.

Milk Marque has asked for security to be stepped up at 55 depots across the country and has warned other milk suppliers.

The raids, which caused damage estimated at £2 million, happened half an hour apart in the early hours of yesterday at Adlington in the north-east of the county and 30 miles away at Wardle, between Chester and Crewe.

Twelve vehicles were attacked at Adlington and 26 at Wardle at yards owned respectively by Tankfreight Ltd and Wincanton Transport, haulage contractors for Milk Marque, which succeeded the Milk Marketing Board five months ago.

Most of the damaged vehicles were small tankers which collect milk from farms, but a few bigger vehicles, capable of carrying up to 23,000 litres, were also attacked.

At Wardle, where vehicles were parked close together in rows, cabs were reduced to steel shells and the smell of burning rubber hung in the air.

Assistant Chief Constable John Dwyer of Cheshire police said at a press conference that many incendiaries had been used.

"It would certainly have taken more than one person at each depot to have laid the number of devices concerned."

THE GUARDIAN
30/5/95

Warning to livestock haulers

Livestock hauliers in Northern Ireland have been warned to be suspicious of packages received in the post, after a hoax bomb was sent to a haulier who transports live calves to the continent.

"Animal rights extremists — the Animal Liberation Front — were being blamed for sending the device to Sam Smith, who farms in the Crossgar area."

Any army bomb disposal expert dealt with the hoax device after the man became suspicious of the brown jiffy bag which had been posted in Monday in Belfast.

Subsequently the RUC issued a 'do not touch' warning to other people in the industry.

This week's news sees the return of ALF activity to the area. Four or five years ago they were active in Newtownards and the surrounding area when they targeted poultry farmers, hunt kennels and huntsmen.

Their use of explosive devices does not break new ground either. In the past, several Belfast shops which stock animal-related goods have discovered packages left in their stores.

However, the farmer concerned — who transports calves to and from England — is not believed to have been affected by the scare. Sources have revealed his latest load of calves will set off for the mainland later this week.

NEWTOWNARDS
CHRONICLE
6/7/95

Milk depots bombed

ANIMAL rights militants were yesterday believed responsible for bombing two Milk Marque depots.

The attacks, within 30 minutes of each other, wrecked 20 tankers at Wardle, near Crewe, Cheshire, and set alight 12 at Adlington, near Macclesfield, Cheshire, causing £2 million worth of damage.

WESTERN MORNING NEWS 26/6/95

Charity shops target for animal activists

ANIMAL rights extremists have fired bullets at windows of charity shops in Richmond and Twickenham, it emerged this week.

The extremists targeted Imperial Cancer Research shops because their organisation carry out "barbaric" experiments on animals. The Animal Liberation Front claimed.

The group, who are believed to have been behind a number of bombings on organisations that perform experiments on animals also stated that the attacks will continue.

Staff at the targeted shops said they were shocked at the attacks which happened on Tuesday and Friday of last week.

Suzie Mahdadr, whose shop window was hit by a bullet, said: "We were shocked, but we are not frightened."

She explained: "Sometimes it is necessary to do experiments on animals to find a cure for cancer."

"We are all volunteers here and we are doing something to help those suffering from cancer. We are raising money for cancer."

In an anonymous letter sent to the Richmond and Twickenham Times the group said: "The Animal Liberation Front carried out acts of economic sabotage on Cancer Research Charity shops at Richmond, Twickenham, Barnes and Chiswick on Tuesday and Friday of last week. Locks were glued and windows broken."

The letter continued: "Similar attacks will continue while these organisations carry out needless, cruel, barbaric experiments on countless thousands of innocent animals in the name of science despite there being many alternatives available."

Norah Hughs, who works for Imperial Cancer said: "They are a wretched lot."

RICHMOND AND TWICKENHAM
TIMES 4/8/95

DAILY STAR 30/5/95

Arkangel 14

Now MI5 spies on animal extremists

WALES ON SUNDAY 14/5/95

By Michael Settle

RAIDS IN WALES: It's just harassment says ALF man

UNDERCOVER detectives are closely monitoring suspected animal rights extremists in Wales.

Six suspected leaders of the Animal Liberation Front and 18 homes have already been raided by Special Branch officers in an operation which also covers England and Scotland.

The operation comes in light of MI5's recent admission that the biggest single terrorist threat to mainland UK now comes from animal rights fanatics.

Special Branch and MI5 are shifting resources to mount an on-going operation to identify suspects. ALF spokesman John Curtin told Wales on Sunday last night that the group had contacts in Wales and he knew of a handful of raids in the last two weeks.

"It's just harassment," he said. "Now that things have improved in Northern Ireland, they are looking for new bogeymen and they have picked on the animal rights movement."

Mr Curtin denied the public were at risk from the ALF, but he said that he supported the targeting of some people and "making their lives a misery because of the horrors of animal abuse."

He expected the monitoring and raids to continue. According to New Scotland Yard's Animal Rights National Index, last year there were 934 incidents, including 53 incendiary devices.

The estimated cost of damage is put at £10,470,000.

In the latest figures for this year - for January and February - 189 incidents have been recorded, including eight incendiaries, causing damage estimated at more than £500,000. A

Metropolitan Police spokesman told Wales on Sunday: "The index was set up in 1987 and continues to monitor criminal activities of animal rights extremists and to supply intelligence to local forces, which may form part of prosecutions."

When asked about the on-going police operation, the spokesman said: "It's a matter of secrecy."

Wales on Sunday contacted all four of Wales' police forces, none of which say they are involved.

EAST ANGLIAN DAILY TIMES

ANGRY demonstrators smashed a lorry window last night as tempers flared at a live exports protest in Brightlingsea.

The incident came after more than 250 protesters had spent more than three hours surrounding the dock gates at Oliver's Wharf. They gathered after learning that three truck loads of calves and sheep had been marooned on the dockside as exporter Roger Mills awaited the arrival of the ship, MV Caroline.

POLICE attempts to scale down manning levels in the Brightlingsea animal protest were thwarted yesterday as more than 300 people demonstrated against live exports.

There were ten arrests and three women injured during the angry demonstration patrolled by 200 officers.

CAMBRIDGE EVENING NEWS 13/4/95

Animal rights officer in court

■ CAMBRIDGE: An animal rights press officer, allegedly involved in a hoax campaign to contaminate Boots' and Tesco's produce, has been committed for trial before a crown court jury.

Robin Webb, 50, of High Street, Over, appeared before Andover magistrates on four public order charges and one charge of conspiracy.

Webb, press officer for the Animal Liberation Front, is accused of claiming "contaminated" products had been planted in Tesco stores.

He was charged under the Public Order Act with causing economic loss of some £50,000 to Tesco stores by reasons of goods being shunned by the public.

Webb was remanded in custody.

Harris lays off 150 at factory

SCORES of jobs are being axed at an Ipswich food processing factory, it was announced today.

Meat company Harris is laying off up to 150 at its Ipswich factory - and a further 100 jobs are under threat at its Elmswell plant, according to union sources.

The company is making about 400 people redundant at its plants across the country.

Company officials were today not prepared to give a breakdown of the number of jobs to go at each factory - but workers and union officials were expecting many redundancies at the plant in Hadleigh Road, Ipswich.

Group managing director Peter Wright confirmed there had been discussions with workers and union officials, but would not say any more about the redundancies.

Officials from the Union of Shop, Distributive and Allied Workers were today holding talks about the extent of the job-losses.

Harris is one of the largest bacon and sausage manufacturers in the country. Its Ipswich factory has had several large-scale redundancies over the past 15 years.

In the mid-1970s the plant employed more than 1,200 people, but that number dropped to little more than 200.

EVENING STANDARD 6/6/95

SPECIAL Branch anti-terrorist detectives were today investigating a nationwide bombing campaign by animal rights extremists.

It came after four letter bombs were intercepted yesterday, including one which arrived at Parliament.

And today police warned the public to guard against further devices.

Two of yesterday's packages were sent to senior Conservative politicians and two to Scottish companies linked with the animal trade.

One was addressed to Agriculture Minister William Waldegrave.

It was discovered at a Royal Mail sorting office in Radstock, near Bristol.

A second device was delivered to former Government minister Tom King, an outspoken advocate of hunting.

Bomb disposal experts were called to Mr King's Parliamentary office in Westminster, where they made the device safe.

KENT TODAY 26/4/95

THE overwhelming majority of the British public wants fox-hunting to be banned in this country. And they believe that the Royal Family is setting a bad example by taking part in bloodsports. According to a Mail on Sunday/MORI poll, support for fox-hunting is at an all-time low, with 70 per cent of those questioned now saying that it should be made illegal.

DAILY MAIL 6/2/95

Arkangel 14

Protester shot

THE CIRCUS is coming to town — but animal rights protesters are planning a big showdown at Cowley after one of them was shot by an air rifle at a demonstration in Ruislip on Friday.

Vicky Fitch, 25, was hit in the back just below the spine after arguing with circus workers at Breakspear Rd.

She is considering private legal action after police say they did not have enough evidence to prosecute as no-one saw the actual shots being fired.

Vicky was rushed to Mount Vernon hospital but doctors said removing the pellet

by MATTHEW TAYLOR

would risk serious spinal damage and they opted to leave it inside her back.

She said: "A first I thought it was a kids' catapult before I realised what had happened.

"If it had been an inch higher up I could have been paralysed.

"I had only been there five minutes — I went to the main entrance to hand out leaflets then I walked further with three others and was hit."

Mother-of-two Vicky was on her first demo but despite her injury bravely went back to protest again on Sunday

Circus King are performing in Cowley High St for the next 10 days with acts involving lion cubs, leopards, camels, ponies, bears and elephants.

Animal rights groups say animals trained for circus tricks suffer great cruelty.

One said: "We're not against circuses — we just don't think animals should be involved."

Hillingdon Council say they won't allow circuses on their own grounds but are powerless to stop the circus on private property.

Police arrested a man at the circus on Sunday in connection with the shooting but he was later released because of insufficient evidence.

UXBRIDGE AND LONDON
RECORDER 24/5/95

Restaurant attacks by veal protestors

By MIKE HARRISON

EXTREME animal rights activists are believed to be behind two attacks yesterday on Kent restaurants serving veal.

In one case protestors burst into a restaurant as customers were having lunch and threatened the owners through a loud hailer.

In the other graffiti was daubed on a window proclaiming: "ban the live export!"

Both restaurants — which police are not identifying — are in Dover and both have veal on their menus. Dover continues to be the centre of

Lunchtime diners see activists storming in the campaign to stop the live export of veal.

Kent police say the incidents are a cause for concern because they mark a significant change in the type of protest seen at the port in the past few weeks.

Spokesman Mark Pugash said an appeal for witnesses was being made with a possible reward for information leading to the identification of those responsible.

But there is evidence to suggest a link between the attacks and members of the Animal Liberation Front.

Mr Pugash said: "The incidents are cause for concern. In the first, which took place overnight, graffiti was daubed on a front window and signed ALF."

The person who reported this to police was particularly concerned because it was deterring customers from coming in.

"In the second incident at another Dover restaurant the caller said that animal rights protestors had used a loud hailer to shout 'take veal off your menu if you value your windows!'"

The attacks have been condemned by mainstream animal campaigners.

Clare Baumburg, the Kent representative for Compassion in World Farming, said: "This sort of thing alienates the public and is totally stupid. I would condemn this. It is not the way we do things. I am sure those responsible are not local."

Anyone who has any information should call Crimestoppers on (0800) 555111.

KENT TODAY 1/6/95

Threat of animal rights attack

ANIMAL extremists have sparked fears of a terrorist campaign after a graffiti attack in Bolton.

Signs for a new branch of the burger chain McDonald's on Trinity Street, Bolton were daubed with paint and slogans for the Animal Liberation Front (ALF).

But the fast food chain are vowing not to be affected by vandalism.

A McDonald's spokesman told Metro News: "I am concerned for the future, but I do not think anybody should be swayed by vandalism and violence."

He added that they would never listen to the ALF as long as they continued to engage in criminal activity.

There is a strong ALF network operating in the North West. In January this year Metro News reported how a chicken factory in the town was the target of an arson attack.

The former China Gardens building is expected to open up as the town's second McDonald's store in two months bringing a total of 50 new jobs to the area. An ALF spokesman said: "It is not the graffiti people should be worried about but the group may be planning something else."

"The graffiti is a threat and may be a warning for whatever is built there." The organisation have also been responsible for attacks on restaurants in Manchester.

A McDonald's spokesman said that they would be removing the offending boards as soon as possible.

BOLTON METRO NEWS 3/8/95

Fire destroys tackle firm

TACKLE manufacturer Clarke's has been wiped out after fire gutted its Redditch premises.

Ninety five per cent of stock — shot and accessories — were destroyed in the blaze. Clarke's is also distributor for Dave Harrell's MAP tackle range.

The fire broke out after joyriders abandoned a stolen car next to the works, torching it before making their getaway. Fire soon spread from the vehicle to the premises. Inspectors are currently assessing the damage, but it is believed it could run into hundreds of thousands of pounds.

It is the third blow to Redditch-based dealers in just a few weeks. Maver and DAM were ransacked by tackle thieves earlier this month.

Bob Bignell, Clarke's accounts manager, said: "This is going to take several months to put right."

"We are fully insured, but it will take some time until we can service everyone with our goods — hopefully people will stay loyal in the meantime."

SCIENTISTS who carry out experiments involving animals face a terrifying new threat from doorstep assassins.

They have been warned by police and intelligence experts that animal rights extremists are planning to escalate their campaign.

Explosives, car bombs, letterbombs, firebombs and poisons were used last year by Animal Liberation Front fanatics in an attempt to end the experiments — but without success.

A high-level police source said last night: "We know they are getting hold of guns. They are always looking for more violent tactics."

"It may well start with a scare campaign with shots being fired at a car or at a home. But if that doesn't get the desired result, they could decide that only deaths will get what they want."

Two known activists have already been arrested and charged in London with the illegal possession of a sawn-off shotgun and ammunition.

Now scientists are lobbying the Home Secretary for new legislation to outlaw extremists as terrorists.

Arkangel 14

ANGLING TIMES 27/9/95

Arkangel Comment

This is the part of the magazine where you get to have your say.

We try to print everything we can - providing it is to do with Animal Liberation, and is not intended to further some other aim - political or otherwise. The articles do not necessarily represent the views of the editors.

Please remember - an article submitted on computer disk will save us a lot of typing, but we welcome your thoughts in any form - especially if they are typed or neatly hand-written!

Premarin Horror

by PETA

You don't have to love animals to wonder how a company could treat them like objects. Yet for more than 65,000 baby horses born each year, that's exactly what happens. These foals are by-products of the PMU (pregnant mares urine) industry, which uses pregnant mares urine to make the oestrogen replacement drugs Premarin and Prempak-C. Wrenched from their mothers' sides just months after their birth, they are sold to feedlots to be fattened and later slaughtered for human or dog food.

The mares are 'objects' too. Profit-making objects. Impregnated over and over again, confined in tiny dark stalls for most of their 11 month pregnancy (they can't turn around and can hardly lie down comfortably), they stand with rigid rubber bags strapped to their bodies in order to collect their urine. Even their access to water is limited, since water would dilute the concentration of the hormone in their urine.

Years of Confinement and Suffering

This gruelling cycle of pregnancy, confinement, birth and pregnancy can go on for up to 20 years; until these magnificent animals are too old, sick or weak to be 'useful' any longer. And the sole purpose of this cruel system? It all exists so that a company called Wyeth Laboratories can make big profits from its drugs Premarin and Prempak-C.

You see, Premarin is the world's most commonly prescribed oestrogen replacement drug for menopausal discomfort. Prempak-C, an oestrogen and progesterone combination drug, is also widely prescribed in the UK. In fact according to the company, Premarin brings in worldwide sales of more than £450m annually. Premarin and Prempak-C are taken by nearly one million British women, even though there are effective alternatives. If only these women realised what they were really putting in their bodies or knew the trauma innocent animals go through.

Routine Abuse and Neglect

PETA learned first-hand what the animals endure during their undercover investigation of the PMU industry last year. They sent their investigative team to dozens of PMU farms in North Dakota and Canada, where they discovered horses kept in truly appalling and abusive conditions.

At farm after farm, they took photographs and kept detailed logbooks on the shocking mistreatment they witnessed. Horses were tethered around the clock in dark cramped stalls, unable to take more than a couple of steps in any direction. Many had 'stiff-leg', an excruciating ailment that comes from standing on a hard, cold concrete floor for months on end.

As was mentioned above, more than 65,000 of their foals are killed for food. Others suffer the same fate as their mothers; a lifetime on the production line. As for the mares, those who are 'spent' are doomed to a date at the slaughterhouse. You can help end this terrible and unnecessary cruelty by supporting PETA's massive public education campaign to end production of Premarin and Prempak-C. PETA's urgent public battle to tell the world the truth about Premarin and Prempak-C has already made huge strides in alerting doctors, women and others to the suffering caused by this industry.

*PETA's undercover investigators escorted a reporter and photographer from Today newspaper to some of these secretive and secluded PMU farms. Today was so appalled by the conditions that they ran a week-long expose on the 'cruel cost' of Premarin and Prempak-C.

*PETA has given their documentation to the US Government and demanded that it inspect conditions on farms in North Dakota. In Canada, they are working with local activists to change conditions on PMU farms there.

*PETA has exposed the abuse at press conferences and international conferences on animals, the environment, and women's issues as well as medical meetings. They have shown the public that with effective alternatives available -

Estradiol, Estraderm Patch, Climagest and others - Premarin and Prempak-C are completely unnecessary!

*And PETA has mailed education packs to tens of thousands of physicians and others across the country, garnering support from pharmacists, nurses, doctors, midwives and nurse practitioners. They have asked obstetricians and gynaecologists for their opinions on Premarin after reading their documentation, and 61% of those who responded stated that in light of the facts, they would now be more likely to prescribe synthetic oestrogen.

There are Alternatives...

Clearly, PETA are making substantial progress. Companies which produce synthetic alternatives are stepping forward to let customers know the alternatives. Concerned women are deluging their doctors with questions, and demanding cruelty-free medications. Yet they need to continue and expand all their efforts, because time is running short. Millions of baby-boomers are nearing menopause and to meet the potential demand, Wyeth plans to triple its output, announcing in a recent annual report a £74m expansion.

For further information please contact:

*PETA (People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals),
PO Box 3169, London NW1 2JF.*

The Exploitation of the Ostrich

The ostrich is a non-migratory bird that is being shipped and flown from the African Continent and Israel to the Member States of Europe, including Britain. It is being exploited to produce expensive meat and useless commercial trinkets.

Airports and ports, embassies and high commissions, and the EC have been called upon to ban exports to Britain and to and from the member states of the EC. This trade must stop. Unlike the export of sheep and calves, which is highly visible and has been well-publicised, people do not see these creatures coming into the country. Importers and farmers can get away with whatever they want.

The guidelines that are laid down in Britain are irrelevant. They are not worth the paper they are printed on - with bad diet, wrong environment, lack of space and many laws broken. The normal diet is seeds, berries, plants and small animals. In this country these creatures are fed on broiler-type pellets containing slaughterhouse by-products. This is totally inadequate and unjust. Both parents care for their chicks for the first 10 months of their lives. These impressive birds are now confined to small paddocks. The chicks are herded into sheds away from the British climate. For the first 3 months of their lives the chicks are very delicate, often dying for no apparent reason. In their natural habitat ostrich chicks are strong and hardy. The people who farm and exploit these birds want all their protection taken away. The ostrich, in its natural habitat, which is hot and dry, can live to the age of 80 years old. Naturally, they would travel in small flocks and cover large distances, often running at speeds of 43mph.

Even though these birds are on the Customs & Excise Endangered Species list their plight is being ignored by both politicians of all parties and the Ministry of Agriculture, Farming and Fisheries.

For further information please contact:

*John Rowe, Justice & Rights Associates,
PO Box 83, Bracknell, Berkshire RG12 7QH.*

The Rhetoric of Apology in Animal Rights

by Karen Davis

Several years ago I published an article in Between the Species entitled "The Otherness of Animals" (Autumn 1988). In it, I urged that in order to avoid contributing to some of the very attitudes towards other animals that we seek to change, we need to raise fundamental questions about the way that we, the defenders of animals, actually conceive of them. One question that needs to be raised concerns our tendency to deprecate ourselves, the animals, and our goals when speaking before the press and the public. Often we "apologize" for animals and our feelings for them. In Between the Species, I argued, "Anxious not to alienate others from our cause, half doubtful of our own minds at times in a world which views other animals so much differently than we do, we are liable to find ourselves presenting them apologetically at Court, spiffed up to seem more human, capable, ladies and gentlemen, of performing Ameslan [American sign language] in six languages. . . ."

We apologize in many different ways. More than once, I have been warned by an animal protectionist that the public will never care about chickens, and that the only way to get people to stop eating chickens is to concentrate on things like health and the environment. However, to take this defeatist view is to create a self-fulfilling prophecy. If we, the spokespersons for animals, decide in advance that no one will ever really care about them, we will convey this message to the public. Insisting that others will never care about chickens projects the feeling, "I don't think that I can ever care much about chickens."

This negative attitude about chickens epitomizes the apologetic mode of discourse in animal rights. It is the "I know I sound crazy, but . . ." approach to the public. If we find ourselves "apologizing" for other animals, we need to ask ourselves why we do this. Is it an expression of self-doubt? A deliberate strategy? Either way, I believe that the rhetoric of apology harms our movement tremendously. Following are some examples of what I mean:

1. Reassuring the public:

"Don't worry. Vegetarianism isn't going to come overnight." We should ask ourselves the question: if I were fighting to end human slavery, child abuse, or some other human-created oppression, would I seek to placate the public or the offender by reassuring them that the offence will still go on for a long time and that we are only trying to phase it out gradually? Why, instead of defending vegetarianism are we not affirming it?

2. Patronizing animals:

"Of course they're only animals. Of course they can't reason the way we do. Of course they can't appreciate a symphony or paint a great work of art, but . . ." In fact, few people live their lives according to "reason," or appreciate symphonies, or paint works of art. As human beings we do not know what it feels like to have wings or to take flight from within our own bodies or to live naturally within the sea. Our species represents a smidgeon of the world's experience, yet we patronize everything outside our domain.

3. Comparing competent, adult non-human animals with human infants and people who are mentally defective:

This is an extension of number 2. Do we honestly believe that all of the other creatures on earth have a mental life and range of experiences that are comparable to diminished human capacity and the sensations of newborn babies? Except within the legal system, where all forms of life that are helpless against human assault should be classified together and defended on similar grounds, this analogy is both arrogant and logically absurd.

4. Starting a sentence with, "I know these animals aren't as cute as other animals, but...":

Do you say to your child, "I know Bill isn't as cute as Tom, but you still have to play with him"? Why put a foregone conclusion in people's minds? Why even suggest that physical appearance and conventionalized notions of attractiveness are relevant to anything that matters in a relationship?

5. Letting ourselves be intimidated by "science says," "producers know best" and charges of "anthropomorphism.":

We are related to other animals through evolution. Our empathic judgments reflect this fact. It does not take special credentials to know that, for example, a hen confined in a wire cage is suffering, or to imagine what her feelings must be compared with those of a hen ranging outside in the grass. We are told that humans are capable of knowing just about anything we want to know—except what it feels like to be one of our victims. Intellectual confidence is needed here, not submission to the epistemological deficiencies, cynicism, and intimidation tactics of profiteers.

6. Letting the other side identify and define who we are:

I once heard a demonstrator tell a member of the press at a protest at a chicken slaughterhouse, "I'm sure Frank Perdue thinks we're all a bunch of kooks for caring about chickens, but . . ." Ask yourself: does it matter what the Frank Perdues of this world "think" about anything? Can you imagine Frank Perdue standing in front of a camera, saying, 'I know the animal rights advocates think I'm a kook, but . . .'?"

7. Needing to "prove" that we care about people, too:

The next time someone challenges you about not caring about people, ask them what they're working on. Whatever they say, say, "But why aren't you working on _____? Don't you care about _____?" We care deeply about many things; however, we cannot devote our primary time and energy to all of them. We must focus our attention and direct our resources. Moreover, to seek to enlarge the human capacity for justice and compassion is to care about and to work for people.

8. Needing to "pad" and bolster our concerns about animals and animal abuse:

This is an extension of number 7. In keeping with the need to recognize the links of oppression and the indivisibility of social justice concerns, it is imperative to recognize that the abuse of animals is a human problem that is as serious as any other abuse. Unfortunately, the victims of homosapiens are legion. As individuals and groups, we cannot give equal time to every category of injustice. We must go where our heartstrings pull us the most, and do the best that we can with the confidence that is needed to change the world.

The rhetoric of apology in animal rights is an extension of the "unconscious contributions to one's undoing" described by the child psychologist, Bruno Bettelheim. * He pointed out that human victims will often "collaborate" unconsciously with an oppressor in the vain hope of winning the oppressor's favour.

In fighting for animals and animal rights against the collective human oppressor, we assume the role of vicarious victims. To apologize in this role is to betray "ourselves" profoundly. We need to understand why and how this can happen. As Bettelheim explained out, "But at the same time, understanding the possibility of such unconscious contributions to one's undoing also opens the way for doing something about the experience—namely, preparing oneself better to fight in the external world against conditions which might induce one unconsciously to facilitate the work of the destroyer."

We must prepare ourselves this way. If we feel that we must apologize, let us apologize to the animals, not for them.

Bruno Bettelheim, "Unconscious Contributions to One's Undoing," Surviving and Other Essays, Vintage Books, 1980.*

(This article was posted on the Internet and has been reproduced without permission - hope you don't mind Karen!)

North American ALF Support Group Burglarized

On Friday October 22nd, the North American Animal Liberation Front Support Group's editor's home was burglarized. It is unclear at this point whether the motive for the break-in was profit or politics. The ALFSG has sustained severe financial losses; a Macintosh computer, fax modem, computer disks, and petty cash were taken. In addition, the thieves took personal items of no commercial value—a personal address book, underwear, a datebook, a diary, a telephone and personal computer disks.

The thieves' choice of items is certainly bizarre. The editor's house-mates' stereo, VCR, TV and some jewellery was left behind (although some expensive items were taken). The house next door was also burglarized, and again the choice of items was strange. It is clear that this was a professional job. The neighbour's house is protected by a dog and was recently overhauled by a locksmith—neither prevented the thieves from gaining entry. The thieves had less than 90 minutes to completely ransack both houses. No prints were left in the editor's house. Phone lines were cut and ripped out of walls.

Whatever motivation of the thieves, they failed to destroy the Support Group. The backups of all computer files were not taken, as they were in a different location than the other disks. All information on the computers was password protected, so ALFSG is confident that the files will remain secure. All supporters should note that the most recent version of the mailing list was not backed up, so if you do not receive an answer to your letter or subscription, please write again.

This burglary is a potent reminder of the need to take the time to safeguard the work done; all the work on the most recent issue of the ALFSG magazine was taken. It has also put the Support Group in a desperate situation financially. Before the burglary, SG were $1500 in debt; now that runs several thousand dollars higher.

ALFSG is asking that people give what they can to help them continue their work supporting jailed North American animal liberation prisoners. They do all they legally can to support the work of the ALF. With some hard work and creative juggling of their remaining resources, they are determined to publish the magazine this month.

NA-ALFSG
PO Box 8673, Victoria, BC V8X 3S2, Canada

Campaign for Cows

Campaign for Cows is a lively new group which concentrates on exposing the cruelty and suffering inflicted on cattle by the dairy industry. The main issue that we push in our literature is the fact that the industry relies upon the separation of calves from their mothers and that these calves will be sold at market and end up being exported, slaughtered as infants, reared as bulls in solitary confinement, reared for beef or reared as dairy herd replacements, suffering the same cycle of continual pregnancies as their mothers.

We also raise awareness about the environmental and human rights arguments against animal farming in general.

We produce a range of literature, from leaflets to recipe books and have just produced a newsletter. We depend totally on donations to fund our work.

Send an A5 sized SAE for an information pack, or send a donation of at least £3 (or whatever you feel you can afford) and we will put you on our mailing list and send you regular information and news updates.

Cheques/postal orders made payable to 'Cavy Print', or send second class stamps.

Campaign for Cows,
PO Box 339, Wolverhampton WV10 7BZ

In Sadness and in Anger

*I hate the human race.
It shouldn't show its face on this Earth, once pristine and fine.
It's an evolutionary mistake,
For it's kill, kill, kill and take, take, take.
Could it be that Mother Nature's lost her mind?
What a crazy world this is,
Where the just are punished for their good,
While evil men are safe and free as air.
Will the time ever come when the tables are turned and we look upon this Earth as being fair?
With our greed, our dominance and our birth, birth, birth,
Polluting every corner of our sphere.
We'd do a favour for other creatures
If our species left the Earth.
There'd be less, less, less
Of their torment, their destruction and their fear.*

Eileen Clarke

The Vegan Society presents...

Gill Langley's 'Vegan Nutrition'

"'Vegan Nutrition' is a comprehensive, in-depth survey of a much maligned diet which is as easily assimilated as a tofu steak." - Colin Spencer, food writer and broadcaster.

This landmark publication - which can be read in depth or just dipped into - appeals to everyone interested in diet and health, but particularly vegans, vegetarians, the dairy intolerant, and their relatives.

Vegan Nutrition examines the latest research findings into completely animal-free diets and debunks the myths surrounding vegan eating.

DID YOU KNOW...

- * The majority of the estimated 170,000 vegans in Britain are women?
- * Cancers of the breast, womb, bowel, prostate and pancreas are associated with a high consumption of meat and animal fats?
- * Vegan diets have been used successfully to treat high blood pressure, angina, diabetic neuropathy, rheumatoid arthritis, asthma and kidney disease?
- * The calcium from kale is absorbed as well as, or even better than, the calcium from cow's milk?
- * Vegan diets have sustained thousands of healthy pregnancies and thriving children?

The general health of vegans, vegan diets as therapy, vegan mothers and children, milk and health, protein and energy, carbohydrates, fats, vitamins, minerals - 'Vegan Nutrition' covers them all.

"Drawing on nearly 400 referenced scientific reports, my book puts the latest medical and nutritional findings at everyone's fingertips" - Gill Langley MA PhD MIBiol, scientist, author and broadcaster.

Vegan Nutrition may be obtained directly from the Vegan Society for £9.90 (p&p inc.).

The Vegan Society,
Donald Watson House, 7 Battle Road, St. Leonards-on-Sea, East Sussex TN37 7AA (01424 427393).

Pisces ~ The Campaign Against Angling

'A man has been accused of repeatedly causing animals to start suffocating, after impaling their flesh with a metal object, purely for his amusement'.

This does sound barbaric and well it should. Unfortunately, as the suffocation and impalement on hooks is being inflicted on fish, many people appear indifferent to the suffering caused. Is it because fish are not cuddly and cannot scream in pain; is it because they live in an alien environment, so seem alien themselves; or is it because people continue to believe the old myth, that fish don't feel pain and stress?

Pisces, formerly the Campaign for the Abolition of Angling, was formed back in 1981, the year after the RSPCA's sponsored Medway Report was published. This report concluded that all the evidence shows that fish do feel pain, and this conclusion has been the RSPCA policy ever since.

The aims of Pisces are to raise public awareness of the cruelty involved in angling: the pain, stress and fear inflicted on the fish, together with the death and injury caused to thousands of wild animals every year, who fall foul of anglers' lost and discarded fishing tackle. Additionally we show the true environmental costs associated with a pastime, which far from protecting our fish stocks and aquatic habitats, causes degradation to habitat and damage to rare fish species and even whole fish populations. We are repeatedly reminded that angling is supposedly Britain's most popular participation pastime (though I think sex would come rather higher on the list). Just because angling is popular does not make it morally acceptable in a supposedly civilised society, but it does make the job of abolishing this bloodsport a long struggle.

There is a body of opinion that wants to concentrate on banning hunting before tackling angling, believing that the angling issue detracts from the anti-hunting debate. While it is true that the British Field Sports Society are doing their best to frighten anglers into supporting pro-hunting campaigns, the majority of anglers confess to as much disgust of hunting as the majority of the population. They have no wish to be linked to the hunting fraternity and realise that they should do their best to disassociate angling with other bloodsports.

Pisces works to spread the facts about angling, primarily through the literature it produces. We particularly concentrate on schools and receive regular requests for project information from all over the country. As most anglers start young, being introduced by family or friends, we need to get the true facts to these young people before they become indoctrinated with the 'fish don't feel anything' myth. The active sabotage of angling using nonviolent methods has increased in recent years, although it is still at a much lower level than hunt-sabbing. One of the reasons for this, is that the tactics are still very much in their infancy.

Although Pisces is the only group solely campaigning against angling, groups both here and all around the world are getting involved in the issue. We regularly receive requests for our video, which has been translated into a number of European languages and has gone as far afield as Peru and Australia. We have also been encouraged by the increasing number of local groups in this country getting involved in campaigns against angling.

Media coverage is another area where Pisces has been very successful. With 3.3 million anglers in Britain (according to the National Angling Survey '94), a debate on angling appears very controversial to editors and programme makers. Coverage concentrates around our annual National Anti-Angling Week, which this year was phenomenal, even by our standards. Over the years the tone of coverage has moved from frequently ridiculing extremists who care about fish, to a serious discussion of the issues, including the scientific evidence showing that fish do suffer.

Although the number of people who agree that angling is cruel is growing in leaps and bounds, we still have little support in local and central government (although many councils have banned angling on their waters due to wildlife tackle victims). In 1995 the Labour Party has come out in favour of anglers, (presumably thinking there are more votes to be had in supporting this bloodsport, than in staying neutral on the issue), published their 'Charter for Anglers'. Labour appears to be pressuring local authorities to overturn angling bans, for example at Lambeth in South London, (see below for action you can take).

Despite all the good news about the increasing tide of opinion against angling, Pisces still has a hard job ahead of it. Most people who are against angling are also against other forms of animal cruelty and usually it is the larger, richer organisations who get their support in terms of money and membership. Pisces is run by a small group of volunteers and is always struggling to find the next penny for campaigning. So here's how you can help our fishy friends:

- 1) Send for a free info/action pack on angling (large SAE please).
- 2) Join Pisces - £6 per annum; £4 unwaged/youth; £50 life subscription.
- 3) Send us a donation to help our vital campaigns.
- 4) Write urgently to your Labour MP (if you have one) and to local Labour councillors expressing your total condemnation of angling.

PISCES

PO BOX 90, BRISTOL BS99 1ND (0117 955 9814)

Straight from the Shoulder

Exactly what kind of people are we? In the main, are we kindly, compassionate people, hypocrites, lacking in imagination or just perniciously apathetic? Many things we enjoy in this tight little island of ours but lack of imagination stops the majority of people from realising just how much they should be thankful for. When should we start to put our own houses in order?

Let us take the manner in which we treat the animals in this country. 'Painless' killing of home-reared animals was secured only a few years ago, but the majority of people have rested on their oars ever since. Great numbers of British sheep and cattle are being exported to other countries where they will not be 'painlessly' killed; creatures we have been responsible for, even for their births, and now this shameful betrayal. Then there is this heinous paradox of importing carcasses of sheep and cattle from countries where they have not been 'humanely' slaughtered for us to eat. In this country ritual slaughter takes place as does vivisection. Experiments so utterly callous. So apathetic have people become that only about 5% will endeavour to seek alternatives to the horrors mentioned above. There is a whole welter of suffering in many other directions. The vast majority of people are indifferent to terror and pain for just as long as it is not affecting their own precious skins. It will be remembered by a few how a campaign was waged for years against the fiendish steel-toothed gin-trap. Finally this devil's own instrument of torture was outlawed. But now, years after, steel-toothed gin-traps are manufactured in this country and exported abroad where millions of creatures are trapped and often lie for days in agony. That is the true cost of a fur coat. Right, let us shrug our shoulders and turn the other way, but a day will surely come when we have all to give an account of our stewardship, our duty to the animals is great. They need, and have a right to our protection.

This article has been edited and was supplied by Edward Edwards A.D.

The Way Forward for DBAE

We need all hands to the wheel. If everyone gave just a little bit extra time and effort, we could hasten the day to achieving our goal. Are you doing enough? Ask yourself, could you do more? There are many ways: distributing our leaflets, writing to the press, keeping us informed, organising public meetings, or speakers to clubs, schools, universities, etc. (which we can provide), recruiting members to DBAE (medical, associates or friends); organising fund raising events; coffee mornings, car boot sales, baby-sitting, gardening - or write us a cheque. Remember DBAE in your will (write to us for details).

No organisation can exist or expand successfully without finance. DBAE is not a rich society and depends largely on the support of its supporters who raise money in a variety of ways to ensure that DBAE can not only survive, but can move forward and spread out. To our network of activists nationwide, who contribute in so many ways, our warm thanks, and to all who continue to support us even if you are unable to give as much. You are DBAE's lifeblood! We do not operate from plush offices and our staff are volunteers. In its short life DBAE has hosted three international scientific congresses, and has achieved worldwide recognition and produced a number of important publications. We have constant interviews with the media, including TV and radio; we write letters to the newspapers (some do get published!); we respond to a stream of inquiries from a variety of sources seeking information. All this costs money - rent, telephone, equipment, postage, stationary, etc.. We are also in touch with important organisations across the world.

DBAE has recently published a new leaflet, 'HUMAN VICTIMS OF ANIMAL-BASED MEDICAL RESEARCH'. One way of following Dr. Fadali's advice is to order copies of this leaflet and distribute it as widely as possible (cost £2.00 per 100 inc. p&p).

Here are some suggestions to reach people:

- 1) Distribute in public places, in your local Broadway, outside railway and bus stations, outside public meetings, conferences, exhibitions, etc.
- 2) Pass to members of your family, neighbours, work colleagues, friends
- 3) Place in libraries, health shops and hospitals
- 4) Distribute in universities, schools, etc.
- 5) Include in the envelope when you are writing business or other letters and with payments for bills
- 6) Let us have YOUR further ideas for us to pass on next time.

For further information please contact:

Doctors in Britain Against Animal Experiments (DBAE), PO Box 302, London N8 9HD.

VEGANS INTERNATIONAL

— Vegans helping Vegans to change the World. —

Vegans International is a network of vegan activists in 50 countries on six continents. We support each other in the creation of vegan activists and activist trainers. Our aim is to create a vegan planet in our lifetimes.

I believe there are no lazy activists, only blocked activists. Starting a vegan campaign in a hostile country like France can seem impossible, but through V.I. dreams are turned into deeds with the help of others who have already walked the same path. We can all learn from each other. For example Britain leads the world in animal rights campaigning, Germany in green campaigning, and USA in vegan medical knowledge. We support new groups in Eastern Europe and Africa, and these new groups are an inspiration to activists in countries which as yet have no vegan movement. We are not concerned with promoting any organization or "leader", but veganism itself, and work with anyone who share our aims.

The quarterly V.I. Newsletter reports successful campaigns in plain English with no slang or difficult words. News reports are concise, hard-hitting, inspiring, uplifting and empowering. Contact addresses are given so that you can get campaign materials directly from their creators, without having to go through a central office which would eventually become a bottleneck. There are no articles about why you should be a vegan, just how to promote veganism. And if you need help, you can ask for it in the section Vegans for Vegans.

Examples of successes reported recently in the V.I. Newsletter include a weekly vegetarian programme on Russian TV, a Polish vegetarian magazine that after two years is in every kiosk and has 50,000 readers, how to get vegan food into your canteen, vegan guides to capital cities, and a town in Sweden that is 25% vegetarian. Features includes how to use the media, vegan videos, and profiles of the most successful vegan campaigning groups such as the Physicians' Committee for Responsible Medicine.

Inventing and sharing new ways to create vegans is the way ahead. Although it has been said that we learn best from our mistakes, it is much cheaper and quicker to learn from other people's. Together we have all the skills and knowledge to create a vegan world. V.I. unites independent individuals and groups into one fast growing movement.

V.I. members send reports of their activities to the Newsletter Editor. My job is to turn these into clear, concise English (if necessary) and send a quarterly newsletter to the International Coordinator, who sends copies to each of the Country Coordinators. They in turn send them to subscribers in their country. Typeset articles that fit onto one page are especially welcome.

V.I. strategy is decided at two-yearly Vegans International festivals in meetings of those who actually did the work since the last festival, the Country Coordinators. We deliberately keep V.I. poor financially, but rich in ideas, aiming to help "doers" but avoid wasting time with "talkers" and freeloaders trying to hustle free flights to festivals. V.I. gives no subsidies, only information, though we are happy to publish appeals for financial support. All our energy goes on helping as many people as possible to get active, save animals and create a vegan world in our lifetimes. If you share our ideas, please join us.

To join Vegans International costs US$10 or equivalent in your currency. You will receive the newsletter four times a year, details of international festivals, and addresses of vegan societies and V.I. contacts around the world.

In the UK, send a cheque for £7 payable to Vegans International to Brian Gunn-King, V.I. Treasurer, 120 Knockan Road, Nr. Broughshane, Ballymena, N. Ireland BT43 7LE.

For the address of your Country Coordinator send an international reply coupon to Cor Nouws, V.I. Coordinator, Postbus 1087, 6801 Arnhem BB, Netherlands.

Send articles and news in English (preferably), French, Italian or Russian to Alex Bourke, V.I. Editor, 11 Guinea St., Bristol BS1 6SX, UK.

In 1988 a team of crack vegan campaigners founded an organization to change the world. If you've got a problem, if no one else can help, maybe you could call...

The V-TEAM

VEGANS INTERNATIONAL

(Dee d-d-dee, dee dee dee, d-dee dee d-d-dee, dee d-d-d-dee ...)

National Demonstration against the Slaughter of Sharks, Dolphins, Whales and ALL other Marine Life.

Saturday 9th December 1995. China Town, London.
Meeting in Leicester Square (by the fountain) at 2.30pm. Nearest station is Leicester Square, London Underground.

Following the 'trial run' protest in May against the slaughter of sharks for shark fin soup (at which between 80-100 people attended and from where some important lessons were learnt about organising future events), the Shark Protection League will be holding a much larger protest against the destruction of the marine environment, and the slaughter of millions of sharks and hundreds of thousands of dolphins, whales, and other marine life by Japanese and Chinese tuna fishing vessels using drift nets, some up to 6 miles long. The SPL feel it is important we all confront those responsible for such slaughter, not just abroad, but also people in this country, who buy the produce of those who are wiping out the world's marine life in such a cruel and barbaric way.

The demonstration will enter China Town just as the restaurants prepare for their busiest time of the day. The customers arrive in the late afternoon and early evening. The protest will continue until 8pm. Posters, leaflets and stickers will be provided for use in the campaign against the shark fin trade, but feel free to bring your own leaflets, posters, megaphones or anything else you can think of. Please attend this important event. It is time the slaughter of ALL marine life is stopped. Together we can at last start to put an end to the wholesale destruction of the marine environment and to protect the animals whose home it is. The SPL would like to make it very clear that their protests in China Town are in no way meant to condemn all Japanese and Chinese people. Only those who carry out and profit from the slaughter of marine life.

For more information please contact the
Shark Protection League, BM L.A.P.L., London WC1N 3XX. (0589 173033).

Badger Campaigners Unite to Fight Ministry Slaughter

A new Coalition for Badgers, comprising an alliance of badger and wildlife groups, independent experts and scientists has been established to fight the official badger killing by the Ministry of Agriculture. Further groups and badger workers have been invited to join.

The Coalition is pledged to campaign for an end to all Ministry badger slaughter. It recognises that nearly a quarter of a century of badger killing has not reduced Bovine Tuberculosis in the national cattle herd. It says that the Ministry (MAFF) has even failed to offer any evidence that badgers can infect cattle with TB under field conditions. Millions of pounds of taxpayers' money has been wasted killing badgers when the real cause of TB is almost certainly cows slipping through the inefficient net of the current cattle test. It says that the MAFF has deceived the farming community by suggesting this simplistic and pointless butchery. It calls for better TB compensation for farmers whose cattle are afflicted by Bovine TB. The Coalition demands that all animal and conservation bodies withdraw from MAFF's Consultative Panel on Badgers and TB, which is merely a rubber stamp, funded and serviced by MAFF, and used to justify the unjustifiable, namely the killing of thousands of healthy badgers.

The Coalition calls for all of the unworkable attempts to vaccinate badgers to be dropped in favour of the better cattle tests currently being trialed in Ulster. The Coalition calls on all political parties to pledge an immediate end to badger slaughter and promises a long and hot campaign against Ministry killing until a more open-minded approach to dealing with Bovine TB is achieved.

For further information please contact:
*South Devon Animal Rights(01626) 52592
South West Badger Patrol Group. (01225) 314040.*

JUSTICE FOR KEITH MANN

On the 19th December 1994, Keith was sentenced at the Old Bailey to 14 years' imprisonment. His so-called crimes were: "Possession of explosive substances under suspicious circumstances" (This was common garden weed killer, white spirit and electrical wire.) "Incitement" (This was for allegedly writing animal rights literature.) "Economic damage to meat vehicles" (Amounting to £6,000 damage.) "Escaping from custody" (After being on remand for 20 months without trial.)

Keith pleaded guilty to his so-called crimes so he wouldn't face a biased court case. Unwritten rules allow you 1/3 off your sentence for saving the Court's time and money, yet still he was given the outrageous sentence of 14 years. Crimes that equal this are: armed robbery, the import of class A drugs, double rape, manslaughter, kidnapping with violence, and murder. Keith is appealing against this outrageous sentence and the first stage of appeal has been accepted. It is of paramount importance that you should write to your local MP, local and national newspapers, and anyone (in)famous who will support the campaign to reduce the sentence and free Keith Mann.

What has happened to Keith will not be 'out of the ordinary' unless we put a stop to it now. From a non-personal level Keith is just an ordinary person campaigning for the rights of the voiceless, whatever species that may be. This sentence could be dished out to anyone of us who dares to open our mouths and speak out against the abusers.

How many of us have spoken at demonstrations, public meetings, information stalls? How many have written articles for magazines and newspapers? It is as simple as that. 'Incitement'. There are dozens of people who could fall victim to the system because they had the nerve to speak out. This is not to scare anyone, but just to point out the reality of the situation and how important it is not only for Keith and the animals but for us as well, that we campaign for his reduction of sentence and eventual release.

Since Keith's arrest in April 1994, now over 18 months ago, Keith has been an 'A Cat' prisoner. Basically Keith cannot breathe without being noticed. Visitors have to go through strict security proceedings before being cleared to visit, hence only close family have been allowed this 'privilege'. Unless he stays in a prison that can cater for 'Cat As' he cannot participate in education or gym because of lack of staff. He cannot move around the prison unless escorted by at least two officers. All phone calls are taped, all correspondence is read and copied and kept on file.

Unless something drastic happens with Keith's appeal he could well stay a 'Cat A' for the majority of his sentence. Keith's scandalous sentence has been borne out of Michael Howard's new Criminal Justice Act, which appears to have given the likes of Judge Stephen Mitchell carte blanche to carry out an unjust sentence upon a compassionate individual like Keith Mann, whose only crime it seems is one of 'Compassion'. This realisation augurs ill for all of us who seek to fight injustice.

Make this campaign come to fruition by enlisting the help of public figures; celebrities; your local MP at The House of Commons, Westminster, London, SW1A 0AA; your MEP at the European Parliament, 2 Queen Ann's Gate, London SW11 9AA; clergy; media services; or indeed anyone who can help stop this discrimination against compassionate individuals.

For further information write to:

JFKM,
c/o ICA, PO Box 1135, Downs View Road, Hassocks, West Sussex BN6 8AA.

Groups Update

Staffordshire University Animal Rights Group
(& Stoke-on-Trent Animal Rights)
c/o Staffordshire University Students'

Union Offices, Animal Rights pigeon hole, College Rd., Stoke-on-Trent, Staffordshire

They are a local group who actively campaign for animal rights, supporting other local and national groups. They hold regular meetings at the University and are also the local hunt sab group. They are trying to get a van as they don't have regular transport so if anybody has any ideas on that please contact them. Also, if anyone has access to a video camera to loan please contact the above address.

Green Anarchist Magazine
BCM 1715, London WC1N 3XX

An invaluable magazine which contains news, views and an ALF hit list amongst other things of interest. Write for further details.

Animal Rights is not Single Issue Politics

This article was to have appeared in Arkangel 6. Police action led to the confiscation of that issue so we were unable to publish it. However, it has since reappeared so we print it now!

Some children, probably most given half a chance, are on a far higher intellectual plane than they are given credit for; and succumb to the lack of stimulation at school, and the pressures of sexual stereotyping, so lose their special qualities and gentle ways. This is especially true of boys, where sexism is already in operation, by the contempt shown for those qualities more usually attributed to girls. Yet it is a joy to be in the company of a child with an aura about them that is strong enough to be almost tangible. It should be nurtured, not quashed. But of course, in the relentless fight to control, the greatest enemy of the Establishment is individuality. This goes for any society, but particularly pertains to the doctrine established here over the past decade. I truly fear for the future.

The summer months in this country have seen a phenomenal number of upper-respiratory infections and hospital admissions due to asthma. I don't think you can afford to dismiss this as simply due to the weather having been dry and hot, it is far more serious than that; atmospheric pollution is undoubtedly to blame. We have to now take charge of our own destiny, because for as long as we live in a society which permits the nuclear industry to make leukaemia the biggest killer of children under five, a few thousand consumptives are going to pale into insignificance by comparison.

By joining an Animal Rights group and becoming active in any sphere, be it direct action, petitioning, leafleting, etc. we can effect changes to the far reaches of society. All evil is intertwined, and until we recognise this, there will never be the changes we wish to see with regard to the animal kingdom. This is why the media are so ready to discredit the movement, and direct action in particular, because the heightened awareness of the public to the suffering of animals has a domino effect. It draws our attention to the other evils that the perpetrators of these crimes also participate in. For as long as the vast majority of people have no real sense of priority above the superficial THEY (vivisectioners et al.) are safe. But those barriers are being broken down, too slowly as far as any animal rights supporter is concerned, but significantly enough for some companies to be rethinking their policies. It is not that the majority of people are deliberately bad, in the style of our more prominent world leaders (!), but having the type of people in high office that we have, running the world, is it any wonder that their example in lack of moral values reflects on down throughout the population, while our every institution is infected by them? Those who set themselves up as anti-Establishment (e.g. The Animal Rights Movement) are only a threat to the individuals, whose sole interest is in the personal profit afforded by their own legislation; they are not a threat to the community as a whole, as the media would try and have us believe, and sadly are unwittingly supported in the task by the less radical Animal Rights organisations. 'Divide and conquer' has been a ploy that has worked in keeping people (and animals) oppressed throughout history and it is working today within the Animal Rights Movement. There cannot be a single individual supporter who does not respect the dedicated work done over the years by Animal Aid, BUAV, RSPCA, etc. but, sadly, there has never been any real change to the law which has truly had the interests of animals at its heart. All that has happened are the offers of minor concessions, which ensure the continuation of the profitability of evil. The Animal Liberation Front has come along, hungry and impatient for change, and has effected some of that change by economic sabotage and nonviolent direct action. No different than 'Greenpeace' but without the same media support or deserved respectability. By all means let the mainstream animal rights societies condemn individual actions, if as individuals they disapprove, but let it be coupled with the offer of constructive criticism and praise for a common cause, not just allow themselves to be tricked and coerced by the media into indirectly supporting the very institutions we all wish to see join slavery, child labour, etc. in the annals of our shameful history.

Outside of the immediacy of specific targets for direct action, if everybody worked to the best of their ability in every aspect of their lives, conscious of the good of all as being the aim, the Establishment would have to tow the line. Ultimately our spending power and the choices we make as consumers are the things Governments listen to. It simply isn't good enough to be vegan or vegetarian (though it is a very good starting point) when we are buying products from a company with a record of say, international arms dealing. We don't need official sanctions; we need to find a sense of priority and compassion because then we would automatically refuse to buy the cash crops that hold the Third World to the ransom of international debt and starvation. If we all refused to buy Nestle products, it would be abundantly clear that we disapprove of their powdered milk being responsible for killing thousands of babies in the Third World. If we didn't eat fish there would be no seals or dolphins shot at or caught in the drift nets which are by no means restricted to the tuna industry. If we didn't eat meat, aside from the millions and millions of creatures subjected to the inherent barbarism that so dehumanises us, there wouldn't be the pollution of our land and waterways, and there would probably be enough tropical rainforest left so as not to have disrupted the climate.

One can go on ad infinitum, without even having to refer to the overtly despicable, such as the arms trade; but the point is we do nothing because the Establishment has brainwashed us into thinking there is nothing we can do. It has all become too big, too global for us to comprehend, and that is yet another governmental safety net. But it is precisely because it is global that we must try to do something, because if we don't, the Animal Rights Movement, in all its formats, may just as well pack up and stop trying. That would be a tragedy, because our level of consciousness and selfless lifestyle puts us into a position of responsibility because of high media profile, that draws public attention to the fact that Animal Rights should never be accused of being single issue politics. We should be as involved in starting and participating in selective consumerism because an effective boycott will always be more powerful than a ballot box. By voting, you are ironically showing approval for all these global crimes; but in refusing to deal with shameful companies or regimes, you are knocking the balls out of their economic structure. Eventually they have no option than to go with public opinion.

The average (non AR) member of society, if asked, would be in unison in condemning the type of injustices referred to here, yet will do absolutely nothing about it. We must convince them that we really are powerful and that those with the vested interests work very hard, and largely succeed, in convincing us otherwise. A classic example was the call for sanctions against South Africa. According to Margaret Thatcher they don't work, and "anyway it's the blacks that would suffer" being typical of the feeble excuses. Yet the moment conflict occurred in the Middle East, with characteristic xenophobia, ruthless sanctions ensued. It may be a simplistic analogy, but in all truth what is the difference between the economic strangulation of Iraq or South Africa, or Nestle or L'Oreal?

So, I reiterate, if we all did as much as we possibly could in our day-to-day lives, the effect could be phenomenal. This is why we must nurture the children, particularly those who have that obvious extra spirituality about them, and they in turn can then go on to nurture others. We should not continue to poison them by destroying all potential, so their main qualification will be in perpetuating the contamination of this planet. We can gather the momentum to effect the changes all decent people would like to see come about. Let us ask ourselves why else the standards in education have been all but destroyed by this Government's policies? Could it be in part because, if people cannot read and write they are automatically at a disadvantage and lacking in social development and communication skills, and without these skills they are less equipped to question or to mobilise against their oppressors?

So, it is not that most people are wicked on purpose, it is just that by doing nothing they condone the wickedness of others, and evil is perpetuated by, and results from, their own thoughtlessness and ignorance. Somehow, we who care must break down these walls, because ultimately their apathy is inexcusable, as information is readily available which enables us to make informed choices, especially as almost without exception there are alternative choices we can opt for. Not seeking confirmation that detriment will come from our actions, is as much a sin as deliberately ignoring badness when it is more blatantly obvious. The situation we find ourselves in has gone on for so long, and is all too acutely illustrated by the treatment meted out to animals, that when one delves into one's own actions, the realisation that the level of corruption and evil has such a knock-on effect as to permeate absolutely every aspect of one's life, comes as quite a shock. Until this revelation, our stagnant and brainwashed minds are secure in complacency, brought about by our perception of change as being an overt threat at worst, and at best, not worth the effort. So many times I've heard "What can YOU do?", "It's a drop in the ocean," or most recently, "Do you think Heinz are bothered because YOU no longer buy their products?" Well, I say I can do something, because if enough 'individuals' make the effort to vote with their pockets, it will work (and as a direct result of organised boycotts Heinz have seemingly now dispensed with their involvement in driftnet tuna fishing).

So we make choices, but all too often we choose to do wrong, and then proceed to justify our wrong-doings. There is no doubt it is difficult to implement, and no-one can have a one-hundred percent clear conscience, but to do one's utmost is giving one-hundred percent of what you can. In the drive towards such behaviour en masse, surely individual shortcomings can be absorbed by the greater good? For this reason, as long as we have a modicum of our all but eroded freedom of speech, I for one will shout, because it means that the multinationals and corruptions of government have not quite got control of everything yet. Until the smack of '1984' and 'Thought-Police' in our midst succeed in disassociating us all from our quest for truth and peace, I anticipate us having the momentum to swim against the tide of apathy. The bottom line is, if we do not regain our affinity with the ecology of this planet and hence achieve true and lasting liberation for all animals, there quite simply is no hope. In the meantime we must console ourselves with the fact that the greatest social changes throughout history have been brought about by the campaigns of minorities. The difference here is that we are on a very short span of borrowed time, and if the fundamental truth of this continues to evade us, we will forgo our last chance to make amends, and will all be guilty of an unprecedented act of genocide. Let us fight to destroy society as we know it, before we destroy society in its entirety. In saving animals, we also save ourselves. We have the choice...

Bears Rescued

On August 19th 1995 the first six Turkish ex-dancing bears, rescued from a life of cruelty on the streets of Istanbul, were released into a forest sanctuary at Karacebey, near Bursa in Turkey.

The semi-wild sanctuary, funded and built by the World Society for the Protection of Animals (WSPA) Libearty campaign for bears, is situated in a beautiful forest and mountain area of protected National Park. The sanctuary, enclosed by an electric fence, contains areas of dense trees and bushes as well as open grassy areas and ponds where the bears played and splashed in the sun.

It was officially handed over at the opening ceremony to be run by the Turkish Ministry of Forestry, Wildlife and National Parks. The release is the final phase of a long term project by WSPA and the Turkish government to end the cruel spectacle of dancing bears. Taken from the wild as cubs, their mothers often shot, the young bears have their muzzles pierced for rings and chains which are used to control them by pain. They are dragged around the streets and beaches by their gypsy owners to pose for tourist photos.

The Turkish Ministry of Tourism approached WSPA for help after hearing of the Libearty campaign. In October 1993, in an overnight operation involving Turkish police and government officials, WSPA staff, vets and animal specialists, 14 dancing bears were rescued from a park in central Istanbul where they were left chained every night - often without food or drink - by their gypsy owners. A further six or so bears, some still cubs, have been rescued since, including a two-year-old named Anzac rescued from Kusadasi on the Aegean coast last week. He has a broken jaw and is very thin. Anzac will be examined and treated at the Wildlife Rescue Centre at Uludag University in Bursa, also built and funded by the Libearty campaign, where all the rescued bears have spent the months since their rescue.

After the veterinary treatment and a diet of fresh food, the bears at the centre are released into a two acre area with trees and a pool. Here they learn to socialise with the other animals. The release of this first group of bears has made space at the veterinary centre for more dancing bears to be rescued and rehabilitated. WSPA estimates that there may still be as many as 40 or so dancing bears on the streets and beaches of Turkey. There are thought to be only around 2-3,000 bears left in the wild in Turkey.

For further information, please contact:

Hilary Cross, WSPA Press Officer,
WSPA, 2 Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ
(0171 793 0540).

The Right Road?

by 'K'

This comment is not meant to be judgemental as I am too aware of my own failings to wish to judge others. However, everyone has the right to voice an opinion. I believe that Robin Webb is proud of being able to say, "No one on the animal abusers' side in this war has yet to be seriously harmed in the fight for freedom", (I assume he means "has yet been" instead of "has yet to be", I may be wrong.) Perhaps he feels entirely neutral about this or is even ashamed of it but I assume not.

It therefore follows that he should take a stand against, for example, the incendiary devices placed under the cars of 'two prominent figures from Wickham labs'. Perhaps he feels unable to condemn the 'Justice Department' for this but at least he could decline to publicise those of their actions which could very well injure someone. This is also important since animal abusers are not likely to be the ones harmed by "letters booby-trapped with razor blades", it's more likely to be their secretaries who get hurt opening the mail. Well, one might think, secretaries don't have to work for animal abusers, but the rules concerning which jobs unemployed people can refuse without losing benefit are less than clear. How many of us can say we have never worked for an animal-unfriendly firm, either because we needed the money or because we were less aware then? I can't say, "I have only worked for ethically sound firms".

On this subject I know that a previous correspondent objected to your listing people executed in China for animal abuse being listed under the title 'The Road to Victory'. I share their opposition to capital punishment and I also think you should not list (say) accidents to anglers under this heading. They may be anglers now, they could be animal rights campaigners in a few years' time. Perhaps Arkangel could reprint 'A plea for tolerance' from Arkangel 9. I never got hold of a copy of that issue and only read that article when another organisation borrowed it for their magazine. There must be other people besides myself who would agree with it but could not obtain Arkangel 9 either.

Nor do I feel happy to read about threats of violence under the heading 'The Road to Victory'. Robin Webb may be sceptical of claims that such threats "set the movement back years", and he may be right. All I can say is how I feel. Instead of feeling elated at seeing the live exports demos on the news, I kept thinking, "Shit, I hope nobody puts a police officer in hospital." It demoralises me. The more they have any cause to accuse us of violence, the less clear it is that they are the violent ones. Why play into their hands?

I'm also demoralised because I don't want people I've only just met asking if I would ever scatter nails on roads! It isn't altogether relevant whether animal rights activists have ever placed nails on the road, the point is that unless the movement affirms (by words and actions) a commitment to nonviolence (except in self defence), the clear arguments are muddled, people like me become more depressed and we almost certainly lose some respect from many sympathetic people. Yes, I know that sounds really pompous. Who on earth am I to say what the movement should do? I just wanted to say this, that's all. I suppose I'll be accused of sounding like the 'anti-Christ' Mark Gold, only less articulate, but please note that I have not condemned illegal actions per se, only harmful ones.

(Ed's note: Just for the record Robin Webb is not any way associated with Arkangel magazine!)

A SHOPPING GUIDE FOR THOSE WISHING TO BUY GOODS WHICH ARE FREE OF ANIMAL INGREDIENTS AND ANIMAL TESTING

- Thousands of entries under food, drink, toiletries & cosmetics, remedies & supplements, baby & infant care, footwear & clothing, home & office, animal care, garden & leisure
- Mail order addresses, glossary of animal substances, animal-derived 'E' numbers ...

I enclose a cheque/PO payable to 'The Vegan Society' for £5.80 (p&p incl.)

Name

Address

Post code

Return to: AFS(AR), The Vegan Society, Donald Watson House, 7 Battle Road, St Leonards-on-Sea, East Sussex TN37 7AA

£4.95

The Pigeon - Friend or Foe?

by Lyn & Maggie Allen

We, at Pigeon Recovery, felt the need to put pen to paper on this subject because, firstly, as we care for orphaned, injured and sick pigeons it is an issue close to our hearts. As vegans, all life is precious to us, but we choose to dedicate ourselves to the welfare of pigeons since as we and many of them live in London, their needs are more immediate. Secondly, we've noticed an almost hysterical antagonism gaining ground among councils and public alike for the gentle pigeon. So we feel that a few words of support to you are in order.

The pigeon has very little to be thankful to Man for, being one of the few species that suffers under ALL categories of Man's abuse. They are shot for fun, vivisected, farmed as meat, hunted and made extinct in distant lands (the Dodo and Passenger Pigeon were pursued to oblivion), and finally, labelled as vermin and decimated by officialdom and its lackeys. Once, people fed pigeons in this country for pleasure, now they feed them under threat of constant harassment and in one case, imprisonment, while council tenants are even threatened with eviction for the unforgivable crime of throwing food to hungry birds. Why this sudden hatred? Pigeons have been with us and have shared our urban environment for centuries, presumably depositing droppings on the Stuart, Georgian and Victorian rooftops as well as our own with no previous animosity. In fact pigeon waste helped fertilise fields and especially in the 19th century there were plenty of pigeons happily cleaning up fallen grains from horse nosebags unmolested.

Why now, in our time full of pollution, worldwide recession, people freezing in cardboard boxes, hospitals lying derelict etc. can councils afford to employ armies of well-paid and pitiless pest-controllers to slaughter humble street pigeons? To justify this criminal waste of taxpayers' money and life they trot out the usual self-serving sophisms (anti-fox hunting groups will sympathise here) and blatant lies to vindicate their fat salaries and get the public on their side. As Joe (and Jill) Public will believe anything from anyone in a white coat (anti-vivisection groups will sympathise here) they jump on the anti-pigeon bandwagon too. So, if you feel like getting out a bag of peanuts in the street or even in your garden, be warned! You will eventually be harassed.

Here are some helpful arguments if you are verbally attacked or which can be used to challenge anyone proposing to cull pigeons. It counteracts the scare-mongering propaganda produced by councils, a good example being shown in Westminster. It is just as well for civilisation that we don't all take the view that genocide is the only (or final!) solution to something we don't like.

Accusation No 1: Pigeons are increasing in numbers.

So what! So are people! Most wild animals sadly are not. But then, if Man cannot profit from it, it follows there are too many of them, and this seems to be the case with the feral pigeon. Pigeons, and indeed other creatures that can learn to tolerate Man and his environment such as rats, gulls, crows, foxes, etc. have all increased due to one thing, rubbish. MuckDonalds and others of their ilk are a rat's best friend and it is down to their litter that all scavenging species have proliferated; not little old ladies feeding 'their' flock, but thousands of tons of chips, burger buns, pizza bases and other edible garbage. You can't blame any animal taking advantage; it was not pigeons and foxes that littered up our streets, we did. Councils neglect their responsibilities by diverting money from cleansing to culling.

Accusation No 2: Pigeons are dependent on Man for food and therefore aren't 'natural'.

Although the feral pigeon was originally a domesticated 'meat' bird who colonised cities, being dependent on us does not mean they are somehow inferior. As humans destroy the countryside, converting it to either a poisoned green desert or concrete housing, creatures have to make the choice of 'live with it' or become extremely rare. As trees were felled, most woodland species such as blackbirds, robins, jays, thrushes, bluetits, etc. sought refuge in suburban gardens relying (especially in winter) almost totally on bird-table charity. Does this make them somehow less natural? The urban fox, hunted and persecuted in the dwindling countryside, depends on pity too, and the discarded waste of dustbins and rubbish dumps. If the law of survival-of-the-fittest is applied, these animals, far from being inferior, are to be congratulated for their opportunism and resilience.

Accusation No 3: The presence of pigeons is prejudicial to human health.

All living things are subject to disease but what vivisectors will not tell you is that most illness is restricted to a particular type of creature and is not easily caught across the species barrier - eg. animals cannot catch pigeon pox and birds cannot catch rabies. As any honest vet will point out, pigeons represent less risk to human health than do pet cats, dogs, contaminated meat, pollution and of course that huge repository of infection, Man himself. If pigeons must die because it is possible that someone might catch a minor problem from one (and there is no reliable evidence that anyone has suffered seriously from a feral pigeon) then on the same argument, all foxes and dogs should die because you can catch mange from them (and as for the common cold...!) Sensible hygiene precautions when dealing with any sick creature is all that is necessary. The street pigeon is often deformed by losing toes, not through disease, but by becoming entangled in fishing tackle. One cannot expect the sort of person who goes fishing to be responsible enough to tidy up their junk, but to blame pigeons for being unsightly and crippled due to these bloodsport enthusiasts is ludicrous.

Accusation No 4: The buildings and statues of our historical heritage are damaged by pigeon droppings.

They weren't for over 400 years! Droppings are biodegradable and are washed away with rain to a large extent (otherwise we'd be knee-deep in the stuff). By an odd coincidence, with the rise in air pollution of sulphides and carbon monoxide, all of which, when mixed with rain water, create acids that kills vast tracts of forest in Germany and Sweden, suddenly pigeon droppings get the blame for the erosion of buildings. Would it be naive to suggest that the conveniently vulnerable and visible pigeon is an easier target to condemn than the internal combustion engine we all rely on or Man's heavy industry. Pigeons are easily prevented from roosting on buildings by the use of netting which, when fitted correctly and maintained, is a humane and permanent solution to their mess. Do you cull dogs because you've just put your foot in it? Education and using resources to clean up are the civilised solution, not resorting to shooting. As to destroying our 'heritage' it might well be argued that feral pigeons in London ARE part of our heritage. They have been there longer than all the statues and the vast majority of the buildings. In the past 50 years our so-called heritage has, with the full approval of successive governments, been in part destroyed utterly and in part distorted in various ways and by various factors (eg. the Criminal Justice Act) in none of which feral pigeons are, or ever could be, involved.

Accusation No 5: Pigeons deprive other birds of food.

Pigeons are one of the most docile and harmless of birds. Being largely denizens of inner cities, there are few other bird species to compete with. Anyone who has ever fed or observed pigeons in a city park will be well aware who usually grabs the food; Canada geese, Mallards and Sparrows are often in the habit of taking food out of pigeons' mouths. If we as a nation care so much for garden birds (as opposed to pigeons) then why allow the hideous waste of their lives caused by our addiction to slug pellets and pet cats?

The Final Solution is always, in the case of councils, killing in one form or another. Culling (an non-emotive term for slaughter) is a misuse of council funds because all it achieves is a temporary gap asking to be filled by other pigeons moving in from surrounding areas. After a cull more food is available to those remaining; hence more pigeons are fit to breed and can replenish their numbers to again be the scapegoats for inefficiency, and victims of misguided priorities and wasted resources. As with all wild creatures a given population, be it lions or elephants, will level off to a density rate that the available food can sustain. When that point is reached less robust pairs will not reproduce and natural losses tend to stabilise the flock. So basically, if left alone the flock will not grow ad infinitum, but regulate itself without the unnecessary savagery of traps, drugs and guns. Falconry is often defended as a 'green' alternative but remember, it is also a bloodsport, and the falcon has to be constantly starved to make it kill repeatedly.

Pigeons are here to stay. We must learn to live with them. If certain people want to extend a helping hand, it is their right to do so and they should not be penalised for offering food to the hungry so long as it is in a sensible place where the less charitable cannot object. In the pigeons' interest it is important not to throw food where notices prohibit it as doing so will attract a large flock and adverse attention from authority. It is best not to feed bread near gutters as hungry birds will be tempted to follow stray crumbs into the path of traffic. If you can, feed mixed corn (from pet shops). It is nutritionally superior and is quickly consumed with less risk of crusts being left to encourage rats and still more unsympathetic notice.

If you find a young or injured pigeon it will almost certainly need picking up (babies can very rarely be returned to their nests). Be wary of leaving it at clinics as the general view is that pigeons are vermin, and because they receive no legal protection do not feel obliged to treat them. It is not advisable to leave a pigeon at a vet or major charity without checking what will happen to it. Alternatively you can contact Pigeon Recovery (0181 644 7349) who can collect in the South London area, or if you live a long way away you can post it to us via AMTRAK Freephone 0800 717177.

It is our view that most people who feed wild or feral birds, be they pigeons or any other species, do so for personal reasons of which the most common are sympathy with, pity for or delight in the appearance of the birds. They don't want some official telling them what birds to feed or how to feed them. In the sterile and dangerous concrete messes we are responsible for, feeding a creature who is not threatening and indeed friendly is entirely therapeutic. We and many others believe that so far as beauty and the sanctity of life are concerned, that provided by the pigeons themselves far outweighs any mess or inconvenience their droppings make.

If we, as a nation, have the monetary resources to support a parasitic and decadent Royal Family, subsidise a completely wasteful and unnecessary system of animal farming, finance the development of destructive nuclear technology and the insanity represented by the arms race, then it is not unrealistic to believe that we can afford to live WITH the descendants of the gentle rock dove.

The Shellfish Network

My first and only direct acquaintance with shellfish was 25 years ago when I was a kitchen porter in a restaurant. One of my tasks was to carry containers in which the live animals were moving about in water, from the store to the kitchen where they would be boiled alive. I felt, in a vague way, that I didn't want to have a part in this, and asked if I could be excused that duty. The request, put rather apologetically and exposing me to some teasing, was granted. Perhaps it was more a matter of squeamishness than a matter of principle, but I felt better for it. Not that the shellfish did. I wasn't the only kitchen porter.

For the next 23 years, I almost entirely forgot about it. My conscience, such as it is, seldom looked beyond my own species. Quite why it came back to me, with some feelings of concern and regret, I don't know. I suppose it was partly that, although various animal rights campaigns were in the news, nothing, as far as I could tell, was being said about what happened to shellfish. I wondered whether shellfish were still being cooked in that way. A perusal of the latest cookery books on the shelves of Waterstones made it clear that they were. But would they feel much pain? They had these protective shells, and wouldn't it be over very quickly?

I sought information from the Universities Federation for Animal Welfare (UFAW) and EarthKind Humane Education Centre. I was sent literature on scientific experiments on crabs and lobsters which strongly indicated that they probably did feel pain and distress when boiled. UFAW had published guidelines on more humane methods involving precise techniques for stunning these animals by piercing their nerve centres prior to boiling. The RSPCA also had stated its opposition to the live boiling of crabs, lobsters and crayfish. But none of this had made much impact on fish processors and restaurateurs.

Smaller shellfish didn't seem to get much mention. The UFAW guidelines said: "The smaller ones, such as shrimps, prawns and crayfish, will die in a matter of a few seconds if placed in plenty of rapidly boiling water". It struck me that this begged the question of what it felt like for them during the few seconds. Surely boiling any creature alive was a drastic thing to do? Did we need experiments to establish this? Instead of asking, "How do we know they feel pain?", would it not be more logical and more humane to ask, "How do we know they don't?"

I later found that the Agriculture Department in New South Wales, Australia, had produced more comprehensive guidelines which included a recommendation that all shellfish should be anaesthetised by a period of freezing in an ice slurry. However, experts have expressed concern about the pain that might be caused by ice crystals. In fact, doubts of one sort or another surround all of the various 'humane' methods. And even if there were some incredible breakthrough here, it would do nothing to alleviate the many cruelties in trapping, transport and storage. Traps lost in storms keep their prey trapped indefinitely. Transport is in overcrowded conditions and traders expect casualties and fatalities. Storage should 'ideally' be in properly designed tanks, but it isn't always, and they can be left gasping in excessive heat and light in shop-windows or market-stalls. Lobsters claws are tied to prevent fighting among themselves, and they are kept unfed, sometimes for months, to prevent excrement polluting the water in the tanks.

In the face of so much cruelty, when the Shellfish Network was formed, we decided that our objective should be a ban on the trade rather than the promotion of 'humane' procedures. Not that I dreamed of an organisation in the early days. I tried to get the issue taken up by a number of key communicators - the Food Programme and 'Punters' on Radio 4, and the RSPCA on a more pro-active basis than providing information if anybody asked. Yes, I was naive. So I wrote a letter in 'Pisces' which was taken up by other animal rights papers, and I went through the strange experience of speaking at an Animal Rights Coalition meeting. Thus I stumbled into the Animal Rights Movement. The Network was formed out of concerned organisations and individuals in various parts of the country.

By leafletting; distributing our petition; writing letters to local papers; some radio interviews; and answering enquiries, we have gone some way in raising the profile of shellfish. At the time of writing (Sept. '95), a picket of the London Docklands Seafood Fair is coming up, in association with London Animal Action and the Shark Protection League.

The farming of shellfish and fish such as trout and salmon is a growing business. There is an EC Directive on farmed animals, and, though not mentioning fish of any kind, it would seem to apply to those that are farmed. It lays down that farmed animals must be spared "...any avoidable excitement, pain or suffering" at the time of killing. Regulations for implementing it in Britain, which refer to a range of species, but not fish or shellfish, have been made by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. In correspondence with the Network, the Minister has refused to regulate how shellfish should be killed. This would seem to offer us some good campaigning points, but, on the other hand, it would mean pressing for the dubious 'humane' methods as the best which the present system can offer. This is a thorny question, which the Network is currently debating.

Joe Solomon, Coordinator, The Shellfish Network.

For further information contact:

The Shellfish Network,
c/o Box 66, Greenleaf Bookshop,
82 Colston Street, Bristol BS1 5BB
(0117 9425524).

ASHANIKA SANCTUARY Healing and Light Centre

Set in an area of outstanding natural beauty in West Dorset. Offering daily and residential retreats at a vegan animal rights centre. Where one can receive teaching and advice on holistic healing of animals, comprising Naturopathy, Diet, Herbalism, Bach Remedies, Energy Rebalancing, etc. Also, compassionate natural methods of alleviating stress-related behavioural problems and understanding the animal kingdom on a deeper more rewarding level.

The centre is the home of Sue and Steve. Sue began campaigning in her early teens, and later, whilst working voluntarily in RSPCA clinics and also, professionally for vets, managing their postoperative and boarding kennels, she gained knowledge of orthodox veterinary practice. In her early twenties she was introduced to Herbalism and started to use natural medicines in place of chemical drugs. This she found very rewarding, obtaining successful results with animals pronounced incurable by orthodox means, while moving away from vivisection-based products fitted in with her animal rights philosophies and campaigns.

With the help of her partner, Steve, she has cared for and healed many creatures at their centre, as well as, giving advice to numerous others wishing to cure their own animals in this way. Their retreats have been borne from continuing requests from those who wish to come and learn.

Advice on human health and healing is also available. Steve takes on most of this side, therefore where necessary people can be healed alongside their creature companions. As so many animal ailments are closely related to the emotional dispositions of their human carers this holistic approach is most beneficial. Steve also practices and teaches meditation along with Herbalism, Iridology, and Naturopathy.

For more information please phone 01297 678597.

The Friends of Animals Under Abuse (FAUNA)

The South Wales Animal Rights Group FAUNA has launched a new campaign against chicken meat production. During June to August 1995, FAUNA investigators secretly filmed conditions inside a local South Wales poultry unit. The film was shot throughout the short seven-week lives of one shed of broiler chickens destined for the table and shows conditions from day one right through to the final day fifty when the birds are seven weeks old and being caught and crammed into crates for the journey to the slaughterhouse.

At one of our most recent inspections on 10th September 1995, at a different farm, a FAUNA investigator inspected and filmed pitiful conditions of animal suffering at one of Sun Valley Poultry Ltd.'s, private broiler chicken sites in Gwent. Upon entering one of the chicken sheds, our investigator found that many of the birds had been left to suffer terribly in the most distressing and pitiful conditions. Many were suffering with grotesque hip and leg deformities, many were so crippled that they were unable to stand. Some birds were dying, unable to drag themselves to the feed and water points. This evil-smelling, windowless shed, contained many thousands of birds. They were only a few weeks old; how much longer would they have been left to endure this pain and misery before being slaughtered? Our investigator immediately reported these pitiful cases of neglect and cruelty and made an official complaint to the Ministry of Agriculture. A Ministry vet inspected the farm that afternoon. We hope that those responsible for allowing such suffering will be prosecuted (NB: News just in: MAFF have okayed the farm and said that conditions were quite satisfactory. I wonder what they would find unsatisfactory? Obviously we are taking the matter further).

During an inspection of a broiler unit owned by the well known company Buxted, we found dead birds piled up outside the sheds. Upon entering one of the main sheds we found dead, decomposing and dying birds piled up inside and a lorry loaded with chickens ready for the slaughterhouse. On another inspection at a poultry farm on the outskirts of South Wales we found yet more dead and dying birds.

FAUNA has produced a narrated video and a full colour leaflet. For more details about their campaign please contact them at PO Box 156, Cardiff CF5 5YD, South Wales.

EMPLOYMENT

Low Pay and No Guaranteed Hours - Sid Nicholson, McDonald's UK Vice President (former Head of Personnel), admitted that McDonald's set their starting rates for crew employees for most of the country "consistently either exactly the same as the minimum rates of pay set by the Wages Council or just a few pence over them". He agreed that for crew aged 21 or over the company "couldn't actually pay any lower wages without falling foul of the law". However, he said "I do not accept that McDonald's crew are low paid".

About 80% of crew people are 'part-time', averaging about 20 hours per week. Mr. Nicholson admitted that employees do not have any guaranteed hours or pay at McDonald's. He agreed that managers have the power, while any crew person is working their scheduled shift, to compulsorily cut or extend the hours being worked (the crew handbook states: "On occasions you may be asked to continue working past your normal finishing time. You will be released as soon as the need for your service has passed").

Exploiting Young Workers - Approximately two thirds of McDonald's crew are under 21, and nearly one third are under 18. But Mr. Nicholson denied McDonald's "chose to employ a high percentage of young workers so that they could exploit them for lower wages and make greater profits". McDonald's UK has admitted that it was convicted of 73 offences in relation to the employment of young people in the 1980s.

Anti-Union Practices - Mr. Nicholson said the company was not anti-union and all staff had a right to join one. Under questioning he admitted that any McDonald's workers interested in union membership "would not be allowed to collect subscriptions... put up notices... pass out any leaflets... to organise a meeting for staff to discuss conditions at the store on the premises"... or "to inform the union about conditions inside the stores" (which would be deemed 'Gross Misconduct' and as such a 'summary sackable offence'). In fact, Mr. Nicholson agreed, "they

BIG MAC

STILL ON THE GRILL

Arkangel presents a further episode of the mammoth legal battle between two campaigners, Helen Steel and Dave Morris, and the $26 billion a year McDonald's.

The 'McLibel' Trial began in June 1994 and it's estimated to continue into Spring 1996. Recently, the evidence in court has focused on the pay and conditions of McDonald's workers, and the company's hostility to trade unions.

would not be allowed to carry out any overt union activity on McDonald's premises".

Employee Safety - Jill Barnes (McDonald's UK Safety Officer) was challenged over a previously confidential internal report into the death by electrocution of Mark Hopkins in a Manchester store on October 12th 1992. It had catalogued a number of company failures and problems, and had made the damning conclusion: "Safety is not seen as being important at store level". In addition, a Health & Safety Executive report of 1992 concluded: "the application of McDonald's hustle policy [i.e. getting staff to work at speed] in many restaurants was, in effect, putting the service of the customer before the safety of employees".

Coming Soon - From October 1995, Helen and Dave will be calling up to 30 ex-employees of McDonald's together with trade union officials and activists from around the world, including two TU officials from Lyons (France) who will relate how five McDonald's managers were arrested in July 1994 for trying to rig union elections.

NUTRITION

McDonald's are suing over the following statement made in the London Greenpeace Factsheet - "A diet high in fat, sugar, animal products and salt and low in fibre, vitamins and minerals - which describes an average McDonald's meal - is linked with cancer of the breast and bowel, and heart disease". - which had been characterised by McDonald's lawyer as the central and most 'defamatory' allegation. Helen and Dave quoted a McDonald's pamphlet, written in 1984: "There is a considerable amount of evidence to suggest that many of the diseases which are more common in the western, affluent world - diseases such as obesity, diabetes, high bloodpressure, heart disease, stroke, and some forms of cancer - are related to diet. The typical western diet is relatively low in dietary fibre and high in fat, salt and sugar."

Robert Beavers (US Senior Vice-President), when challenged with the two quotes stated: "I cannot spot any difference". In fact, later he criticised their own extract mistaking it for the 'defamatory' London Greenpeace one!

DAMAGE TO THE ENVIRONMENT

RAINFORESTS

David Walker, the Chairman of McKey Foods (the sole supplier of the company's UK hamburgers), gave evidence for McDonald's. Mr. Walker admitted that he had personally organised the direct import of 5 consignments of Brazilian beef for McDonald's UK stores in 1983/4 - sold to them by the Vestey's plant at Barretos, Brazil. A letter from Mr. Walker to a Vestey company was quoted in court. It revealed that the imports were a matter of great controversy. The letter stated that Prince Philip, the President of the World Wildlife Fund, had recently met the President of McDonald's Canada and had said: " 'So you are the people who are tearing down the Brazilian rainforests and breeding cattle' to which the reply was: 'I think you are mistaken', whereupon HRH said 'Rubbish' and stormed away". Following this, the letter stated that the Chairman of the McDonald's Corporation, "issued a worldwide edict that no McDonald's plant was to use Brazilian beef". The same letter revealed that the Managing Director of McDonald's UK had given Walker permission to use the Brazilian beef imports. The imports went through, and were kept secret from Prince Philip, from the World Wildlife Fund, from the BBC (who were sued the following year) and from Friends of the Earth (in meetings in 1985). The whole scandal only came to light due to a handwritten letter mistakenly disclosed by McDonald's solicitors in a bundle of other documents to the McLibel Defendants last year.

PACKAGING

Robert Beavers (US Senior Vice-President) was challenged on why McDonald's is still using ozone-damaging blowing agents (HCFCs) in their packaging in the Philippines, Turkey and Hong Kong, 15 years after the US Congress banned aerosol sprays because of concerns about the ozone layer. Helen & Dave referred to a 1995 Corporation leaflet distributed in Hong Kong admitting HCFC use by McDonald's H.K. under the heading "We Care About The Ozone Layer"!

LITTER

Stacey Stump, the manager of McDonald's, Kings Road (London) gave evidence about the problems of company litter. The Kings Road store provides "something like 10,500 potential items of litter" (such as bags, straws, cups and napkins etc.) every day. Mr. Stump recognised that "there is a lot of McDonald's litter" and admitted that there are "times when the volume of business is so great and generates so much litter that [the store] cannot effectively deal with it in the course of a day". He claimed that 'trash walks' (litter patrols) to pick up all litter around a set route of nearby streets are done approximately every 30 minutes. Colin McIntyre, Press Officer of a local residents association gave evidence for Helen and Dave. He said that since the Kings Road McDonald's had opened, rubbish in his street had got "incredibly worse" and stated "I would say approximately 70% of litter is McDonald's". He produced photos that he had taken as evidence, showing McDonald's litter in his street and the surrounding area. He said that despite continuous complaints to McDonald's, there had been no litter patrol down his street for two and a half years. He said "I have seen one McDonald's litter cleaner, it was enough of a joke we all made a note of it in our diaries". Mr. McIntyre told how local residents associations were also angry about the store causing increased traffic, noise and cooking smells and how they eventually set up an action group to consider legal action. "I object to litter in front of my house and in my basement" he said. "I do not really see why I should be condemned to litter for the rest of my life".

ANIMALS

David Walker of McKey Foods admitted that "as a result of the meat industry, the suffering of animals is inevitable".

PIGS

Ashley Bowes, Director of GD Bowes Ltd. (McDonald's pig meat supplier), said that Bowes owns roughly 100,000 pigs. During his opening speech at the start of the trial, Mr. Rampton QC had claimed that the London Greenpeace Factsheet was libellous because it stated that some of the animals reared for McDonald's products - especially chickens and pigs - spend their lives in factory farms with no access to the open air. He asserted that "Whilst it is true that a lot of chickens live in large sheds, it is not true of pigs. The pigs used for McDonald's food in this country at least, live in the open air in fields."

Dr. Gregory (expert witness for McDonald's) had visited Bowes in order to prepare his expert report for the court, but had only been shown the outdoor system. When questioned by Mr. Rampton QC, Mr. Bowes' testimony concentrated on the outdoor system of rearing that the company uses, rather than the indoor. But under cross-examination by Helen and Dave, Mr. Bowes admitted that there are "two separate buying channels for pigs" (indoor and outdoor) and that McDonald's buys indoor pork and only gets outdoor pork if there is some left over. Asked if it was the case that McDonald's are not willing to pay as much as other customers to purchase 'free range' meat, Mr. Bowes replied "I wish they would".

CHICKENS

Pigs are slaughtered at a rate of 220-240 an hour at Bowes' own slaughterhouse. They are stunned using "head only stunning". When Dr. Gregory had visited the plant, he calculated that the current used to stun the pigs was 0.45 amps. The Government's Codes of Practice state that for head only stunning the current should be a minimum of 1.3 amps, otherwise the pig "is unlikely to be stunned effectively". Mr. Bowes claimed that Dr. Gregory's figure was wrong because he hadn't taken into account the fact that Bowes spray the piglets with water before stunning, which he said "improved the conductivity". Dr. Alan Long, for the Defence stated that he has "a great deal of concern" about this, because there is a danger that "the current tracks round the conducting wet surface instead of going through the more resistant part of the head", so the pig "would not be properly stunned and would be stuck while it still had a sense of feeling". Mr. Bowes admitted that some pigs are stunned with the tongs "on each side of the neck". The Codes of Practice state "electrodes should not be applied behind the ears or on each side of the neck, otherwise the animal may be paralysed without being rendered unconscious and may suffer severe pain".

CATTLE

The court heard that McKey's calculated that McDonald's used beef from one in twelve (8%) of all cattle slaughtered in the UK. Timothy Chambers from Midland Meat Packers Ltd. (the largest of dozens of abattoirs supplying beef for McDonald's hamburgers) admitted his company uses electric shock goads to move cattle around, contrary to claims by McDonald's that this practice was banned by their suppliers. Company documents stated that one of their concerns is to prevent "animals escaping". Mr. Kenny (McDonald's Senior Quality Assurance Supervisor) asserted that McDonald's has a policy against the use of electric goads to move cattle, but was unaware that their largest supplying slaughterhouse is still using such goads.

The evidence for the Defence of Dr. Alan Long (an independent researcher for over 40 years) was that animals have been turned into production 'machines', subject to stress and distress, disease, abuse, and a short and totally unnatural life. Dairy cattle (as used for McDonald's burgers) have a particularly exploited existence based on continuous forced pregnancies and almost constant lactation until exhausted, and then transported under extreme stress to be 'burgered' at 5 or 6 years old. A whole series of what are termed 'production diseases' affect dairy cows - effectively brought on by "excessive pressures of production". These include mastitis (a painful udder condition) which affects about 35% of dairy cows in Britain. Dr. Long said output from a modern dairy cow is approx. 5,500 litres a year, about twice what it was at the end of the 1940s. Sometimes the strain on the udder causes it to drop and then, in order to avoid kicking the udder, the cows walk in an unnatural way which causes lameness.

Mark Pattison of Sun Valley Poultry Ltd. ('SVP') gave evidence for McDonald's about the conditions under which chickens are reared to produce the meat for chicken McNuggets and McChicken sandwiches. 27 million chickens are reared every year in Europe to supply meat to McDonald's. Dr. Pattison said that SVP hatches "in the order of 200,000 chicks each day". Eggs that do not hatch out are put through the macerator, which he agreed might include chickens still alive in the eggs. The company kills an additional 200-300 unwanted chicks each day, by gassing them.

Despite his being on the committee of the Farm Animal Welfare Council which produced the Report on the Welfare of Broiler Chickens (for the Government), Dr. Pattison accepted that SVP are not complying with its recommendation that the 34kg per square metre stocking density "should not be exceeded at any time during the growing period". The stocking density at SVP is "about 36.5kg per square metre". He accepted that the birds "have less space each than an A4 sheet of paper", but said "I do not believe it is cruel". Dr. Pattison said "economics are a very important factor, of course" in why the company has not reduced stocking density.

At SVP, birds are caught and loaded into crates in modules and transported by lorry to the slaughter plant. Catchers are instructed to carry up to 6 birds in one hand, holding them by one leg. They are crammed 18-30 birds to a crate of approx. 3ft x 2ft x 10 inches. Dr. Pattison said that the kinds of injuries which birds may suffer in the process of catching include dislocation of the hip joint (which may cause haemorrhage), broken legs and crushed heads (if their head is caught between the crate and the module when the drawers are being shut). Dr. Pattison claimed such injuries were not common. However, defence witness John Bruton (a former catcher for Sun Valley) said that such injuries were a regular occurrence as the catchers were not given enough time to take care with the birds, despite voicing their concerns to the company. This was particularly so after the company reduced the number of catchers to cut costs. A team of 6 catchers was expected to load a lorry with between 4-6000 birds, about every 45 minutes.

Clare Druce (researcher for the Farm Animal Welfare Network) stated for the Defence that the modern broiler chickens' "living conditions are unacceptable, being unsuited to the birds' needs and insanitary" with "overcrowding, dim lighting, inadequate ventilation, and filthy litter". The broilers' parent stock are made to suffer "a state of acute hunger for extended periods" to get them to reproduce satisfactorily. Additionally, she questioned the effectiveness of electric stunning and neck cutting during chicken slaughter, as well as all aspects of the rearing, transportation and slaughter process imposed upon hundreds of millions of chickens every day in this country. In her opinion "welfare problems" are due to "thinking only of profit and quick growth, with no regard whatsoever for the behavioural patterns or needs or the feelings of the birds".

FOOD SAFETY

A UK 'McFact' card states: "every consignment of beef arriving at the [McKeys] meat plant is subject to a total of 36 quality control checks, carried out by a team of qualified technologists. If a consignment should fail on any one check, it will be rejected by McDonald's." All the raw beef consignments are microbiologically tested, and categorised as 'satisfactory', 'passable', and 'unsatisfactory'. David Walker (Chairman of McKeys) stated that 'unsatisfactory' relates to beef which has a total colony of more than 10 million bacteria per gram. He then admitted that such consignments are, in fact, not rejected and are used for McDonald's burgers.

McDonald's have refused to call their own expert witness on food poisoning, Colin Clarke, who prepared a detailed report following a visit he made to three company stores. The court heard that, regarding the cooking of hamburgers (which he had tested), Mr. Clark in his statement "recommends that 73 degrees C be the internal minimum temperature of the final product, and that their temperatures were not reaching that in all cases. The minimum was, in fact, 70 degrees C."

TEARS OF A CLOWN

Protesters surprised the makers of the burger giant's latest advert when they arrived at their location shoot in a London park in June. Ronald McDonald's cheesy grin faded when the protesters appeared behind him with a banner reading "McDonald's - guilty of exploiting workers, destroying the environment, murdering animals". The production company's plans of filming the clown by the pond and the bandstand (painted specially for the purpose) were completely frustrated all day, at an estimated cost of £100,000. The production company then abandoned its plans to film in the park the following day.

MCDONALD'S TO PULL OUT?

At the time of the first anniversary of the trial (28th June 1995), it was widely reported that McDonald's had initiated secret settlement negotiations with Helen and Dave. They twice flew members of their US Board of Directors to London to meet with the Defendants to seek ways of ending the case. McDonald's are clearly very worried about the way the case is going for them and the bad publicity they are receiving. Helen and Dave made their preconditions for settling clear: McDonald's should undertake not to sue anyone for making similar criticisms again, apologise to those they have sued in the past, and pay a substantial sum to a third party in lieu of the Defendants' costs.

TRANSCRIPTS SCANDAL

Following the worldwide publicity that the first anniversary of the trial received, McDonald's decided to withhold copies of the essential daily court transcripts from Helen and Dave in an attempt to sabotage their ability to conduct their Defence, and to deter reporting of the case here and around the world.

Helen and Dave, with no legal aid, are unable to afford to pay for the vital transcripts (over £350 per day), and the $26 billion a year burger giant are withholding photocopies of their paid-for transcripts. The Judge stated that he would feel 'uncomfortable' having transcript copies which were not available to Helen and Dave, and therefore decided to forego his access to the transcripts.

This denial of transcripts will sabotage Defence preparations for the rest of the case and make a fair trial virtually impossible. In fact, McDonald's demanded a 'undertaking' by the Defendants not to disseminate any transcript extracts "to journalists and the McLibel Support Campaign, and similar like-minded [people]". This attempt to gag them and the media is outrageous and unacceptable censorship. Leave to appeal on this was refused so the only alternative is to buy the vital transcripts. The McLibel Support Campaign is calling for public donations to raise up to £35,000 to pay for the remaining daily trial transcripts. The public have a right to know what is going on in this historic case - with the public's help and generosity, McDonald's will not be able to bury the evidence in their lawyers' vaults.

You can watch the trial in progress by going to:
Court 35, Royal Courts of Justice, Strand, London WC2,

- most days from 10.30am.
Ring 0171 713 1269 for details.

McLibel Support Campaign,
5 Caledonian Road, London N1 9DX, UK.
Tel/Fax 0171 713 1269.

Donations welcome -
(cheques to 'McLibel Support Campaign')

Some Recommended Reading...

- ALF Supporters Group Newsletter: BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX. £1.50. Contains information concerning A/R prisoners and defence funds, articles and news. Quarterly.
- ARC NEWS: PO Box 339, Wolverhampton WV10 7BZ (01902 711935). Free with SAE. Contains reports of local group activities as well as an up-to-date list of events.
- THE ANIMALS CONTACT LIST: Veggies, 180 Mansfield Rd., Nottingham NG1 3HW. £3. The list provides a coordinated means by which groups can contact one another with details of their work, news of campaigns or requests for support.
- ECO-VEGAN: c/o BCM 1715, London WC1N 3XX. Contains information concerning A/R and Earth Liberation activities and much more besides. Free with SAE.
- THE LIBERATOR: PO Box 80, Chichester, West Sussex PO19 4GH. £1.50. Excellent Animal Liberation magazine!
- THE NEW ABOLITIONIST: B.A.V.A. PO Box 82, Kingswood, Bristol BS15 1YF. Available through subscription of £6. An invaluable magazine for those wishing to know about medical fraudulence of vivisection.
- THE VEGAN: Donald Watson House, 7 Battle Road, St. Leonards-on-Sea, East Sussex TN37 7AA. £1.75. A must for those already vegan or those seeking a vegan lifestyle. Quarterly.
- VEGAN VIEWS: 6, Hayes Avenue, Bournemouth BH7 7AD. Available through subscription of £3 for 4 issues. The magazine aims to act as an exchange between its readers.

Donations

We are extremely grateful to the following people who have made a donation of £4 or more to help us produce and distribute this magazine:

JP Alessandra, Jim Bacon, Mr & Mrs Blakey, Oliver Busse, Barbara & Audrey, Comitato Liberazione Animale, Pauline Croxford, C Harrison, Martin Hillback, Susan Magor, Yvonne Martin, Thea McLean, John Mullin, SA Muth, Rachael Roberts, Molga Salvalaggio, Audrey Sheppard, Keith Sherwin, JB Sleath, MI Stoneman, Shirley Stones, Mrs I Taylor, Fiona Wakefield, A Wallace, and P & J Zehler.

Extra thanks go to AG, N & E, Ruth Cottrell, East London Animal Rights, PR Fenn, and SM Sheppard, and to M Cooper, Sandra Francis, Monica Harvey, C Humphries, Michael Maas, Mark, Pat Murgatroyd, Tim Thompson, P & J Zehler, Montserrat Thompson, Mark Willett and Dave Wetton who are all donating on a monthly basis by standing order.

Animal Rights Prisoners

Arkangel gives its full support to animal liberation prisoners. In the past we have given details of names, locations and prison numbers. Now we only list the names of those in prison and ask those who wish to make contact with prisoners to contact the ALF Supporters Group for up-to-date information. This is because Arkangel Magazine is produced less frequently than the ALFSG information and could be out of date by the time you read it; so this change is for purely practical reasons.

For further information please write to:
ALFSG, BCM1160, London WC1N 3XX.

Prisoners at the time of going to press:

Geoff Sheppard, Keith Mann, Angie Hamp, Gurjeet Aujla, Dave Callender, Greg Avery,
Niel Hanson, Melonie Arnold, Lise Olsen,
Rod Coronado, Michael Green, Michael Roberts, Justin Wright, Barbara Trenholm, Kevin Chapman and Mike Roberts.

The Living Without Cruelty Diary 1996

Informative, easy to use diary available from some bookshops or direct from the publisher:

Jon Carpenter,
PO Box 129, Oxford OX1 4PH
(01865 790715)
£5 inc. VAT

THE ROAD TO VICTORY

Sometimes the dragon wins...

Anti-hunt supporters vowed to step up the fight after the C.J.A. gave police new powers of arrest. Police arrested 7 hunt saboteurs at Meon Valley Beagles yesterday for aggravated trespass. They were picked out of a group of 40 protesters mingling with the hunt at Corhampton Golf Course. (Daily Echo 3.1.95)

Pressure is mounting on William Waldegrave to stop sending calves to Europe. Two senior Tories urged Waldegrave to stop the trade, as CIWF revealed further film of live export ill-treatment. (Independent 10.1.95)

Brigitte Bardot has threatened officials near Toulouse with legal action if an annual pigeon cull goes ahead. She proposes chasing the birds away or feeding them contraceptives. (11.1.95)

Sussex police incurred £155,000 in costs on one day at Shoreham, but the ship used to transport cattle didn't turn up. Meanwhile, Civil Aviation Authority inspectors refused a permit for flight to a Phoenix Aviation plane after examining the plane. (Independent 13.1.95)

'Do we still have the stomach for meat?' Pointing out demonstrations by thousands of Britons at Shoreham, the Vegetarian Society's Steve Connor says it will go down as a watershed in history, alongside Ruth Harrison's 1964 Animal Machines, which coined the phrase 'factory farming,' and BBC 2's documentary, 'The Animals'. A Gallup poll has noted 2,000 people converting to vegetarianism a week, and 40% of the population consuming less meat. Colin Spencer points to the Christian emphasis on meat eating and the association of meat eating with power and wealth. Until the 1840's, vegetarians were called Pythagorans, after the 600BC Greek philosopher, mathematician and vegetarian. Also, the link between saturated fat and heart disease wasn't noted until the late 1960s and the public made aware until the 1970's, when it was killing 200,000 Britons a year. A survey of children found 59% were more concerned about cruelty to animals than any other issue. (Independent 14.1.95)

Wildlife enthusiasts and children have built an artificial earth for foxes which are seen regularly at

Thornaby Yard, Cleveland. (Rail News, Jan. 95)

Britain could invoke Article 36 of the European Union's Treaty to ban the live export trade. The article permits unilateral 'prohibitions or restrictions on imports, exports of goods... on grounds of public morality, public policy or public security... protection of health and life of humans, animals and plants...' (Mail on Sunday 15.1.95)

95% of people interviewed for an NOP poll said British wildlife should be protected, 97% thought that hunting was cruel. (Sunday Express 29.1.95)

Belgian riot police had to break up a demonstration by animal rights protesters as the animal rights bandwagon rolled across Europe from Britain. (Independent 30.1.95)

Animal-rights demonstrators are being infiltrated by violent militants intent on criminal activity, Acting Deputy Chief Constable of Warwickshire police, Mick Brewer, said yesterday. After the death of Jill Phipps, 31, forty hooded activists attacked the home of Christopher Barrett-Jolly, managing director of Phoenix Aviation. Mr. Brewer said after the fatality, criminally minded people joined the demonstrations. The ALF, founded in 1972, claimed responsibility for actions, monitored by the Animal Rights National Index, formed in 1986 by Special Branch. Figures for the first 8 months of 1994 recorded 585 incidents, causing £5.4m damage. There were 29 incendiary attacks over the same period. Detectives are now investigating links between ALF and

Class War. (The Times 4.2.95)

The dairy industry is set to lose hundreds of farmers over the next 12 months, according to a Devon farmer, because of milk quotas and falling prices. (5.2.95)

Meat processors and distributors in Germany are to boycott British beef because of the BSE scare, after an imposed ban was lifted. (Independent 8.2.95)

Farmers must be more willing to let the public see what goes on, a leading vet, Professor John Webster, has said. At the NFU annual meeting, William Waldegrave, Minister of Agriculture, said new concerns over welfare should be met. He added that it was crucial to get children on to farms before they were 13 and their 'brains descended into their gonads'. Professor Webster said the plight of veal calves was worse than welfare activists realised. Dietary deficiencies led to anaemia, and enteritis, sleep deprivation, early moulting and itching were caused by veal crates. He added that subsidies might be directed away from production to animal welfare. (Independent 9.2.95)

The solidarity of midwives with vegans on new picket lines has astonished the Establishment. Activists no longer wear dreadlocks and army surplus gear. Vegans and midwives acting like the rate cap rebels of the 80's vexes the media. The isolation from political parties has been the campaign's strength. (Independent 10.2.95)

Japanese whalers were caught red-handed flouting an international treaty. Greenpeace's Rainbow Warrior 2 tracked them in Antarctic waters as they fired explosive harpoons into a pod of minke whales. The slaughter came just 6 weeks after a ban came into effect. The Japanese boat ignored Greenpeace's request to stop killing the whales and a radio reminder of the treaty. The campaigners finally halted the hunting by putting a helicopter between the whales and the harpoons. Greenpeace claim the whalers were harpooning 750 miles inside the sanctuary. (Daily Mail 15.2.95)

Up to 3,000 British calves a week are being saved from continental veal crates since major ferry companies ceased to transport livestock. At its peak, 10,000 calves were exported a week. It is now down to 7,000 a week. Calf prices have also fallen by 25%. Live sheep exports are down by 50% on last year's figures. Officials said farmers' incomes could be significantly hit. The MLC said calf exports could be halved permanently to 250,000 while sheep exports could be cut by 70% from 1.9 million to 570,000. (Independent 15.2.95)

A £6,000 tunnel for toads has been built under the A283 to protect them from traffic during their annual migration to mating grounds at Petworth Park, Sussex. (Independent 17.2.95)

Hampshire Constabulary will keep up its guard against possible terrorism during the Irish Peace Talks, as Animal Rights terrorism continues. A report also warns that the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act will lead to further clashes between police and demonstrators. (Hampshire Chronicle 17.2.95)

Paul McCartney has appealed to the French President, Francois Mitterrand, to ban the import of live animals from Britain, as French animal rights protesters stopped the docking of a ship carrying live exports from Britain at Cherbourg. (Independent on Sunday 19.2.95)

The University of East Anglia, funded by £170,000 from the Humane Research Trust, is using cornea, kept alive in a culture dish, to study cataracts. A researcher hopes that it will lead to fewer animals being used in experiments. Professor Ian Hart, Professor of Cancer Research says he can't experiment using just glass dishes. Senior lecturer Paul Skett at the University of Glasgow has been developing methods of keeping human liver cells alive in culture. He says that while animal researchers get a Home Office licence, human tissue experiments require Ethical Committee consent. (Times 20.2.95)

The great majority of British people want fox hunting banned, reports the Daily Mail. 70% said it should be made illegal, and the Royal family was showing a bad example. (Sunday Times 26.2.95)

The High Court action brought by McDonalds against Helen Steel and Dave Morris, is set to become the longest libel case in history. After 100 days and £500,000, only 40 of the 180 witnesses have given evidence. On one side is one of the country's most expensive lawyers, on the other side are two unwaged supporters of London Greenpeace. There is no jury, just a judge. Dan Mills, for the McLibel Support Campaign, says they have lawyers to give informal advice, but the day-to-day work is done by Dave and Helen. Costs may reach several million. (Times 3.3.95)

Anti-hunt MPs from all parties clashed with pro-hunting MPs at John McFall's Wild Mammals (Protection) Bill. McFall said it was an unacceptable pursuit, deliberately and unnecessarily brutal using dogs which "involved hounding animals to exhaustion and death." This "gruesome sport" that kills tens of thousands of animals, including terriers, was already banned by 80% of county councils. It was not an effective method of pest control. McFall said that redundant hounds could be used in drag hunting. He also condemned hare coursing.

Tony Benn condemned cruelty for fun. He linked anti-hunting to votes for women, abolition of chimney boys and the end of apartheid. A pro-hunting MP linked the debate to an end to fishing, shooting and equestrian events. (The Times 4.3.95)

In Wellington, 26 Pacific nations launched a campaign to save the marine turtle from extinction, calling for a ban on the sale of its meat, oil and shell. 6 species are endangered. (Times 6.3.95)

Health officials in Scotland have won a court order to destroy 528kg of listeria-infected Lanark Blue cheese, worth £27,000. (Independent 7.3.95)

Air France has been fined £1,000 after allowing two cows to suffocate to death in an aircraft hold in Heathrow. (Times 9.3.95)

A Bateleur eagle has had its sight restored with a cataract operation on its left eye, in Johannesburg. (Daily Telegraph 14.3.95)

Gerhard Weisch's guard dogs held firefighters at bay while his factory full of furs burnt to the ground in Berlin. (Independent 19.3.95)

Giant food firm Union International went bust yesterday. Owners of Dewhurst, the Vesty family called in the receivers after bankers refused to bail it out. (Today 23.3.95)

Robert and Margaret Haston, owners of Red House Dairy, were fined £1,000 each after milk from their farm poisoned 60 people, and an 18 month old girl died, in May. (Independent 24.3.95)

The Today paper reports on a joint operation by itself and the BUAV. The trade in hoards of illegally imported long-tailed macaque monkeys, perhaps up to 3 million used in experiments each year, is horrific and often pointless, and done under the guise of medical research. A Today Comment questions the justification for such experiments. (Today 23.3.95)

A Sunday Express investigation has revealed the breeding in Britain of kittens which are exported to Australia for research. The 9 week old kittens, specially bred to be disease resistant, cost £300 each and are bred in germ-free isolation at the high security Hill Grove Family Farm, at Minster Lovell, Oxfordshire, operated by Christopher and Katherine Brown, the only breeders of such kittens in Britain. The Sunday Express tracked some of the kittens to the Arthur Webster laboratory in New South Wales. British Airways confirmed it had stopped transporting the kittens in late January, issuing a ban on the shipments. (Sunday Express 26.3.95)

Babies fed with cows' milk based formula in the first 3 months of life are 52% more likely to develop diabetes, say Australian researchers. The study confirms an earlier theory on allergy. (Independent 28.3.95)

Leading American animal rights protesters are coming to Britain later this month to learn campaign tactics. They want to use successful 'ban bloodsports tactics' to stop duck and geese shooting. They will use lobbying tactics such as those used to stop the export of veal calves and to help release zoo animals. They will be given private briefings by the LACS, CIWF, Animal Aid, Respect for Animals, and the HSA. Results will be transmitted across the Internet. (Independent on Sunday 2.4.95)

Two lions rescued from cages in a pub in Tenerife have been saved by the Born Free Foundation and moved to Kent. (Daily Telegraph 4.4.95)

Avonmore Foods closed down its German meat processing subsidiary yesterday, because of the particularly difficult meat market in Germany over the past two years. (Independent 7.4.95)

The Food Commission says many meat and dairy products fail to live up to their 'green' image. It criticises, along with the Soil Association, the RSPCA's 'Freedom Foods' label, sold by Sainsbury and Safeway. Supermarkets are jumping on the green bandwagon. Eggs laid by birds that haven't seen natural light can use the symbol, as can the products of farrowing crates for pigs, de-beaking of chickens, docking of piglets' tails and gas stunning of pigs in slaughterhouses. Even outdoor-reared pigs are fattened in open barns. (Independent 7.4.95)

Scotland Yard alone paid out £1.76m in damages last year, as complaints about the force rose. One police force paid out damages in 80 out of 83 cases brought by hunt saboteurs in two years. A solicitor specialising in defending police had never seen a letter of apology from the police in 10 years. (Times 7.4.95)

Adalat, a drug with sales of £1,300m, the world's second best-selling drug, contributed to a greater risk of heart attack. An American study found those taking calcium channel blockers had a 60% greater risk of heart attack than those taking other drugs. The British Heart Foundation said the results were 'interesting.' High blood pressure affects 25% of adults in Britain. Between 8% and 12% of people need treatment. (Independent 10.4.95)

Wildfowling has ended this week in Pagham Harbour as the owner has decided to allow White Creek to be included in the harbour's famous nature reserve. All of the harbour will be managed by West Sussex County Council. Simon Wild of West Sussex Wildlife Protection Association said they were extremely pleased. (Bognor Observer 13.4.95)

One in four women under 24 no longer eats meat and believes a vegetarian diet is healthier, according to Gallup. Over the last 11 years, vegetarian numbers have more than doubled to 4.5% of the population. The numbers avoiding red meat has nearly tripled to 7%. The number of women aged 25-34 no longer eating red meat has increased by nearly 8 times compared with 1984. Vegetarian men declined slightly to 3% compared with 3.2% two years ago, but the number giving up red meat has risen by 10% in two years. (Daily Telegraph 12.4.95)

Britain's fifth-biggest food retailer, the Co-op, plans to 'come clean' with its customers, giving unprecedented information about the health and environmental effects of the products they buy, following a survey of customers. They will label margarines containing trans-fatty acids and cut spending on promoting fatty and sugary foods from more than 1/3 of its promotional budget to nearer 7%. A Gallup survey found 76% wanted fuller facts on supposedly green products. Top issue is animal rights (71%) followed by environment (70%). 60% are willing to pay more for ethical products. (Independent 24.4.95)

The Wildfowl and Wetlands Trust has banned Tiverton Stag hounds from crossing Kings Nympton Park in Devon in pursuit of deer because it believes animals have been killed in the park. (Independent 25.4.95)

Animal rights extremists are thought to be behind four letter bombs sent to politicians and companies. William Waldegrave, Tom King, a fur warehouse and a healthcare company in Scotland each received a bomb. The devices bear the hallmarks of the Justice Department. In January, Mr. Waldegrave received two booby-trapped packages after the disclosure that calves from his farm were being exported to veal crates. The ALF has been the most active animal rights terror gang over the last two decades. Founded in 1976 by Ronnie Lee, the ALF have caused £15m damage in a single year. Countless letter bombs have been sent to vivisectionists, politicians and fur traders. The group lowered its profile after Ronnie Lee was jailed. The Justice Department has taken over recent attacks. Detectives believe the two groups are linked. The ALF was responsible for the Mars Bar poisoning scare which cost the manufacturer £3m. Animal rights will become the biggest menace since the IRA. Armed police guard William Waldegrave's farm, which has been sent incendiary devices after calves from his farm went for export. Other MPs have been sent letter bombs, as has the Alaska Fur Company in Glasgow, and the Ethicon company in Scotland which tests on animals. CIWF said it was utterly appalled by the violent protests. (Daily Express 26.4.95)

Moves to save dogs from death sentences were backed in the House of Lords, yesterday, when they gave magistrates powers of reprieve. (Daily Telegraph 26.4.95)

Christopher Barratt-Jolly who heads Phoenix Aviation was arrested after allegedly aiming an air rifle at a protester's camcorder near his house. (Independent 2.5.95)

The Bishop of Dover attacked live exports as "an offence before God". (Independent 8.5.95)

Two livestock hauliers challenged the British courts' right to enforce UK laws on transporting animals if part of their journey occurred abroad. Ken Lane Transport Ltd and European Ltd were found guilty of transporting calves in circumstances likely to cause suffering. Both were found guilty of sending animals on a 37 hour journey without a break. (Independent 12.5.95)

Sussex police are to cut back their operation at Shoreham Port, because the £4m cost of a high police presence was draining their budget. (Independent 12.5.95)

The Prince of Wales has been sent booby-trapped parcels by animal rights terrorists linked to a nationwide arson and bombing campaign. Designed to maim, they were sent to at least two palaces. One device, a primed mechanical rat-trap with razor blades, was posted after the Prince took sons Harry and William on their first foxhunt. The device was intended to slice off fingers. A leading MP said animal rights groups should be outlawed under the Prevention of Terrorism Act. The devices, sent by the Justice Department, were one of 150 attacks by the JD in the past 18 months, causing millions of pounds of damage. Another device was sent to the Home Secretary, responsible for the Criminal Justice Act that effectively bans hunt sabotage. Devices were also sent to a hunt-riding course organiser. (Sunday Times 14.5.95)

Thousands of animals have been saved after a man-made dam in French Guyana flooded their rain forest habitat. 150 square miles of Amazon rain forest were flooded when a river, on which the dam was built, burst its banks. (Independent 21.5.95)

Money paid out from the Exxon Valdez oil spill will pay for 152,000 acres to be set aside for Kodiak bears and wildlife on native American land. The money will also be used to halt logging and tourist development. (Times 26.5.95)

Endangered plants and animals are being reintroduced to Britain, such as the red kite, the dormouse, the stinking hawksbeard, the British field cricket and the ladies slipper orchid. English Nature has £400,000 with which to maintain 29 plants and animals. Ecologists are using a wide array of tools to keep tabs on the species. (Sunday Times 28.5.95)

A Chinese food stall owner, known for his snake delicacies, was killed by two poisonous snakes he had just beheaded on South China's Hainan Island. He was bitten on the hand while trying to pick up the heads he had just severed. (Independent 31.5.95)

China will set up 14 new nature reserves as part of an effort to save the panda. (Daily Telegraph 31.5.95)

Demonstrators stopped attempts by Phoenix Aviation to fly calves from Baginton airport near Coventry. Policing there has already cost taxpayers £400,000. (Independent May 95)

Ronald McDonald came under fierce attack yesterday when protesters disrupted the making of an advert. 'McMurder', 'Exploitation in a Bun', and other banners appeared in front of the camera. The director tried unsuccessfully to move the protesters. London ad agency Leo Burnett had over 70 actors and technicians waiting, after others spent days renovating the area around a pond in Ruskin Park, Lambeth. Police arrived and said demonstrators had a equal right to the park. (Independent 6.6.95)

A.F. Ensor, an abattoir in Gloucestershire, was firebombed by animal rights activists. Police found more than 20 incendiary devices, some of which had failed to go off. One lorry tractor was destroyed, four other lorries were damaged. The total cost was between £30,000 and £40,000. Last month, two milk tanker depots in Macclesfield and Crewe, Cheshire, were attacked causing £2m damage. An animal rights source said it was a classic ALF operation, although not claimed by anyone. (Independent 12.6.95)

The retailer Co-op will tell its customers about the space battery hens live in when they buy battery eggs. Eggs will be labeled 'intensively produced' from today, as well as leaflets criticising 'meaningless' labels used by the rivals. (Independent 13.6.95)

Unigate is to axe 1,500 jobs, 1/5 of its dairy workforce, after a steep decline in doorstep deliveries. This is in addition to the 324 job losses earlier this year. Northern Foods, the country's largest dairy, has already announced 2,200 job losses. Doorstep deliveries have declined by 17% each year, and the drop is accelerating. The two largest dairy companies have announced 5,250 job cuts in the past year. (Times 13.6.95)

Pisces, formally the Campaign for the Abolition of Angling, was set up in 1981. It now claims 350 members and a mailing list of 2,000. This week it is holding its annual anti-angling week, the start of the coarse fishing season. "Fish are much like other animals, whether they are hot or cold blooded, they can feel pain....so is it right to abuse them for pleasure?" This is based on the Medway report of 1980, which concluded that fish feel pain, along with fear and a liability to suffer. Fishing sabotage includes pre-feeding fish, disruption of the water, noise pollution and frogmen. The BFSS says saboteurs are violent, but Pisces disagrees. Pisces claims anglers discard tackle, rubbish and lead, which harms wildlife, whereas John Parkman, a consultant for the BFSS says this is nonsense. Pisces also organises clean-ups at popular angling sites. (Guardian 19.6.95)

The average angler spends £1,000 a year on trips and tackle, plus a rod licence at £45. 90% of anglers are men. Called the last socially acceptable form of hunting, Pisces' Marianne MacDonald argues that fish feel pain and fishing, as a bloodsport, is totally unnecessary. (Independent 19.6.95)

Hundreds of jobs were under threat today with the news that drugs giant Glaxo Wellcome is to close a research laboratory in Beckenham, Kent, where about 1,550 staff are employed. (The News 20.6.95)

Firemen rescued a man and saved his hamster by giving it oxygen and a heart massage. (Times 20.6.95)

Demolition of a 130 foot industrial chimney has been held up by a family of nesting kestrels. The RSPB advised contractors that they risked a fine of £1,000 if they continued. (Times 26.6.95)

Members of Sea-Sabs, a new environmental group, chained themselves to the Norwegian Embassy in London after Norway extended its whaling season because whalers hadn't caught their quotas of whales. Sea-Sabs believe it was because there are so few whales. (Guardian 1.7.95)

Four men were injured, two seriously, on the first day of bull running in Spain. (Guardian 8.7.95)

Police are investigating a spate of shop windows being smashed in Gosport. A fish and chip shop, Littlewoods, Spina Bifida and Hydrocephalus charity shop were included. (The News 8.7.95)

Arsonists are believed to have started a blaze which caused between 1/2 and 3/4 million pounds' worth of damage to Heritage Animal Feeds near Chichester. More than 30 fire-fighters and six pumping appliances dealt with the fire. Crews found a number of goods vehicles on fire. Seven goods vehicles and a ship's container used for storage were destroyed. (West Sussex Gazette 13.7.95)

Phoenix Aviation, the company exporting live calves from Coventry, has gone bust. Christopher Barratt-Jolly, its chief, said it was due to lack of payment from creditors. He added that the situation with animal flights had become impossible, but added that, "this is not a victory for the protesters!" Last December, four air crew were killed in a plane crash, and in February, Jill Phipps died under the wheels of a truck. (Guardian 15.7.95)

Nine young red kites were released in the Midlands yesterday, in the hope that the carrion-feeding birds will establish a second breeding population in England. Since 1989, almost 200 young red kites have been released in Southern England and Northern Scotland in a joint programme between the RSPB and Government wildlife conservation organisations. The new arrivals have begun breeding in both countries. (Independent 25.7.95)

Researchers from the University of Kentucky have found that replacing meat in the diet with soya protein can lower cholesterol levels by upto 24%. Some researchers believe that the plant oestrogens contained in soya may be responsible. (Independent 30.8.95)

About 50 acres of farmland on the Essex coast is to be flooded in an experiment aimed at reducing the cost of sea defences, and creating wildlife habitats. (Times 4.8.95)

Employees of a Wellington telephone company can claim paid sick leave to tend ailing pets when no-one else is at home, because a dog was "as much of a dependant as a sick child", the firm said. (Times 6.9.95)

Two Chinese herbalists were fined a total of £5,000 yesterday for selling remedies containing parts of endangered animals, in what is thought to be the first such prosecution in the world. (Times 7.9.95)

Brigitte Bardot, the film star and animal rights campaigner, has persuaded the Government of Lebanon, one of the trigger-happiest countries in the Arab world, to impose a ban on hunting just before the season was to have begun tomorrow week. (Times 7.9.95)

A man who kept the severed head of a badger in his freezer was jailed by York magistrates for 3 months. James Pipes, 21, of York, pleaded guilty to possessing part of a dead badger. (Times 8.9.95)

Parliamentary figures on licensed slaughterhouses show a fall from 861 in 1984 to 424 in 1994, more than a 50% fall. (Independence issue No 22)

RSPCA inspectors and police using a surveillance helicopter arrested 17 people after raiding a cock fight on a travellers' site in South East London. Fighting equipment, including betting boards, was seized. (Independent)

Britain's 640th species of spider, an 8 millimetre black spider, has been discovered on a Cheshire bog, Liverpool Museum reports. (Independent).

ARKANGEL MAGAZINE
BCM 9240
LONDON WC1N 3XX

ARK ANGEL

NO. 15

FOR ANIMAL LIBERATION 180

The Arkangel Editorial

With this issue of Arkangel Magazine we would like to be able to tell you that Animal Liberation is just around the corner. However, the road to victory is very long and the corner is a long way off. But, the Movement is as strong in commitment as it is diverse in character and, for over 20 years, the Animal Liberation Movement has been dismantling the machinery of animal abuse, and countless animals have been rescued from the clutches of the men and women of shame. 20 years ago, in 1976, the Animal Liberation Front was formed and after millions of pounds worth of damage has been caused to the establishments that perpetrate the torture and murder of innocent animals, the ALF remain both alive and kicking! As the Animal Liberation Movement continues to grow in both strength and numbers, so too must our determination and resolve with which to combat the resilience of those who continue to torture and slaughter animals.

Our battle is made all the more difficult when the perversely sadistic and morally corrupt people who wield the captive-bolts, restraining devices, scalpels and other equipment, stand behind the law for their protection. Those who defy these laws are labelled 'terrorists' and enemies of the state and its people, yet those responsible for spreading the cancer of greed, deception and death are, in turn, given financial rewards and social prestige. Regarding BSE, this Government's proposal and probable execution of millions of cattle is reminiscent of the Final Solution programme instituted by the Nazi Party. However, this is no Second World War; this is a war against all non-human species, carried out by humans for centuries, a programme of annihilation that sees no end and, it would seem, seeks no end. This mass extermination of cattle is just another grisly chapter of murder; an overflowing bloodbath with animals the chosen victims.

The cover of this issue depicts the process by which we can bring about the collapse of the structure on which animal abuse is built. Thousands of dedicated people chipping away, some causing small cracks, others creating great crevasses, but all working in unison which will lead, eventually, to our goal - Animal Liberation!

Wild Mammals Bill

At Last! Hedgehogs and other wild mammals get legal protection. Anyone caught using a hedgehog as a football, throwing one onto a bonfire, beating one or using any other form of cruelty to a wild mammal can soon be punished by law!

The Wild Mammals Protection Bill is at long last to be entered onto the statute books and the British Hedgehog Preservation Society is celebrating the end of a long and often disappointing campaign. Since the Society's inception in 1982 it has supported various attempts to have the hedgehog protected, all to no avail. Then the Wild Mammals Protection Bill was introduced to the House of Commons THREE TIMES. The first time, in 1992, it didn't even reach the Lords. The second time, in 1995, the Lords sent it back to the Commons, where it ran out of time. But third time lucky in 1996! "Our members, and anyone else interested in wildlife, will be delighted", said a spokesperson for the Shropshire based charity. "Wild mammals will soon get legal protection granted to domestic animals in the last century".

*The British Hedgehog Preservation Society,
Knowbury House, Knowbury, Shropshire SY8 3LQ (01584 890287).*

Local Group Reports

Animal Rights (Warrington) c/o 3 Winmarleigh Street, Warrington, Cheshire WA1 1NB

This is a new animal rights group based in the Warrington area. Please contact them for details of campaigns, events and membership.

Bristol Animal Rights Network (BARN) Box 53, Greenleaf Bookshop, 82 Colston Street, Bristol BS1 5BB (0117 951 2942)

BARN is a new animal rights group which campaigns against all areas of animal abuse including factory farming, bloodsports, the pet trade, live exports and vivisection. They hold fortnightly meetings in central Bristol and organise regular actions and events.

East Kent Animal Welfare Tremont, Claremont Road, Kingsdown, Deal, Kent CT14 8BU (01304 363071)

EKA have been active since 1993, supporting national animal rights and welfare groups in the UK and abroad. Very much involved in the live export protest, the group are arranging a large march and rally to take place on 4th May in Dover, which they hope will be supported by showbusiness personalities and the local clergy. The group raises funds for hunt sabs, hold anti-circus demos, run stalls and public meetings, and run a small-scale animal sanctuary / rescue service. Petsearch, which registers and, hopefully, re-unites lost and found animals is run from the above address.

The Friends of Animals Under Abuse (FAUNA) PO Box 156, Cardiff, South Wales CF5 5YD (01222 569914)

FAUNA's current campaigns include lobbying local councils about pigeon culls, ostrich farming, and pet shop licences. However, their main campaign at the moment is targeted against chicken meat production. The group have produced a new full-colour leaflet and a narrated video showing secretly filmed footage of the dreadful conditions in which broiler chickens live their short seven-week lives.

FAUNA also have undercover video footage of Sun Valley's turkey farm which was shown on Channel 4's Turkey Business programme. They held a demonstration in December outside the Sun Valley poultry slaughterhouse - the largest in Wales. In October, the Welsh Campaign Against Live Exports held a funeral march in memory of the 51 pigs who died from heat exhaustion on an Irish ferry at Pembroke Dock. Please contact FAUNA for details of their campaigns and videos.

London Animal Action 5 Caledonian Road, London N1 9DX (0171 837 7557)

The main campaign of this busy group continues to be the battle to close down all the fur shops in London. They have concentrated on the Philip Hockley fur shop in Mayfair and have had to contend with hired thugs, hidden microphones outside the shop, and heavy policing. However, on one memorable occasion the owner, Michael Hockley, was arrested when he went mad and attacked protesters in full view of the police!

Another recent campaign has been to discourage Sir Andrew Lloyd Webber from starting an ostrich farm on his estate in Hampshire. LAA members have demonstrated outside several London theatres showing his productions and have received a good response from both the press and the public.

Turner Prizewinning 'artist' Damien Hirst was targeted at the Tate Gallery where his 'Mother and Child, Divided' exhibit featuring a bisected cow and calf was on display. Group members have also regularly supported the demonstrations at Dover as well as most local activities. These include Leyden Street chicken slaughterhouse demos, the McLibel campaign, Shark Protection League events, the anti-angling campaign on Clapham Common, and local hunt-sab groups.

LAA hold 'monthly meetings and produce a monthly newsletter which gives news and co-ordinates events between London's many animal rights and welfare groups.

Newcastle Animal Rights Coalition (NARC)

PO Box 1JY, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, NE99 1JY
(0191 212 0720)

NARC campaigns against all forms of animal exploitation. They have no membership, no formal meetings and encourage change largely through public education and non-violent direct action. Information stalls continue to be held three times a week. Numerous injured and abandoned creatures come to them for convalescence and/or re-homing.

They have sabbed their local hunts twice a week, suffered a few arrests and some violence, but have been reasonably effective. Activists have been down at Dover docks carrying out some successful actions, including the erecting of a scaffold tripod at Capel lairage and blocking transporters for two hours. At Albert Hall live export farm they blockaded the drive for several hours using their car with the drivers neck attached to the steering wheel.

In addition, they have 'sat trees' at the Newbury by-pass. There are a core of the group who refuse, on principle, to pay fines incurred as a result of A/R activities. During the past few months they have served several short prison sentences as a result. Although few in number, they are a very active group and welcome newcomers.

Also, a request for female rat companions to share the spacious, stimulating living accommodation of a neutered male rat. Please contact Diane on 0191 212 0720.

Pigeon Recovery (0181 644 7349)

Our friends at Pigeon Recovery believe that all pigeons and their young have a right to live unmolested, should receive legal protection, and should be freed from the inappropriate label of 'vermin' which is applied to them by hypocritical people whose bigotry blinds them to beauty. Pigeon Recovery runs a recovery service in the London Area but can provide advice on request.

Portsmouth Animal Rights Group & Gosport and Farnham Animal Rights (sorry, no address!)

A busy year for these two groups both of whom have been active in live exports campaign, supporting the protests at Shoreham and Dover. Their campaigns against Wickham Laboratories and Garetmar Kennels (formerly Cottage Patch) continue. They have supported local hunt-sabs against the Chiddingfold and Hursley hunts, and, together with other groups, are trying to persuade Hampshire County Council to introduce an animals charter - a scheme which East Hampshire and Sussex CC have adopted.

South London Animal Action PO Box 594, London SW9 6YA

SLAA members have maintained a busy schedule of action and support of a wide range of animal rights campaigns. They have joined forces with other local groups who make regular trips to support the live export campaign in Dover and also to Coventry and Gloucestershire! Group members have supported Brixton Hunt Sabs, the McLibel Support Campaign, the Shark Protection League, anti-ostrich farming demos, and other local campaigns.

SLAA's long-running battle with anglers on Clapham Common came to an unsatisfactory conclusion towards the end of last year when Lambeth Labour councillors did a U-turn (after Tony Blair came out in support of angling) and voted to relax the ban on fishing which they'd earlier imposed. Despite a plan for a self-regulatory committee, anglers, sadly, cannot be relied upon to show any regard for the local wildlife, so SLAA and Clapham Wildlife Watch will continue to monitor the situation.

SLAA's catering company, Green Marmoset, made substantial profits last year and made generous donations to fourteen animal rights groups and sanctuaries. Volunteers to help out on stalls are always welcome. SLAA holds monthly meetings and produce a regular newsletter. Please contact them for further details.

Surrey Badger Protection Society PO Box 911, Warlingham, Surrey CR6 9AF (01883 344662)

This registered charity is affiliated to the National Federation of Badger Groups. The SBPS was formed to watch over the local badger population and to respond to any activities which may be detrimental to the animals' welfare. They give free advice and practical assistance in all problems involving badgers. Family membership is £5 with reductions for single adults, senior citizens and under-18s.

Sussex Horse Rescue Trust Hempstead Farm, Uckfield, East Sussex TN22 3DL (01825 762010)

A registered charity, Sussex HRT are a busy centre, saving horses and ponies from a variety of place - including one horse, Toby, who was saved from animal research. The Trust holds gala days and have now obtained a charity shop at 79 High Street, Uckfield. This valuable centre is in constant need of funds, members and support. Contact them at the above address for details of how you can help.

Tayside Animal Rights Campaign PO Box 6909, Dundee DD1 9ZF

This is a new local group in the Tayside area. Please contact them for membership and campaign details.

National Groups

Animal Concern

62, Old Dumbarton Road, Glasgow G3 8RE
(0141 3346014)

Animal Concern incorporates the Scottish Anti-vivisection Society. They publish a quarterly newsletter and run various campaigns including a farm animal campaign to ban all factory farming by the year 2000. Amongst their current actions are: a campaign for a boycott of Scottish wild and farmed fish. This also deals with the major issue of seal culling, which sees as many as 5000 seals killed legally annually. Salmon farmers, netsmen and anglers want a legal cull of 50,000 seals! A campaign to ban the giving of animals and goldfish as prizes; a campaign to ban ostrich farming and the trade in ostrich products; and, an initiative recommending that Brent Spar and other decommissioned oil installations be decontaminated and sunk in the North Sea to create a huge artificial reef where trawlers would be excluded. Animal Concern starts its 120th year of campaigning in 1996 and needs more support than ever. Contact the above address for more details.

Animal Liberation Front Supporters Group (SG)

BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX

Subscription to their quarterly newsletter is £24 a year. It provides information about current arrests and imprisonment of alleged animal rights activists. The SG raises funds, chiefly to help pay fines and help towards the travelling expenses of visiting relatives. Funds also go towards paying for books, cruelty-free toiletries, etc. A range of merchandise is available with a discount to any SG member.

Animal Liberation Front (Press Office)

BM 4400, London WC1N 3XX

The Press Office plays a vital role in the animal rights movement. It remains paramount as a means of providing TV, radio and newspaper coverage about why ALF actions take place. Speakers are available for meetings, etc. Donations are always welcome to help run the office of a much needed and valuable animal rights service.

Animal Aid

The Old Chapel, Bradford Street, Tonbridge, Kent
TN9 1AW (01732 365 4546)

For Animal Aid, 1995 was definitely the year of the live export campaign and their investigation into the sheep industry, which produced the excellent 'Silence of the Lambs' video and report. It is their intention to capitalise on the raised public and media consciousness and take the animal rights movement forward. Amongst Animal Aid's planned campaigns for 1996 are a 'Veggie Pledge Month' which took place in March, and the Warfare campaign: "Just as the exports issue has proved pivotal in encouraging an understanding of the whole farm animal production business, so the Warfare campaign can spur an understanding of the irrational cruelties inherent in all aspects of laboratory animal experiments..." The aim is to bring enough political pressure to bring an end to the use of animals in thousands of grotesque warfare experiments every year. Contact them for further details of all their campaigns and events. Animal Aid produces a journal for action called Outrage. Annual subscription is £10 waged, £6 unwaged and £5 youth.

Animal Aid and Advice

(0181 889 9714)

This group's main objective is to encourage responsible pet care. They reinforce the fact that neutering and spaying is essential to prevent unwanted litters. AAA also re-home abandoned and unwanted pets and run a fostering service.

Animal Birth Control

2 Festings Buildings, Highland Road, Southsea
PO4 9BZ (01705 736691)

ABC helps with the costs of helping elderly people to keep their companion animals. Due to an upsurge in animal cruelty, ABC now works with Animal Action, which rescues and re-homes unwanted and abandoned animals. They also help with and encourage the spaying and neutering of animals.

Action Against Puppy Farming

PO Box 2, Llandysul, Dyfed SA44 4EB

Dyfed is known for its puppy farming. The animals are bred only for profit, therefore suffering, cruelty and neglect are inevitable. AAPF spreads the message not to buy puppies from pet shops as they are usually bred in appalling puppy farms. Donations are welcome.

Animal Rescue

PO Box 233, Liverpool L69 7LF

Animal Rescue are running several campaigns at the moment. Write for further details.

Anti-Bullfighting Committee

PO Box 175, Liverpool, Merseyside L69 8DX

This group liaises with Spanish A/R groups to persuade holiday makers not to attend bullfights and asks travel companies to publish a statement in their brochures discouraging people from attending bullfights.

Arkangel

BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX

Arkangel aims to provide information and support for the A/R movement, to encourage unity and to provide a forum for the exchange of news and views. Please keep Arkangel up to date with local and national group activities. Subscription to the magazine is currently £8 for 4 issues (£15 outside of the UK).

Animal Rights Coalition (ARC)

PO Box 339, Wolverhampton WV10
(01902 711935)

ARC encourages the coming together of all groups. A newsletter is provided, free with an SAE, with a diary of events and current campaigns. ARC also sends out lists detailing addresses of current animal abuse establishments supplied by Arkangel Information. They urge all animal rights groups to contact them.

British Anti-Vivisection Association (BAVA)

PO Box 82, Kingswood, Bristol BS15 1YF

BAVA has useful information on medical fraud. The aims of the campaign are to abolish all animal experimentation and to increase public awareness of the hazardous nature of most medication. Posters, booklets and petitions are available. Subscription to the group is £6 a year.

Beauty Without Cruelty Charity

57 King Henry's Walk, London N1 4NJ
(0171 254 2929)

The BWCC campaigns to end the torture and slaughter of all animals in the name of fashion and beauty. Current campaigns include FUR FREE 2000 to ban fur farming in the UK before the end of the decade, and a petition to protest against the ISO/TC 191 Humane Animal Traps Standard.

Breach (Anti-Whaling/Marine Protection)

3 St. John's Street, Goole, East Yorkshire
Tel/Fax 01405 769375

Breach are a group of grass roots campaigners, who have worked for many years with other conservation & marine protection organisations. They are totally committed to end all commercial and scientific whaling before the year 2000 and will confront the whaling nations through campaign pressure, economic boycotts, awareness education and non-violent direct action at sea and on land. The Breach ship is currently undergoing a major refit and more funds are desperately needed to complete the work. Campaign Crew membership costs £10 and comes with a pack containing campaigning briefings, background briefings, up-to-date information, a regular newsletter, and the knowledge that your money will be used solely to put the ship and equipment on the high seas.

Campaign Against Leather & Fur (CALF)

BM 8889, London WC1N 3XX

Leaflets are available on the leather, fur, wool and silk trades. Please send an SAE for further information.

Cetacea Defence

PO Box 11, SEDO Office, Manchester M18 8GU

Principally involved in protecting the world's whales and dolphins. People are needed to act as on-the-spot investigators. Contact the above address.

Cosmetics Industry Coalition for Animal Welfare

39 Manor Road, Rusthall, Tunbridge Wells, Kent
TN4 8UD (01892 517000)

This organisation has launched a new initiative to put an end to the confusion about animal testing of ingredients and finished products for cosmetics, toiletries and perfumes. The coalition has been formed by 4 companies which embrace the ethic known as the 1976/78 Fixed Cut-Off Date criterion. They are seeking to get more companies to join and to bring pressure on retailers to stock the 1976/78 product.

Cruelty-Free Companions

Box CFCM, The Rainbow Centre, 180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HU

This is a non-profit making national setup. It aims to link together people who believe in a cruelty-free lifestyle.

Campaign Against McDonalds

PO Box 1008, Glasgow G42 8AA

This group had a busy but successful inaugural year. The 11th annual worldwide Day of Action Against McDonalds, on 16th October 1995, saw group members out in force on the streets of Glasgow. They were astonished to discover that Scotland's national instrument, the bagpipe, as played by a group member, could not be used during a demo - busking, yes - protests, no! They have promised to return, next time with a band!!! They are a new group in need of support.

The Captive Animals Protection Society

171 Cherry Tree Road, Blackpool, Lancs.

FY4 4PQ. Tel/Fax 01253 765072

CAPS continues the important work of requesting local authorities not to allow circuses with animals onto Council-owned sites. They spend much of their time making sure that interested Councillors have up-to-date, factual information to present to their committees. Their success in this area can be judged from the number of local authorities (approx. 200) which have regulated or banned animal circuses from their land. CAPS also continues to support and give encouragement to established and newly formed groups overseas, who work under difficult circumstances and often face strong opposition.

Care for the Wild

1 Ashfolds, Horsham Road, Ruspur, West Sussex

RH12 4QX (01293 871596)

This group continues its important work in the UK and around the world. Its recent campaigns include a campaign to introduce a warning sign for motorists at known badger crossing points. Unbelievably, up to 50,000 badgers are killed on the roads every year, countless more are injured and crawl away to suffer and perhaps die later. If you think you can help in your local area, please contact CFTW.

Another recent campaign is to assist the park wardens of the Satara National Park in India to combat the dreadful problem of poachers murdering the Indian tiger for human greed and the disgusting trade in tiger parts for Chinese medicines.

Dartmoor Badgers Protection League

Riverside Cottage, Poundsgate, Newton Abbot, Devon TQ13 7NV (01364 631231)

DBPL was formed to prevent the unjustified slaughter of badgers in the Devon and Cornwall area. A new group called the Coalition for Badgers, has been formed to which DBPL has become affiliated. They have designated 1996 'National Badger Year' and will be demanding the end to legal slaughter of badgers by the Ministry of Agriculture; that badger-digging and lamping be made an arrestable offence (as in Scotland); and tougher laws be introduced to protect badgers from developers. The coalition will be asking people to lobby their MPs to help achieve their objectives and will ask all national and local groups to donate some time to the campaign.

Disabled Against Animal Research and Exploitation (DAARE)

PO Box 8, Daventry, Northants. NN11 4RQ

A national organisation for people who are disabled or have a chronic disease. DAARE is opposed to animals being used in drug experiments. People who are not disabled are welcome to join.

Doctors and Lawyers for Responsible Medicine (formerly DBAAE)

PO Box 302, London N8 9HD

DLRM was founded in 1996 and is a group of doctors, scientists and pharmacists who reject all animal experiments on scientific and ethical grounds. Membership costs £20 to the general public.

Environmental Investigation Agency

2 Pear Tree Court, London EC1R 0DS

(0171 490 7040)

EIA has campaigned for most endangered species since its formation in 1984.

The Farm Animal Appeal

46 Kensington Place, Brighton, Sussex BN1 4EJ
(01273 790037)

The Farm Animal Appeal was established by a group of protesters from Shoreham opposed to the export of animals to Europe. The group have set up a centre, Brook Farm, to provide a natural environment for all rescued animals saved from slaughter. A non-profit making organisation, FAA's initial funding was provided by sales of the book 'The Siege of Shoreham'. The majority of their income is provided through subscriptions, donations and fund-raising events. Fact sheets and educational packs are available and a recently introduced adoption scheme allows people to sponsor an individual animal.

The Fox Project

The Old Chapel, Bradford Street, Tonbridge
TN9 1AW

This organisation has saved many foxes' lives by humanely trapping and moving them from potential threat. They take into care orphaned foxes and set them free when they are fit and well. A newsletter and merchandise are available.

The Fellowship of Life

43 Braichmelyn, Bethesda, Bangor, Gwynedd,
North Wales LL57 3RD

A Christian-based animal rights group who support all aspects of the movement. They produce a regular newsletter giving information about current news within the movement

Friends of the Wolf

UK contact 01373 473711

Founded in 1984 by Paul Watson of the Sea Shepherd Conservation Society. FOW is a conservation group devoted exclusively to the protection of Wolves and Wolf habitats. They are a biocentric group representing the Wolf for its own inherent value as a wild species. FOW, the world's only front line Wolf defence group, fights the Wolf's three main threats: government wolf programmes, wolf bounties, and the elimination of wolf habitats. FOW, together with Earth First and other local animal rights groups, recently demonstrated outside Canada House in London against Canada's yearly winter wolf cull in the Yukon Territory which has seen its wolf population drop from an estimated 200 down to about 38. For details of further planned actions and events, please contact the above number.

Greek Animal Rescue

69 Great North Way, Hendon, London NW4 1PT
(0181 203 1956)

This registered charity group rescues stray, injured and abandoned animals in Greece, where strays are often thought of as vermin - in some cases being disposed of by being thrown live over cliffs. A 30 minute video is available, featuring some of Greece's atrocities towards its animals and shows the shelters and sanctuaries which are provided for abused and neglected animals. A current campaign is to raise enough funds to pay for the treatment and quarantine expenses of Partick, a young dog found in a pitiful state having been found shot, malnourished and abandoned with wounds to both legs and stomach. Any donations would be gratefully appreciated.

Homeless Owners with Pets

1a Courtland Gardens, Bassett, Southampton SO2 3PP

HOPE campaigns for the rights of responsible people with pets, as often no pets are allowed in rented housing. They help to ensure the welfare of pets (usually dogs) on the streets.

Hunt Saboteurs Association (HSA)

PO Box 1, Carlton, Nottingham NG4 2JY
(01602 590357)

The HSA gives information and advice on how to form a fully operational hunt-sab group. They can provide speakers for talks and give legal advice. Merchandise is available. Write for further information.

Justice & Rights Associates

PO Box 83, Bracknell, Berkshire RG12 7QH
(01344 411468)

J & R Associates are a new group dedicated to ending the import and export trade in ostriches, emus and rheas. This evil trade is rapidly developing throughout Europe, with the ostrich in particular being hailed as the "new healthy meat" to eat. Ostrich farms have become the trendy market to invest in. Write to the above address for further information.

Jewish Vegetarian Society

855 Finchley Road, London NW11

The JVS is an international movement, and membership is open to everyone. Annual membership fee is £10; family membership is £12.00. They produce a very informative magazine for subscribers.

Libearty

WSPA, 2 Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ
(0171 793 0540)

Libearty is a campaign run by the World Society for the Protection of Animals to come to the aid of bears being exploited all over the world. Libearty has set up projects to help hundreds of bears and to physically rescue many from lives of cruelty and neglect. An annual donation of £12.50 ensures 3 newsletters a year plus an introductory campaign pack.

McLibel Support Campaign

c/o London Greenpeace, 5 Caledonian Road,
London N1 (0171 713 1269)

See report elsewhere in the magazine!

National Anti-Vivisection Society

Ravenside, 261 Goldhawk Road, London W12 9PE
(0181 846 9777)

NAVS produce a magazine 'The Campaigner' which is issued to members. For details of their campaigns write to the above address.

NOW Against Live Exports

St. Joseph's, Souldern, Bicester, Oxon. OX6 9LA
NOW are continuing with the campaign against live exports. Leading from the front, NOW have supported demonstrations wherever animals have been shipped from. They encourage people to write to their MPs and the local press regarding the live export issue. NOW produces a News/Action letter giving campaign news from around the country.

Nurses' Anti-Vivisection Movement

PO Box 32, Matlock, Derby DE4 3JY

Founded in 1983, the NAVM seeks to bring together those members of the nursing profession who are committed to the abolition of experiments on live animals conducted during medical research, including the testing of drugs and in the field of behavioural sciences. Amongst their stated aims are the intention to publicly denounce vivisection; ensure the subject is discussed via the official nursing colleges and boards; to ensure the subject is publicised in journals and the media; to publicly debate the issues involved and to co-operate with other anti-vivisection organisations. Membership costs £5.

People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA)

PO Box 3169, London NW1 2JF (0171 388 4922)

PETA campaigns against all forms of animal abuse and has a high media profile. They produce a very informative magazine 'Animal Times' which is available free of charge (please send an SAE).

Pet Stealing Alert

PO Box 94, Cheltenham, Glos.

Cats and dogs are going missing nationwide. Please contact the above address if you are suspicious of an advert offering good homes, or if an animal has disappeared in unusual circumstances.

Pisces

PO Box 90, Bristol BS99 1ND (01179 441175)

Pisces have recently launched a new campaign called 'Travel Sickness', focusing on the importation of fish for release into our lakes and rivers for the bloodsport of angling. These imported fish are a threat to native populations through disease and competition for food. A four-page report on the problem is available from the address above, detailing the impending ecological and environmental disaster due entirely to the irresponsible and selfish attitude of anglers. Another Pisces campaign is aimed at ending the practise of 'livebaiting'. Livebaiting is a barbaric practise in which anglers impale live fish on treble hooks through the lips, body or even the eyes, to use as bait to catch predatory fish such as perch and pike. The terrified fish is then cast out into the water where it can only struggle in agony on the hooks until it is eaten by another fish or dies from its injuries. The quarterly magazine 'Pisces' publishes news of all aspects of anti-angling and fishing campaigns, the plight of wildlife, and includes local group reports and updates from the Shellfish Network and the Shark Protection League.

Plan 2000

Lynmouth, Devon EX35 6EE

Plan 2000 aims to see all animal experiments banned by the end of the century.

Pagan Animal Rights

c/o Billy Frugal, 10 Broughton Street, Hebden Bridge, West Yorkshire HX7 8JY

This organisation, founded 10 years ago, is open to people who care about animals - whether they are pagan or not. Membership is £3 a year and members receive a newsletter for all the pagan festivals.

Prevent Unwanted Pets

*28 Rushworth Avenue, West Bridgford,
Nottingham NG2 7LF (0115 9696018)*

PUP provides help towards the cost of doctoring pets for people on a low income and thereby prevents the suffering of unwanted animals. They help with spaying and neutering mainly in areas where there is no council help. They also petition local councils to adopt doctoring schemes.

Reptile Protection Trust

*College Gates, 2 Deansway, Worcs. WR1 2JD
(01483 417550)*

RPT is seeking to ban the trade in pet turtles and terrapins. They lobby relevant authorities internationally and engage in public education. To receive a copy of the booklet 'Reptiles: Misunderstood, Mistreated and Mass-Marketed', please send a cheque for £2.50 to the above address.

Shark Protection League

BM LAPL, London WC1N 3XX (0589 173033)

The SPL was primarily set up to expose the horrific cruelty involved in shark angling and to campaign against this 'sport'. The group hold a protest at the International Shark Angling Festival in Looe, Cornwall every September. SPL have also held successful demonstrations in London's Chinatown against the trade in shark's fins for soups and supposed medical needs. Playhouse Videos have, since SPL complained about it, withdrawn their shark-fishing videos from stock and have confirmed that they will no longer form part of their future range. Holland & Barrett, the health store chain, have withdrawn all shark cartilage products from their stores as a result of a campaign by the group. SPL publish a high quality newsletter giving campaign details and information concerning the slaughter of marine life and how to help prevent it. They also produce leaflets, fact sheets and petitions available on receipt of an SAE.

The Shellfish Network

54 Allison Street, Digbeth, Birmingham B5 5TH

The group aims to increase public awareness of the cruelties involved in the production of shellfish for food.

Student Campaign for Animal Rights (SCAR)

*c/o PO Box 155, Manchester M60 1FT
(0161 953 4039)*

For further information write to the above address.

South West Animal Rights Coalition (SWARC)

PO Box 1760, Yeovil, Somerset BA21 5YD

SWARC has been set up to try to keep the animal and environmental groups in the South West informed on current campaigns and events and to provide a format for individuals or groups to express their views. The group has recently (Nov 95) published their first magazine and would welcome contributions for future issues.

Tail Ends

PO Box 1550, London SW4 6HP

This is a small vegan animal rescue network which needs homes for abused and abandoned animals, mainly dogs and cats. All of the money, which is desperately needed, goes towards food, vets' bills, neutering and spaying. They have a selection of merchandise available.

Teachers for Animal Rights

c/o 29 Lynwood Road, London SW17 6HP

Please write for an information pack. A donation to cover costs is essential.

Uncaged

*14 Ridgeway Road, Sheffield S12 2SS
Tel/Fax 0114 2530020*

Uncaged works towards raising awareness of the horrors of vivisection, drawing attention to Proctor & Gamble amongst other companies.

Vegans International

c/o 11 Guinea Street, Bristol BS1 6SX

This very important group unites those who want to make the world a compassionate place! They produce an excellent magazine. Membership is a well spent £7 a year!

The Vegetarian Society

Parkdale, Dunham Road, Altrincham, Cheshire WA14 4QG

An important organisation for those taking the first step towards veganism! They produce an informative magazine and also Greenscene, a magazine for younger readers.

Veggies

180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HU

An animal rights calendar is produced on a regular basis. Their catering facilities travel up and down the country proving very tasty vegan food. Veggies produce a variety of posters, available on request.

Vegan (A/R) Prisoners Support Group

PO Box 194, Enfield, Middx. EN1 3HH

(24 hour arrest/help line 0181 292 8325)

VSPG is run entirely by vegan volunteers dedicated to the rights of all animals and like-minded humans. It works within the law to bring about better conditions for vegan animal rights prisoners, and help in any day-to-day problems they may encounter while in prison, offering moral support and practical assistance if needed. They are always in need of new volunteers and any practical and financial assistance to help keep this busy outfit running.

VIVA!

PO Box 212, Crewe, Cheshire CW1 4SD

(01270 522500)

VIVA! have been very active since they were formed in October 1994. Their successful campaigns include Convert-a-Parent which turned many families vegetarian and last year's CRATE campaign (Campaign to Resist Animal Transport to Europe). VIVA!'s priority for the next 12 months will be to counter the increasingly unprincipled marketing ploys of the meat industry. For information about VIVA! write to the above address.

Welsh Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals

*PO Box 6, Llandysul, Dyfed, Wales SA44 5YR
(01559 371354)*

This group is currently running a campaign to get legislation passed through parliament to outlaw puppy farms. Tony Banks MP has expressed an interest in helping this campaign.

World Society for the Protection of Animals (WSPA)

2 Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ (0171 793 0540)

WSPA is involved in many issues concerning the plight of animals across the world. The group's Escape campaign is helping to fund chimp and gorilla sanctuaries in Cameroun and Congo. Last summer saw the launch of WSPA's Holiday Horrors campaign. This is a package designed to provide information to people, appalled by the animal suffering they see when abroad, to help them to know what they can do to help.

Young Indian Vegetarians

41 Lakeside Avenue, Ilford, Essex IG4 5PS

(0181 550 3725)

Please write for details of future events and information about the group.

Cafe Pushkar

Situated in Market Row (16c) off Coldharbour Lane, Brixton, London and only a few minutes walk from Brixton tube station is the Cafe Pushkar.

The food, which is mainly vegan, is excellent and a meal with a drink comes to less than £5.00. All the food is prepared fresh on the premises, with an awareness of allergies. Sugar, yeast and gluten-free diets are catered for.

All cakes are vegan and are made with ground organic hemp seeds. Cafe Pushkar has a warm, friendly atmosphere. Opening times are 9am to 5pm Mon., Tues., Thurs., Fri., & Sat. and there is a 10% discount for Vegan Society members.

SANCTUARIES

Freshfields Animal Rescue Centre

*East Lodge Farm, East Lane, Ince Blundell,
Liverpool L29 3EA*

(0151 931 1604 or 0421 535237 mobile)

The shelter costs £1,500 a week to run and the staff would welcome any help in fund-raising. They urgently need voluntary live-in workers for short or long term help. They would also be most grateful for offers to home rescued animals but run a strict vetting service.

Bolenowe Animal Sanctuary

*Troone, Praze, Camborne, Cornwall
TR14 9HR*

This sanctuary requires funds very badly as it is a home to many kinds of animals in need.

Hopefield Animal Sanctuary

*Sawyers Hall Lane, Brentwood, Essex
CM15 9BY (01277 201110)*

The sanctuary provides homes for a wide variety and a large number of animals. The workers would be most grateful of any DIY help and if you can - please contact them. They've also been given the use of a shop by the local council and would welcome items to sell in it. An adoption scheme and merchandise are available, please contact above address for various fund-raising events.

Animal Samaritans

*c/o Malcolm Murkin, 14 Grasdene Road,
Plumstead, London SE18 (0181 854 9662)*

Animal Samaritans is a charity which fights for the right of all creatures to enjoy health and happiness. It is run entirely by volunteers and raises funds to help local animals in distress. Many unwanted or feral cats are fed by members; injured birds are treated and released back into the wild; and homes are found for hundreds of unwanted animals including dogs, cats, rabbits and gerbils. If you want to know more about Animal Samaritans they have speakers available for meetings, organisations and clubs.

Boswiddle Barn Animal Sanctuary

Boswiddle Barn, Boswiddle, Near Ladock, Truro, Cornwall TR24 4NU (0872 510226)

This sanctuary desperately needs funds to support the 70-or-so cats, dogs, horses, turkeys and ducks who live there. You can sponsor a Shire Horse, or you can become a Friend of the Sanctuary for £4.

Hillside Animal Sanctuary

*Hillside, Hall Lane, Frettenham, Norfolk
NR12 7LT (01603 736200)*

Hillside campaigns to raise public awareness of the plight of farm animals, particularly those abused in factory farming. Since 1995 they have taken into care over 100 animals including cows, veal calves, sheep, pigs, turkeys, geese, battery hens, dogs, goats, horses, ponies and a donkey. Hillside will do everything possible to make sure that they live out their natural life-spans unaffected by human greed or neglect. They are in the process of establishing another branch of Hillside at Downham Market in Norfolk and urgently need funds.

Cedarwood Wildlife Care

*Blissford Hill, Frogham, Fordingbridge,
Hants. SP6 2HX (0425 657402)*

At Cedarwood, injured animals such as foxes, badgers, deer, rabbits, hedgehogs and many birds are nursed back to health and released into the wild. No animal is ever turned away and the centre is run as a non-profit making concern. Financial support is urgently required as are volunteer drivers to pick up casualties from the Southampton / New Forest / Bournemouth areas and take them to Cedarwood.

Widewalls Animal Sanctuary

*Advent, Camelford, Cornwall PL32 9PY
(01840 212300)*

The sanctuary is urgently appealing for money and volunteers to help build winter shelters for 30 horses. They need to ensure the shelter of their current residents and to be able to care for the numerous animals that pass through their hands. Donations of building materials, animal bedding and food would be gratefully received.

(Free advertisement - as are all that we print!)

ethical WARES

cruelty free footwear and clothing

a stunning range of outdoor and leisureware combining the finest synthetic materials with quality craftsmanship and design.
Suitable for vegans, vegetarians and all those who care about the environment

For a FREE full colour catalogue call or fax 01929 480360 or write to:
Ethical Wares, Dept AA, 17 Townsend Road, Gidle Castle, Wareham, Dorset, BH20 5ET

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

CANADA

Canada is to ban the use of lead shot for hunting migratory birds because the spent shot is poisoning wildfowl and predators such as bald eagles that feed on birds that contain lead shot. (Animals' Agenda, Sept/Oct '95)

PETA has persuaded Air Canada to remove foie gras from their menu. (Animal Times, Dec '95)

CHINA

Four men have been executed for killing elephants and exporting their ivory. The Supreme People's Court in Beijing said the authorities wanted to save the Asian elephant from extinction. (Ceefax, 8/11/95)

China has released 6 black bears, born and bred in captivity, into the mountains after giving them survival training. (Ceefax, 19/11/95)

China has launched a £24 million project to save the South China tiger, one of the world's most endangered species. The scheme includes the setting up of more protection areas for the tiger. (Ceefax, 29/2/96)

A nature preserve aimed at protecting endangered species is being planned for Northwestern China's Xinjiang province. About £1 million could be spent on the project, which would protect animals already living in the area. (Ceefax, 8/3/96)

CZECH REPUBLIC

After a long campaign by the animal rights organization Sloboda Zvierat and a 75,000 signature petition, the education minister has banned animal dissection in Czech schools. (Voice, Jan '96)

FRANCE

Wolves are roaming the French Alps again after an absence of 60 years. Some 17 wolves have been seen over 4 areas since 1992 and are thought to have come from Italy. (Ceefax, 8/3/96)

HOLLAND

The testing of cosmetics on animals has been banned in the Netherlands. (Proefdiervrij, Autumn '95)

Dutch MPs have voted to phase out the farming of foxes for fur, so it will be totally ended by 2005. (Wildlife Guardian, Spring '96)

INDIA

People for Animals has succeeded in getting the entry of camels into Bombay suspended. Camels are mostly used for joy rides on the city's Juhu Beach where they suffer terribly from the humid and saline climate. (Active Compassion, Winter '95)

The All India Animal Welfare Association has persuaded the High Court to enforce better standards of treatment for animals brought to Deonar for slaughter. (Active Compassion, Winter '95)

IRELAND

At its AGM in January, the Irish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals finally adopted an anti-bloodsports policy, opposing hunting and coursing, despite the opposition of a small number of its local branches. (Wildlife Guardian, Spring '96)

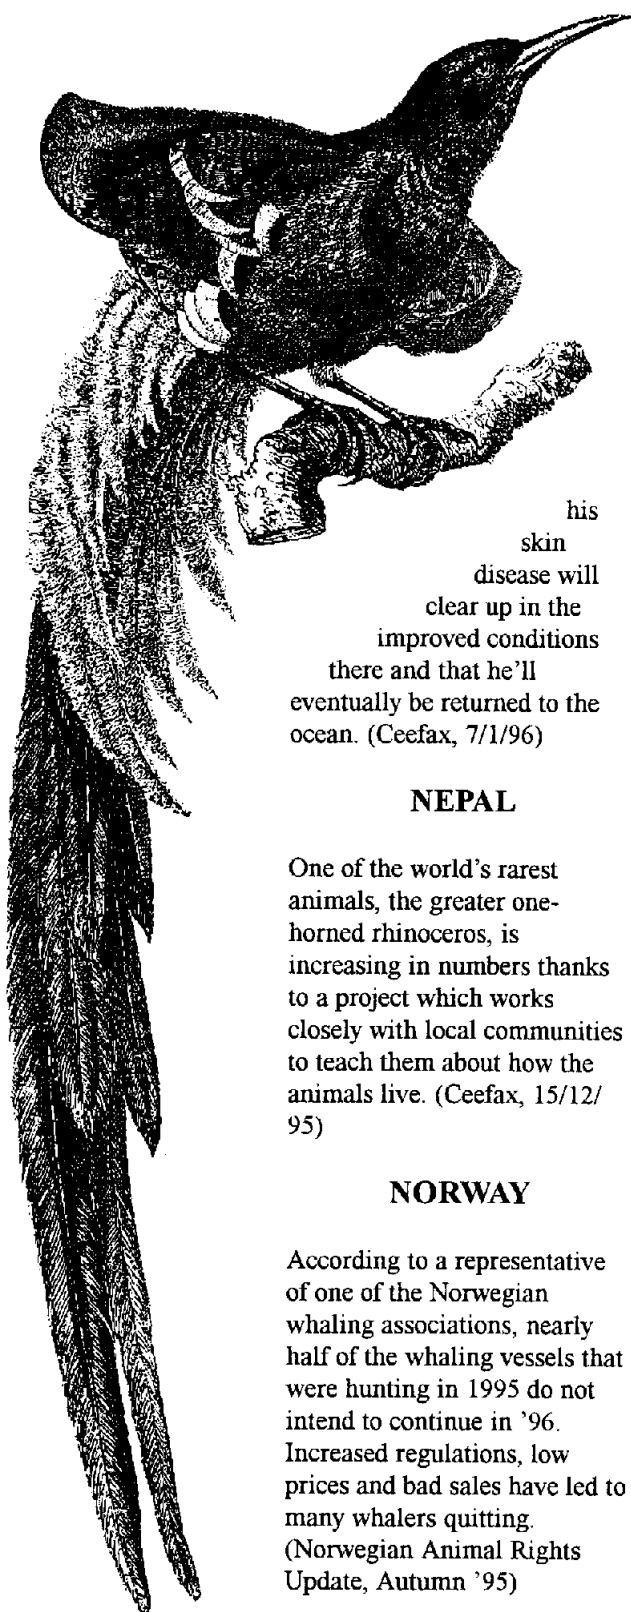

Last year the Irish Coursing Club made a loss of £112,000. (Wildlife Guardian, Spring '96)

ISRAEL

Yosi Sarid, Minister for Environmental Affairs, has announced that animal circuses would not be allowed to enter Israel and no adverts or shows with animals performing unnatural acts would be permitted. (ARC News, March '96)

MEXICO

Keiko the orca whale, star of the film "Free Willy", has been airlifted from an amusement park in Mexico to a specially-built aquarium in Oregon, U.S.A. Experts hope his skin disease will clear up in the improved conditions there and that he'll eventually be returned to the ocean. (Ceefax, 7/1/96)

NEPAL

One of the world's rarest animals, the greater one-horned rhinoceros, is increasing in numbers thanks to a project which works closely with local communities to teach them about how the animals live. (Ceefax, 15/12/95)

NORWAY

According to a representative of one of the Norwegian whaling associations, nearly half of the whaling vessels that were hunting in 1995 do not intend to continue in '96. Increased regulations, low prices and bad sales have led to many whalers quitting. (Norwegian Animal Rights Update, Autumn '95)

PANAMA

When Mexican bullfighting enthusiasts imported and killed bulls in Panama, protests by animal protection groups ensured that heavy fines were imposed, so ending this cruel "business venture". (Wildlife Guardian, Spring '96)

POLAND

After just 2 years, the Polish vegetarian magazine Wegetarianski Swiat (Vegetarian World) is selling 50,000 copies every month and is available in all kiosks for about 50p. The publisher and editor is Agnieszka Oledzka, one of Poland's top journalists, who has just converted from vegetarianism to veganism, and from now on all the recipes in the mag will be vegan. (Vegans International, Autumn '95)

RUSSIA

A vegetarian TV show has been started in Russia and so far 45 ten-minute programmes have been broadcast. Topics covered include health, shopping, the environment, animal abuse, recipes and on-the-spot reports on vegetarian food relief in Chechnya, and the show is watched by up to 40 million people in Russia and beyond. (Vegans International, Autumn '96)

Poaching of Siberian tigers has fallen by 75% in the past 18 months after the introduction of special patrols. (Times, 2/2/96)

SCANDINAVIA

Scandinavian Airlines have taken foie gras from menus after a request from PETA. (Animal Times, Dec '95)

SLOVAKIA

Animal rights group Sloboda Zvierat have managed to persuade the mayor of Bratislava not to allow a McDonalds in the city. (Vegans International, Autumn '95)

SOUTH AFRICA

Agriculture minister Dr. Kraai van Niekirk refused an application for the import of living sheep from Australia on the grounds that it would be cruel and outdated. (Voice, Jan '96)

SOUTH AMERICA

The governments of Brazil, Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Guyana, Peru, Surinam and Venezuela have signed an agreement to work together to try to protect the Amazon region from environmental devastation. (Ceefax, 9/12/95)

SOUTH EAST ASIA

Thailand, Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam are to work together to protect rare animals. Top priority will be protecting wildlife reserves on both sides of the Vietnam-Laos border where two new mammal species have been discovered. (Ceefax, 2/12/95)

SPAIN

Catalonia has become the first Spanish region to pass a law controlling animal experiments. (Proefdiervrij, Winter '95)

SWEDEN

In Vmea, northern Sweden, 25% of students are vegetarian or vegan. (Vegans International, Autumn '95)

TURKEY

A dozen brown bears were set free last August 19 in Karacabeyt, Turkey, after being rehabilitated at Uludag University's veterinary school. The bears, among 27 under treatment at the school, had previously been trained to dance in the streets for paying crowds. Many had had their feet burned as part of their training, and one baby bear was found to be dependent on alcohol. The veterinary school has a specially created sanctuary where bears are taught how to live in the wild. (Animals' Agenda, Nov/Dec '95)

U.S.A.

After 4 years of demonstrations and 2 years of letter writing, animal activists have succeeded in having calf roping and steer wrestling eliminated at the Orange County Fair "Flying U" rodeo event. (Animals' Agenda, Sept/Oct '95)

The New Mexico Tourist Dept. has dropped "rooster pulls" from its vacation guide. During rooster pulls, held in some Native American villages, live chickens are buried up to their necks, then pulled up by the neck and dismembered. (Animal Times, Sept/Oct '95)

A new law in California makes the custom of tripping horses while running at full speed illegal. New Mexico has also passed a similar law against the tripping of horses for entertainment. Horse tripping is common at Mexican-style rodeos. (Humane News, Sept/Oct '95)

Aurora, Colorado has passed a mandatory spay/neuter ordinance that states all dogs and cats over the age of 6 months must be sterilized unless there is a medical exemption or a special permit. (Humane News, Sept/Oct '95)

Georgia has become the 20th U.S. state to pass legislation requiring that all dogs and cats adopted from animal shelters must be spayed or neutered. (Humane News, Sept/Oct '95)

In Massachusetts the penalty for cruelty to animals has been increased to a maximum of 3 years in prison. (Humane News, Sept/Oct '95)

In Bloomington, New Jersey, an ordinance has been passed which details what constitutes proper shelter for dogs and dictates when they and other companion animals should not be left outside. Anyone found in violation is subject to a fine of up to $500 and a maximum prison term of 30 days. (Humane News, Sept/Oct '95)

Since 1972, Food For Life, the charitable food relief programme of the International Society for Krsna Consciousness, has served over 65 million hot vegetarian meals, half of them vegan. 130 centres operate in Eastern Europe, 20 in Australasia and 40+ in the Americas. All workers are volunteers and many have risked their lives to serve over 1 million meals in Sarajevo and Chechnya. In the USA, Food For Life receives $3 million in state and federal grants for sheltering and feeding 45,000 homeless people every year. (Vegans International, Autumn '95)

The Eighth International Vegan Festival, held at San Diego University, California last August, was the biggest ever, with over 500 participants from 24 countries. (Vegans International, Autumn '95)

A frog-jumping competition held annually at the National Cherry Festival in Traverse City, Michigan, has been cancelled permanently following protests from local animal rights campaigners. Frogs competing in the contest in the past had been captured from a river bank, transported to the festival grounds, stuffed into soft drink cups, and frightened into jumping until they were too exhausted to move. (Animals' Agenda, Nov/Dec '95)

Concern about the use of animals in the classroom has prompted several Purdue University specialists to develop computer programs that make diagnosis and drug testing possible on a computer instead of a live animal. The University is also developing a 3-D representation of a dog that will allow students to practise surgical techniques and to learn anatomy and physiology. (Animals' Agenda, Nov/Dec '95)

Last September the owner of 5 Buikema's Ace Hardware stores in Chicago's western suburbs agreed to release the 5 monkeys that had been kept on display in those establishments in small plexiglass cages. One of them had been on exhibit for 24 years. After a 15-month campaign by animal activists and several weeks of negotiation with the Buikema family, the monkeys were taken to the Wildlife Rescue and Rehabilitation sanctuary in San Antonio. (Animals' Agenda, Nov/Dec '95)

Fur World magazine has reported that U.S. fur sales for 1994 were 9% lower than in 1993. (Animals' Agenda, Nov/Dec '95)

On Sept 5th, Miami-based primate dealer Matthew Block was ordered to begin a 13 month prison sentence for his role in an attempt to smuggle 6 baby orang-utans from their native Indonesia to persons in Moscow and Yugoslavia. Three of the orang-utans were returned to Indonesia, but the other 3 died as a result of mistreatment at the hands of Block's hirelings. (Animals' Agenda, Nov/Dec '95)

The U.S. Dept. of Agriculture has permanently revoked the licence of lab animal dealers Julian and Anita Toney and fined them a record $200,000 for violations of the Animal Welfare Act, including obtaining dogs from prohibited sources, falsifying records and keeping dogs in bad conditions. (Humane News, Nov/Dec '95)

The Nevada Supreme Court has ruled that animal abuser Bobby Berosini is not entitled to a $3.2 million libel judgement from PETA after the judges viewed a videotape showing Berosini ill-treating orang-utans that he uses in his stage act. Berosini now faces a bill for court costs. (Humane News, Nov/Dec '95)

The New York University Medical Center has been charged with violating the Animal Welfare Act and fined almost $400,000 for extreme neglect and abuse of animals. The charges followed an 18 month investigation into research carried out by the Center's Dr. Ronald Wood, after a request by In Defense of Animals to the U. S. Dept of Agriculture. The USDA found that Wood had ill-treated monkeys used in cocaine and solvent abuse experiments by depriving them of water and providing inadequate medical care. (Humane News, Nov/Dec '95)

Oscar Mayer's Wiernermobile was forced into hiding after a PETA "pig" followed its nationwide U.S. tour, telling crowds about the suffering of pigs on factory farms. (Animal Times, Dec '95)

Following a letter-writing campaign instituted by PETA, the Senate and House of Representatives both voted to do away with a yearly subsidy of over $1 million spent by the U.S. government to promote mink coat sales overseas. (Animal Times, Dec '95)

Corporate giants Mobil, Texaco, Pennzoil, Phillips Petroleum, Shell and other oil companies have agreed to cover their exhaust stacks after PETA showed how millions of birds and bats became trapped in the shafts and burned alive. (Animal Times, Dec '95)

PETA have managed to persuade New York University to retire a group of chimpanzees kept for research and allow them to live out their lives in a California sanctuary. (Animal Times, Dec '95)

Using PETA photos of animals dying from untreated, oozing skin conditions and beatings, the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture brought charges against Ohio's Wright State University, which paid $20,000 in fines and ended some of the experiments forever. (Animal Times, Dec '95)

A Maryland fur farmer had injected minks in the chest with weedkiller for 50 years until the district attorney saw a PETA investigators' video-tape of the excruciatingly painful deaths. (Animal Times, Dec '95)

The U.S. government filed 41 charges of Animal Welfare Act violations against Hazleton Research Products, a Michigan Company that breeds animals for pharmaceutical labs, after PETA investigators revealed that employees beat animals, sometimes to death. PETA's evidence also resulted in the criminal cruelty conviction of one Hazleton worker who punched rabbits and broke their hind legs. (Animal Times, Dec '95)

Ten chimpanzees were freed from atrocious conditions at the Buckshire Corporation, a federally licensed animal dealer, after PETA released undercover video-tapes showing them isolated in refrigerator-sized cages in a barren basement. (Animal Times, Dec '95)

Evans Inc., the largest fur chain in the U.S., suffered a loss of over $12 million in the fiscal year which ended Feb '95, the worst in its 66-year history. (Animal Times, Dec '95)

Earth Faire has reduced its donation to The Nature Conservancy (TNC) by 90% because of TNC's use of wire neck snares in Hawaii. (Animal Times, Dec '95)

According to a new survey conducted for the Physicians Committee for Responsible Medicine, 11% of American women aged between 18 and 24 are vegetarians, as are between 1 and 2% of U.S. children aged 8 to 17. Almost half of the teenage vegetarians were following a vegan diet. (The Vegetarian, Winter '95)

A man who killed a puppy because its barking woke him up has been sentenced to 5 years imprisonment. (Teletext, 20/12/95)

Following protests from animal rights groups and others, a proposed $100 million biomedical research facility (which would have been the site of an enormous amount of animal research) in Marin County, California, will not now be built. (The AV, Jan/Feb '96)

After 70 years in business, Enman's Furriers of Asheville is to close. (ARC News, Feb '96)

A U.S. court ruling could force the American government to take action against Italy over the use of illegal driftnets which claim the lives of thousands of whales and dolphins every year. If Italian fishermen continue to use the nets, the U.S. will now be obliged to place a ban on imports of Italian fish and fish products. (Ceefax, 1/3/96)

After years of high-profile campaigning by Animal Emancipation, Inc., the University of California at Santa Barbara announced in October that it had cancelled the LD-50 test and two other types of animal experiment in its pharmacology classrooms. (ARC News, March '96)

New Book by Steve Charles

The publication of Steve Charles' first book titled 'One Foot in the Water', promises to provoke widespread interest and debate. At a time when more and more people are speaking out to demand fairer and more compassionate treatment of animals, Steve Charles shows, in this imaginative narrative, just how cruel man is and has been to the rare and beautiful creatures that share this earth with him. Pulling no punches, the author makes an impassioned and heartfelt plea for animals to be afforded the dignity and respect we rightly demand for the human family. At times this book is likely to reduce you to tears of sorrow, but its central character, Nirvana the Dolphin, will also bring great comfort and hope to those sensitive humans who do truly care about the welfare of their animal friends.

This book is available on order for £4.99 at any good bookstore or directly from Thomas Lyster Ltd., (0695 575112). Their trade terms are sale or return with a 35% discount for multiple orders.

For further information please contact: Andrea (0171 225 3113 / fax 0171 581 9237).

The Live Exports Diary

Plymouth. Despite the recent fire, Inizan's Choakford lairage is still operational, though restricted. After the evening departure of calves on a lorry on the 31st October, a group of protesters decided to remain in Inizan's driveway for the night. On November 1st one arrest was made as a lorry left the lairage. There have been a total of 6 arrests in the last 2 weeks. Those arrested may not go within a 3 mile radius of the lairage.

Dover. On the 31st October another windscreen was cracked between the Leisure Centre and the docks. Several protesters travelled to Gloucestershire for the Gilder demos. On the 1st of November a protester, concerned at the state of the animals in a transporter that had stopped at the traffic lights at the Leisure Centre, climbed aboard to get a closer look. Unfortunately for him, the driver took off and only stopped when he reached the docks. The protester was promptly arrested for threatening behaviour. No charge against the driver, however, for endangering life or driving without due care and attention. A driver swerved his transporter across the road, attempting to run 2 protesters over on the A20, then promptly jumped the red traffic lights. There was a demonstration at Petham lairage in the evening. At the Leisure Centre on the 3rd of November, a protester fell over and, on getting up, accidentally made contact with the rear lights of a transporter with her walking stick causing some damage.

Coventry. The Halloween event at Peter Gilder's brought out a fair few, around 100! There were a few arrests but, as far as is known, everyone was released without charge.

York. Protests are continuing at Albert Hall Farms and are continuing. Even stopping the transporters in the evenings is viewed as a step nearer victory.

Dover. On the 8th November, Glenda Jackson MP paid a short visit to the demos at Dover docks and the Leisure Centre. There was good support at the regular evening demo at Petham lairage. The huge number of calves was a distressing sight and there were 3 arrests for obstruction. The first regular morning demo on the 9th of November at Capel lairage saw a large number of protesters witness calves and sheep being loaded. The sheep were in a very poor condition and approximately 60 were unfit to travel. 3 protesters visiting Capel lairage the next day were attacked. Water was thrown over them and their car was covered in red paint.

Brightlingsea. On the 7th November a demonstration was held at Layer de la Haye lairage which supplies animals to Dover, while on the 13th, protester Alf Hatch appeared at Harwich Court charged with alleged criminal damage to Roger Mills' vehicle.

Coventry. Barrett-Jolley, former calf exporter from Coventry, was at Leamington Spa Magistrates' Court on the 10th November, facing a private prosecution taken out by a protester whom he battered with a crowbar last December. He has opted to go for trial by jury.

Dover. On the 15th November, approximately 60 protesters held a demo outside Maison Dieu veterinary surgery, the practice of Jonathan Stirling who was featured on 'Animal Wars' on the 9th November. Leaflets explaining his involvement in the live export trade were handed out to his patients' owners. In a statement to the Dover Express he said that 'legalised terrorism' may force him to move away from Dover! A complaint was made to the police on the 16th, following an incident in which the driver of a transporter attempted to force a protester's car off the road. This should have been straightforward as the transporter was being followed by an unmarked police car who witnessed the incident. However, the complaint resulted in the protester being cautioned and informed that he may be charged with dangerous driving.

Brightlingsea. On the 14th November about 30 protesters demonstrated at Layer de la Haye lairage, just outside Colchester. The RSPCA were called after several animals appeared lame and some were suspected of having pneumonia. Wharf owner Ernest Oliver was in Harwich Court for the 2nd time. This time he was found guilty of a shotgun offence. Oliver claimed he was shooting at pigeons while protesters were demonstrating outside his home on the 19th July. He was given a conditional discharge and ordered to pay £172 court costs.

Plymouth. A youth was arrested in connection with the fire at Cloakford lairage.

Dover. A Ban Live Exports supporter who lives in a bungalow on a road which leads to Capel lairage has had his car tyres slashed and threatening notes put through his door, one of which said; "We're going to burn you out." Coaches and cars arrived from all over the country for the 25th November. Approximately 500 protesters, not used to standing behind barriers together with some of the more active Dover protesters, occupied the pavements and protested with considerable force against the live exports going in and the empty lorries coming out. Protesters also went to Shepherdswell and Capel lairages. 4 people were arrested, 3 locals and one from Shoreham.

Coventry. On the 19th November at the Peter Gilder demo, sons Joseph and Edward decided it was time to have-a-go at protesters again; they drove up the drive, flung the car doors open in an attempt to hit people, drove a bit further, jumped out of the car and started to throw a few punches - real James Bond stuff! For an encore, they threw a frozen pig's head at the parked protesters cars.

Brightlingsea. 100 Brightlingsea protesters attended the protest at Dover on 25th November.

Plymouth. The media attention given to the outspoken attack on protesters who have held a 15 week vigil at Inizan's lairage has resulted in more support from the general public who gave their support to protesters appearing in court recently.

Dover. The 30th November saw a protester at the docks arrested for alleged criminal damage after she tapped on the side of a truck with her banner. She was released after being given a caution and no charge.

Brightlingsea. Also on the 30th, about 100 Brightlingsea protesters went to London and met 300 protesters from Coventry, Shoreham, Plymouth and other areas. A wall of telephone directories was erected in Parliament Square and passers-by were alerted to the continuing efforts to ban live exports.

Boulogne. On the 9th December a small and colourful group of English and French demonstrators paraded in the town's commercial centre - to the amazement of the Christmas shoppers. A pantomime cow, whistles, anti-live transport slogans and goodwill made this event successful and was welcomed by the local population. Boulogne is the new focus of ITF's animal imports into France. As required by French law, the route of the march had been announced to the authorities and a courteous and patient police escort maintained safety and priority through the weekend traffic. Police had previously warned that they would forbid livestock ships to arrive during the British demonstration which attracted good press and TV coverage.

Poole. Poole was horrified to become the port of shame from Wednesday to Friday last week. Local residents joined protesters from all over England to object to the port being used for such a cruel trade. The authorities were also very uneasy about the trade. On Thursday a protester cut the brake cables on one of the transporters which caused a roadblock. This incident resulted in police tightening their tactics by lining the road to prevent protesters having access to the lorries.

Dudley. On the 19th November over 30 people demonstrated outside the home of David Shakespeare. His family and father were also present and were abusive, denying he exports horses to Belgium.

Shoreham. At Hailsham Market on the 5th December, 12 protesters attended the market for the fatstock festival. An owner was reprimanded and stopped from holding piglets by their back legs and suspending them clear of the ground. The demonstration was supported by local trading standards.

Poole Harbour. On the 9th December a group visited Poole with a mobile A-board, to a good reception from the local protesters. A police vehicle was called and in spite of the car park being 90% empty, they were accused of causing an obstruction. After the representation at the port, they toured the town and were heartened by the warm reception from the local groups who were truly pleased to see them.

Maidstone. On the 13th December, 32 protesters gathered outside the MAFF offices. The building had been vacated, except for just one policeman.

Dover. On the 16th December approximately 350 protesters arrived from all over the country, some arriving as early as 4.30am! 30 protesters went to the Shepherdsweil lairage to be greeted by Skinner and 6 heavies who, armed with offensive weapons, attacked 3 protesters from Shoreham who had to be taken to hospital. They were released after treatment. The police have said that charges will be brought against the assailants. After this incident, another 50 protesters arrived, but left after a Section 14 notice was issued. Many then travelled onto Petham and Capel lairages where, at Capel, 2 women protesters managed to enter a transporter and were on the middle tier when the loading of sheep commenced. They were discovered by lairage workers who dragged them off, punching one of the ladies in the stomach, treatment usually reserved for the animals. According to reports, seven arrests were made, 5 released without charge, and many lorries were damaged.

York. On Christmas day a small demo took place outside Albert Hall Farm. There was a bigger turnout for the first demo of 1996 on New Years Day.

Coventry. During a demo at Gordon Gilder's on the 27th December, a female protester had her face badly hurt by the red-haired driver seen in the BBC2 'Animal Wars' programme. He reached through the metal 5-bar gate, grabbed her by her clothes and pulled her face as hard as he could onto the gate. Her nose was so badly swollen it could not be X-rayed and she has severe bruising. She is pressing charges against the driver. In spite of icy roads and an ominous snow warning, 19 protesters turned up for the Christmas Cluedo event on the 30th December. Mr. & Mrs. Barrett-Jolley were their first port of call, he in his carpet slippers and she allegedly brandishing a rifle. They were not at all hospitable, nor were the Gilders.

Shoreham. At Hove, Kingsway, to commemorate the first shipment of animals through Shoreham a year ago, 600 protesters congregated for a candlelit vigil and a short march on the 2nd January. Afterwards, about 100 protesters paid a visit to ITF Director Glen Dudley at his bungalow in Dyke Road Avenue. Mrs. Beulah Grant, wife of Stefan who lives 2 doors away, was also there visiting her husband's friend. 6 policeman turned up to ensure the safety of Messrs. Grant and Dudley.

Dover. On New Year's Eve, about 40 protesters saw the old year out at the entrance to Dover Docks. The Union Jack was taken down and replaced by a Ban Live Exports flag. On the 6th January the first protesters arrived at Capel lairage at 7.50am in semi-darkness to find an evidence-gathering team waiting for them plus 4 van loads of police - some 60 officers. Lorries had departed long before dawn and there were very few animals left at the lairage. 10 sheep were taken off lorries at Capel because they were lame; the others were so tightly packed that the animals, yet again, were bulging out of the lorries. Other protesters turned up just after 8am and took over the watch. At 2pm about 60 protesters moved on to Shepherdswell and were faced with 16 van-loads of police, 4 dog teams, 2 evidence-gathering teams, a Range-Rover and 2 squad cars which completely quashed any idea of a useful protest at Skinner's. The protesters were hemmed in against their own vehicles, 150m away from Skinner's lairage. Clearly, this was to avoid a repetition of the minor scuffling which took place on 16th December. To avoid protesters, the lorries were routed through Folkestone, then Dover town, and joined the A2 north of Dover, approaching the docks from Jubilee Way. No transporters, empty or full, risked Marine Drive. When the protesters managed to close the Jubilee Way roundabout, it only needed one van-load of police to force them back up to the Leisure Centre where they were dispersed by even more van-loads of police waiting for them. A total of 10 lorries boarded the Sea Road. Protesters were outnumbered at the beginning by about 2-1 and by 3pm, 6-1. The Kent police, reputedly received an additional £7m in the budget to police protests.

Wales. At Pembroke Dock on the 10 October a funeral march was held in memory of the 51 pigs who died on the 9th August from heat exhaustion on an Irish Ferry at Pembroke Dock. 50 protesters marched through the town, then wreaths were laid outside the dock gates and thrown into the Irish Sea. The march was covered by the Welsh media. In statements to the press, MAFF and the RSPCA denied all knowledge of the pig deaths, in spite of the headlines in the Irish newspapers which resulted in the Irish Minister of Agriculture, Ivan Yates, banning pig exports from Ireland temporarily.

Brightlingsea. On 11th January, after Brightlingsea Town Council's meetings with Bernard Jenkins MP, ACC Geoffrey Markham and Roger Mills, the Council announced that they still support a ban on live exports, not only through Brightlingsea, but also country-wide. Mills left the meeting with no doubt in his mind about the Council's views on his trade.

Coventry. More than 100 protesters supported a terrific demo at Gordon Gilder's on the 13th January. A cab without a trailer was stopped and sent away by the police. He had to reverse all the way down the lane with protesters running alongside (that took the smirk off his face!). Usually Gordon, his sons and drivers carry on with their disgusting business while protesters shout and yell at the gates but, for some reason, they kept well out of sight this time. The woman who was injured by a red-haired Gordon Gilder driver has been X-rayed and has two broken bones in her nose.

Plymouth. There was heavy police presence at Choakford lairage on the 18th January. Protesters and cars shown in the 'Dispatches' documentary were searched and moved on under the Criminal Justice Act. As a vengeance, the CJ Act has been enforced to restrict their attendance at protests for the next 3 months.

York. Protesters arrived before police and placed a row of traffic cones across the entrance to Albert Hall Farms on the 15th January, which delayed a transporter on its arrival. A cowardly farmworker who spat at a protester ran for cover when chased.

Dover. On the 15th January, 5 visiting protesters busy on Marine Parade, managed to delay 4 transporters for a considerable time by lying under the first lorry. All were arrested and charged with obstruction. On the 19th, 2 protesters who had been arrested on Monday, blocked the road leading into Capel lairage for over 2 hours. They erected a scaffolding tripod and hoisted themselves up. Eventually, the police managed to remove them by climbing on top of a transit van. On the 20th, 600 protesters spread themselves in and around Dover and spent the day seeing the law being flouted with regard to animal loading and transport. While the exporters enjoy very powerful political support, it is most unfortunate that the police deploy such large numbers, depriving law-abiding people of their protection. Protesters from Coventry arrived at 4am. Their coach driver was woken 3 times by the police for no apparent reason. A visit was made to LVI Stirling's practice to make their feelings known. At Petham lairage, Cambridge protesters saw sheep being crammed into lorries, one deck so full that their faces were squashed against the slats. RSPCA and Trading Standards were alerted, but didn't arrive until after the lorry had left. A truck from Capel lairage was sent back after being checked at the docks. 6 Doverians carrying a black coffin led 100 protesters on an impromptu march along Marine Parade and blocked the port entrance. Shoreham protesters also visited Jonathan Stirling's practice and sat in the waiting room talking to clients.

Coventry. 50 protesters demonstrated at Banbury Market on the 17th January, some entering the market and taking photographs. Albert Hall's calf buyers were active. Later, marching to Banbury, they distributed leaflets and assembled under the famous Cross.

Brightlingsea. On the 16th January about 250 demonstrators held a peaceful candlelight vigil and march down to the wharf gates to commemorate the start of live exports through the town one year ago. At the Layer de la Haye lairage, on the 23rd January, 3 protesters chained themselves to a lorry, delaying it sufficiently to miss the ship at Dover. Wharf owner Ernest Oliver's daughter, Jill, alleged a demonstrator caused £800 of damage to her car while she was driving through a protest in Brightlingsea. The court found the accused protester not guilty.

London. On the 30th January at 5pm, protesters gathered outside Leith's School of Food and Wine in Kensington where a discussion took place about the ethics concerning veal. Some protesters dressed very effectively in chef-style white hats and aprons and paper-plate face masks. As several 'foodie' celebrities arrived to take part in the veal discussion, the protest became very noisy. One policeman tried in vain to clear the school's entrance and herd protesters onto the opposite side of the street.

Dover. On the 2nd February, people started arriving in the early hours for Jill Phipps' memorial service and by 10am about 350 people had gathered at the docks. Prayers were said for Jill by the same 3 clergymen who had led the service the previous day. After one minute's silence people placed flowers on the roundabout. Speeches were made by Zab Phipps and representatives from various groups around the country. When the transporters arrived a few minor incidents took place which resulted in extremely heavy-handed policing. Scuffles broke out and 17 arrests were made. Enormous media coverage described the day as the most violent demonstrations so far in Dover. Kent police hired a helicopter at the cost of £50 a minute. At Petham lairage, a worker was cautioned after being seen by a policeman hitting calves with a length of hose. At Capel, a police inspector told protesters he would act on reported incidents of cruelty. Another worker was cautioned after threatening to attack a protester.

Shoreham. By late January, the SALE petition with over 10,000 signatures obtained from towns in West Sussex, will be handed in to the NFU.

Plymouth. After the calves left Choakford for Dover on the 1st February, a moving but simple memorial by candlelight was held for Jill Phipps. Although the press were present, the police would not allow TV crews to unload their equipment because of the ban on parking within one mile of the lairage. Jonathan Stirling has a house in St. Breock. 2,500 leaflets were distributed in neighbouring towns explaining his involvement in the trade.

Brightlingsea. Tendring District Council will be sending a letter to Brightlingsea residents requesting them to remove Ban Live Exports signs displayed in their front gardens. At Layer de la Haye, protesters were manhandled by lairage workers.

Coventry. Thursday, 1st February, was the anniversary of Jill Phipps' death. Protesters from all over the country went to Baginton airport to take part in a simple and very moving memorial ceremony. Vandals have already set to work on Jill's beautiful memorial stone. On Friday night the head and skin of a dead rabbit was draped over the stone and on Saturday night, green paint was poured all over the stone.

Dover. Petham, Capel and Shepherdsweil lairages were visited by protesters frequently in early February. Protesters leafleted Little Farthinglow Farm, a shopping and restaurant complex owned by Richardson, a partner in Capel lairage.

Tolworth. Staff entering the animal welfare headquarters on the 9th February, where live exports certificates are approved and issued, were surprised to see protests had moved to their offices. As employees drove into work ready for a routine day of paperwork, they were stopped by protesters who explained why they were there and handed them leaflets. The message reached passing rush-hour traffic on the A240. Police came and observed the protesters, then left them to it. TV and press turned up. The initiative to demonstrate outside the animal welfare headquarters at Tolworth where the Chief Government Vet Keith Meldrum is based, drew people's attention to the reality of the protesters' activities and the seriousness of their cause. The protesters present were excited about the prospect of more frequent demonstrations at these offices.

Brightlingsea. Two Brightlingsea protesters have rented Shoreham's purple bus and are conducting animal export awareness sessions in and around Colchester during February. Aided by graphic videos and literature, they have aroused the interest of local residents and the media.

Coventry. Protesters set off to visit Stephen Wood's lairage on the 9th February at Redditch, where they had a 'spot of bother' with the driver of an empty Armstrong sheep wagon!

On the 11th, around 70 protesters maintained a noisy presence outside Gordon Gilder's home.

Dover. On the 17th February, 300 protesters started arriving in Dover in the early hours of the morning from as far afield as Plymouth, stopping briefly at lairages before assembling at the docks. At 9.45am they moved to Jonathan Stirling's veterinary surgery where a noisy protest took place for a couple of hours. Approximately 150 police were drafted in. Among several arrests for obstruction was a 73 year-old lady, mistaken for a protester, who was simply shopping. Timothy Skinner, owner of Shepherdswell, was spotted inside the practice and was unable to resist smirking at protesters through a window. His appearance coincided with the arrival of the Shoreham coach which boosted the crowd to over 350. For 3 hours there was chaos, with traffic diverted. Protesters then moved on to Shepherdswell lairage where initially only a few police were about. Suddenly, 10 van loads of police turned up to clear the lane, by which time most protesters had left for Lydden lairage about 2 miles away. The sight that greeted them at Lydden, owned by Mr. T. Head, was truly appalling. The place could only be described as a hell-hole. There was a makeshift pen of six sheep and lambs with open ulcers, eye infections and damaged ears. When the police arrived, the senior officers reported the matter to the RSPCA who undertook an investigation. Protesters visiting Lydden lairage in future should watch their vehicles as Mr. Head's loyal neighbours threw rocks and engaged in threatening behaviour. They were questioned by the police. Meanwhile in Dover, some visiting protesters entered Eastern Docks and drove around sending out vocal messages until they were stopped by a police vehicle.

Coventry. On the 21st February, Gordon Gilder received a surprise demo with much activity around his gates and in the trees. Wagon driver Paul Lusty, who grabbed and pulled a female protesters face into Gilder's five-bar gates, has now been charged with assault occasioning bodily harm.

Dover. The Green Party demo which took place on the 23rd February received a great deal of media coverage. A lorry resembling an animal transporter followed the march. The driver was dressed as a calf and inside were 25 protesters, some with their legs sticking out between the slats of the lorry. Afterwards, an animal rights forum took place at the conference and speakers included Mark Watts, MEP, and Trevor Love, KAALE.

Brightlingsea. The animal exporter Roger Mills was fined £1,000 and banned from the road for a year on 1st March, after being found guilty of dangerous driving at a demonstration here in May 1995. Sandra Lister, an animal rights protester, suffered stomach injuries when she was hit by his Land-Rover.

Shoreham. On the 7th March, 80 protesters attended a meeting with David Campion, Central Sussex Branch Chairman of the NFU, and 2 other panellists. Their replies to questioning convinced the audience that the NFU and the livestock farming sector cannot even enforce the present inadequate regulations.

Dover. 10 charges under Section 14 issued against Trevor Love and Sue Wilson on the 11th September 1995 were dropped in March 1996 due to "lack of evidence to guarantee conviction". Another Section 14 and a Section 5 against two Coventry protesters were dropped, together with a highway obstruction against a Hampshire protester. In early March every property in the villages of Lydden and Shepherdswell was leafleted. A Lydden resident has written thanking the protesters for leafleting her village and for bringing the activities of the lairage to her attention.

For further information concerning the campaign against live exports please contact any of the following:

Brightingsea:	01206 304726
Coventry:	01564 776984
Dover:	01304 374064 / 0589 449970
Dover Sea Sabs:	01304 830873
East Kent Animal Welfare (EKAW):	01304 363071 / Fax 01304 362698
Marketwatch National:	01732 364546
Plymouth:	01752 812884
Shoreham(SALE):	01403 782027
York (Albert Hall Farm demonstrations):	01423 563148 / 01472 851637 / 01652 628215

The events listed above represent a small selection of actions taken from The Animal Protesters' Bulletin available from:

Liz Long,
13 Roseneath Road,
London SW11 6AG
(0171 223 3829)

A donation of £5 for 10 issues would be appreciated.

Sabbing News

As the end of the second season of sabbing under the Criminal Justice Act draws to an end, we see that the new laws have not had much effect on the level of hunt sabotage that goes on. Although some police forces, such as Surrey, have agreed with sabs not to enforce the CJA, most will at least make some half-hearted effort to issue warnings. This has led to a slight change in tactics - basically, trying to avoid contact with the police during hunts. However, there are also those such as Essex police and Strathclyde police, who seem to have very cosy relationships with the hunt and pursue sabs under the CJA with almost fanatical zeal, to the extent of using helicopters!

CJA RESULTS

Five sabs from Yorkshire were cleared of criminal trespass when it was argued that it had not been proved that the five arrested were those trying to disrupt the hunt. Another acquittal was obtained by three Edinburgh sabs and two Tyneside sabs who had been arrested at the Tynedale foxhunt in November. None of the police officers present could identify any of the defendants as having actually done anything. This could be because the sabs were arrested whilst walking back to their vans! The final verdicts have been obtained from charges relating to a sab on the Essex foxhunt on 19th November 1994. Out of 31 arrests, the Essex Crown Prosecution Service obtained only 10 convictions for aggravated trespass, with 8 charges being dropped, 8 thrown out during the trial and 3 people being acquitted. Many of the charges were dropped after police evidence was contradicted by videos of the day's events. The magistrate was at one point even considering reporting one officer for perjury. The cost of the day's policing was estimated at £40,000, and this doesn't even include the legal cost to the courts. Appeals and civil actions against Essex police are planned.

VIDEOS AND BALACLAVAS

A police tactic that has been used more and more often recently, against sabs and animal rights activists generally, is that of using video cameras. Strange-looking police, often in black boiler suits and baseball caps hang around filming sabs for some shady evidence-gathering purpose. This has been countered by sabs increasingly wearing scarves and balaclavas to hide their identity, which can be useful for other reasons. Hunt scum are less able to point people out to police with some allegation and it also makes sabs look more menacing which undoubtedly causes some people to stop coming out hunting.

INJUNCTIONS

A tactic that has been used a few times by rich members of the bloodsports fraternity is that of obtaining injunctions against sabs preventing them from going to certain areas or from disrupting hunts or shoots. A blood junkie toff, the Earl of Yarborough who rides with the Brocklesby foxhunt, forced ten sabs to sign a lifetime injunction on behalf of ten landowners in Lincolnshire. This states that the sabs are "...forbidden from trespassing on the Plaintiff's land and in particular from molesting, harassing, threatening, obstructing or disrupting the activities of the Brocklesby Hunt...". Sabs were denied legal aid to defend themselves in court and are now banned from thousands of acres of Lincolnshire.

Three sabs arrested whilst attending a grouse shoot in North Yorkshire have also had lifetime injunctions placed upon them preventing them from entering shooting estates, and a Peterborough sab has had an injunction placed against him by the Fitzwilliam foxhunt.

This may look like a disturbing trend, but it only stops a small number of sabs and it costs a great deal of money to bring about an injunction. Also, hunts need to obtain names and addresses of sabs, so it's not really a realistic tactic for them to use more widely.

JAMES BARRINGTON

Readers may have heard James Barrington, former executive Director of the League Against Cruel Sports, on the news in late 1995. He "walked out" in mid-December after seven years in the job after disagreements with colleagues. He sacked two LACS workers and suspended another, and then, to confirm doubts as to his sanity, he wrote two articles for The Field magazine. These, whilst not actually supporting bloodsports, were not far from it. In his October 1995 article on shooting, he came out with lines such as "I think there's more justification for grouse shooting than there is for pheasant shooting", and "We're not opposed to the rough shooter or the guy just popping something off for the pot". In the November issue, he writes that if some sides of fox-hunting such as sending terriers down after foxes were banned, then "...the League would be less antagonistic towards hunting". After he went, the League confirmed that its policy was to oppose hunting with dogs, oppose shooting of birds and animals for sport, and to be neutral on the issue of angling.

Not content with brown-nosing up to hunt scum, he also slagged off hunt saboteurs, which is strange, since many years ago, little Jimmy Barrington himself used to go out sabbing. Rumour has it that even then, his fellow sabs thought him a bit strange. Another quote from him, this time from the December 1995 issue of Hunting magazine: "There may be a disreputable under-class involved in hunting, and there are certainly arrogant people on both sides, but fox-hunting has culture tradition and there are many pillars of society involved in the sport".

On the subject of the LACS, two hunt monitors from Wolverhampton have been expelled from the League for "too close association with sabs". Happily to say, they are now members of the HSA and carrying on as before. LACS monitors are often to be seen on various hunts, usually distinguished by their fluorescent bibs. Although they'll usually tell you where the hunt is, they tend to treat sabs as if they are slightly beneath them - could this be due to orders from above?

THE COUNTRYSIDE MOVEMENT

You may have seen the large adverts in the national press put in by these people. From the information given you could be forgiven for thinking they are some sort of wishy-washy green group. Nothing could be further from the truth. They were in fact set up with help from extremely wealthy landowners such as the Duke of Westminster to promote all forms of bloodsports. The group is also being funded by the Countryside Business Group (name changed from the less public-friendly Country Sports Business Group), which campaigns on behalf of bloodsports and rich landowners. You can write to the Countryside Movement at FREEPOST, Room GUA3, Bristol BS38 7HL, or direct to their office at 11 Tufton St., London SW1P 3QB.

The Liberal Democrat MP David Steel is the public face of the campaign which aims to fight the gains being made by animal rights activists and to protect the vested interests of hunts, game shoot providers, landowners, farmers and industry. Strangely enough, there are rumours that although Sir David gets his kicks from torturing fish for pleasure, he is actually opposed to hunting with hounds.

It is free to join, and the questionnaire which comes with the membership form makes excellent reading. Under the 'Hobbies and interests' section it gives you the choice of a few normal ones like walking or cycling but the remaining twenty or so are every variant form of bloodsports imaginable! The 'occupation' section runs in a similar vein. The president of the National Federation of Anglers enthusiastically joined his pals from the fox-hunting, grouse shooting and hare coursing worlds in the new movement, showing how close are the links between angling and other bloodsports.

SABBING - THE GERMAN WAY

Sabs in Germany certainly know how to do it in style. During the close season for deer hunting in winter the wooden legs of the thousands of hides around the country were sawn through. This goes unnoticed at first - until the unsuspecting shooter comes tumbling down ten feet as the structure collapses underneath them! Unfortunately there have been no reports of serious injuries to deer hunters caught out in this way.

ARSON ATTACK ON SAB

A hunt saboteur from Kettering has been the victim of two arson attacks on his vehicles in October 1995, one of which destroyed a garage. He has also been beaten up and had the brake cables on his car tampered with in the past. Members of the Woodland Pytchley foxhunt are believed to be responsible for the arson attacks, but not surprisingly the police aren't investigating it very enthusiastically. In return, over 120 sabs turned up at the hunt a few weeks later and after a standoff with the hunt not hunting, and one of the hunt stewards receiving a bruised head, the hunt rode for only three miles before packing up and returning home.

MASS HITS

To combat violence on hunts and excessive policing, mass hits like the one mentioned above have been quite frequent during the season. A particularly memorable one occurred at Prince Charles's favourite foxhunt, the Beaufort, in Wiltshire in February 1996. As the Daily Mail so excellently put it "Pickaxe mob turns the hunters into the hunted"! Hundreds of sabs, many in balaclavas descended on the hunt, taking the two constables on duty by surprise. Hunt scum were assaulted, dozens of hunt supporters vehicles got their windows smashed in, and sabs neatly made their getaway before 100 police reinforcements arrived. No arrests were made. Other large sabs have occurred in Wales, in Essex and many other places around the country.

GROUSE SHOOT'S FIASCO

Several people were arrested on the "Glorious Twelfth" of August 1995 whilst looking for shooters in Yorkshire. Sabs had been summonsed with various offences when the dozy coppers realised they had actually just gone over the border into Durham police jurisdiction, and so the charges were all dropped. A few weeks later sabs got yet another summons for the offences which had been dropped previously, this time from Durham police. They had obviously not done their homework properly because this was something they were not entitled to do, and so luckily for the people involved, the charges were not valid. It's good to see red tape working in our favour for once!

HUNT ASSAULTS

Hunt thugs have been at it again during the 1995/96 season with a number of sabs being assaulted by hunt supporters, usually with the police and hunt staff doing nothing to intervene. At the beginning of the season, South Dorset sabs were set upon by two 'hunt stewards' from the Cattistock foxhunt. Punches and kicks were received by sabs resulting in broken ribs while a policeman stood and watched. No action was taken against the attackers.

November saw West Wales sabs come off worse at the hands of supporters of the Vale of Clettwr foxhunt. The sab van was surrounded by the whole hunt and twenty or so supporters who had obviously been drinking, windows were smashed and the driver was dragged out and kicked and stamped on. Other sabs were punched and kicked, although everyone escaped serious injury. Three hunt supporters have been charged with violent disorder, criminal damage, theft and assault.

Sabs from north and south Ireland were physically assaulted by members of the Oriel Hunt during cub-hunting in October. Car windows were broken, personal property stolen and communication equipment wrecked. The hunt also searched sab vehicles and stole film from cameras.

North Downs sabs had an assault on their members in October. A local doctor was head-butted and dragged through barbed wire by a regular Surrey Union supporter from Guildford, and a cameraman was threatened with death if he did not hand over film footage of the attack. Another Surrey Union hunt supporter, Gary John Moore pleaded guilty to charges of common assault and affray following an incident when sabs were attacked leaving a pub in September 94. He was given a fine of £500. Noel Cahill, who is yet another fanatical supporter of southern hunts including the Surrey Union foxhunt, was arrested in November at the start of a hunt. A threatening letter addressed to the chairman of the Hunt Saboteurs Association had recently been found at his Guildford home following an Operation Bumblebee raid (designed to crack down on burglars).

Alistair Jackson, the south-east press spokesperson for the British Field Sports Society was arrested and charged in October for threatening behaviour. This followed a meet of the Cattistock foxhunt when a sab was punched to the ground. Jackson is a former master of the Cattistock and one of the BFSS's leading public relations officers. He was apparently frustrated at sabs' unwillingness to pose for photographs for his national records on them and lashed out. Perhaps not surprisingly given his status, the Crown Prosecution Service later dropped the charge prior to his first court appearance.

BADGER BAITERS IN COURT

For many terriermen, digging out foxes which hunts have run to ground does not provide a perverse enough pleasure. Numerous hunt supporters are convicted very year of badger baiting, which is illegal in Britain. A number of people have received prison sentences for up to three months for this crime. The HSA would especially like people to send them press cuttings from local papers of any person convicted of baiting badgers or of being involved in illegal dog-fights.

NATIONAL LOTTERY FUNDING HUNTING

Yet another reason to give the National Lottery a miss. A hunting lodge on a Scottish estate has received a donation from the Lottery, and a Leicestershire hunter has applied for funds to finance the building of a Museum of Fox-hunting in Melton Mowbray. Despite where fox-hunting should rightly belong, people are urged to enter the HSA's monthly Club Draw.

MASTER OF FOXHOUNDS CAUTIONED

David Woolley, the Master of the Cheshire Foxhounds, was cautioned by police in March after making a late-night phone call to a female anti-bloodsports campaigner. He called the woman, who is a regional head of the League Against Cruel Sports, on his mobile phone at 1.25am. He told police that he wanted her to "persuade extreme animal rights fanatics not to use violence against the hunt", and claimed he didn't realise what the time was! Mr. Woolley, who has been hunting with Prince Charles, has been heavily involved in hunting for over 30 years, and was injured last July by a parcel bomb sent to his home by the Justice Department.

What the Papers Say

A Selection of Press Cuttings from the Past Few Months

Furrier quits after demonstration

A FURRIER whose family firm has supplied fur to the Royal Family and customers worldwide for more than 70 years has given up because of harassment by animal rights activists.

Michael Hockley, 48, resigned as manager of Philip Hockley, the Mayfair company founded by his grandfather, after a major demonstration outside his house in St John's Wood, north London, on Saturday.

More than 20 police vehicles, several dog handlers and a helicopter were called to break up a group of about 100 demonstrators. Six were arrested and later released without charge.

Mr Hockley's solicitors delivered a letter to the headquarters of London Animal Action on Monday. It said the group's activities "left him with no alternative but to resign his position as manager". He had given up "any connections and interests whatsoever in and with the fur industry".

Mr Hockley, who was said to be distressed and fearful for the safety of his family, was not at home yesterday. A spokesman for the firm said: "He has been severely traumatised. He left on Monday. We don't want him to suffer any more."

Mr Hockley's address had been circulated by the Animal Liberation Front. Pickets were organised outside the shop and anti-fur leaflets distributed to Mr Hockley's neighbours. A number of animal rights organisations are believed to have acted together against him.

His firm, which provided a sable trim for Countess Spencer's wedding dress, was taken over in 1987, but Mr Hockley stayed as manager.

In October 1994, he said that threats against fur traders had tailed off. "The anti-fur lobby has also changed a lot recently. The old campaigners have mostly turned their attention to animal transportation or animal testing."

It was a comment he was to regret. In October last year, he was arrested after an altercation with pickets and bound over to keep the peace for a year. Two weeks ago his wife's car was sprayed with paint.

Valerie Brooke, of the Fur Education Council, said Mr Hockley's resignation was "a triumph of violence. I have seen the way the pickets behave and they are extremely frightening. People have been whipped up to boiling point by the animal rights activists' propaganda, but fur shops are not doing anything illegal. It is terrible for someone to be hounded out."

A spokesman for London Animal Action said he was "delighted" at Mr Hockley's action. "It shows the fur industry is feeling pressure."

A statement from the organisation called the resignation "a significant victory", but activists were still not satisfied and "the campaign against the Philip Hockley fur shop will continue until the shop closes permanently".

Alligator now on the menu

RENEWED fears over the safety of beef could see the slowly growing market in alternative meats take off.

Most British diners remain conservative in their choice of meat — not for nothing did the French nickname their traditional enemies "les Rosbifs".

Now, however, specialist dealers are trying to buck convention with new varieties of meat that are more familiar in the zoo than on a butcher's hook.

Alligator, crocodile, peacock, ostrich, kangaroo, squirrel, locusts and crickets can now be bought, often by mail order, as well as bison, wild-boar and muntjak deer. One of the largest companies in this still-specialised field is the Somerset-based Barrow Boar, which supplies London butchers with wild boar, peacock and alligator.

Alligator meat is imported frozen from Louisiana where they are now farmed.

by GERVASE WEBB

Wild boar is also farmed, with many Britons acquiring a taste for the dark, gamey flesh on Tuscan holidays.

Another specialist-meat supplier, the Chessington-based Game Larder, supplies London butchers with crocodile, kangaroo, ostrich and squirrel.

Prices for the alternatives are becoming more competitive. Venison is around £4.30 a pound. Kangaroo — a dark meat which tastes like a cross between beef and lamb — is around £4.90.

Ostrich, a major growth area in farming, is about £4.40 a quarter, but importers expect prices to fall with new regulations allowing British slaughterhouses to process the birds. The big problem facing the wholesalers of the more unusual meats, however, is the lack of consistency in supply and price.

'EVENING STANDARD' 22-3-96

Activist caged for 10 years

AN ANIMAL Liberation Front activist was today jailed for 10 years for planning a nationwide bombing campaign.

The man was on the brink of inflicting 'phenomenal' damage to premises which would have cost millions of pounds and possibly lives, a court heard.

David Callender plotted to target fox hunting groups, food manufacturers, horse breeders, egg producers and even the Milk Marketing Board.

Police who raided his rented home in the Sparkbrook area of Birmingham found a bomb factory with enough equipment to make more than 100 explosive devices.

Callender, 37, was found guilty yesterday of conspiring with others to cause arson between May and October 1994. It followed a five-week trial at Birmingham Crown Court.

He was found guilty by a 10 to two majority after a jury took 11 hours to reach its verdict.

His co-accused, Greg Avery, 28, of Bollington, Cheshire, was cleared of the same charge.

He had claimed he did not know what Callender was plotting.

'PLYMOUTH EVENING HERALD' 6-3-96

'DAILY TELEGRAPH' 22-3-96

Vet banned from keeping dogs

A vet who kept 100 dogs in horrific conditions at an illegal puppy farm was yesterday banned from owning and breeding dogs for seven years. Helen Hein, 69, of Newlands Corner, Surrey, was jostled by animal rights protesters as she left after the two-day trial at Farnham magistrates' court.

RSPCA inspectors who visited the former Ministry of Agriculture research vet's home found packs of German shepherds that had had gone wild with three inches of dog faeces caked to the floor. Many of the animals had suffered appalling injuries and deformities.

Hein admitted causing unnecessary suffering and breeding and selling dogs without a licence. She said she had not intended to be cruel and the problems were caused by overpopulation. She was also fined £250 with £250 costs.

'INDEPENDENT' 20-3-96

M15 muscle in on animal rights activism

THE SECURITY SERVICES BILL, currently working its way through parliament, aims to "give the Security Service the function of acting in support of the prevention and detection of serious crime, and for connected purposes".

With the end of the cold war M15 agents have been finding themselves with less to do. As a result, the present head of M15, Stella Rimmington, has negotiated a new role for her organisation in domestic, serious crime detection.

Under the new Bill, the phrase "serious crime" includes "conduct by a large number of persons in pursuit of a common purpose". Among a list of expressed interests is the direct action activities of animal liberation groups. Groups such as the Animal Liberation Front have long been classified as 'terrorists' by the authorities, with anyone convicted of involvement receiving long prison sentences. However, the level at which these animal liberation groups operate is hardly grounds for the involvement a security service. M15 have a multitude of special powers of operation well beyond public scrutiny. Their paperwork is protected from the usual rules of court disclosure, their operations are all secret and any member of the service speaking publicly about official malpractice is liable to special punishment under the Official Secrets Act.

The second clause of the Security Services Bill concerns the issuing of "property warrants", an application procedure allowing M15 agents to break into houses and vehicles in order to place eavesdropping devices. These applications will be approved or disapproved by Michael Howard.

The complaints procedure against M15 agents and officers is also presently controlled by Michael Howard and monitored by the Security Service tribunal set up in 1989.

Of the 187 complaints dealt with by the tribunal since it was set up, every one has been dismissed.

Effectively anyone suspected of having anything to do with the animal liberation cause will become a legitimate target for M15 surveillance. Naturally the implications of this situation for environmental protesters is alarming to say the least. Indeed, with the definition of "serious crime" as loose as it is, the implications of these new powers extend to every level of domestic protest or political campaigning.

The Security Services Bill consists of two clauses written on one page of paper. The ramifications could fill volumes.

Beef scare sparks a vegetarian revolution

AN EXPLOSION in sales of vegetarian cookery books means that a bad week for beef has been a good one for English bookshops. Waterstone's has reported a phenomenal 300 per cent increase in the number of vegetarian titles sold since last month, and sales of one title considered to be the "bible" of vegetarian cuisine, The Moosewood Cookbook by Mollie Katzen, have soared by 600 per cent. Other book sales are nine times more than at Christmas, a time when cookery books do well.

When one bright spark in Waterstone's head office planned a spring promotion of meat-free recipe books last November, he could not have imagined that headlines in March would be warning of the dangers of eating beef.

Across the country, the scare over BSE has prompted anxious consumers seeking alternatives to beef to ask bookshops for advice, and many have reported a huge upsurge of interest in vegetarian and vegan titles.

'INDEPENDENT'

'SQUALL' SPRING '96

Violence flares at port

A PROTEST turned to violence when demonstrators confronted lorries exporting live animals from the Essex port of Brightlingsea.

Around 150 people hurled eggs and a smoke bomb at the convoy last night. One window was broken but no one was injured.

Around 40 police were present but no arrests were made.

A police spokesman said: "The action of these people not only jeopardised the safety of the police officers but also the safety of members of the public."

'IPSWICH EVENING STAR' 20-10-95

Hunt abandoned after protest

More than 100 saboteurs, some wearing balaclavas and armed with pickaxe handles, forced huntsmen to abandon a meet yesterday. Protesters converged at midday on Petworth Park in Petworth, West Sussex to disrupt the Leconfield and Cowdray hunt. For more than an hour, huntsmen and saboteurs faced each other in an uneasy stand-off before police advised officials to abandon the hunt. Police escorted the huntsmen and hounds back to nearby kennels and stood guard until the protesters dispersed.

'INDEPENDENT' 10-3-96

HUNDREDS of Ipswich people are facing an uncertain future today as meat company Harris is to close its factory in the town.

Around 350 people will lose their jobs when the Hadleigh Road plant shuts down.

'FELIXTOWE EVENING STAR' 27-2-96

Factory to close with 350 staff out of work

Halt: Major toad ahead!

PLANS for a new industrial site creating 4,500 jobs have been altered — to accommodate toads in a pond in the middle of it. Developers have agreed to create a new home for the creatures which live on the former airfield at Fradley, Staffordshire.

'DAILY MAIL' 19-3-96

● Animal activists across the capital have announced their intention to step up activities against shops and restaurants selling 'exotic' meats, ostrich in particular, which are fast gaining popularity as sales of British beef plummet.

London Animal Action has already held a number of demonstrations outside Sir Andrew Lloyd Webber's productions in the West End recently, since the musical maestro announced his intention to rear up to 400 ostriches on his Hampshire farm.

Ostrich meat, which tastes like fillet steak, is still an expensive novelty in Britain but demand has recently rocketed. Sainsbury's, Tesco and Asda have all approached farmers in a bid to cater for the growing market, much to the despair of animal activists, who claim a lack of suitable slaughterhouse facilities means that ostriches suffer far more than other birds in the run-up to being killed.

High-class catery The Ivy narrowly avoided being targeted for a direct-action demonstration after removing ostrich steak from its menu late last month. Fiona Macdonald-Smith

Plan for 12 turkey sheds is thrown out

AN APPLICATION by Bernard Matthews plc to build 12 turkey sheds housing nearly 80,000 birds was last night rejected by planners.

Members of Waveney District Council's development and operations committee went against the advice of their officers by refusing the application.

The turkey company wants to build the sheds at Ellough, near Beccles, but the proposals have caused a storm of protest in north Suffolk.

Business people, town and parish councils, schools and local residents have united to oppose the plan.

by DAVE LENNARD

Despite more than 100 letters of objection on the impact of heavy traffic, the smell nuisance and damage to wildlife, councillors cited one main objection in refusing the application.

It was that Hill Farm at Ellough is only 260 metres from the proposed position of the sheds and only 40 metres from the surface water collection point.

Councillor Philip Baker summed up the feeling of committee members when he said: "If this application is allowed to go through it will make Hill Farm uninhabitable every time the sheds are cleaned out."

There was all-party support for Mr

Baker's proposal to support the area planning sub-committee and reject the application for the 12 sheds which would each house 6,500 birds. Fifteen councillors voted to reject the proposal, there were two abstentions, and nobody voted in favour of the application.

Council solicitor Bob McGeedy warned members that their reason for refusal "would not stand up at an appeal" and they were risking the substantial costs of an appeal being awarded against the authority.

After the meeting the Marshall family, who live at Hill Farm, said they were relieved, although they know the company could appeal.

'EAST ANGLIAN DAILY TIMES' 18-10-95

Roger Mills found guilty

ANIMAL exporter Roger Mills was last night found guilty of dangerous driving after a tense trial in which he was accused of deliberately mowing down a middle-aged housewife.

The 54-year-old was fined £1,000, with £750 costs, and banned from driving for 12 months, after which he will have to re-sit his driving test. But the sentences were suspended pending the outcome of an appeal which defence barrister James Montgomery said would be lodged immediately.

As Mills, who had denied the charge, left the Harwich Magistrates Court complex in his car, accompanied by wife Lesley and son Adam, animal rights protesters shouted: "Justice, justice."

EAST ANGLIAN TIMES
2-3-96

HOLY COWS

HINDUS in India, who regard cows as sacred, are offering to save some from British abattoirs and give them religious asylum.

'DAILY MIRROR' 20-3-96

British beef offloaded on homeless

The recent fall in beef consumption is only part of a 20-year trend in which Britons have turned away from meat, according to the latest data collected by the Economic and Social Research Council.

Researchers found there had been a marked shift away from buying meat since 1973 and that the move had been strongest among women and young people. A childless, single 30-year-old woman is 20 per cent less likely to buy meat than 20 years ago and her male contemporary is 15 per cent less likely to.

The proportion of people who say they are vegetarians more than doubled from 1984 to 1995, to 4.5 per cent. Sales of meat substitutes - for example, tofu, TVP and Quorn - increased by 279 per cent over the period 1988 to 1991.

Shops and restaurants across London have been attempting to offload hundreds of kilos of British beef - unsaleable since the BSE scare - at hostels catering for the capital's homeless.

Karen Bradford, manager of Crisis FareShare, a charity which distributes surplus fresh food from shops and restaurants to day-centres and night-shelters across the capital, said that the amount of beef they have been given is 'astounding'. 'On average, we collect between ten and 20 kilos of raw meat a day, but on just one evening last week we collected 100 kilos. We are letting the individual projects we supply decide whether they wish to offer it to the homeless. But most people aren't prepared to take the risk.'

Bradford confirmed that almost three-quarters of the projects have refused to accept the beef.

The moves have caused anger and despair among shelter-organisers. 'We're not going to let homeless people become dustbins for unwanted beef,' said a spokesperson for New Horizon drop-in centre. 'We were offered some beef, but we said no. We have made a decision not to touch it until we find out the final outcome of this business. Maybe it's another Government way of getting rid of homeless people - by feeding the beef to them!'

A spokesperson from the West London Centre told Time Out: 'We're playing it safe at the moment. We've had people turn up at the door with food I wouldn't feed to my dog, let alone the homeless.'

'TIME OUT' 11-4-96

'INDEPENDENT'
30-3-96

THE Government's attempt to boost consumer confidence has paralysed the British meat industry. The knock-on effect of measures taken last week is threatening the whole agricultural infrastructure.

More than 5,000 people who handle and process meat and poultry are already estimated to have been sacked or put on short time; thousands more will follow.

"We heard of 700 laid off from the meat industry in Northern Ireland on Friday," said Barry Leathwood, head of the agricultural section of the Transport and General Workers Union. "The longer this crisis goes on the greater the chance that we will see thousands of jobs disappear, perhaps for good."

Firemen used a hydraulic ladder to rescue a tropical parrot which flew up a tree in Crawley, Sussex.

'INDEPENDENT' 22-3-96

'DAILY TELEGRAPH' 22-3-96

Some Recommended Reading...

- ALF SUPPORTERS GROUP NEWSLETTER: BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX. £1.50. Contains information concerning A/R prisoners and defence funds, articles and news. Quarterly.
- ARC NEWS: PO Box 339, Wolverhampton WV10 7BZ (01902 711935). Free with SAE. Contains reports of local group activities as well as an up-to-date list of events.
- ANIMALS CONTACT LIST: Veggies, 180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HW. £3. The list provides a coordinated means by which groups can contact one another with details of their work, news of campaigns and requests for support.
- ECO-VEGAN: BM Heal, London WC1N 3XX. Free with SAE. Contains information concerning A/R and Earth Liberation activities and much more besides.
- GREEN ANARCHIST: BCM 1715, London WC1N 3XX. An invaluable paper which contains news, views and an ALF hit-list amongst other things of interest. Write for further details.
- GREEN WORLD: 49, York Road, Aldershot, Hampshire GU11 3JQ (01252 330506). Excellent magazine containing news on the Green movement as well as information about animal issues. 80p an issue. £3.50 for a year's subscription.
- INTERBEING: 91, Clarendon Road, Leeds LS2 9LY (0113 2444289). £1.50 each. A year's subscription of 3 issues £6.00. Produced by the Leeds Network of Engaged Buddhists, the magazine contains articles, stories, poems and reviews.
- LIBERATOR: PO Box 80, Chichester, W. Sussex PO19 4GH. £1.50. Excellent Animal Liberation magazine!
- SLAUGHTER OF THE INNOCENT: Available from BAVA, PO Box 82, Kingswood, Bristol BS15 1YF. A book by Hans Ruesch which is invaluable for those wishing to know about medical fraudulence of vivisection. £5.50 (inc. p&p).
- THE VEGAN: Donald Watson House, 7 Battle Road, St. Leonards-on-Sea, East Sussex TN37 7AA (01424 427393). £1.75. A must for those already vegan or those seeking a vegan lifestyle. Quarterly.
- VEGAN VIEWS: 6, Hayes Avenue, Bournemouth BH7 7AD. Available through subscription of £3.00 for 4 issues. The magazine aims to act as an exchange between its readers.

Donations

We are extremely grateful to the following people who have made a donation of £4 or more to help us produce and distribute this magazine:

Alan & Angela, M Anderson, M Britton, Cambridge Animal Rights, S Chamberlain, BA Clifton, RH Cottrell, Ethical Wares, L William Giddings, Lee Hall, Liela Harvey, Ms. JD Hogg, K Jolly, Jean Latimer, Jill Russell, JE Shiner, Sara Simms, Michael Sutcliffe, Robert Tucker and Toni Vernelli.

Extra thanks go to Jill Russell for her invaluable help and to M Cooper, Sandra Francis, Monica Harvey, C Humphries, Michael Maas, Mary McShane, Pat Murgatroyd, Mark Organ, Montserrat Thompson, Tim Thompson, Diane Westwood, Dave Wetton and P & J Zehler, who are all donating on a monthly basis by standing order.

Arkangel Comment

This is the part of the magazine where you get to have your say.

We try to print everything we receive - providing it is to do with Animal Liberation, and is not intended to further some other aim - political or otherwise. The articles do not necessarily represent the views of the editors.

Please remember, an article submitted on computer disk (any format) will save us a lot of typing, but of course we welcome your thoughts in any form!

Robin's News and Views!

By Robin Webb

Now, where was I?

It's now over a year ago that I was writing my last article for Arkangel, sitting in my cell at Winchester Prison, full of hope at how the live exports battle was going, criticising certain employees of national organisations and looking forward to the time when all our goals have been achieved. Yes, it's been a long time and you didn't get an article from me in Arkangel 14 because my bail conditions prevented it. But, your luck's run out so here I am again...

Before I carry on I'd like to refer briefly to 'The Right Road?' by 'K' in Arkangel 14 as it seems to be telling me what I should do, say and feel. My first feeling was that it shouldn't have been published as, at that time, I was legally prevented from writing a response. That said, the Arkangel editors are no different to me or the rest of you out there; we all make mistakes sometimes. So, for those of you looking for a rift, sorry, there isn't one!

I won't spend much time on 'K' as I'm dismissive of those who criticise named individuals while hiding behind anonymity. All I will say is that although I don't condone everything that the ALF, ARM, HRS, JD or whatever does, it's not my place to condemn any action that has been carried out with the sincere intention of furthering animal liberation. It's not my place to do it and I will not do it. I'll repeat what I've written in the past; the only thing I will unreservedly condemn is animal abuse. For those of you who may ask "what about rape, etc." - just think for a moment. Humans are animals, rape is an abuse. I think that covers it? Good night 'K', wherever you are.

Where have I been?

Having missed an edition of Arkangel I don't think you'd have the patience to read all that's happened to me... I wouldn't if I were in your shoes. So, I'll just skim over the main things since August 1994.

During early August 1994 the Hampshire Loonies searched my home in the wake of a contamination claim by the Poultry Liberation Organisation, then two weeks later on the south coast I was arrested by the Anti-terrorist Squad and hit with the ludicrous firearms charges. Released on bail for that one with strict conditions which included a 20 mile travel restriction and signing on at a police station seven days a week. My co-defendant had no travel restrictions and it was made clear by the prosecution that the only reason was to prevent the ALF Press Office from functioning. That, of course, failed.

The Hampshire Loonies then arrested me in November 1994 to question me about the PLO incident and released me on police bail following an interview during which, as usual, my voice doesn't even appear on the tape. They arrested me again when I answered to bail in January 1995, searched my house for the second time and took me down to Winchester police station where, over the weekend, DS Alan Betts said to me, "Bail conditions have failed so we're going to lock you up to shut you up." I was then remanded to Winchester Prison.

Following one of my court appearances in March 1995 I was kidnapped (sorry, arrested) for conspiracy to cause explosions with intent to endanger life and attempting to cause GBH. That all turned out to refer to the first Justice Department actions; I've never been charged and was returned to the prison the following night. I think even the Hampshire Loonies have given up on that one.

Back to the PLO charges to which have since been added the March 1994 PLO and October 1994 Animal Rights Militia contamination hoaxes. Early July was the pre-trial review at Winchester Crown Court at which, for the first time, I met my co-defendant on the August PLO charge, Gillian Peachey. The prosecution offered no evidence against Gillian, the judge returned formal verdicts of 'not guilty' against her and my conspiracy charge was withdrawn.

Later that month I got bail at last with one of the conditions being 'not to be party in any way to any publicity for or on behalf of the Animal Rights organisations or any body with similar aims and objectives'. There were many other conditions but that one had the effect of shutting me up more firmly than prison walls. Just to refresh your memories, I'd been granted bail (albeit on very strict conditions) for alleged possession of a sawn-off shotgun and ammunition but locked up for issuing a press release...

So, I couldn't do anything, say anything or go anywhere except attend Keith's appeal in November which counsel advised me would be okay. My trial on the three contamination charges began at Winchester in December 1995 with the judge being changed a few days beforehand for unspecified 'security reasons'. The new one turned out to be a High Court judge no less, who was, to everyone's amazement, found to be an enthusiastic hunt member. Although Gillian Peachey declined to give evidence for me I really must thank many of the prosecution witnesses who I'd have been happy to call for my defence.

The prosecution concluded its case at the beginning of the second week; my barrister put a legal argument and the judge instructed the jury to find me not guilty on all three counts. However, the police refused to return any of my property; I was soon to discover why...

With the Winchester trial out of the way and only the Lewes one to come, my bail conditions were relaxed a little at the end of the year. But, just five short weeks after my 'not guilty' verdicts, a knock on the front door: "Hampshire CID, may we come in?" ... "Have you got a warrant?" ... "We don't need one, you're under arrest." So, they arrested me (for the fourth time), searched my house (for the third time) and took me off to Hampshire yet again.

The charges from this latest lunacy are that 'at Hampshire or elsewhere on days unknown between 01.01.91 and 17.01.96 you jointly (with five other named people) conspired together to unlawfully incite persons unknown to commit criminal damage contrary to Section 1 (1) and

(3) of the Criminal Damage Act 1971'. The actual damage hasn't been specified and I only really know one of my co-accused; two of them I'd never even heard of!

For those of you out there who, like me, can't see what I'm supposed to have done let's put it into plain English: 'somewhere in the world (they don't know where) over a five-year period (they're not sure when) I conspired with people (most of whom I don't know) to incite other people (they don't know who) to commit criminal damage (they don't know what)', and that although we were all charged on the 16th January the conspiracy continues into the following day. Hampshire Loonies? You've got it!

My trial at Lewes with Dave Hammond on the firearms charges was due to begin on 25th March but, with just one week's notice, has been rescheduled for the 10th July. The first court appearance on the new conspiracy charges will be at Portsmouth Magistrates on 17th April; the trial won't be until the middle of 1997 at the very earliest. Wake me up when it's all over.

More about the 'open letter'...

Elsewhere in this edition of Arkangel you should find 'An Open Letter to the Animal Rights Movement'. To prevent any misunderstandings about its origins I'd like to make it clear that, although I drafted the letter, it was not my original idea. Two of the other signatories suggested a joint letter quite independent of each other; more people put forward their ideas of what points should be covered and these were incorporated into the original draft. Numerous changes were made to that draft, both by the signatories themselves and others in the movement with whom it was discussed. The final letter was fully agreed on by all the signatories and, as described by one of them, is to be seen as a 'joint effort'.

One part that may need clarification are the 'certain circumstances' in which it would be understandable if people 'named names'. Personally, the only circumstances I can think of would be at Castlereagh or Paddington Green. Both places specialise in breaking down 'terrorist' suspects under interrogation. As long as the statements are later denied in court I can accept that some people would give information (true or otherwise) in an effort to end the virtual torture that is practised there. In all other cases 'no comment' or silence is the best course of action, CJA or no CJA!

Robin in Peacheyland

I wasn't going to dwell on Gillian Peachey's refusal to give evidence for me at my Winchester trial, thinking that the 'open letter' would be sufficient. However, I understand that Gillian has an article printed in this issue explaining her side of things so I'd better go into more detail. Hopefully, this will be the end of it.

The first PLO action was in March 1994 followed by other claims including a similar contamination hoax the following August. It seems clear that, once the PLO name had been used, others took it up in the same way that anyone may use the ALF umbrella.

In August 1994 I received a copy of a PLO contamination claim with a covering letter that read: 'Dear ALF Press Office (and Robin), Enclosed is a letter that has been sent with samples of contaminated eggs to INS, Meridian, The News and The Echo. Contaminated eggs HAVE been placed onto Tesco shelves in the South as a protest over their patronage of Stonegate Farmers Ltd., who despite stating otherwise, are the biggest intensive battery farmers in the South. Please press release this. PLO.' I called INS News Agency who hadn't received the claim and, at their request, faxed them a copy of the statement. Later that day I did an interview with Meridian TV.

Meanwhile, Gillian and her employer were arrested. At the employer's bungalow where Gillian worked, police searched the refuse bins and found Stonegate egg boxes, damaged eggs and torn-up copies of the PLO statement together with address labels to the media outlets listed above.

Until her arrest I had never heard of Gillian and the first time I spoke to her was shortly afterwards when she phoned the ALF Press Office to ask that the ALF SG be told she had been released on bail. As the 'open letter' states, the first time we met was in the dock of Winchester Crown Court at our pre-trial review during July 1995. The prosecution offered no evidence against her and the judge returned formal verdicts of 'not guilty'.

Later, the reason was given that Gillian had been under surveillance and had been seen to deposit some things in a litter bin and recycling skips at Winchester. Those items were retrieved by the police, put into the car boot and taken to Eastleigh police station. In short, it was discovered that one of the surveillance team made a statement that the items were put into a locked store overnight while the other member said they were left in the car boot until the next morning. Under normal circumstances that evidence could have been withdrawn as being 'unsafe' while continuing with the case using a great deal of other available evidence.

At my trial last December most of the exhibits produced on the August 1994 count were from items seized during the arrests of Gillian and her employer. The prosecution made clear Gillian's involvement and the judge, during his instructions to the jury, also made it clear who he considered responsible. It was also queried why the address labels, eggs and statements to the media outlets had been dumped but the letter and copy statement to me still sent.

Gillian says that on solicitors' advice she couldn't admit the August claim as she may be charged with similar contaminations and that it would attract more police attention to her. Both my solicitor and barrister, who have done many animal rights cases over the years, said that just wasn't so. Gillian had been found not guilty of the August incident and couldn't be tried again, as for attracting police attention, not only did they know Gillian had been responsible for the August incident, she had been found guilty of the incendiary device at Botleigh Grange Hotel for which she walked away with a suspended sentence and a year to pay compensation. What more police attention could you attract?

All Gillian would have had to do is say she had nothing to do with the March 1994 PLO hoax, that she had planned the August 1994 PLO action but that she didn't know me at the time and I had no prior knowledge of it; that she wouldn't be stupid enough to try any further contamination hoaxes having been arrested for one, and to explain why I had been sent the claim while all the media mail-outs had been dumped. That's basically it; with Gillian's article I leave you to make up your own minds. Me? I just want to get on with fighting for animal liberation.

Time to go and do something...

To close on a positive note; the live exports war continues. We CAN win this one. BUT ...not unless more people get down to Dover. There's no need to just stand at the docks, a recent demo in the town itself brought Dover to a virtual standstill. Just think, the tourist season is approaching!

During February I was a passenger on a van which went for a drive around the controlled area of the docks ...quite by accident, we got lost. Somehow it ended up that the van went straight through a barrier which the police dropped just as we were passing. How irresponsible, it was impossible to pull up in time! The van was finally stopped as we were still trying to find our way out onto the public highway and rammed front and rear by police and customs vehicles. A nice Kent police sergeant who seemed to have a problem controlling his feelings tore the door mirror off, broke the driver's side window and tried throttling the driver. So much for non-violence. That was the same day they arrested a 73-year-old woman for breach of the peace. Turned out to be a Dover resident on her way to the shops. Don't you think they're losing it?

Meanwhile, I'm not asking you to do anything illegal (as if I would...), I'm just saying 'if you can get down to Dover to protest then please go there rather than do anything else'. It doesn't matter if it's a day when the trucks of misery aren't going through, Dover can still be disrupted. Until Dover stops this evil trade then Dover is guilty 24 hours a day. Let's show them the REAL power of the movement... See you there.

(Editors' Note: 'K' was critical of Arkangel's contents and we felt it proper to include those views. We re-state, Robin Webb is not, and never has been, involved in the production of Arkangel.)

Divided We'll Stand?

by Christopher Robin

While reading Arkangel magazine, I feel that the Animal Liberation Movement is truly united; that within its pages we are bound together by a common purpose, fighting side by side towards a common goal. I feel uplifted, confident that Animal Liberation is within our grasp, that animal abusers can be conquered and animal abuse crushed. I know, in reality, the movement only stands united within the magazine, and that groups as diverse as Animal Aid and the Justice Department will never actually fight alongside one another. But that doesn't really matter! Just because groups and organisations don't agree on tactics, or even on goals, does not mean that Animal Liberation cannot be achieved.

When the Animal Liberation Front, along with local animal rights groups and Lynx, successfully decimated the fur trade, it didn't matter who achieved the most because the end result was all that mattered. Within a movement as large and complex as this there is bound to be infighting, arguments and downright nastiness. What is more important is the underlying fact that we all know that animal abuse is corrupt and barbaric and we all know that it has to be fought on as many fronts as possible. We don't have to necessarily agree with each other about how it is being fought, just that it is!

Fortunately, there is no danger of this movement disintegrating. It is far too well established for that to happen, so any splits which do occur are merely just thorns in all of our sides. However, with every day that passes, so many more animals are brutally murdered and within the mounting animal abuse that exists in this sad world, we too are merely thorns. There exists a bottomless pit into which millions upon millions of animals are falling; a well of human greed masquerading as human need. United, we could form a 'net' over this pit, but divided, the holes may be too large.

There is a saying, "United we stand, divided we fall." However, it may just be possible for us to adhere to a new saying: "We will stand united if we can, but we can stand divided if we must." The truth is, no one knows what IS most effective, so tolerance, understanding and acceptance of one another's methods is probably the best way forward. Who knows, we may even achieve it!

Work Together

by Jason

For most of my life I have worked an active and supporting role in the struggle for animal rights. Unfortunately I have mainly worked alone due to lack of like-minded people in the area. I can understand this as almost everyone involved in direct action is very cagey of strangers approaching them with an over-zealous interest in their work or campaigns. I know, as I am the same myself.

Although not having the opportunity to do much with a group, it has been very good to observe the animal rights movement without anybody else influencing my actions, except my own drive to destroy or hinder the actions of animal abusers, although there have been times when a second pair of hands would have been very welcome. In all my efforts my only goal is to save animals and give them a better future, with no personal gain or a thrill of an ego trip.

Which gets me to the point that over the years I have read and kept up-to-date with many animal rights issues by getting information from charities, organisations, magazines, investigations and underground publications. I may be wrong, but I have noticed that groups seem to attack each other about certain actions and policies they follow and groups of certain aspects of the AR movement being barred from national animal rights fairs, etc. because the organisers do not agree with certain actions carried out by these groups. This is crazy! Animal abuse is on the increase every second. It's time to work together and break down these barriers that keep many of us apart.

It's time to ask ourselves, are we doing it for the animals or are we doing it to be looked up to, an ego trip or to out-do each other? If your group or you as an individual is working, pure and simple, to save the animals then you deserve all the luck and success in the world for your cause. But the rest of you should kindly step down and let the animal lovers do their work. The movement is missing the trust that it needs so we can all work together for a better future for the animals. It's THEY we need to make smile again: all they have got is our love for them to save them from the hunters, vivisectors, whalers, fishermen and all other evil abusers in this world. So all individuals, groups, organisations and charities, forget about your differences, break down those barriers, trust in our movement and work together to save more animals lives. Their future is in our hands!

An Open Letter to the Animal Rights Movement

We are writing this letter in both anger and sadness. Anger that certain people can cause so much dissent within this great movement; sadness that we have perhaps taken too long in confronting the issue.

Although the subject of this letter has been discussed by numerous groups and concern expressed for some time, the crunch came at the end of February when a hoax bomb was sent to Jeannette McClunan with the threat that next time it would be for real. Whether or not those identified later in this letter were responsible for the incident, they must surely be answerable for laying the foundations.

That said, this is not intended as a witch-hunt nor an attempt to drive anyone out of the movement. Let's face it, we and the animals need all the support we can get. But, enough is enough; it's time to call a halt to something that's already out of hand. In short, it's time to remember that we are fighting animal abuse, not each other.

The signatures at the end of this letter do not imply that we are somehow more important than others who may dedicate their lives, merely that most of you will know who we are, what we stand for and that we do not write things like this lightly. There would, we are sure, have been many more signatories but for the fact that we didn't want to take up too much space!

What, then is the problem? Well, a small group of people in the South of England have been making allegations and doing certain things, for reasons best known to themselves, which have caused great distress to individuals and their families. As some of them are now responsible for the magazine 'Liberator', there is a real danger that the movement itself could be at risk as their influence subtly spreads. We cannot go into detail as that would require a book, so please allow us to briefly cover the main concerns ...or rather, those we can discuss openly.

Firstly, who are these people? Those involved include Gaynor Ford, Sally Jenkins (aka Sally Bowers), Gillian Peachey and, to a lesser extent, Sandra White.

The earliest known problem began several years ago when allegations were made that June Bailey was a grass. June was subjected to enormous harassment including a spate of letters from Bradford, in the North of England, which were later shown to have originated from Sally Jenkins. Among many other incidents, June's car suffered £1,000 worth of damage. Later, Sally persuaded the ALFSG to list June Bailey as a grass. When June found out, she approached the ALFSG with evidence to the contrary which also showed Sally's involvement. The ALFSG removed June's name from the list of grasses.

We wish to make it clear that, in our opinion, there is absolutely no evidence that June Bailey has ever been a grass.

More recently, allegations of grassing have been made against Jeannette McClunan. A 2-page article by Gillian Peachey appeared in the ALFSG Newsletter for Autumn 1995 which named Jeannette as a grass. This was accompanied by an ALFSG editorial explaining why they would not be listing Jeannette as such. At that time, and continuing since, Jeannette McClunan and her family have been subjected to harassment and intimidation on a scale which few, if any, animal abusers have had to face. Even if Jeannette was a grass, such actions are quite out of proportion - energies would be better used fighting animal abuse.

Again, we wish to make it clear that, in our opinion, there is absolutely no evidence that Jeannette McClunan has ever been a grass.

Nevertheless, we can understand in certain circumstances if a person 'names names' under duress in a police interrogation, as long as they do not confirm it in open court. Such people should, at the very least, be shunned, which is all that happened to those whose statements helped Ronnie Lee get 10 years. As for those who deliberately act as police informers - we don't particularly care what happens to them. Not only are such people endangering the liberty of good activists, they are also costing innocent non-human animals their lives. Why should we care?

At Robin Webb's trial last December at Winchester it was suddenly revealed by Gillian Peachey, who had pledged her 'total support', that she would not give evidence in his defence. The reasons given by Gillian for refusing to testify are not, in our opinion, valid in any way. Under the same circumstances, none of us would have had the slightest hesitation in giving the relevant evidence.

Claims and stories by this clique seem almost endless; they include doubtful 'attacks' on them, non-existent romantic attachments with prisoners, and other bizarre incidents.

More sinister are the claims which could 'open doors', one instance being Gillian Peachey's claim to numerous people that she has been a friend of Robin Webb for ages. The truth is that the first time they ever met was in the dock at Winchester Crown Court last July when the prosecution offered no evidence against Gillian and the judge returned formal 'not guilty' verdicts. Robin's charges, of course, continued on to trial. The only other time they met was on the second day of Robin's Winchester trial when Gillian refused to be a defence witness.

A number of people, including some prisoners, have said that although the 'Liberator' is, on the whole, a good read they are surprised that, for example, the latest edition devotes a half-page to Robin Webb's nemesis, Det. Supt. Desmond Thomas, but makes no mention of Robin's trial during which the editor received daily updates!

Although all four people are ultimately responsible for their individual actions, we believe the motivating force to be Sally Jenkins. We are not necessarily saying that they don't care about animals, just that they seem to have got their priorities terribly wrong. It's time to stop, think, reassess what it's all about and then carry on the fight against the real enemy - animal abuse.

There are many other questions, some of which we could print, some we couldn't. But we've tried to keep it short and low-key. What is motivating these people? We don't know. Are they really dodgy? We don't know. Are they trying to 'divide and rule' the movement for themselves or others? We don't know.

What we do know without a doubt is that we've seen and heard much more than enough about them to make us very, very uneasy. We suggest you think on...

It's taken a lot of soul-searching and discussion to write this letter; we hope it has the desired effect of ending this sad situation once and for all. C'mon, let's go fight animal abuse!

With love, liberation and solidarity,
Gurjeet Aujla, John Curtin, Nancy Phipps, Zab Phipps, Max Watson, Robin Webb
March 18th 1996.

Horrorway Revisted!

by Gillian Peachey

To everyone's disgust, the ALF Supporters Group and other good people have again had to put up with obnoxious attention and legalised vandalism. This hasn't diminished the effectiveness of the SG with regard to looking after those of us who are lazing around in enforced inactivity. (Sorry to disappoint you Uncle Arni!). Cheers to those of you who have taken over from Simon who did an ace job for us under often difficult circumstances. All prisoners have appreciated this, even if there have been some people who, I understand, haven't always done so. Also a huge "thank you" to all those people taking time out to write and give support. I may be developing writer's cramp but really DO appreciate my mail bag and look forward to it no end!

This certainly wasn't where I'd intended to be, but certain anti-social gits had other ideas on the subject. Six counts (so far), all well-spiteful and it all looks set to drag on, which is hardly a surprise to any of us. Contrary to rumours and some pretty vicious innuendo that's been doing the rounds in certain quarters, I can assure you all that animal rights in Hampshire and Sussex is alive and well and kicking. Despite all efforts it WILL continue for as long as our friends have a need of us. Whatever it takes - however long it takes - WE have only one priority - to relieve and remove animal abuse, whatever form it takes.

I'm also only too well aware that Robin Webb was none too happy when my solicitors (and barrister) dissuaded me from standing up for him during his trial on the ludicrous contamination charges. I had told Robin (and Tim) that I would do whatever was in my power to assist. When I spoke to my legal bods (as one does) they all came down on me like the proverbial ton of bricks, and told me that if I wanted to be a martyr and spend the next few years in prison, then go ahead and get on with it! They felt that if I stood up saying, "It was me", I would be laying myself wide open for not only any existing contamination charges but also any possible future contaminations. It would then be a tough difficult to try and convince anyone of my innocence if I'd already admitted to previous guilt on the same offence. It was fortuitous that the prosecution evidence was as weak as everybody thought and I wasn't needed. I was delighted, and only hope that both Dave Hammond and Robin Webb fare as well with the charges to be heard against them.

To those of you, like me, hanging around in these dumps - all love, respect and support, as always. We'll all be back to fight again! To all of you real people out there, keep fighting in whatever way your conscience dictates. Our friends, the animals that are so horribly abused, need you more than ever. Love and liberation always.

WOOL MACHINES

by Eva Batt

When considering animal exploitation and the by-products of butchery, many animal lovers will think "Wool is an animal product we CAN use, knowing that no creature has suffered to provide it." In fact, they may argue that the sheep are burdened with too much of the stuff and that the sheep farmer kindly relieves them of some of it.

Why Do Sheep Grow Too Much Wool?

Nature, you can be sure, had no hand in it. Research scientists over the years have bred a Merino sheep which is exaggeratedly wrinkled. The more wrinkles, the more wool. Unfortunately, greater profits are rarely in the sheep's best interests. In Australia, more wrinkles mean more perspiration and greater susceptibility to fly-strike, a ghastly condition resulting from maggot infestation in the sweaty folds of the sheep's over-wrinkled skin. To counteract this, farmers now perform an 'operation' without anaesthetic called 'mulesing' in which sections of flesh around the anus are sliced away, leaving a painful bloody wound.

Without human interference, sheep would grow just enough wool to protect them from the weather, but scientific breeding techniques have ensured that these animals have become wool-producing monstrosities.

Their unnatural overload of wool (often half their body weight) brings added misery during summer months when they often die from heat exhaustion. Every year hundreds of thousands of mature sheep die of cold soon after shearing. The Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Research Organisation (NSW) reminds farmers that a closely shorn sheep is more sensitive to cold than a naked man. Presumably the farmer would know of such a possibility, but no doubt this is a calculated risk and the high price of wool covers the cost of his dead sheep. In such commercial undertakings no consideration would be given to the suffering of the animals.

When the Wool Machine Wears Out?

The lucky ones will be transported vast distances in unsuitable trucks and trains, will be subjected to callous handling and sheer thoughtlessness. Most often they are crowded into two-tiered trucks for their three or four day journey to the slaughterhouse; they receive neither food nor water and stand all the way, the sick or clumsy who may fall are trampled by their fellow frightened creatures. Of course some are dead on arrival. Those that can still stand are harried down the gangplank by men using electric prods, assisted by yapping dogs (time is much more precious than the life of an animal) and the dead and dying are dragged off and thrown into heaps. Some stagger and fall down the space between the train and the platform - another 'calculated risk' but no doubt less costly than humane handling.

The unlucky ones in Australia may also suffer the ultimate cruelty of live export to the Middle East. In 1982, six million sheep were herded into ships (up to 120,000 per ship) where they are forced to stand in their own urine and faeces for weeks in dark holds. Amidst the stench, sheep lie dying whilst their fellows try to survive on powdery pellet food and urine-contaminated water. A further horror awaits them in the Middle East, where witnesses have seen a sheep's throat cut by a knife in the street, where it slowly choked on its own blood, or blinded and bundled into the boot of a car for later home slaughter.

Farming Conditions

Also every year, in Australia alone, about ten million lambs die before they are more than a few days old. This is due largely to unmanageable numbers of sheep and inadequate stockmen.

In Australia it is not necessary to use anaesthetics for 'operations' performed on stock animals, so mulesing, tail docking, ear clipping and castration of sheep can be performed by unskilled farm hands. Methods of castration are still quite barbaric; a rubber ring may be used to cut off the blood supply to the testicles causing them and the scrotum to wither, or the testicles may even be bitten off by the farmer, who refers to them as 'oysters of the bush'.

Still more suffering is caused by foot rot and other harrowing complaints to which the wool machines are subject. Dr. Harry Lillie has on film a picture of some of these poor creatures literally trying to walk on their knees - the direct result of man's greedy exploitation and neglect.

Realising the unsuitability of farming conditions, farmers in Victoria are now keeping sheep indoors, intensively, to produce a super wool called Sharlea for the European market. No flies, no rain - just concrete floors in sunless sheds.

Shearing

When we watch a sheep-shearing demonstration on television we are inclined to forget that we are only seeing the experts. True, they seem to handle the animal well, and the job neatly and quickly without causing obvious distress. But these are not the run-of-the-mill shearers. On an educational radio programme for children a sheep farmer explained that every shearer has a blood stauncher standing by whose duty it is to dab tar on the cuts.

However it appears that, in future, sheep may be plucked rather than shorn, as a new drug, cyclophosphamide, has been found to have a hair loosening effect. If generally adopted it could result in millions of absolutely naked sheep for whom some kind of protection would be essential. As sheep are notoriously susceptible to bad weather even after normal shearing, various suggestions have been put forward including plastic macs and even spraying the sheep with a waterproof chemical.

Transport

The Sidney dockyards are not the only places where sheep (and other animals) are callously treated. Newspaper journalists have reported the intense suffering endured by badly handled sheep during transport from this country to Dunkirk, Marseilles and Algiers.

In one instance we are told of twelve wagons leaving Dover on a cargo ship loaded with nearly 800 sheep. This included 180 ewes, shorn only two days before, which had spent a bitterly cold night in the open. Two and a quarter hours after arrival at Dunkirk most of them were reloaded, 80 to a truck bound for Marseilles. On arrival, 25 were lame and one so weak its destruction was urged by the observers. Promises to do this were given, but nevertheless this sheep, with others was taken on to Algiers where it was dragged off the ship to die on the dockside.

To quote a few of the journalists who supplied pictures; "At Algiers sheep which had been neither fed nor watered since leaving Marseilles found a bale of hay on the dockside. It was not there for their benefit but they fought one another to reach it. Then a lorry driver, trying to get through, drove straight at them, he knocked one flying and broke its leg. The investigators dashed forward. No-one else cared a damn. They insisted that the sheep should be taken by lorry to the slaughterhouse. Again a promise was given but never fulfilled. The sheep had to hobble to its death."

Conclusion

In future, whenever you may be tempted to buy wool, please remember the cruel treatment that may have attended its production. Remember that if people stopped eating mutton and lamb tomorrow, sheep would continue to be bred and exploited in cruel ways for the sake of their wool alone. So long as anyone continues to condone, by supporting, this infamous trade, it will continue. As in the case of so many things, it is the purchaser who has the power to put an end to such organised, but profitable, callousness. Wool users are supporting butchery by subsidising the production cost of lamb and mutton joints - even though they may not consume them.

Of course it is just possible that the wool for that attractive pullover you were planning to buy came from the sheep which had never been chilled, branded, bought, jostled and sold in a market place like an old saucepan, but had only one owner, a kindly shepherd who cared for their welfare. It just may be, but the odds are stacked against it. Can one take the risk and live with the knowledge that in all probability one has aided and abetted the callous exploitation of those other peace loving vegetarians - the gentle sheep?

Copies of this article are available from:
Campaign Against Leather and Fur (CALF)
BM8889, London WC1N 3XX
Please send an S.A.E.

Animal Rights Prisoners

Arkangel gives its full support to animal liberation prisoners. In the past we have given details of names, locations and prison numbers. Now we only list the names of those in prison and ask those who wish to make contact with prisoners to contact the ALF Supporters Group for up-to-date information. This is because Arkangel Magazine is produced less frequently than the ALF SG information and could be out of date by the time you read it; so this change is for purely practical reasons.

For further information please write to:
ALF SG, BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX

Prisoners at the time of going to press:

Melanie Arnold, Gurjeet Aujla, Dave Callender,
Darren Cole, Rod Coronado, Michael Green,
Angie Hamp, Niel Hansen, Keith Mann,
Laura Nicol, Gillian Peachey, Dominic Peaty,
Mike Roberts, Diane Selvanayagam,
Geoff Sheppard, Charles Skinner, Barbara Trenholm.

Fines - To Pay or Not to pay?

With the upsurge in mass grassroots direct action coupled with an increase in the number of arrests, more and more people are finding themselves subject to heavy fines. To most, this is accepted as an occupational hazard and the fines are grudgingly paid off. Relatively few people give much consideration to the idea of non-payment, and even many of those who do see it more in terms of avoiding forking out financially, rather than looking at it from a broader political perspective. What follows is a personal view on the ethics and implications of non-payment.

Often, as activists, we appreciate that we are breaking the law of the land, but we carry out our given action because we are driven by a higher moral law. To stand proud in court and make no apology for one's action, nor offer any restitution, is extremely empowering. It is essential to confront one's own fears of imprisonment; it is this fear the authorities rely upon to prevent us taking control of our own lives. Once this fear is overcome, you are no longer restricted in your actions by financial considerations and more likely to partake in actions where the penalty might be uncertain (eg. hunt sabbing under the CJA). If then in the future you are unfortunate enough to find yourself sentenced to a long term on the inside, you know you can handle it. You have effectively taken control of your own life away from the powers that be. The cost to keep you in prison is a significant drain on 'their' resources and mass disobedience of this kind would lead to the system being unworkable. It costs £350+ per week to have you locked up; imagine the potential if animal rights, environmental, peace activists, etc. were all prepared to stand together in their refusal to co-operate with the courts... (this brings us on to the question of whether to actually attend court for trial, etc. in the first place, but that is another story, maybe for a future issue!).

So, how to go about it... As was stated earlier, this is a personal view, and it is obviously for each to make up her/his own mind on just what course to take; whether to play the system, totally ignore it, etc. But anyone mapping a relatively unexplored territory has a responsibility to make that map available to others.... As soon as you are found guilty in court you have a chance to open a dialogue. You can then state that you refuse to pay on moral grounds and, if you don't get cut off, expand on this (for example, a speech on how the law doesn't represent the people is particularly good for bloodsports/live exports cases and gives everyone present a clear 'hook', so your action/statement is more likely to lodge in their minds and niggle at their consciences like a piece of food between the teeth). You will then be 'ordered' to pay, sent away and given a specified time period in which to make payment. When no payment is forthcoming the magistrates can either issue a distress warrant, i.e. call in the bailiffs (simply avoided by not answering your door to strangers, or just grinning at them out of the window, which really pisses them off!) or else they can recall you to court. If you fail to attend, a warrant backed with bail will usually be issued. You SHOULD be informed about this, but don't bank on it. It gives you an opportunity to go along to your local nick and sign a form declaring that you will appear before the court on a given date.

Now, this is where it gets confusing! You may go along, or you may decide you have more pressing business (in which case a NO BAIL WARRANT will be issued authorising your arrest and production before the next available court). Either way, sooner or later you end up back before the magistrates (another chance for a political speech/initiating dialogue, depending on your emphasis). It is then their job to look at every possible way to get that money out of your grubby little clutch. Since bailiffs haven't worked and you're still refusing point blank to cough up a single copper, their last option before prison is to attach it to Income Support. They can't attach it to Unemployment Benefit, Sickness Benefit, 'Proper Wages' or any other income but Income Support. We suffered from a couple of severe cases of pathological openness at first regarding our incomes, requiring us to sign off the dole and set up a support fund until they were forced to send us down, thus wiping out our fines. A much simpler option is just to refuse to reveal your income. After all, it's none of their f*cking business anyway and it saves so much hassle for all concerned.

So, now you've forced them into a corner they have no option but to send you to prison. The expressions of sadistic glee which tend to manifest on their faces at this point will turn to dismay as the trickle of dissenters becomes a flood, a trend which is already under way. The 22,000 people imprisoned each year for non-payment have already forced the government to look at ways to cut down on this. At the moment it seems magistrates are under orders to look at every possible way of avoiding jailing defaulters, so now is the time to push it more than ever.

Prison isn't a bundle of laughs (not all the time anyway). After all, you can't usually get a ready supply of vegan flapjacks! To be fair, some activists have gone through hell in prison and been scarred forever by the experience, but this must be put in perspective. In the overwhelming majority of cases the worst thing about prison is the anticipation; the fear of the unknown. Once you get there you are likely to find it's not half as bad as you expected. Look at all the long term prisoners who are inside for their beliefs - they cope, and it can be turned into a positive experience. It's a chance to take time out, to read, get fit, think... and after all, you're not looking at a long term sentence. A fine of up to £200 will get you no more than a week (and you only do half of that, thanks to remission). Unless your fines run into thousands, you're not likely to be looking at a sentence of more than a month, so you'll only spend a fortnight away from home! Beware though if you have several fines; the magistrates can make them run consecutively, one activist recently got 98 days even though none of her individual fines were over £200.

So there you have it. Not as daunting as it may seem, and quite an adventure once you get into the swing of things! If you are considering not paying fines and would like more detailed advice on how to go about it, what to expect, etc. or just want some support, you can contact us at:

Newcastle Animal Rights Coalition
PO Box 1JY, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, NE99 1JY

A Word from Diane

On 20.3.96 Easingwold Magistrates became the first court to hand out a custodial sentence for Aggravated Trespass (5.68 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994). It was a result of a live export protest at Albert Hall Farm, North Yorkshire, when during a placard-waving candlelit demo to mark one year of regular protests at the farm of the UK's biggest live exporter, two activists blocked the drive with their car. The driver promptly D-locking her neck to the steering wheel and attaching herself to the passenger by means of joining hands in a section of drainpipe and securing wrists with a mountaineering clip and tape. A Yates transporter was held up for two hours whilst breakdown services were called in to deal with the obstruction. Finally the activists were removed and arrested, one complete with steering wheel round the neck. This gained considerable publicity but the action was largely carried out with the intention (and result) of having a direct effect.

A couple of days later the activists pleaded guilty to the charge of Aggravated Trespass (obstructing a lawful activity, namely cattle export), partly because they could see no legal defence but also to avoid bail conditions banning them from the farm. The pleas were accepted and the court discussed the possibility of confiscating their car because it had been used to commit a 'serious crime' (aggravated trespass). Sentencing was adjourned for one month in order that probation reports may be compiled. On leaving the court the protesters visited the police station where the steering wheel was being detained but were unsuccessful in the attempts to retrieve it. They pursued an alternative plan and bought a second-hand steering wheel from a scrapyard before paying a visit to the garage where the car was being kept. The CPS (Crown Prosecution Service) had not informed the garage that the car should not be released to the owner - so the steering wheel was fitted on for the activists and they drove the car home.

A month later only one of the two was present for sentencing (the other holidaying at her local prison). The magistrates were none too happy when they discovered that the car they had intended to confiscate was no longer in custody and the whereabouts and indeed the owner of the vehicle could not be established. The activist was able to deliver a speech about how she believes the law to be wrong regarding live exports and why she feels the need to break immoral laws designed to protect money and property to the detriment of sentient beings' lives. The case lasted a considerable length of time and the magistrates retired for over an hour in order to agree upon a sentence. The result was 28 days in custody.

Sitting here in prison I would like to take the opportunity to explain why I feel such a sentence was passed. I have been arrested and convicted numerous times for protests at Albert Hall Farm and I am a known activist with a long list of criminal convictions including Aggravated Trespass. In addition the magistrates were aware that I do not pay fines as a matter of principle, would not serve a community sentence, and have been to prison in the past for animal rights related activities. The magistrates were also exceptionally agitated by the car business. It could be that now one court has taken the lead, others may be more willing to start sending animal rights activists down for Aggravated Trespass. I don't think this will necessarily be the case though. I am writing this as a warning to other activists, I feel it is my responsibility to publicise all the facts of my case. I hope it makes people angry and all the more determined to do what they feel is necessary to bring an end to all animal suffering. At a time when the prisons are over-flowing they would be hard pushed to find space for us if we all stand together, continue as before ...and make the Criminal Justice Act unworkable.

By the way, when the prison van came to court to collect me, there was a surprise in store for them. Another protester, idling around the court premises, trying to blend in with his surroundings, appeared and D-locked the court gates, sitting in front of them displaying a banner: 'Compassion is not a crime: Oppose the CJA'. There was quite a panic, especially as a magistrate was attempting to leave the court to go for his dinner. The point being made was, okay, you can send us down, but don't think we'll make it easy for you. The media loved it all and I believe it got good coverage, including being on Northern ITV News.

This article was written by Diane Selvanayagam from her prison cell in HMP Low Newton, Durham on 26.3.1996.

Poor Calf, Poor Cow

Few people realize that in order to produce milk, cheese, butter and yoghurt in meat-eating and vegetarian diets, cows are subjected to yearly pregnancies. The strong maternal bond between the cow and its new-born calf is broken after a few days; the calf is put on milk substitutes before it consumes 'too much' of its mother's milk. Naturally, they would suckle for 6 months. Only 20-25% of calves go on to provide milk. The remainder are exported to continental veal crates (where they are confined in narrow crates, unable to turn around and fed an iron-deficient liquid diet); killed at 2 weeks for pies, rennet for cheese making and calf skin; or reared for beef (60-70% of beef in the UK originates from, and helps make profitable, the dairy herd).

The modern dairy cow is nothing more than a milk machine; artificially inseminated (60-75%), milked 2-3 times a day, and for 6-7 months each year milked whilst pregnant. Instead of producing 3 litres of milk a day for her calf, she produces 30. Her full udder can weigh up to 50kg (the equivalent of 50 bags of sugar). Not surprisingly, every year 20% of dairy cows go lame, while 25% suffer infections such as mastitis. Her natural life span is 20 years or more but pushed beyond her limits is worn out due to disease (36%), poor yield (28%) or inability to calve (36%) and so is slaughtered for burgers at 3-7 years.

The story doesn't end there. Cattle slurry, 20-40 times more potent at removing oxygen from river water than untreated human sewerage, is probably the major cause of water contamination in the UK - contributing to fish deaths and algae blooms. A cow emits around 200 litres of methane daily - one of the main contributors to global warming. Dairy products contain no dietary fibre and pose a serious threat to human health. The link between foods with a high saturated fat content, such as milk, and heart disease is well established - as is the prevalence of cow's milk allergies in infants.

Consuming dairy products helps to maintain an industry that depends on the exploitation and premature death of one of the gentlest creatures on this planet: the long suffering dairy cow.

Copies of the leaflet 'Poor Calf, Poor Cow' are available from:

The Vegan Society,
Donald Watson House, 7 Battle Road,
St. Leonards-on-Sea, East Sussex TN37 7AA
(01424 427393)

100 for £1.75, 500 for £5.95, 1000 for £10.50, and 2000 for £19.95

Further information concerning the exploitation of cows can be obtained from:

Campaign for Cows,
PO Box 339, Wolverhampton WV10 7BZ

Arkangel Back Issues, T-Shirt, and Cards

Arkangel Back Issues: Numbers 2, 4 & 14 are still available and are FREE of charge! (But please send 50p per magazine to cover the postage.)

T-Shirt: One design is available - The cover of Arkangel Number 10 'Terminangel'. It comes in B&W and is XL only. £6.50 (inc. p&p).

Cards: A set of three cat 'Surimpressions' postcards donated by Brigitte Jacques. Prices are: 10p each, 12 for £1.00, 100+ cards 5p each. Please add 25p p&p for orders of less than 50 cards.

Order from: Arkangel, BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX

Please make cheques payable to 'Arkangel'.

The Fight Against the Fur Trade

by a London Anti-fur Activist

After the phenomenal success of the campaign against the fur trade in the eighties, most people assumed the business was finished. This is not entirely correct, although the number of fur shops in the country is at the time of writing (March 96) only just in double figures. The previous campaign was an excellent example of different tactics complementing each other. Lynx did a good job in raising public awareness of the issues, but would have found it difficult were it not for the devastating ALF campaign which really destroyed the fur trade as it was.

Historical Background

Incendiary devices were placed in numerous department stores which sold fur. The idea was to start a small fire, making the sprinkler system go off, and thus causing thousands of pounds' worth of damage in water damage. But at some stores, such as Debenhams in Luton, staff had switched the sprinkler system off and the whole shop caught fire, causing £8 million damage. The net result was that almost all department stores stopped selling fur. In 1989 the House of Fraser chain announced they were closing the fur departments in all 62 of their stores with the exception of Harrods. Harrods stopped selling fur shortly afterwards.

This left only isolated specialist fur shops, which could be easily picked off one by one, by methods such as constant picketing. On 1st November 1990 activists in Manchester began picketing the Jindo fur shop. By 26th January 1991 the shop was closed. Successes like this were repeated all over the country, closing down almost all the fur shops outside of London. In July 1990 the mis-named Fur Education Council, backed by the British Fur Trade Association and the International Fur Trade Federation, launched a £1 million pro-fur advertising campaign across London. The posters used images designed to portray animal rights activists as mad fanatics who would kill children for the cause, and urged readers to "learn the real facts", without giving any. The whole event was a bit of a fiasco and backfired on the fur trade, particularly as it came in the middle of a sweltering hot summer!

The Current Situation

The anti-fur campaign was so good that in some sense it became a victim of its own success. The anti-fur group Lynx was forced to disband after a libel case brought by the owners of a fur farm, although in reality they would have had little to do anyway. But whilst the fur trade was severely wounded, it was licking its wounds and preparing for a new offensive

(sic) to promote the wearing of fur. In the winter of 1993 Selfridges was exposed in the press for selling fur coats 'under the counter' and re-opened its fur department.

Furriers were also trying to promote fur amongst fashion designers, and the notoriously fickle fashion industry hyped the whole thing up a bit. The new big idea was to try to produce more fur-trimmed coats which could be quietly sold in non-specialist fur shops without arousing too much vitriol from anti-fur campaigners. It would also spread fur garments around because the rapidly diminishing number of pure fur shops meant protesters could concentrate on the few that were left. Although the fashion hype caused a small increase in fur sales for that season, the furriers' optimism was to be short-lived.

Selfridges Targeted

Selfridges was chosen as a focus by London anti-fur activists, and during winter 1993 was extensively picketed, with excellent public support and several passing fur-wearers reduced to tears by the angry rabble. The campaign was backed up by home visits to the company directors of Selfridges. Even though one visit had to be cut short when it was found out that the man had moved six months previously (!) he obviously got to hear about it. Shortly after the home visits Selfridges issued a statement saying that as from February 3rd 1994, due to its "realignment of its future merchandise strategies", it would no longer stock furs. However, a security guard told protesters that it was really the targeting of the top management at their homes that decided it for them.

At this time, the Beauty Without Cruelty Charity launched its "Fur Free 2000" campaign to close down the remaining 14 fur farms left in Britain by the end of the century. By the summer of 1994 there were just ten licensed mink farms left in the UK, killing approximately 47,000 animals every year.

Campaign Intensified

During the summer of 1994 there were weekly pickets of fur shops in central London, but on 3rd October a fur shop was chosen and the action intensified. A campaign, Fur-Free London, was started by local activists and Noble Furs of Regent Street was selected for the non-stop treatment. This was the most prominent fur shop left in London and on a busy shopping street was an ideal location to attack. Demonstrators were out six days a week all over the winter and it had a disastrous effect on sales. By January 28th 1995, Noble Furs, its windows pockmarked by ball-bearing and catapult dents, closed to the public after over fifty years trading. Although they did not go down completely, they moved to a dingy and seedy office around the corner from their old shop. Situated in a deserted alleyway, it attracts no passing trade and they now concentrate on repairs and alterations to fur coats.

Buoyant with the success at Noble Furs, activists moved on to two shops, Jindo Furs in Knightsbridge and Montana Furs on Piccadilly. Jindo Furs finally gave up on 17th June and demonstrators gave them a champagne send-off. Montana Furs proved a little more tenacious, but only a little. Persistent picketing paid off with the shop closing its shutters whenever activists turned up and any enquirers were diverted to the shop next door. Eventually Montana Furs succumbed to the inevitable and stopped trading as a fur shop at the end of July 1995.

This left ten fur shops in central London. Eight of these were in out-of-the-way locations, with shabby decor, and seemed to barely cling on to existence with their fingertips. The two which were the flagships of the fur trade were Philip Hockley Furs on Conduit Street and a relocated and redecorated Zwirns around the corner on Old Bond Street. Both in Mayfair, the most exclusive shopping area of London, the police were none too keen on scruffy animal rights campaigners lowering the tone of the area. Reluctantly, the police let pickets begin at Philip Hockley, much to the proprietor's annoyance.

Philip Hockley

The Philip Hockley fur shop has proved more difficult to shut down than other shop. This is due to a number of factors. Possibly the main reason is that the shop was taken over some years ago by a large fur manufacturer and dealer, with an annual turnover of many millions. This company, Polar Group Ltd., owns a dozen or so fur companies and Philip Hockley is little more than a retail outlet for them, giving them the appearance of a small family-run business. All the money behind them, however, means they can withstand pressure for far longer than genuine family firms. Philip Hockley regularly produce a glossy 16-page advertising brochure which goes out with free newspapers in the affluent Kensington area of London. It is possibly this which means almost all his customers arrive with appointments; he gets very little passing trade, especially as the shop is on a fairly quiet street.

They also installed a video camera to record picketers outside the shop. The proprietor, Michael Hockley, the son of the founder, even went as far as hiding hidden microphones in shrubs outside his shop in an effort to eavesdrop on conversations.

The Bouncer Fiasco

When all this didn't deter the pickets, he came up with a solution with the help of the police. He hired two bouncers to stand outside his shop and hand out pro-fur leaflets. The idea was that if they got there first they were allowed to 'demonstrate', and anti-fur protesters, as a 'counter-demonstration' had to stand on the other side of the road to avoid a breach of the peace occurring. This led to the ludicrous situation of people turning up at 5am in order to 'claim the pitch' before Hockley's bouncers arrived! This continued for a few weeks before the police, as impartial as ever, ordered anti-fur campaigners to stand across the road, not even directly opposite the shop. Understandably, the other shops in the street are not too happy with Philip Hockley pushing his problem outside their front door. As of March 1996 the pickets are going every Saturday, and a major boost to the campaign has been the location of Mr. Michael Hockley's home address. As a company director, he is required by law to have his home address on public record at Companies House, but the address given was long out of date. However, the information was eventually found out by other means and looks to be a useful asset as the campaign continues.

The International Fur Trade in London: Brokers and Dealers

Realising the tide of change was totally against them, those involved in the fur trade had to find other ways to make their living out of fur. Straight retailing was obviously a non-starter so furriers decided to concentrate on overseas operations, brokering fur sales on the global market. Although there are a few fur businesses operating in and around the City of London and several manufacturers operating in the East End, most of the main players controlling the fur trade in Britain are based at two adjacent premises at Archway in north London. Bellside House and Brookstone House at 4 and 6 Elthorne Rd., London N19 are home to between 20 and 30 fur companies. These are mainly brokers and dealers, but also the British Fur Trade Association which consists of 25-30 brokers is located here.

London Controlling the World Fur Trade

A report in The European newspaper for the week beginning 14/12/95 revealed some very interesting facts about British Fur Trade Association. The Copenhagen Fur Auctions in Denmark are the world's largest fur auctioneers, but British furriers are by no means small players on the scene. Global fur brokerage is in fact dominated by London. Harry Cohen, the head of the British Fur Trade Association is quoted as saying that members of his group are responsible for more than 50 per cent of the world's fur trade! Although the first concern of animal rights activists is stopping the sale of fur coats at the point of sale, once this is achieved and fur shops are no more, attention must be given to the fur brokers of London. The executive officer of the British Fur Trade Association, David Liney, recently attempted to justify the killing of animals for fur in the March 96 edition of BBC Wildlife Magazine.

Report: The Day of Action Against the Fur Trade in London

by an Activist from London Animal Action

At 10am on the 16th March 1996, people started to gather on the opposite side of the road to Hockley's fur shop in Conduit Street, London W1. Police had erected barriers for an expected turnout of approximately 60 protesters. At around 11.30am, a group of demonstrators from Cambridge arrived and made their way to another meeting point in Berkeley Square. By 12.45pm enough protesters had arrived, some from as far away as Coventry, to get the day of action underway.

While a number of people stayed at Hockley's, the barriers adorned with placards and a banner, the other group made their way to Noble Furs, off Regent Street, via Zwirn fur shop, situated in Old Bond Street. A number of police officers were already lined up outside Zwirns and looked bemused while about 30 demonstrators walked straight passed them. There was only one policeperson at Nobles and a very noisy protest ensued, with whistles being blown and angry shouts being directed at the seedy little shop. Soon, a number of police arrived and so the protesters quickly made their way to Zwirns, where there were brief scuffles with the police and one person was arrested for 'obstruction'. After a noisy protest from the other side of the road, protesters made their way back to Hockley's and back up to Nobles, only to find that Nobles had closed early! By this time there were a considerable number of both protesters and police outside Hockley's, with the roaming group being held back from the main group behind the barriers, which caused some disruption to traffic.

After another visit to Zwirns, an impromptu visit to a local McDonalds where a number of stinkbombs were dropped and a brief visit to a shop selling animal tails which the owner very quickly gave to the protesters for fear of more trouble, all the demonstrators, about 80 in all, met up once more at Hockley's which had, in turn, closed for the day! Word came from Montana's, a shop next to the Ritz Hotel in Piccadilly which, until recently, sold fur coats (but stopped as a result of constant pickets). It turned out that the shop was displaying a fur coat in the window and all of the protesters made their way there and arrived before the police. People kicked the door, banged on the windows and plastered them with stickers, locking a worker inside the shop in the process. Needless to say, the coat was promptly removed! Police arrived and herded people down to near Green Park underground station, which was very convenient as that was where they wanted to be.

A Day of Action programme had been distributed during the day and people were asked to meet at St. Johns Wood tube at 5pm for 'mystery tour'. At the given time, 75 people made their way to Michael Hockley's house, manager of Hockley's fur shop, a short distance away. As two police officers struggled to keep up, protesters ran to the house. The first ones there witnessed Michael Hockley and two other people in the garden being ordered inside by a policeman brandishing a riot shield, fear etched on their faces. A very noisy protest ensued, as demonstrators armed with whistles, a megaphone and loud voices, made clear their feelings about Hockley's sick business. During the protest, a total of 14 police vans, 4 cars, and 3 dog-handler vans appeared on the scene as a helicopter hovered overhead! A warning was given to disperse and in no time at all the police, some with dogs, pushed the protesters all the way back to the tube station, some of the police acting like thugs. Once at the station, people were ordered to enter the station; one woman was carried down onto the platform, and altogether 6 people were arrested (for not moving quickly enough).

The day was a great success, the end generating enough fear in Michael Hockley to cause him to pass a letter via his solicitors to the London Animal Action office on Monday 18th March, tendering his resignation from the fur trade!

For further information concerning the campaign against London's fur trade contact:

London Animal Action,
5 Caledonian Road, London N1 9DX (0171 837 7557)

A Letter from Keith Mann

I happen to think Jill Phipps was, indeed is, and always will be a very beautiful woman. Live animal exports will forever be signified by the death of that very beautiful woman Jill Phipps. Sadly, the popular press only see her for her physical attributes (like my opening lines), probably the main reason why the issue of live exports and her death were so highlighted. When 18 year old Mike Hill and 15 year old Tom Worby were maliciously killed by huntsmen while they were trying to protect wild animals, there was no such display of public feeling. With Jill the whole point has been missed.

Apart from the fact that Jill rejected the opportunity she had to sell her looks so she could more usefully dedicate her life, and would disapprove of the fact that she is so popular for being physically attractive rather than because of her efforts to highlight and alter the way other animals are treated, and that she was vegan; the point is that it's because of the way animals are treated, calves and their mothers in particular, that Jill Phipps, in the physical sense, is no longer on the front line.

She would want nothing more and nothing less than for those calves that she sacrificed her life for, to be left alone to get on with whatever life they desire. No doubting that starts with having their mum around for the first few weeks of life, at least! In order for that to happen, there are going to have to be a few more vegan-type people around than there currently are. It occurs to me, from letters, news articles, magazines, etc. that I get, it's a happening and increasingly popular way of life, as well as being physically and psychologically enhancing.

So why is everything spoilt by a footnote highlighting the fact that what I feel is an incredible number of the people (largely the older generation) who are on the front line of the 'veal war' fighting for the lives of calves are still drinking their milk? It's as much for that very reason that they are being sent through our ports to nightmares afar.

The wholesale annihilation of families and generations of animals will only stop when there is no money to be made from it. Just like in our collection boxes - every penny counts. I'm known as being one of the biggest gobshites when it comes to encouraging the methods of the likes of the ALF and the tactics of economic sabotage, but the ALF hasn't a hope on this issue, the dairy one, without the people. Every night of the week, all over the world, ALF activists are damaging the property of animal abusers and taking away their animals, all the while risking their own lives and liberty. That's good for the chosen critters, for keeping the animal abusers on their toes and for keeping costs up, but won't stop people abusing baby cows. Nor baby humans if you pay enough. It is totally unnecessary for there to be all this death and destruction. Once we all stop paying for it, it will go away.

Love and Liberate and Respect,
Keith Mann

Whatever Road it Takes!

by Morgana

In the last issue of Arkangel an article by 'K' entitled 'The Right Road?' attacked Robin Webb and any action committed by activists which could be conceived as being violent.

For starters, Robin Webb cannot reply to this article because his present bail conditions stop him from publicising the movement, which only shows how worried the system has become of the actions he publicised. He never condemned nor condoned any actions, just presented them to the press and tried to explain why people take such actions. 'K' may not like it, but things like the Justice Department actions are taking place and if she cannot understand the reasons for this, then perhaps she doesn't understand what is happening to animals.

Violence is always proposed as the line activists must never cross but I see this as pure speciesism. How can we stand by and accept the torture and murder of countless animals and then say we cannot use a valid tactic on their abusers. How many will say that the violence used on Nazi Germany was wrong? Probably only a few committed pacifists. 'K' called for the movement's commitment to non-violence, why? Must we shackle ourselves to a political tactic just to please the system which abuses the animals. If you accept that an animal's life is equal to a human's then you must accept that using violence to save either is acceptable. If you would fight to save a baby's life then the same protection must go to the animals.

Finally 'K' said that when she saw a large demo on TV all she could think was: 'Shit, I hope nobody puts a police officer in hospital.' I really must question this thinking. Her thoughts are not that it is great that people care enough to take to the streets, or that she hopes the police do not hurt or arrest them (which is more likely then a copper getting hurt) but just worry about the system's hired thugs.

Whose side are you on 'K'? We will not limit the movement to one old and tired philosophy but will use all means and all our hearts to achieve animal liberation.

Do not condemn those who act, act yourself!

BSE is a new disease. You should realise its history...

This article was published on the Internet. Most of what has been written recently about BSE is either cynical propaganda or media hype; however, the author of this piece appears to have no vested interest or axe to grind. They have produced an extremely thorough yet concise account of the history of a disease which concerns us all.

What took place before 1987 and the surprise of BSE

Scrapie, a disease of sheep was investigated more as an oddity and for the interest that it caused specific groups of scientists, particularly in the UK, USA and to a small degree in Germany. Meetings, even international ones, may have had only 20 people coming that were involved. As a result of this, academic friction was high and the various groups were competing for the minor research prizes. Scrapie was thought of as a disease of sheep that did not infect humans, although its tissues were known to contain infection. When BSE arrived, it was immediately thought to be derived from scrapie and for this to have been fed to cattle in the meal that they ate (to increase their milk yield). A small farm in Surrey reported more than one cow developing a strange neurological disease. The cattle were killed, the brains removed, and the animals destroyed. When it was found that the cattle had a disease never reported before the farmer wanted to publish the data but was told not to by MAFF. When it is calculated, it seems that approximately 100 cattle had developed BSE symptoms before 1987 and many more would have been infected. It is now suggested that MAFF had been shown cattle with this disease before, and may have known about it in 1983, but did nothing.

1987 ~ The publication of disease

Southwood Wells et al published the data showing that a cow had developed a spongiform encephalopathy. Little extra data was given. It was clear, however, that MAFF realised that this was no simple disease in that a committee was set up by them to advise on what action should be taken to avoid any risk to humans and cattle. By this time, it was clear that the disease was appearing all over the country. Possibly it spread from the West Country to the other parts but, because of the speed of the spread this was not clear.

1988 ~ The year of action that was too late

Southwood, in the statement that was published stated that there would be minimal risk to humans as all infected cattle would be slaughtered. By not eating the animals with clinical illness there would be no problem and, as the disease was simply scrapie, and scrapie did not spread to humans, we should not expect BSE to spread to any other animals. Humans could continue to eat bovine brain and not worry about the consequences. The answer to BSE was to prevent all bovine material from entering the food that was fed to cattle. This was brought into action in July 1988. The feed manufacturers were warned that this was going to happen several months in advance. The reporting of cases of BSE to MAFF was made obligatory and half the value of a non-sick animal was given in compensation.

1989 ~ The year of the specified offals ban

The scientific community was surprised by the relative inaction recommended by Southwood. The committee that was set up by Southwood, known as the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, immediately recommended that specific offals (brain, spleen, thymus, tonsil, gut) should be discarded and that all clinically ill cattle should be destroyed by incineration or burial. By this time BSE had been transmitted to mice in the laboratory and apparently to various zoo animals through the eating of the same feed. Compensation for farmers reporting cases of BSE was only half the value of the cow.

1990 ~ The year of the media hype

The CJD surveillance unit was set up in Edinburgh to find out if BSE was giving rise to extra cases of CJD. The Parliamentary Agriculture Committee follows a media scare on the risks from BSE. John Gummer, at the time the Minister for Agriculture, tries to give his daughter a beefburger in front of the cameras outside parliament (she refused). By this time the numbers of cases were reaching 300 per week. Compensation was stepped up to the full value of the cow and numbers continued to rise. The German Government decided that it would not accept British beef as food in their country because of the risk that it potentially had to their population. Gummer was furious and demanded that less strict laws be taken through the EC Agriculture Committee. The amount of compensation payable to farmers for a case of BSE was increased. Lacey demanded that all infected herds should be slaughtered and that restocking should take place from abroad. Roger Eddy made it clear that he may have seen cases of BSE before the epidemic and suggested that scrapie may not have been its source at all. Gummer made it absolutely clear to the National Consumer Council that beef was safe and said that there was no risk whatever. A domestic cat develops what we are now sure was BSE. An American had inoculated scrapie into a cow and it developed a SE ...but under the microscope it was not the same as BSE. Various schools ban beef in meals. The centre for agricultural research in Reading demanded that MAFF let professional independent researchers carry out the research into BSE as the results MAFF was releasing led to hysteria. Kiethley News shows that the number of BSE cases was building up so fast that the various parts of the animal could not be incinerated and had to be buried on a local tip. Beef consumption in the UK dropped to the lowest level since 1962. It becomes clear that many of the cases of CJD were never reported. 65% of doctors 'changed their habit of eating beef' due to BSE. All offal banned from export to the EC. A marmoset monkey inoculated with BSE dies.

1991 ~ The year of refusals

UK experts were sent to convince them that BSE was not a risk. Harash Narang was told to stop carrying on his research into BSE and its risk to humans. A case appeared in a cow that was born after the feed ban and they were sure could not have been fed infective material. Fears arose that BSE would also infect the rest of Europe because we had exported infected animals there. The UK would just be ahead of the rest. Strains of scrapie confirmed by US researchers. In the past the knackers would pay £30 for a cow but after 1990 they may actually charge £40 to take it away. The PHLS refused to allow Narang to continue his research. Health and Safety executives bring in directives on how to handle BSE infected carcasses as they might be a risk to the people involved. Watkins the reporter from Today showed that people that had received growth hormone inoculations were still acting as blood donors. It appears that some genetics of a human makes them more likely to develop CJD and have a shorter incubation period. A statutory order from MAFF prevented any use of the specified offals; for a while they had been used for the feed of other animals and as fertiliser. The 'mad calf' syndrome; a calf born to a cow with BSE develops the disease.

1992 ~ The year of the zoo cats

A cheetah and the puma died of a TSE now thought to be BSE in the food that they had eaten. It was not clear, however how this could have been through eating brain, as they were never fed this. Fatal familial insomnia is found to be a SE and due to a genetic change. How now mad cow?: an editorial in the BMJ saying that we simply did not have enough knowledge to pronounce BSE as safe. Only 85% of cattle reported as BSE turned out to be that when looked at under the microscope: the same percentage found with mice infected with scrapie. More information appears concerning the epidemic of growth hormone and graft transmission of CJD. Spending by this time had reached £74.4 million in compensation.

1993 ~ 800 cases per week

The number of cases was still rising with approximately 800 cases reported in each week. The vets were now being told that many of the cases that they accepted were not actually infected when the animal's brains were looked at under the microscope for evidence of disease; little evidence was ever presented for this and the rate for negatives seemed to remain at approximately 15%. Changes were made in the way that cattle could be sold. The vets that had been at the auctions were decreased in hours and a computer system was organised so that the ear tags on a cow could be used to find out if it was from an infected herd or not. Dealler publishes the data showing that, even using underestimation methods, that the risk to humans was unacceptably high for medical ethics to accept. Farmers were often no longer being asked at the auction if their cattle were from an infected herd and they were receiving better prices from the buyers as a result. Two dairy farmers with BSE in their herds, Mark Duncan and Peter Warhurst, were found to have died of CJD. MAFF claim that there was no infectivity in any tissue outside the central nervous system. A group of chemicals was found that prevented the growth of the infective agent of scrapie in the test tube. The mice without the prion protein gene were grown and found not to be open to infection with scrapie.

1994 ~ The year of Victoria Rimmer

Victoria Rimmer, the 16 year old from North Wales was claimed to be dying of CJD and for this to be due to having eaten BSE-infected cattle. Cattle meat was being exported for sale in Europe without evidence that it did not come from a BSE-free herd. Claims were made that pressure was being put on the vets to sign certificates without evidence. The computer system that had been set up was now found to be ineffective. It could only take information from the abattoirs and could not supply information as to whether a cow that was being slaughtered was from an infected herd or not. London Zoo revealed that it was planning to remove the top foot of soil from the Kudu enclosure and was destroying any faecal matter from the animals; meanwhile it was being denied that the soil of farms could become infected and that cattle could become endemically infected. The large number of cattle with BSE that had been born after the feed ban suggested that endemic infection, or vertical infection from the mother, could be taking place.

MAFF denied this risk. Infectivity found in the gut of a 6 month old veal calf that had been fed BSE when very young. All gut and thymus from calves could not then be eaten. Animal protesters attempted to stop the export of calves for veal production but little information was passed to European countries about the risk from BSE. No calculations were released about the amount of these tissues that had already been eaten. The start of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Research Campaign. The Germans were unimpressed by 'safe beef pledge' from UK. The EC now made it essential that any meat on the bone being exported could only come from herds unaffected with BSE in the previous 6 years. Gillian Shephard had thought of this as a success and came back and told the newspapers. They quickly realised it was a defeat. A farmer suggests that organophosphorus insecticides may be important in the cause of BSE. CJD reported as being in a similar prevalence in many European countries. It is admitted that, of 156 cases of CJD since 1990, 22 are believed to have given blood at some stage. CJD in a butcher from Whitby. Waldegrave takes over as Minister at MAFF. It was shown that abattoirs were attempting to export beef that was from infected herds and that the computer, supposedly carrying the information about all the cattle, was not permitted to give that information out for data control reasons.

1995 ~ The year that under-reporting of cases became clear and more farmers died

It became clear that 1.8 million infected cattle would be eaten from UK farms by the year 2001 and that most of these had already been eaten. Under-reporting of cases in 1992 and 1993 was shown to reach 60%. A further farmer died of CJD and a second, was dying of what seemed to be the disease. Both were from BSE affected farms. Two teenagers (including Stephen Churchill) developed CJD. Only 4 teenagers had been reported with CJD at any time throughout the world. It now became clear that the feed ban that took place in 1988 was too late. In fact, around 90% of the dairy cattle in the UK turned out being in an infected herd and, due to the apparently limited in-herd rate it seemed that the disease was, by 1988 running out of cattle to involve. If the ban had been in 1987 the number of affected cattle would have been less than half.

Mad Cows and Englishmen

By C. Marsden

There's a whisper in the pastures
Of our green and pleasant land.
There's a milker with the staggers,
There's a cow can hardly stand.
An illness brings them to their knees.
It's quickly dubbed 'Mad Cow's Disease'.

*Just a few, Sir. All's in hand.
It's our view, Sir, you'll understand
That there's nothing much the matter,
And this scare's just idle chatter.*

The boffins they got down to work,
And found a direct line,
Between scrapie (a disease of sheep)
And the new disease in kine. (ed. kine=cow!)
Well, soon the news begins to leak;
A hundred cases every week!

*Don't worry, Sir, we've got it pat;
We'll stop it spreading just like that.
It really won't be hard to do
Now that we know to what it's due.*

To get an extra pint a day,
The food producers had agreed,
The best and most efficient way,
Was ground-up meat waste in their feed.
Though cooked, unlike other diseases,
Scrapie had leapt across the species.

*The numbers, Sir, will soon go down.
You musn't fret, you needn't frown.
We've banned the feed; the danger's past,
We told you that it wouldn't last.*

Meanwhile, in labs, in zoos, on farms,
Mice and monkeys, pigs and mink,
Across the land ring new alarms;
From cats to kudu, what's the link?
In all, the same sad signs are found;
BSE has got around!

*Two hundred cases every week;
That's normal, Sir, we've reached the peak.
We really have no doubts at all,
That numbers now will start to fall.*

It's now well known that cooking heat,
Does not destroy this cruel infection.
So every burger that you eat,
May bring this plague in your direction.
And still the weekly numbers grow;
(Compensation helps, you know).

*Now really, Sir, we must insist,
You stop this aggravating list.
Scrapie always let us be,
So why this fear of BSE?*

If scrapie first can be transferred
By feeding cows infected tissue
It really isn't too absurd
To see transferral as an issue.
From sheep to cow, from cow to cat,
Why shouldn't man be part of that?

*What you say, Sir, is quite absurd.
Rather than hear another word,
We'll shut our ears; we'll hear no more.
Your briefcase, Sir; your coat; the door!*

BSE starts slow but steady.
It takes a while to incubate.
Some cows that have the bug already,
Are sure to end up on our plate.
Eighty percent of those infected,
May reach our tables undetected.

*A minute risk, Sir, we confess,
But there's a way to stop this mess.
The abattoirs will throw away
The bits worth pennies anyway.
Mad cow disease can go no further.
No use working up a lather.
We found the source and broke the chain.
The numbers will go down again.*

That's fine; it sounds very pretty,
BSE, goodbye, so long.
But people, here's the nitty gritty.
The Min. of Ag. may have it wrong.
Five hundred cases weekly show
Their estimates were somewhat low.

*You doubt us, Sir! But can you prove That BSE's still on the move?
Please eat your beefsteak with impunity
We're quite convinced of man's immunity.*

All well and good, but please explain
Why cows have gone on falling ill.
Since feed's no longer in the chain,
Six thousand head they've had to kill.
If fodder didn't cause their doom
They must have caught it in the womb.

*Not so, Sir, not at all, no way!
And what is more we're glad to say,
We've tested all the bits you eat;
There's no infection in your meat.*

Eight hundred cases weekly now;
It's soon apparent that the test
For meat infection in the cow
Decidedly was not the best
And dangerous levels of infection
Escaped the scientist's detection.

*How many times, Sir, must we say,
That BSE will go away?
We've briefed the vets, we've paid the farmers,
What you don't know now - can't harm us!*

Man also hosts a malady,
That much resembles BSE.
It also has no remedy;
It's known for short as CJD.
In four years it's increased twofold.
Don't you think we should be told?

*But Sir, that's simply happenstance,
A curious effect of chance.
Four farmers dead? Two kids infected?
That's all? No cause to be dejected.
So cool the figures, calm the press,
The country can't afford the mess.*

So is it just coincidence,
Or are these deaths the first of many?
Will BSE, slow death, advance,
In humans and their progeny?

One thing is sure; our precious State,
Won't tell us till it's much too late!

(This poem was 'lifted' from the Internet without permission. However, we hope the author won't mind us helping it to reach a wider audience! - Ed.)

BADGERS RELOCATED

A family of badgers numbering 16-20 have for some years caused damage to the bank and garden of the rear of St. Andrews Road in Yeovil. 3 years ago a woman resident allegedly fell through a badger sett, falling an estimated 14 feet, breaking her neck. South Somerset District Council called in an environmental consultant, Cresswell Associates, (incidentally trustees of NFBG) to deal with the problems created by the badgers. The outcome of this was that Cresswell Associates, Somerset District Council, the National Federation of Badger Groups, and MAFF decided that this group of badgers would be ideal for research into the development of a vaccine for TB.

On the 30th November 1995, Yeovil Animal Action received an anonymous phone call, alerting us of the intention to trap these animals. Not being experts in this field, YAA contacted Badger Action Group for assistance. Plans were quickly put into action with local TV stations, national and local newspapers being contacted and a 24 hour vigil to protect the sett from baiting and trapping. Unfortunately, some of the traps went missing! (oh dear). The effect was instant with all trapping activity ceased.

Meanwhile, Badger Action were contacting experts from a wide area. YAA and Yeovil Badger Group canvassed the residents and it was found that Cresswell Associates had misled them into thinking that the badgers were to be relocated to a wild environment in Norfolk. It was later found out that Cresswell misled the residents because he believed that animal rights activity would frustrate his plans. He was right! Badger Action forced a meeting with the Council, Cresswell, MAFF and all interested parties. The result of this meeting was a vote from the council members to suspend trapping.

On Wednesday 29th November a further council meeting was called and was attended by YAA, Badger Action, residents and the local press. The outcome of this meeting was a suspension of all trapping and baiting activity for three months.

Badger Action had won the day and the badger family are to be relocated in June 1996.

Ostrichcise Lloyd Webber!

As Arkangel goes to press, Sir Andrew Lloyd Webber, writer of musicals and racehorse owner, is planning to breed ostriches for meat on his Sydmonton Court Farm estate at Ecchinswell in Hampshire. Rumour has it that he also intends racing them - though this is currently illegal in this country.

The ostrich can live up to 75 years in its natural habitat but on British farms, of which there are currently 200, they are killed at just 12 to 15 months. Ostrich meat, sometimes known as 'volaise' is sold in exclusive restaurants and the skin is also used in some of the most exotic leather products, including those by designer labels Gucci and Louis Vuitton. In January, plans were unveiled to build a slaughtering, processing and packing plant at Ellon in Scotland to meet the growing demand for ostrich meat and skin, where they hope to slaughter up to 2,500 ostriches in 1997.

A campaign against Andrew Lloyd Webber began in late December when about 20 protesters turned up outside the show 'Cats' in Drury Lane. After an hour of leafleting outside of the theatre, demonstrators entered the foyer and a noisy protest ensued. The police arrived just as the protesters were leaving. On the 23rd January, 30 protesters carried out a demonstration outside (and briefly inside) the Adelphi Theatre in the Strand where 'Sunset Boulevard' is playing. People arriving to see the show found that they had to push past both protesters and police to enter the theatre. Another, smaller protest took place on January 29th outside 'Cats' when the show was celebrating its 500th performance. As a result of these protests, Shimon Cohen, Webber's public affairs advisor telephoned the London Animal Action office in a vain attempt to placate the protesters (it's obviously getting through to them!). On the 22nd February, another protest took place at Her Majesty's Theatre in the Haymarket where 'Phantom of the Opera' is playing. Further protests have been planned.

Should you wish to take part in this campaign please contact:

London Animal Action
c/o 5 Caledonian Road, London N1 9DX (0171 837 7557)

For further information concerning the exploitation of ostriches please contact:

John Rowe, Justice & Rights Associates
PO Box 83, Bracknell, Berkshire RG12 7QH

Shimon Cohen, Lloyd Webber's Public Affairs Advisor can be contacted at:
7, Hertford Street, London W1Y 8LP (0171 495 4044)

A Really Useful Group Ltd., Andrew Lloyd Webber's company is at:
19, Tower Street, London WC2 (0171 240 0880)

News from

The local animal rights group in Nottingham was re-launched recently. The first meeting saw over 50 people gathered on a wet Sunday night, including many local contacts and activists from animal rescue groups, anti-vivisection, people from Respect for Animals, Viva!, Dr. Hadwen Trust, local vegetarian and vegan society contacts, and many more; all pledged to work together for the animals.

- Following a leaflet produced by the local group and sent to the Nottingham branch of the Australian-theme Ned Kelly's restaurant, the whole national chain withdrew plans to include kangaroo meat on their menu.
- At a recent picket against animal abusers Circus King a circus worker assaulted, not the peaceful animal rights folk, but a local journalist and an interviewer from Central TV whilst the circus boss was being filmed. Following the embarrassment of the scuffle being seen on TV news, the circus boss and one of his staff quit to form a non-animal circus which returned to Nottingham a few weeks later.
- Nottingham County Council are running a Vegetarian Week, on their own initiative, as part of their health promotion work. The first we knew was when we read about it in the local paper, but we're pleased to see their support of vegetarianism.
- One of the major box office successes at the cinema over Christmas was a film called 'Babe'. It is a film with live action and 'animaltronics' - a very advanced form of puppetry developed by the Muppet people and others. The animal robots/puppets are so realistic that there is no excuse to exploit real animals in movies any more, especially as the puppets can act in any way necessary, and even talk! The film 'Babe' is humorous and a bit sentimental, but there is nothing wrong with sentiment if it leads to compassion, especially as regular cinema audiences in the States have been giving up meat in their thousands. Hopefully, it will give the UK pork industry a good knock too. Look out for it when it gets on TV.
- The big anti-road protest is at the Newbury By-Pass, where the wildlife in several sites of special scientific interest is to be devastated. There are several protest camps set up with tree houses, and even people ready to lock themselves in tunnels under the site.

Gall-Bladder Bear

by Eileen Clarke

I'm a gall-bladder bear
So full of despair
Of pain and fear and woe.
I've been tortured and used for nearly a year
And I've another nine years to go.
What have I done to deserve this fate?
If I could die I would.
But humans keep me alive and caged
For their cruel 'medicinal good'.
Perhaps tomorrow will be my last day
Of pain and fear and woe.
For I'm a gall-bladder bear
With no hope of escape -
And another nine years to go.

Eileen Clarke was inspired to write this poem on behalf of Asiatic Black and Tibetan Brown bears who are poached from all over North America and Asia, then smuggled into a life of torture. They are kept in cages so small they can hardly move and a tube is inserted into the gall bladder bile duct (this is not professionally done and without care for pain.). At regular intervals the bile is tapped out of it. This results in extreme agony for the bear for after 'milking' it collapses with exhaustion and stress. Inflamed infections occur where the tube is inserted and sometimes squeeze cages with crush bars are used to keep the bear still while being milked. This is called 'bear farming' and occurs mainly in China, Korea and experimentally in Japan. The bears live for about 10 years (normal life expectancy of 25 years in the wild) and are left to die in their cages, humiliated, tortured, suffering a painful death in squalor. The Chinese use the bear bile for a traditional medicine but there are alternatives! Ursodeoxycholic Acid (UDCA), the ingredient in bear bile is chemically created and known as Actigall (USA) and URSO by the Tokyo company Tanab. There is also a herbal alternative. The bears are listed under CITES (Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species) Appendix I and II on the endangered list and must be protected and the law must be enforced.

For further information on the fight to protect bears please contact:

WSPA (Liberty),
2 Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ (0171 793 0540)
EIA, 2 Pear Tree Court, London EC1R 0DS
(0171 490 7040)

Eileen Clarke, foremost poet of the Animal Rights Movement, includes the above poem and a selection of other poems highlighting the abuse of animals in a booklet available from Arkangel priced £1. Please send an SAE and cheque made out to 'Arkangel' to: Arkangel, BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX.

Big Mac FACES THE FACTS

Arkangel presents an update on the mammoth libel action brought by the $26 billion a year McDonald's against two supporters of London Greenpeace, Helen Steel and Dave Morris. In December 1995, it became the longest civil case in British history. For 8 months, the evidence in court was focused on the pay and conditions of McDonald's workers, and the company's hostility to trade unions. Helen and Dave called over 30 ex-employees of McDonald's together with trade union officials and activists from around the world. The section of the trial on the connections between McDonald's and rainforest destruction (particularly in Central and South America) began in February 1996.

TESTIMONY ON THE REALITY OF McJOBS

Five former employees from the Colchester branch of McDonald's (from crew members up to the Store Manager) gave evidence for Helen and Dave. The Colchester branch was made 'Store of the Year' by McDonald's in 1987. The ex-employees laid bare the reality of McDonald's unethical, illegal and oppressive working practices: watering down products, working amid sewage, illegal hours worked by young staff, cutting labour costs to the bone, and the fiddling of time cards. The testimony of Simon Gibney (former Assistant Manager) was reported under the front page headline "What a McRipoff" after he told how supervisors ordered managers and crew members to water down products (milkshakes, ketchup, etc.). Gibney also said that on "at least two occasions" sewage came flooding up from the floor vents in the kitchen. The workers were forced to stand on bun trays to keep above the rising sewage while continuing to prepare food. The flooding, Gibney said, resulted from the management's refusal to replace fat-filtering equipment. Consequently, they were forced to pour large quantities of fat down the drains which blocked them. Siamak Alimi, former crew member, told of the high pressure of work at McDonald's, long hours (including 20 hour shifts) with few breaks, low pay, and of how there were threats of the sack for joining a union or protesting against in-store conditions.

These experiences were echoed by ex-employees from numerous other stores. Andrew Cranna, former Assistant Manager of the West Ealing branch, testified that employees were afraid to criticise due to fear of "recriminations", that people could be sent home early to save money, that "any active member of a union will not be tolerated", that staff were "made to feel they were fully expendable" and if they fell out of favour would be discriminated against until they quit. Iain Whittle (a crew member at the Sutton store in the 1980's) described McDonald's as "blatantly racist" with Asian staff given jobs such as cleaning the toilets and picking up litter. "Managers would compete to see who could run the lowest staffed shift and make the most money for the company," Whittle said. Strict adherence to company rules was impossible because of poor staffing levels, and the managers' obsession with profit levels sometimes lead to the sale of under-cooked and unhygienic food.

HOSTILE TO TRADE UNIONS?

Terry Pattinson, former Industrial Editor of the Daily Mirror, informed the court about an interview in 1986 with Sid Nicholson (at the time McDonald's Head of Personnel) who stated "We will never negotiate wages and conditions with a union and we discourage our staff from joining."

France - Hassen Lamti (a current McDonald's crew member in Lyon and a trade union rep) related how five McDonald's managers were arrested for trying to rig union elections in July 1994; how he was harassed for union activity - amongst other things, an attempt was made to frame him for armed robbery, and McDonald's offered him a bribe if he renounced the union; and how the union branch, now established, has so far won over 20 court judgments against the company to stop harassment and illegal business practices.

Ireland - Anne Casey and Sean Mrozek (former McDonald's workers and union activists from the historic, successful 1979 McDonald's strike for union recognition at two stores in Dublin) gave evidence. They told how there was discontent over low pay and poor conditions. Earlier, Michael Mehigan (the owner of McDonald's stores in Ireland since 1978) said the company had refused to recognise the union because "we didn't want to lose control of our business". Casey and Mrozek told how after the bitter, seven month strike ended with a labour court ruling that McDonald's should recognise the union, the main union activists were nevertheless sacked or otherwise victimised for union activity.

Canada - Sarah Inglis, a Canadian worker, gave evidence. At the age of 16, she signed up a majority of the workers in her McDonald's store to a union. In response, managers organised a bizarre and nationally controversial anti-union campaign, which included creating a climate of fear against pro-union staff, getting some of the workers in that store (the majority of whom were under 18) to lie outside in the snow forming the word 'NO' (to unions), putting on special anti-union video and slide shows, and temporarily allowing improved conditions in the run-up to an unsuccessful secret ballot in the store for union recognition. Afterwards, the court heard, according to the evidence of Defence witness Joel Henderson (pro-union crew member at the store), that "things have returned to the slave-like working conditions that crew must endure every single shift that they work".

PARENTS OF ELECTROCUTED WORKER DEMAND NEW INQUEST

Protests and leafleting at various locations around the UK took place on 12th October 1995, a Day of Solidarity With McDonald's Workers and the third anniversary of the death of Mark Hopkins, a worker electrocuted at McDonald's Arndale store in Manchester. During the McLibel Trial, Jill Barnes (McDonald's UK Safety Officer) was challenged by the Defendants over a previously confidential internal Report into Mark's death. The Report had not been disclosed at Mark's inquest and was only disclosed by McDonald's to the Defendants days before Jill Barnes took the stand. The inquest had decided that Mark's death was an 'accident'. But the McDonald's Report had catalogued a number of company failures and problems, and had made the damning conclusion: "Safety is not seen as being important at store level".

Maureen Hopkins (Mark's mother) organised a picket at the Arndale Centre store which 40 people attended. The discovery of the Report and other documents also not shown to the inquest jury has lead the Hopkins' family to demand that a new inquest be held. Legal action is now being prepared.

"I think the Report should have been put before the inquest. It may have made a difference. It was horrendous to go to the Arndale McDonald's but I needed to do it in Mark's memory. I've always known there was something wrong with the outcome of the inquest into my son's death. We haven't got peace of mind and Mark can't rest in peace while this new evidence, which has come to light during the libel trial, has not been seriously investigated. I won't give up. We want a new inquest. We're not bitter against the company but we want justice for our son and I won't rest until we get it." - Maureen Hopkins

MCDONALD'S AND RAINFOREST DESTRUCTION

McDonald's has been enmeshed in controversy over its global promotion of beef consumption - (it spends $1+ billion annually on advertising and promotions, and is the world's largest user of beef) - despite the huge damage that cattle ranching has inflicted on tropical forests. The Corporation has already had to recognise such damage (McDonald's letter in 1982), but has tried to fob off its critics with claims that "nowhere in the world does McDonald's use of beef threaten or remotely involve the tropical rainforests", and that the company does not use beef from cattle reared on recently deforested land. At the start of the McLibel Trial, Richard Rampton QC (for McDonald's) claimed that no beef had ever been exported to McDonald's anywhere in the world from "rainforest countries". These are blatant untruths and are being proved to be so by the McLibel Defendants.

Ray Cesca (Director of Global Purchasing of the McDonald's Corporation) gave evidence that he had drafted McDonald's rainforest policy statement in 1989 along with another company executive. He claimed that the policy had existed 'verbally' since McDonald's opened its first store in 1955. He said that " 'recently deforested rainforest' means since we decided to open a restaurant in a specific country" and agreed with Mr. Rampton that "in theory, some rainforest might be cut down a year or six months before [McDonald's] made that decision, cattle put on it, and [McDonald's] could, in theory, take cattle from that land". Previously, the company has defined "recently deforested" as "a significant number of years", "within 10 years" (prior to 1989) and "within 25 years" (since 1989).

Giving evidence about Costa Rica, Mr. Cesca said "McDonald's opened the first of its restaurants in Costa Rica in December 1970" and that they had been supplied with meat by Coop Montecillos since that time. "This meat comes from ranches in areas which were deforested in the 1950's and early 1960's."

McDonald's claims it has a policy in the USA of only using US-produced beef. The Sales Director of Coop Montecillos (the supplier of beef to McDonald's stores in Costa Rica) stated in a filmed interview in 1984 (shown in court): "We export meat to the US, 70% of the meat goes to food production outlets such as restaurant chains like McDonald's..." "We supply McDonald's and Burger King - they buy our meat." (From the film 'Jungleburger'.)

McDonald's Brazilian stores (now numbering 200) are supplied by Braslo Ltd. with beef from cattle raised in regions including Mato Grosso do Sul, Goias, Minas Gerais and Sao Paulo. Mr. Cesca was questioned about land disputes in some of these states, particularly Mato Grosso do Sul, where indigenous people and peasant farmers have been evicted from their land to make way for cattle ranching. He denied knowledge of any land disputes in these regions but admitted that the company had not looked into this. Displacement of small farmers has been recognised by McDonald's to be a major cause of rainforest destruction as they often have little alternative but to move into the Amazon forest regions to seek new land (by cutting down trees). McDonald's at one time were supplied by a meat plant at Cuiba which is inside the official Amazon region and virtually bordering deforested rainforest areas. Company documents revealed previous dealings with Anglo beef, who also had two plants within the official Amazon region.

Defence witnesses, giving evidence shortly, will include: Charles Secrett (Director of Friends of the Earth), an expert on Brazilian Amazon deforestation, experts on Guatemala & Costa Rica, and Howard Lyman (former cattle rancher of 20 years experience, from Montana USA).

LEAFLET CIRCULATING IN EVER INCREASING NUMBERS

It's clear that, whatever the final Judgment, McDonald's aim of suppressing the "What's Wrong With McDonald's" leaflet has totally backfired. Over 1.5 million leaflets have been handed out to the public in the UK alone since the action was started and thousands of people have pledged to continue circulating the leaflets whatever the verdict. October 16th every year is the Worldwide Day of Action Against McDonald's - please leaflet outside your local McDonald's store on that day (leaflets from Veggies: Tel 0115 958 5666).

'McSPOTLIGHT' WORLDWIDE WEB SITE

<http://www.mcspotlight.org/>

McSpotlight, an on-line interactive library of information and communication, makes available across the globe everything that McDonald's don't want the public to know. It is one of the most comprehensive sources of information on a multinational corporation ever assembled.

Compiled by a team of volunteers in 14 countries, some of the highlights of McSpotlight are:

- RealAudio interviews and guided tour round the site with the 'McLibel 2'.
- Key clip from the film 'Jungleburger' linking McDonald's with rainforest destruction.
- Pages for campaigners against McDonald's in 19 countries.
- The complete set of McLibel witness statements & scientific reports used as evidence (including a contribution from Prof. Colin Campbell, author of 'The China Study', the world's most authoritative report on the links between diet and cancer).
- Previously banned material, eg. "Working For Big Mac".

McSpotlight was accessed a million times in its first month.

The McLibel Defendants need thousands of pounds to pay for the vital daily transcripts (withheld by McDonald's) and to pay the fares of their witnesses and administration costs. They are entirely dependent on donations from members of the public to fund their Defence.

Please send donations and/or requests for information to:

McLibel Support Campaign,
5 Caledonian Road,
London N1 9DX, UK.
Tel/Fax 0171 713 1269.

(Cheques to 'McLibel Support Campaign')

The Road to VICTORY!

In March, Anthony Kirkham and Geoffrey Park of the Cheshire Foxhounds were found guilty of assaulting anti-bloodsport campaigners. (Unknown 1995).

Glaxo Wellcome, the giant drugs group, is cutting 7,500 jobs as part of a £1.2 cost saving programme. (Independent 8.9.95).

A rare harp seal hundreds of miles from the Arctic which was stranded for three days on a beach was taken to Holy Island, Northumberland for a full examination. (Independent 13.9.95).

Roger Mills of Live Sheep Traders (Ireland) has failed in his court attempt to ban a group of 13 protesters from blocking trucks from entering Brightlingsea. He was also seeking damages of £500,000. During country-wide protests, policing at Shoreham has cost £4m so far. Dover has cost £600,000 and at Coventry Airport policing has cost £384,000. (Independent 23.9.95).

Essex police were criticised for their treatment of activists protesting against live exports at Brightlingsea. An inquiry by the Metropolitan force followed nearly 100 complaints. (Independent 26.9.95).

Brigitte Bardot won support for the plight of the world's animals from Pope Paul II. He said, "St. Francis of Assisi cared for the animals and poor human beings." (Independent 28.9.95).

A bird breeder who bought rare peregrine falcon eggs from a Scottish gamekeeper and went on to sell the birds for profit was jailed for four months. Peter Gurr, 54, of Rainham, Essex pleaded guilty. (Guardian 30.9.95).

More than 20 families are considering legal action against the Government following mass-vaccinations against measles. Some children have been confined to wheelchairs as a result of the jabs which parents believe were responsible. (Independent 1.10.95).

A farmer struck down by CJD and being secretly investigated by the Government, had BSE in his herd of cattle. A report suggests that consumers have eaten 80 meals each from BSE infected cattle. CJD can lie dormant for up to 30 years. (Daily Mail 23.10.95).

The Cornish fishing industry is to lose 17 boats from a fleet of 160. (Unknown 1995).

A live-animal exporter was fined £10,000 after a cargo of 249 calves were transported for 47 hours with only one 90 minute stop. Dutch exporter Nicolay BV were fined after a surveillance operation followed the lorry from the Irish Republic to Barcelona via Kent. (Independent 24.10.95).

Northern Foods is to close its dairies in Hull and Middlesbrough with the loss of 322 jobs. It is also selling its Colwyn Bay dairy and six distribution depots in Wales. (Independent 26.10.95).

SmithKline Beecham is losing 100 jobs at its research station (BBC South Toay 24.11.95).

An area once chosen to be an atomic power station has been given the status of a National Nature Reserve. The site of more than 700 acres at Newtown, Isle of Wight, was taken over by the National Trust 30 years ago after the atomic plan failed. (Times 4.10.95).

A railway bridge over the Thames at Staines, Surrey is to be painted with yellow stripes at a cost of £15,000 to stop short-sighted swans flying into it and falling onto the track. A conservation officer said the swans had difficulty seeing the top of the steel-girdered bridge against the grey waters of the river. (Times 6.10.95).

The Government has called on Professor Sir Bernhard Tomlinson to explain his views on links between meat-eating and CJD. A Times survey found 7 in 16 of scientists, doctors and veterinary surgeons questioned had stopped eating beef or were more careful about what they ate. (Times 2.12.95).

A province in South China has closed down 19 hotels and restaurants for serving up wildlife. In official raids, more than 6,000 wild animals were found - 3,220 of which were state-produced. (Independent 4.11.95).

Customs officers smashed a smuggling gang when they found the eggs of rare cockatoos hidden in a bricklayer's underpants and vest. Christopher Owen was caught as he was about to board a flight back to Britain from Australia. (Times 22.11.95).

Dempsey, the pit bull terrier saved from being destroyed after a three year legal battle, is to live at the Brigitte Bardot Foundation in France. (Times 24.11.95).

A British Airways jet flying from America to Britain was diverted at a cost of more than £12,000 to save the life of a dog sweltering in temperatures of up to 130f in the cargo hold. (Times 24.11.95).

American animal rights activists are as interested in fish as sheep and have begun to harangue diners at seafood restaurants who are about to select lobsters swimming in tanks, so that they can be released back into the Atlantic. (Times 29.11.95).

Keith Sweetman, 52, a falconer from Milton Keynes, was convicted of illegally possessing two rare Golden Eagles. He was ordered to pay £500 costs. (Times 30.11.95).

William Greenwell, 53, admitted 14 charges of neglecting more than 200 cattle and sheep at his 300 acre farm near Henfield, East Sussex. (Independent 6.12.95).

Hundreds of schools joined the rush to ban beef amid fears over mad cow disease. One school has banned burgers, sausages and minced beef. In Oldham, all 124 state schools have removed beef products. The council ban was indefinite. Leicestershire has taken beef off the menu of all 447 schools. Suffolk said 47 of 345 schools had asked for alternatives, whilst in West Sussex an alternative menu was always available. Humberside extended its British beef ban to all beef products, and other counties were considering bans. (Daily Express 6.12.95).

Professor Richard Lacey claims there is very firm evidence of a link between CJD (human) and BSE (bovine). People who regularly eat veal are 13 times more likely to contract CJD. CJD cases have doubled in ten years. (Daily Express 6.12.95).

Linda McCartney has paid £3,000 to save a champion turkey from ending up on a restaurant table. Every year the champion-of-champions turkeys at the auction in Henley-in-Arden, Warwickshire are usually snapped up by Jefferson's, a local restaurant. Mrs. McCartney said, "Everyone should think about doing something like this at Christmas." (Daily Telegraph 7.12.95).

A bill to make it an offence to inflict cruelty on wild animals is to be revived. (Independent 7.12.95).

The doves traditionally released at the start of the Olympics are to be given the night off when the Games get under way in Atlanta. Officials have ruled that releasing the doves - a focal point of every ceremony since 1920 - is cruel and unnatural. Animal rights groups have been lobbying organisers for months, arguing that doves are not nocturnal and prefer to be tucked up in their coops when the sun goes down. A spokesperson for next summer's Olympics said that "Under no circumstances would we undertake any activity that endangers animals."

Beef used in many burgers, pies and sausages could be made illegal. Officials at the Ministry of Agriculture are studying proposals to outlaw mechanically-recovered meat. (Daily Mail 8.12.95).

Plans to save 100 of Britain's most endangered animals and plants were unveiled by the Government. The plans include restoring otter numbers to their 1960 abundance by 2010, water voles to their 1970 level, brown hare numbers to be doubled, dormice to be re-established in at least five counties, medicinal leeches to be safeguarded in their present sites, song thrush numbers to be safeguarded by the year 2000, red squirrels not to be poisoned, the revival of river muscles, and many other schemes. (Independent on Sunday 10.12.95).

After he first ate meat, Gandhi could not sleep - he kept hearing the goat he had eaten bleating in his stomach to be let out. (Independent 10.12.95).

The McDonald's libel case is the longest civil case in British history. McDonald's has already spent £2m on legal bills. (Independent 11.12.95).

More than 50 screaming monkeys laid siege to a police station in the suburbs of Calcutta after one of them was shot by a schoolteacher. When the monkey's body was left at the police station, other monkeys gathered outside, shrieking loudly and refused to leave for several hours. (Daily Telegraph 14.12.95).

The European Commission will propose a ban on veal calves in crates, but crates already in use will be allowed for a further 12 years. Veal crates were banned in Britain in 1990. (Independent 14.12.95).

Doctors have said that Royal Jelly should carry a health warning after a woman nearly died from a related asthma attack, and the death of an 11 year old girl. (Independent 17.12.95).

A Moscow circus worker was bitten to death by a huge Tyan-Shan bear that was let out of its cage without a muzzle. (Daily Mirror 21.12.95).

The death sentence on a dog called Sinbad was lifted when a judge said it was not a dangerous Pit Bull Terrier, but more of an English Bull Terrier. (Times 21.12.95).

The number of herons, a reliable indicator of the health of rivers and fish, has reached a record high. Ornithologists said that there were about 6,627 grey heron nests in England and Wales this year, up from about 4,000 in 1928 when records started. (Times 21.12.95).

Alan Laboy, a 37 year-old American was sentenced to nine years imprisonment for battering a puppy to death after the case received state-wide publicity. (Independent 22.12.95).

A dog wearing an electronic tracking device helped to rescue a terrier trapped for more than 24 hours in a maze of underground pipes. (Times 28.12.95).

Almost 1.5 million households that bought beef in the run-up to Christmas last year decided not to this year. Sales of beefburgers in the first two weeks of December were down 25% and were down 40% in the week ending December 16th compared with last year. (Times 28.12.95).

Ospreys, which have not lived in England since 1842, are to return to Leicestershire. Ospreys have been breeding at Loch Garten in the Highlands since 1959, when a conservation project began. There are more than 100 pairs north of the border. The birds have been seen in recent summers on Rutland Water, stopping off on their way back from winter migration to Africa. (Times 29.12.95).

Chickens sold as top quality in leading supermarkets are often unfit to eat and are liable to cause food poisoning, the Consumers' Association says. (Times 4.1.96).

Brigitte Bardot has written scathing letters to the Prime Ministers of Canada and Norway. Canada has recently increased the quota for seal hunting, while Norway broke a six-year ban on baby-seal hunting by allowing the hunting of baby seals over 15 days-old starting next year. (Evening Standard 8.1.96).

A retired vet who smuggled the eggs of rare parrots into Britain from Australia, was jailed for eight months by Swansea Crown court. Alan Griffiths, 68, of Llanberthery, South Glamorgan admitted conspiracy to import endangered species and was ordered to forfeit £29,000. (Times 8.1.96).

James Allen, 19, of Canning Town and Royston Budge, 18, of Plaitstow were accused at Stratford Magistrates Court of aggravated burglary at Plashet Park Zoo where 36 birds were killed. Both men were remanded in custody. (Times 8.1.96).

When an angler in Konakovo, Russia, celebrated catching a 28 inch pike by giving it a kiss, it bit back. Its jaws stayed tightly locked on his nose. (Times 12.1.96).

Plans to cull vast numbers of ducks are to be abandoned because ministers fear the sight of dead birds will infuriate animal lovers. (Times 12.1.96).

Since the Middle Ages deer have roamed the 1,200 acres that now make up Margam Country Park, near Port Talbot in West Glamorgan, but their future is being threatened by an increase in poaching. To tackle the problem a poacher-watch scheme has been set up by park rangers, Forest Enterprise staff and the police. It includes an intelligence operation - the names of some of the leading poachers are known - the use of sophisticated equipment such as night-sights and a helicopter, and a call for public co-operation. Since the scheme began last month one arrest has already been made. (Independent 20.1.95).

Dutch firemen used ice-picks to free birds stuck in the ice in Roermond as cold weather struck northern Europe. (Times 26.1.96).

A 95 year-old lobster is back in the ocean after being freed from a Texas diner and taken 2,000 miles by courier to the Atlantic Ocean. A PETA member paid £57 for the lobster and a further £67 to deliver it to its natural home. (Times 26.1.96).

One of Scotland's leading meat producers called in the liquidators blaming the health scare over BSE for its loss of business. The closure of Buchan Meat Producers Ltd., based in Turriff, Grampian, will mean the loss of at least 250 jobs. (Times 30.1.96).

A Building Society clerk from South Yorkshire spent £2,000 to bring a stray dog to Britain after she found it on a Greek beach. (Times 31.1.96).

American pig-rearing plants have caused controversy over their waste. One politician has called for hog confinement areas to be defined as factories, so becoming subject to stricter pollution rules (Independent 13.2.96).

Workmen clearing the debris of the Docklands bomb found an unlikely survivor - a tabby and white cat. The cat, which only suffered a scratched nose, is now in the care of the Cats Protection League. (Times 14.2.96).

Villagers have been awarded £1 million of lottery money to buy a heather-clad hill that overlooks their community to prevent it being quarried for sandstone. The 350 residents of Maeshafn in Clwyd plan a nature reserve on the picturesque Moel Findeg, home to badgers, snakes and rare vegetation. (Times 14.2.96).

Pork sales in the USA dropped by a reported 20% after the release of the film 'Babe' which features a talking pig. Sales in the UK also dropped according to the Meat and Livestock Commission. (Guardian 15.2.96).

ARKANGEL MAGAZINE : BCM 9240 : LONDON WC1N 3XX

AIRKAIN GEL

FOR ANIMAL LIBERATION

JOIN US ON THE ROAD TO VICTORY

END CRUELTY

No 16

£1.80

The Arkangel Editorial

In this sad world where animals are tortured and murdered on a global scale, it is easy to become despondent, to feel that nothing can be done to alleviate the suffering, to stop the horror or to fight the abusers. It is easy to feel isolated when most of the people around you seem oblivious to the cruelty perpetrated against countless millions of defenceless animals and often it seems as if the abuse and horror will never end.

Those among us who have been to the docks and the farms to protest against the live export trade will confirm that the overwhelming sadness felt is inconsolable when seeing those poor creatures packed into trucks and sent to their deaths. It is almost unbelievable that the law is on the side of the true criminals, the animal abusers, and not on the side of those attempting to stop the abuse.

The frustrations that animal liberationists have to cope with are almost too much to bear, but there is no choice in a world where the criminally insane rule and the police enforce laws which support those who treat animals cruelly. However, the struggle for Animal Liberation continues to grow in strength and as each day passes, so too does our determination to see each and every animal free from the clutches of the torturers and murderers of beautiful animal life.

The destruction of animals is all done in the name of human greed, vanity, and most of all - financial gain. The people that are capable of carrying out experiments on animals (just watch the film 'Hidden Crimes' and try to see into the minds of those warped 'scientists') are beyond belief but they exist by the thousand as do fur farmers, slaughterhouse workers, anglers and countless other animal abusers that exist. We may not be able to change the minds of those sick people but more and more of the general public are beginning to see the light and open their hearts to a more compassionate way of life. 30 years ago, the pioneers of Animal Liberation could only have dreamed of the success that has been achieved and the continual building upon those dreams are taking us closer and closer to the reality of Animal Liberation.

For those who feel isolated - remember, there is a vast and growing movement out there. For those who feel despondent - remember, Animal Liberation is within our grasp and animals are being saved on a day-to-day basis. We can and we will achieve our goal but we shall only do so when we have all adopted a vegan way of life and when we have exposed their corruption and lies and replaced them with compassion and truth. It is then and only then that Animal Liberation shall be achieved.

Arkangel Back Issues & Cards

Arkangel Back Issues: Numbers 2, 4 & 14 are still available and are FREE of charge! (But please send 50p per magazine to cover the postage).

Cards: A set of three cat 'Surimpressions' postcards are available. Prices are as follows: 10p each, 12 for £1, 100+ cards 5p each. Please add 25p p&p for orders of less than 50 cards.

Order from: Arkangel, BCM 9240,
London WC1N 3XX.

Please make cheques payable to 'Arkangel'.

Advertisements

Arkangel is a completely independent publication. We carry some advertisements but these are printed free of charge and at the discretion of the editors.

Animal Rights Prisoners

Arkangel gives its full support to animal liberation prisoners. In the past we have given details of names, locations and prison numbers. Now we only list the names of those in prison and ask those who wish to make contact with prisoners to contact the ALF Supporters Group for up-to-date information. This is because Arkangel Magazine is produced less frequently than the ALFSG information and could be out of date by the time you read it; so this change is for purely practical reasons.

For further information please write to:
ALF SG, BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX

Prisoners at the time of going to press:
Melanie Arnold, Gurjeet Aujla, Dave Callender,
Darren Cole, Rod Coronado, Michael Green,
Angie Hamp, Barry Horne, Frank Kocera,
Eric Van De Laan, Keith Mann, Gillian Peachey, Mike Roberts, Geoff Sheppard, Charles Skinner, Joe Taylor, Barbara Trenholm, Justin Wright.

Local Group Reports

Animal Rights Cambridge

74 Sturton Street, Cambridge CB1 2QA

(01223 311828 Fax 01223 300318)

There are two campaigning groups in Cambridge - Animal Aid and Animal Rights Cambridge. Between them they have met monthly for the last 20 years and held a weekly street stall for 17 years. The two groups, although having a separate identity, work very closely together as they do with the Hunt Sabs and recently they have had a number of joint campaigns - going together regularly to live exports demos, and to protest at the Eid 'festival' in France. The group has concentrated on live export protests but given as much time as possible to protest locally against an intensive poultry rearing complex and joining others at Bernard Mathews. One of ARC's members has raised considerable sums to send to Greek Animal Rescue and have planned a sponsored dog walk in August to raise funds for the same organisation. ARC are concentrating on Greece as one of their members has gone out to work at the sanctuary. Like all groups, they are often near to despair about the resumption of the live export trade and they held a hunger strike in July in protest at the atrocities inflicted on sheep in particular at this time. ARC welcome all to attend the meetings. They have no formal membership or constitution and do not keep minutes. The only official within the group is a treasurer as they feel it is important to keep accounts of money raised and distributed. The group look forward to seeing new members.

Animal Rights Warrington

c/o 3 Winmarleigh Street, Warrington WA1 1NB

This is a new group which welcomes new members. Please contact the group for further details.

Bristol Animal Rights Network (BARN)

Box 53, Greenleaf Bookshop, 82 Colston Street,

Bristol BS1 5BB (0117 951 2942)

BARN campaigns against all areas of animal abuse including factory farming, bloodsports, the pet trade, live exports, vivisection, etc. They hold fortnightly meetings in central Bristol and organise regular actions and events.

Beagle Breeders Closure (BBC)

(0121 643 2445)

In June, a new campaign against Consort and Interfauna was launched and a small demonstration against Interfauna took place. For more information about this campaign please write to the BBC c/o MARC, 54 Alison Street, Digbeth, Birmingham or telephone the number above.

Barnet Animal Rights Group

PO Box 76, Barnet, Herts EN4 9AW

BARG primarily covers the Barnet and Finchley areas. They hold regular meetings on the first Wednesday of the month at 8pm at the Quaker Meeting House, 58 Alexander Grove, West Finchley, London N12 and usually have a video presentation or discussion and the occasional guest speaker (write for details). New supporters are always welcome.

East Kent Animal Welfare

Tremont, Claremont Road, Kingsdown, Deal,

Kent CT14 8BU (01304 363071)

EKAU have been active since 1993, supporting national animal rights and welfare groups in the UK and abroad. The group have been very involved in the campaign against live exports. EKAU raise funds for hunt sabs, hold anti-circus demos, run stalls and public meetings and run a small-scale animal sanctuary/rescue service.

The Friends of Animals Under Abuse

(FAUNA)

PO Box 156, Cardiff CF5 5YD (01222 569924)

FAUNA is an active group whose campaigns include lobbying local councils about pigeon culls, ostrich farming and pet shop licences. They are currently targeting chicken meat production and have produced a video which was secretly filmed revealing the disgusting conditions in which broiler chickens live out their short seven-week lives. For further information about the group's activities, please write/phone for details.

London Animal Action
BM 2248, London WC1N 3XX
(0171 837 7557)

LAA have been carrying on with the campaign against the last few fur shops left in the country. With only two large fur shops left: Hockley Furs in Conduit Street, London W1 and Zwierns Precious Furs in Old Bond Street, London W1, and a handful of smaller ones, the campaign has definitely been having an effect! Whenever large crowds of A/R protesters gather in London, people always seem to want to pay a visit to the fur shops in passing. On World Day for Laboratory Animals there was a well attended day of demonstrations against vivisection. The Research Defence Society's offices were picketed and university labs recently infiltrated by NAVS worker Cris Iles were targeted. London activists have also been travelling around the country supporting hunt ball and live export demos. Circus Harlequin was the focus of demonstrations when it came to South London recently with good numbers of protesters (and police) turning out. A sponsored dog walk in Richmond Park for the Imperial Cancer Research Fund (vivisectors) was leafleted with excellent results. A/R people outnumbered dog-walkers and several people were turned away, disgusted by the ICRF's experiments on beagles. A public meeting was held in London where 'Hidden Crimes' was shown. Over 70 people came to watch this and listen to talks by Dr. Tony Page of BAVA and John Curtin, an ex-ALF activist. Anti-fur activists from Finland who had received large fines for liberating foxes from fur farms were supported by a demonstration at the Finnish Embassy. About 30 people attended which received national press in Finland. In August, about 20 protesters gathered outside the Savoy Hotel in Central London to make plain their feelings regarding the killing of grouse on the so-called 'Glorious 12th' and the Savoy's obscene party for it. LAA produce a monthly newsletter, London Animal Rights News, which includes a diary of forthcoming events and is available for £3.00 a year (free to groups) for 12 issues.

London Vegans
c/o 7 Deansbrook Road, Edgware,
Middx. HA8 9BE

London Vegans organise various socials and catering and information stalls throughout the London area. Regular meetings are held on the last Wednesday of every month (except December) at the Millman Street Community Rooms, 50 Millman Street, London WC1. London Vegans produce an excellent mailout list on the activities taking place both in London and up and down the country.

Midlands Animal Rights Coalition
54 Allison Street, Digbeth, Birmingham
(0121 643 2445)

MARC has found it very productive working with other AR groups in the West Midlands area, and Wolverhampton

Hunt Sabs,
Birmingham
Animal Rights Campaign
Group, Dudley Animal Concern,
Walsall Animal Rights and Wyre Forest Animal Concern all form the coalition with several other groups showing an interest. MARC is a very active and effective campaigning group - please contact them for details of their current campaigns.

Newcastle Animal Rights Coalition
PO Box 1JY, Newcastle upon Tyne, NE99 1JY
Please write to NARC for details of their current campaigns.

South London Animal Action
PO Box 594, London SW9 6YA

SLAA members have maintained a busy schedule of action and have supported a wide range of animal rights campaigns. They have joined forces with other local groups who have made regular trips to support the live export demos in Dover. The group campaigns against all animal abuse in the South London area and took part in a long running campaign against angling on Clapham Common. SLAA's catering company, Green Marmoset, provide very tasty vegan food at a variety of events and donate profits to numerous groups in need of financial support. SLAA produce a very informative newsletter.

Stevenage Animal Rights
Box 6, Bowes Lyon House, St. George's Way,
Stevenage, Herts SG1 1XY

SAR have been very active throughout the year continuing their campaign against Glaxo (laboratories); demonstrations are held monthly and the group would appreciate support; it appears that the police are taking excessive action against demonstrators as time goes on as earlier this year, 4 people were arrested for just being there and held in custody for several hours! SAR organised a 10 mile sponsored cycle ride in May and raised £100. In June, a large event took place in Stevenage attracting nearly 150 stalls. The demonstrations outside Glaxo take place on the 1st or 2nd Sunday of each month (for further details phone 01483 395542). SAR produce a very informative newsletter available through subscription of £4.50 a year.

Surrey Badger Protection Society
PO Box 911, Warlingham, Surrey CR6 9AF
(01883 344662)

This registered charity is affiliated to the National Federation of Badger Groups. The SBPS was formed to watch over the local badger population and to respond to any activities which may be detrimental to the animals' welfare. They give free advice and practical assistance in all problems involving badgers. Family membership is £5 with reductions for single adults, senior citizens and under 18's.

West Sussex Wildlife Protection

PO Box 99, Chichester, West Sussex PO19 4GL

This group, together with the re-launched Bognor and Chichester Action for Animals Group, launched a campaign in 1994 to get wildfowl shoots stopped at White Creek, Pagham Harbour, West Sussex. WSWP are also active in fox hunt sabs. For further details contact the address above.

the Silent ark

by Juliet Gellatley

The Silent Ark is a personal story of Juliet's growth of awareness and her determination to fight to save animals from suffering and death and to protect the planet. It is a book filled with passion but backed with the chilling legitimacy of science, with over 300 references. It is the ultimate argument for a vegan world. The book cuts a swathe of understanding through the disinformation and dishonesty on which meat prospers. Every issue is explored - exports, the lives and deaths of farm animals, the deceit of the dairy industry and the myth of free range. It exposes meat as a major cause of human disease, explains how it impoverishes the developing world and destroys the global environment. It also shines a spotlight on the politics of deceit on which the industry depends, including the handling of BSE.

The Silent Ark is published by Thorsons. It costs £6.99 and is available from:
VIVA! PO Box 212, Crewe, Cheshire CW1 4SD
(01270 522511).

West Norfolk Animal Rights
(01553 617521)

WNAR gave out leaflets to people going into Pet City asking them to consider giving homes to rescued animals rather than buying them from the animal supermarket. Members also attended the Fakenham point to point wielding anti-hunting banners and giving out leaflets on hunting with hounds. Earlier in the year, several group members held a picnic on the lawn of Bernard Mathews and another is planned for Xmas. Write to WNAR for news of their current campaigns.

Yeovil Animal Action

PO Box 1760, Yeovil, Somerset BA21 5PN
(01935 25195/410535, Fax: 01722 327146)

YAA are continuing their campaign against the Porton Down hell-hole where animals are being experimented on with toxic gases resulting in serious illnesses and death. YAA have produced a leaflet highlighting the charities, including the Leukaemia Research Fund, which fund animal-based research. Write for further details.

"... the best vegetarian buffet in town." TIME OUT

190 TRUNDLEYS ROAD, DEPTFORD, LONDON SE8

'EAT AS MUCH AS YOU LIKE'
£8.95 per head

The buffet includes:

soup and bread - four hot dishes - eight salads and dips plus - hot and cold desserts served with vegan cream and ice cream

The buffet changes fortnightly and is always at least 90% vegan.

OPEN: Wed. ~ Sat. 7pm onwards
Sun. 12.30 ~ 4.30pm

BOOKING RECOMMENDED ON:
0181 691 6665

SANCTUARIES

Hilltop Animal Haven

Cornwall EX23 9RZ (01288 321268)

Hilltop Animal Haven rescues old and ill-treated animals of all kinds which would otherwise have been destroyed, and gives them a loving and permanent home for the rest of their lives. Funds are urgently needed so they can continue this important work. If you would like to adopt an animal, become a member or buy from their gift list, please send an SAE together with your donation. They have no paid officials so every penny helps the animals in their care. Please help the animals nobody wanted.

Celia Hammond Animal Trust

High Street, Wadhurst, East Sussex TN5 6AG
(01892 783367 / 783820)

The sanctuary is in need of voluntary help to care for the animals in their care. Literature is available from the above address and over 100 permanent residents can be adopted either individually or as a group. Help is also desperately needed by Celia at her Lewisham Way clinic - caring for the stray cats and kittens, the odd rabbit and dog that stay permanently at the clinic until homed. Good AR people are needed to generally tidy, clean, mop and Hoover up and feed, water, clean out and befriend/fuss over the patients and strays. The address of the clinic is: Cat and Dog Neuter Clinic, 233/235 Lewisham Way, London SE4 1UY (0181 691 2100).

Freshfields Animal Rescue Centre

East Lodge Farm, East Lane, Ince Blundell,
Liverpool L29 3EA

(0151 931 1604 or 0421 535237 mobile)

The shelter costs £1,500 a week to run and staff would welcome any help in fund-raising. They urgently need voluntary live-in workers for short or long term help. They would also be most grateful for offers to home rescued animals but run a strict vetting service.

Widewalls Animal Sanctuary

Advent, Camelford, Cornwall PL32 9PY
(01840 212300)

The sanctuary is urgently appealing for money and volunteers to help build winter shelters for 30 horses. Donations of building materials, animal bedding and food would be gratefully received.

Boswiddle Barn Animal Sanctuary

Boswiddle Barn, Boswiddle, Near Ladock, Truro,
Cornwall TR24 4NU (01872 510226)

This sanctuary needs funds to support the 70 or so cats, dogs, horses, turkeys and ducks who live there. You can sponsor a shire horse, or you can become a friend of the sanctuary for £4.

Hopefield Animal Sanctuary

Sawyers Hall Lane, Brentwood, Essex CM15 9BY
(01277 201110)

The sanctuary provides homes for a wide variety and a large number of animals. The workers would be most grateful for any DIY - please contact them. They've also been given the use of a shop by the local council and welcome items to sell. An adoption scheme and merchandise are available.

Bolenowe Animal Sanctuary

Troone, Praze, Cambourne, Cornwall TR14 9HR
This sanctuary is in need of funds and would gratefully appreciate any help offered.

Animal Samaritans

c/o Malcolm Murkin, 14 Grasdene Road,
Plumstead, London SE18 (0181 854 9662)

Animal Samaritans is a charity which fights for the right of all creatures to enjoy health and happiness. It is run entirely by volunteers and raises funds to help local animals in distress. Many unwanted and feral cats are fed by members; injured birds are treated and released back into the wild and homes are found for hundreds of unwanted animals including dogs, cats, rabbits and gerbils. If you want to know more about Animal Samaritans they have speakers available for meetings, organisations and clubs!

Hillside Animal Sanctuary

Hillside, Hall Lane, Frettenham, Norfolk NR12 7LT (01603 736200)

Hillside campaigns to raise public awareness about the plight of farm animals, particularly those abused in factory farming. Hillside will do everything possible to make sure that the animals in their care live out their natural life-spans unaffected by human greed or neglect. They are in the process of establishing another branch of Hillside at Downham Market in Norfolk and are in need of funds.

Cedarwood Wildlife Care

Blissford Hill, Frogham, Fordingbridge,
Hants. SP6 2HX (01425 657402)

At Cedarwood, injured animals such as foxes, badgers, deer, rabbits, hedgehogs and many birds are nursed back to health and released into the wild. No animal is ever turned away and the centre is run as a non-profit making concern. Financial support is always needed as are volunteer drivers to pick up casualties from the Southampton/New Forest/Bournemouth areas and take them to Cedarwood.

Pigeon Recovery

8 Vermont Road, Sutton, Surrey SM1 3EQ
(0181 644 7349)

Pigeons are considered vermin by the majority of people which makes running this sanctuary all the more essential - and pigeons could not have greater friends than the two sisters who care for them, nursing them back to health and returning them back to the wild. Lyn and Maggie Allen work tirelessly and in the face of adversity to care for these birds. They would greatly appreciate any financial help whatsoever.

There are numerous other animal sanctuaries in the British Isles (far too many to list) but if you would like to find out about these them write to:

VEGGIES at 180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HW (0115 958 5666) for a copy of the Animals Contacts Directory 1996/97 edition, price £3.00.

Endangered Dogs

by Meg

I would like to draw your attention to the Endangered Dogs Association. The E.D.A. is the only society which takes action to help arrested dogs. They put dog owners in touch with solicitors and they try to find secure homes abroad for 'wanted' pit bull terriers who have done no harm. The E.D.A. is the only society who gave poor Otis and his owner Harry Bates any support, or Dempsey, or the other pit bull terrier crosses, many of whom were executed after years of imprisonment. How much worse it must be for a lively dog to suffer mental and physical depravation, than for a human, who at least knows why they are caged, and that their condition is not permanent.

Some dogs died in kennels where they were not exercised or given any affection (pit bulls and Staffordshires are exceptionally affectionate to humans). Otis (a Great Dane crossed with an undefined parent) was just a pet dog in his owner's care. He had an amiable disposition, but was 'arrested' and incarcerated for four and a half years (half a Great Dane's lifetime) before being put to death!! Harry Bates is as devastated as anyone would be, whose loving friend suffered such a dreadful undeserved fate. He has lost £20,000 in legal fees and 'kennel charges' and no one seems to care, except a few members of E.D.A. I have not seen anything written about him or the other dogs in any Animal Rights magazines.

The National Canine Defence League does keep a few pit-bulls in their rescue kennels, and did give support to the E.D.A. The RSPCA has an active policy towards pit-bull terriers - trying to exterminate them and any dog which even looks remotely like them, and promotes anti-P.B.T. messages and news in the Society's journal. The reality is that no pit-bull terrier has killed anyone, although human deaths have been caused by some other breeds (Alsations, Rottweilers and Mastiffs) it is still very, very rare (more people are killed by lightning) for people to be killed by dogs of any kind.

Why does the Animal Rights Movement overlook this lovely human friend, who doesn't deserve the hysterical witch-hunt s/he and her/his owners have suffered? The dog is not responsible for the vicious use which some humans use him/her for. Society doesn't hate cockerels because some people use them for fighting.

In Afghanistan the elegant Afghan hounds (bred to hunt gazelle and wolves) are also used for dog-fighting, but perhaps this should not be broadcast or there will be Kennel Club hysteria about them too.

Harry Bates would appreciate letters of support and condolence (and perhaps donations to help towards his fight to save Otis). He can be contacted c/o:

The Endangered Dogs Association,
PO Box 1544, London W7 2ZB.
(Emergency helpline 24 hours - 0181 843 9751).

National Groups

Animal Liberation Front (Supporters Group)

BCM 1160, London, WC1N 3XX

Subscription to their quarterly newsletter is £24.00 a year. It provides information about current arrests and imprisonment of alleged animal rights activists. The SG raises funds, chiefly to help pay fines and help towards the travelling expenses of visiting relatives. Funds also go towards paying for books, cruelty-free toiletries, etc. A range of merchandise is available with a discount to any SG member.

Animal Liberation Front (Press Office)

BM 4400, London WC1N 3XX (01954 230542)

The ALF Press Office plays a vital role in the animal rights movement. It remains paramount as a means of providing TV, radio and newspaper coverage about why ALF actions take place. Speakers are available for meetings, etc. Donations are always welcome to help run this invaluable service.

Animal Aid

The Old Chapel, Bradford Street, Tonbridge,
Kent TN9 1AW (01732 365 4546)

Animal Aid is a national animal rights group which campaigns (peacefully) against all forms of animal abuse. They publish an informative magazine 'Outrage' and membership costs £10.00 (waged), £6.00 (unwaged) and £5.00 youth.

Animal Concern

62 Old Dumbarton Road, Glasgow, Scotland
G3 8RE (0141 334 6014 Fax: 0141 445 6470)

Animal Concern incorporates the Scottish Anti-Vivisection Society. They publish a quarterly newsletter and run various campaigns including a farm animal campaign to ban all factory farming by the year 2000. For up-to-date information regarding their other campaigns you should write to them asking for their highly informative 'News Update'.

Animal Action (formerly Animal Birth Control)

30 Westwood Road, Hilsea, Portsmouth PO2 2QH
(01705 679541)

A 24 hour helpline is available for all animals and due to good relations within the area, Animal Action can provide aid and advice to cover most incidents be they traffic accidents, cruel owners, neglect, etc. The group also runs an animal ambulance. They are a self-supporting group and any money sent goes towards the welfare of animals.

Animal Help, Advice, Info & Rescue Service (Animal Hairs)

2 Benedict Street, Glastonbury BA6 9EX
(01749 860350)

If you have, or know of, any animal welfare problems from needing a free name tag to requiring assistance with transport - they can help! If you find an animal in distress or know of one being ill-treated they can attempt to rescue it. These services are free but the group is always seeking help, fund-raisers and needs foster homes (which will be properly vetted).

Animal Aid and Advice

(0181 889 9714)

The group's main objective is to encourage responsible pet care. They reinforce the fact that neutering and spaying is essential to prevent unwanted litters. AAA also re-home abandoned and unwanted pets and run a fostering service.

Action Against Puppy Farming

PO Box 2, Llandysul, Dyfed SA44 4EB

Dyfed is known for its puppy farming where puppies are bred only for profit and therefore suffering, cruelty and neglect are inevitable. AAPF spreads the message not to buy puppies from pet shops as they are usually bred in appalling puppy farms.

Animal Rights Coalition (ARC)

PO Box 339, Wolverhampton WV10
(01902 711935)

ARC encourages the coming together of all groups. A newsletter is provided, free with an SAE, with a diary of events and current campaigns. ARC also sends out lists detailing addresses of current animal abuse establishments supplied by Arkangel Information. They urge all animal rights groups to contact them.

Arkangel

BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX

Arkangel aims to provide information and support for the AR movement, to encourage unity and to provide a forum for the exchange of news and views. Please keep Arkangel up-to-date with local and national group activities, newspaper cuttings of direct action reports, etc. Subscription to the magazine is currently £8.00 for 4 issues (£15.00 outside of UK). Donations are always gratefully received.

Anti-Bullfighting Committee

PO Box 175, Liverpool L69 8DX

This group liaises with Spanish AR groups to persuade holidaymakers not to attend bullfights, and asks travel companies to publish a statement in their brochures discouraging people from attending bullfights.

British Anti-Vivisection Association (BAVA)

PO Box 82, Kingswood, Bristol BS15 1YF

BAVA has useful information on medical fraud. The aims

Cetacea Defence

PO Box 11, SEDO Office, Manchester M18 8GU

Principally involved in protecting the world's whales and dolphins. People are needed to act as on-the-spot investigators. Contact the above address.

The Captive Animals Protection Society (CAPS)

171 Cherry Tree Road, Blackpool, Lancs. FY4 4PQ Tel/Fax 01253 765072

This organisation continues the important work of requesting local authorities not to allow circuses with animals onto Council-owned sites. CAPS also continues to support and give encouragement to established and newly formed groups overseas, who work under difficult circumstances and often face strong opposition.

~~Dartmoor Badgers Protection League~~

Riverside Cottage, Poundsgate, Newton Abbot, Devon TQ13 7NV (01364 631231)

DBPL was formed to prevent the unjustified slaughter of badgers in the Devon and Cornwall area. The group produces an informative newsletter.

of the campaign are to abolish all animal experimentation and to increase public awareness of the hazardous nature of most medication. Posters, booklets and petitions are available. Subscription to the group is £6 a year.

Beauty Without Cruelty Charity (BWCC)

57 King Henry's Walk, London N1 4NJ

(0171 254 2929)

The BWCC campaigns to end the torture and slaughter of all animals in the name of fashion and beauty. Current campaigns include FUR FREE 2000 to ban fur farming in the UK before the end of the decade. Write for further details.

Campaign Against Leather & Fur (CALF)

BM 8889, London WC1N 3XX

Leaflets are available on the fur, leather, wool and silk trades. The group's aim is to draw people's attention to the fact that fur and leather are basically the same thing - the skin of murdered animals. CALF sends out information packs to promote veganism and these are free of charge but please send an SAE to help towards postage!

Disabled Against Animal Research and Exploitation (DAARE)

PO Box 8, Daventry, Northants. NN11 4RQ

A national organisation for people who are disabled or have a chronic disease. DAARE is opposed to animals being used in drug experiments. People who are not disabled are welcome to join.

Doctors and Lawyers for Responsible Medicine (DLRM)

104b Weston Park, London N8 9PP

(0181 340 9813 Fax: 0181 342 9878)

The objective of this organisation is the immediate and unconditional abolition of all animal experiments on medical and scientific grounds. Contact this important organisation for details of membership, etc.

Environmental Investigation Agency (EIA)

2, Pear Tree Court, London EC1R 0DS

(0171 490 7040)

EIA has campaigned for most endangered species since its formation in 1984. Write for further details.

The Fox Project
The Old Chapel, Bradford Street, Tonbridge TN9 1AW

This group has saved the lives of many foxes by humanely trapping and moving them from potential threat. They take into care orphaned foxes and set them free when they are fit and well. They also produce t-shirts, sweatshirts, leaflets and a newsletter. Write for more details.

The Fellowship of Life
*43 Braichmelyn, Bethesda, Bangor, Gwynedd,
 North Wales LL57 3RD*

A Christian-based animal rights group who support all aspects of the movement. They produce a regular newsletter.

Greek Animal Rescue
*69 Great North Way, Hendon, London NW4 1PT
 (0181 203 1956)*

This group rescues stray, injured and abandoned animals in Greece, where strays are often thought of as vermin - in some cases being disposed of by being thrown live over cliffs. A 30 minute video is available, showing some of Greece's atrocities towards its animals. The video also features the sanctuaries and shelters which are provided concerning the campaign to protect hedgehogs please write for further details.

Justice For Keith Mann Campaign
*c/o ICA, PO Box 1135, Downs View Road,
 Hassocks, West Sussex BN6 8AA*

In November 1995, Keith Mann was sentenced to an outrageous 14 years in prison which was reduced to an equally outrageous 11 years on appeal. For further information about the campaign for Keith contact the address above.

Justice & Rights
*PO Box 83, Bracknell, Berkshire RG12 7QH
 (01344 411468)*

J & R Associates are a group dedicated to ending the import and export trade in ostriches, emus and rheas. This evil trade is rapidly developing throughout Europe, with ostrich in particular being hailed as the 'new healthy meat' to eat. Write to the above address for further details.

Jewish Vegetarian Society
855 Finchley Road, London NW11
 The JVS is an international movement and membership is for abused and neglected animals. Please write for details. Any donations are appreciated.

Homeless Owners with Pets (HOPE)
*1a Courtland Gardens, Bassett,
 Southampton SO2 3PP*

HOPE campaigns for the rights of responsible people with pets, as often no pets are allowed in rented housing. The group helps to ensure the welfare of pets (usually dogs) on the streets.

Hunt Saboteurs Association (HSA)
PO Box 2786, Brighton BNQ 2AX (01602 590357)
 The HSA gives information and advice on how to form a fully operational hunt-sab group. They can provide speakers for talks and give legal advice. Merchandise and the brilliant magazine 'HOWL' are available. Write for further details.

Hedgehog Preservation Society
*Knowbury House, Knowbury, Ludlow,
 Shropshire SY8 3LQ*

For a very interesting newsletter and information open to everyone. JVS also produce an excellent magazine packed with information. Annual membership fee is £10 and family membership is £12.

Liberty
*WSPA, 2 Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ
 (0171 793 0540)*

Liberty is a campaign run by the World Society for the Protection of Animals to come to the aid of bears being exploited all over the world. An annual donation of £12.50 ensures 3 newsletters a year plus an introductory campaign pack.

McLibel Support Campaign
*c/o London Greenpeace, 5 Caledonian Road,
 London N1 (0171 713 1269)*

See report elsewhere in the magazine!

National Anti-Vivisection Society
*Ravenside, 261 Goldhawk Road, London W12 9PE
 (0181 846 9777)*

NAVS produce a magazine 'The Campaigner' which is issued to members. For details of their campaigns write to the above address.

NOW Against Live Exports

St. Joseph's, Souldern, Bicester, Oxon OX6 9LA

NOW are continuing with the campaign against live exports. Leading from the front, NOW have supported demonstrations wherever animals have been shipped from. NOW produce a News/Action letter giving campaign news from around the country.

Nurses' Anti-Vivisection Movement

PO Box 32, Matlock, Derby DE4 3JY

NAVMS seeks to bring together those members of the nursing profession who are committed to the abolition of experiments on live animals conducted during medical research, including the testing of drugs and in the field of behavioural sciences. Among their stated aims are the intention to publicly denounce vivisection, ensure the subject is discussed via the official nursing colleges and boards, to ensure the subject is published in journals and the media, to publicly debate the issues involved and to co-operate with other anti-vivisection organisations. Membership costs £5.

Pet Stealing Alert

PO Box 94, Cheltenham Glos.

Cats and dogs are going missing nationwide. Please contact the above address if you are suspicious of an advert offering good homes, or if an animal has disappeared in unusual circumstances.

Plan 2000

234 Summergangs Road, Hull HU8 8LL

(01482 786855 Fax: 01482 786195)

Plan 2000 aims to see all animal experiments banned by the end of the century. A video is available of a debate between Professor Coleman and the notorious Professor Wright (or wrong in his case!). This is available at £5.99. Plan 2000 also produce a newsletter (issue 7 is of particular interest!!).

Prevent Unwanted Pets (PUP)

28 Rushworth Avenue, West Bridgford,
Nottingham NG2 7LF (0115 9696018)

PUP provides help towards the cost of doctoring pets for people on a low income and thereby prevents the suffering of unwanted animals.

Ocean Wild

PO Box 93, Hounslow, Middx. TW3 1TY

Ocean Wild runs a commission scheme which will raise funds for local, national and international animal rights/welfare organisations, and sanctuaries as well as marine conservation projects. They produce a catalogue whereby a wide range of t-shirts are available (write for a copy!) If you wish to distribute their catalogues, you will receive £1.00 for every item purchased. Ocean Wild has been formed by The Shark Protection League and the Sea Sabs who campaign to save Whales, Dolphins, Sharks and all marine life.

People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA)

PO Box 3169, London NW1 2JF (0171 388 4922)

PETA campaigns against all forms of animal abuse and has a high media profile. They produce a very informative magazine 'Animal Times' which is available free of charge (please send an SAE).

Pisces

PO Box 90, Bristol BS99 1ND (01179 441175)

This important organisation produces a quarterly magazine which contains news of all aspects of anti-angling and fishing campaigns, the plight of wildlife and includes local group reports and updates from the Shellfish Network and the Shark Protection League. They provide speakers and are particularly willing to go into schools to talk to groups of students.

Reptile Protection Trust

College Gates, 2 Deansway, Worcs WR1 2JD
(01483 417550)

RPT is seeking to ban the trade in pet turtles and terrapins. They lobby relevant authorities internationally and engage in public education. To receive a copy of the booklet 'Reptiles: Misunderstood, Mistreated and Mass-Marketed', please send a cheque for £2.50 to the above address.

Shark Protection League

BM LAPL, London WC1N 3XX (0589 173033)

The SPL was primarily set up to expose the horrific cruelty involved in shark angling and to campaign against this 'sport'. The group produces leaflets, fact sheets, petitions and a very informative newsletter.

The Shellfish Network

54 Allison Street, Digbeth, Birmingham B5 5TH

The group aims to increase public awareness of the cruelties involved in the production of shellfish for food.

Student Campaign for Animal Rights (SCAR)

c/o PO Box 155, Manchester M60 1FT
(0161 953 4039)

For further information please write to the above address.

Society for Neutering Islington's Pussies (SNIP)

228 Highbury Quadrant, London N5 2TZ

The aim of SNIP is to protect and assist the stray/feral cat population of Islington. For further information you should write to the above address. If you could take in a homeless cat or kitten, please telephone Tricia: 0171 609 8182, Kate: 0181 800 7758, Janine: 0181 800 4468 or Linda: 0171 837 0766.

Uncaged

14 Ridgeway Road, Sheffield S12 2SS
(0114 2530020)

Uncaged works towards raising awareness of the horrors of vivisection. They recently organised a demonstration in Sheffield which attracted thousands of people.

Vegans International

c/o 11 Guinea Street, Bristol BS1 6SX

This very important group unites those who want to make the world a decent place to live where veganism is the norm!. They produce an excellent magazine. Membership is a well spent £7 a year.

The Vegetarian Society

Parkdale, Dunham Road, Altrincham,
Cheshire WA14 4QG

An important organisation for those taking the first step towards veganism. They produce a very informative magazine and also Greenscene, a magazine for younger readers.

Veggies

180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HU

An animal rights calendar is produced on a regular basis

South West Animal Rights Coalition (SWARC)

PO Box 1760, Yeovil, Somerset BA21 5YD

SWARC has been set up to try to keep the animal and environmental groups in the South West informed on current campaigns and events and to provide a format for individuals or groups to express their views.

Tail Ends

PO Box 1550, London SW4 6HP

This is a small vegan animal rescue network which needs homes for abused and abandoned animals, mainly dogs and cats. All of the money, which is desperately needed, goes towards food, vets' bills, neutering and spaying. They have a selection of cards available.

Teachers for Animal Rights

c/o 29 Lynwood Road, London SW17 6HP

Please write for an information pack. A donation to cover costs is essential.

as well as the Animal Contact List (£3.00). Their catering facilities travel up and down the country providing very tasty vegan food cheaply! Veggies also produce a variety of posters, available on request.

Vegan (A/R) Prisoners Support Group

PO Box 194, Enfield, Middx. EN1 3HH
(24 hour arrest/help line 0181 292 8325)

VSPG is run entirely by vegan volunteers dedicated to the rights of all animals and like-minded humans. It works within the law to bring about better conditions for vegan animal rights prisoners, and helps in any day-to-day problems they may encounter while in prison, offering moral support and practical assistance if needed. They are always in need of new volunteers and any practical and financial assistance to help keep this busy group running.

VIVA!

PO Box 212, Crewe, Cheshire CW1 4SD
(01270 522500)

VIVA! are a very active organisation who are currently countering the increasingly unprincipled marketing ploys of the meat industry. Also, they have launched a BSE Helpline (01270 522500) which is open between 10am and 7pm. A new Vegetarian Mother and Baby guide is also available. For more details of this organisation's work please contact the address above.

Vegan Society

Donald Watson House, 7 Battle Road, St.
Leonards-on-Sea, East Sussex TN37 7AA (01424 427393)

Animal Liberation will never be achieved until everyone becomes vegan! It is essential that as many people as possible join the Vegan Society and turn this dream into reality. With increased membership, the Vegan Society can spread the vegan message far and wide but they need your help!

Welsh Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals

PO Box 6, Llandysul, Dyfed, Wales SA44 5YR
(01559 371354)

For details about this group's important work please write.

World Society for the Protection of Animals (WSPA)

2, Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ
(0171 793 0540)

WSPA is involved in many issues concerning the plight of animals across the world. The organisation's 'Escape' campaign is helping to fund chimp and gorilla sanctuaries in Cameroun and Congo. Summer 1995 saw the launch of WSPA's Holiday Horrors campaign. This is a package designed to provide information to people, appalled by the animal suffering they see when they are abroad, to help them to know what they can do to help.

Young Indian Vegetarians

41 Lakeside Avenue, Ilford, Essex IG4 5PS
(0181 550 3725)

Please write for details of future events and information about the group.

National Groups Update

Feathered Friends

Feathered Friends, PO Box 2801, Brighton BN1 3NH

This is a newly established national campaign group dedicated to protecting all birds regardless of whether they are farm, wild or domestic creatures. The group plans to publish a regular newsletter detailing the latest campaigns and featuring articles of interest. The group will co-ordinate with other animal liberation groups to ensure that information, petitions and campaigns are heard on a nationwide scale. Leaflets detailing how to care for rescued birds (eg. baby pigeons lost from their parents), opposing culling on moral and practical grounds, against chicken, turkey and ostrich farming and others are available (free in small quantities or £1.50 per 100). Feathered friends is founded on vegan principals and oppose the abuse/killing of all animals.

Campaign for Cows

PO Box 339, Wolverhampton WV10 7BZ

This is a new project which was set up in order to encourage people to regard cows as sensitive creatures capable of feeling pain, fear and stress and to draw attention to the suffering caused by the dairy industry. The group aims in particular to encourage vegetarians and those concerned about live exports to become more aware of the link between the dairy trade and the beef and veal trades. The group can supply booklets, leaflets and fact sheets on all areas of animal cruelty and advice about turning vegan.

Prison Campaign

Niel Hanson should be released by the time you read this. Whilst in prison he started a campaign to ban prison inmates from keeping caged birds. He is urging people to write polite letters of protest to: Margaret Donnelly, Governor, HMP The Mount, Molyneaux Avenue, Bovingdon, Herts. HP3 0NZ and Michael Howard QC MP, Home Secretary, Home Office, Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1. So far he has arranged for 6 birds to be rescued and taken to outside sanctuaries.

Vegan Information Network

PO Box 2801, Brighton BN1 3NH

The V.I.N. is a new organisation dedicated to giving advice and support to those wishing to embark upon a vegan diet and also spreading info on vegan products to people already vegan, as well as campaigning about vegan issues. The group will deal with individual enquiries on vegan/animal liberation issues and they also produce their own range of leaflets listing cruelty free, vegan products, vegan alcohols, charities which do and do not support animal research, companies involved in the veal trade/members of BIBRA, etc.

Please send an A5 SAE with enquiries and a donation towards printing costs (if possible) - please leave cheques/P.O. payee line blank, thanks!

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

AUSTRALIA

The Sydney-based Cooperative Research Center for the Conservation and Management of Marsupials is developing a contraceptive pill which can be hidden in food pellets attractive to wild kangaroos. Australia encourages the shooting of up to 3 million kangaroos per year, to limit competition with sheep for grazing land and water holes, but acknowledges international pressure to find a more humane alternative. (Pro Animal, June '96)

CANADA

British Columbia is planning to turn a key grizzly bear habitat into a national park, raise fines for poaching and restrict hunting of the bears. (Ceefax, 12/4/96)

University of Toronto researchers have developed Sniffy, a "virtual rat", to replace real rats in psychology experiments. (Animal Times, Spring '96)

Vancouver residents voted to close the city's zoo, where animals were kept in horrific conditions. The animals have now been placed in more humane habitats. (Animal Times, Summer '96)

CONGO

A factory which makes bullets used to kill chimpanzees and gorillas in Africa has agreed to stop producing them, following a campaign by WSPA. (Ceefax, 18/4/96)

DENMARK

Fearing threats from animal rights activists, Scandinavian Airlines Systems has imposed a ban on transporting all research animals between Britain and Scandinavia. Previously the ban had only applied to dogs and cats. (Underground, Spring '96)

FINLAND

To prevent the annual winter slaughter of thousands of deer on Finnish roads, the authorities have taken steps to attach small lights around the tails of the animals in order to make them visible to traffic. The policy seems to be working, as the town of Pudasjaeriv, which employed it last year, reported that, out of the 800 deer in the area, only one had been hit by a vehicle. (La Voce dei Senza Voce, Summer '96)

FRANCE

The Daniel Jouvence laboratories (part of the Yves Rocher group) have announced that they will no longer carry out animal experiments and will do in vitro testing instead. (La Lettre de Pro Anima, Spring '96)

GERMANY

According to a representative of the German Farmers' Association, the consumption of meat in Germany has fallen by up to 65% because of the B.S.E. scare. Also, in 1995 3.5% fewer hens were slaughtered in Germany than in 1994. (Voice, April '96)

The number of pigs in the state of Hessen has fallen by 4% and the number of cows by 1.4%. (Voice, April '96)

HOLLAND

The Dutch government has banned the import of all furs from animals caught in leghold traps. (Underground, Spring '96)

The Netherlands has banned the use of live bait for fishing. (Animal Times, Summer '96)

HONG KONG

The government is to provide a marine haven to protect white dolphins from a massive new airport being built in the area where they live. (Ceefax, 11/5/96)

INDIA

According to a poll conducted by The Times of India, 62% of Delhi residents are vegetarian and 60% of these say they can't bear cruelty to animals. 30% of Delhi meat eaters say they would like to be vegetarian. (Compassionate Friend, Spring '96)

ISRAEL

The municipality of Tel Aviv has spayed or neutered about 4,000 cats in less than 2 years. (Pro Animal, June '96)

With the help of a lawyer, the "Anonymous" animal rights group were able to re-home a monkey that had been kept in miserable conditions at a pet shop in Rishon LeZion. Anonymous also managed to get the live animal market in Ramat Gan to close after presenting evidence to the authorities. (Pro Animal, June '96)

ITALY

Lawmakers in Venice have banned animal acts. (Animal Times, Spring '96)

The Municipal Authorities of Castrocaro Terme have ordered that dogs have to be taken out for a walk for at least 1 hour every day, otherwise the owner can be fined. (Pro Animal, June '96)

KAZAKHSTAN

A 600,000 acre nature reserve is to be set up in the Celestial Mountains to protect the rare snow leopard and other endangered species. (Ceefax, 22/4/96)

KENYA

Environmentalists have stopped a German businessman from disturbing a vital nesting ground for turtles. Green sea hawksbill turtles were known to nest in the area the businessman wanted to clear for hotel development. (Ceefax, 20/5/96)

RUSSIA

Poaching has been reduced by 70% in parts of Russia, thanks to Operation Amber, which consists of 5 teams of local people who monitor areas where tigers live. (Teletext, 25/5/96)

SOUTH AFRICA

This year there is to be no elephant cull in the Kruger National Park and South Africa has agreed to distance itself, at least temporarily, from moves towards lifting the ivory ban. (Care For The Wild News, Summer '96)

SWEDEN

Swedish legislators have rescinded a law which prohibited the sterilization of cats and dogs. (Pro Animal, June '96)

THAILAND

Police have rescued 3 young wild bears destined to be sold to restaurants to be eaten by Korean tourists, who regard bear meat as a delicacy. (Ceefax, 24/7/96)

U.S.A.

After a year-long campaign by PETA, organizers of the Orange Bowl in Florida have agreed to eliminate all elephant acts from the event. (Animal Times, June '96)

After mounting pressure from Illinois Animal Action, the local Lions Club in Willow Springs decided to cancel elephant rides it had organized at the King Royal Circus. (No Compromise, June '96)

Office supply giant Sanford Corporation announced that it has ended all tests on animals and replaced them with synthetic test materials like fake intestines and in vitro methods that do not require animal use. Sanford's announcement follows a rigorous campaign by PETA and the company now joins more than 550 others which have banned animal tests and are listed in PETA's cruelty-free shopping guide. (ARC News, June '96)

Two more airline companies, Delta and United Airlines, have decided to remove foie gras from their flight menus. (Animal Times, Summer '96)

Denny's, the largest full-service family restaurant chain in the U.S., has added veggie burgers to the menu at its more than 1,500 locations. (Animal Times, Summer '96)

The U.S. Navy missile frigate USS Curts sailed 80 miles off-course to rescue turtles entangled in an abandoned fishing net in the Indian Ocean. (Animal Times, Summer '96)

A survey commissioned by PETA found that 34% of anglers would consider not fishing after learning that fish often suffer potentially fatal injuries when hooked and released, and 29% after learning that fish begin to suffocate the minute they are yanked from the water. (Animal Times, Summer '96)

Following a court case brought by PETA, a judge has ordered a halt to a plan by the authorities in Rapid City, South Dakota, to trap 225 deer (including fawns), blindfold them with pillowcases, bind their legs together and then send them for slaughter. (Animal Times, Summer '96)

The Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games agreed not to release live doves at the opening ceremony of the 1996 summer games. Scores of birds perished in the flames at the Seoul games. (Animal Times, Summer '96)

VIETNAM

Conservation measures are to be introduced to protect the 300 elephants left in the country. Special patrol units will be created to prevent ivory poaching and a teaching programme set up to educate people about elephants and their lifestyles. (Ceefax, 22/4/96).

The Live Exports Diary

Dover: 19th April. Over 300 protesters arrived in Dover to mark 12 months since live exports resumed through the port. They were greeted by a mass of posters, banners and signs which had appeared on many surfaces overnight. Just as flowers in memory of all animals exported were about to be placed on the roundabout, over 150 protesters made their way into the road and sat down causing a delay to all incoming traffic. No attempt was made by Kent police to move anyone on for 30 minutes. Protesters then moved to the Folkestone home of the owners of Petham lairage where they moved into the road again. At Shepherdswell, the German TV company who had been with them all day were interested in meeting Mr. Skinner, owner of the lairage, and a heated discussion took place which was filmed. The documentary focuses on the attitude of the church towards animals. Mr. Skinner did mention that he did not think live exports would resume.

Coventry: Easter was spent distributing leaflets throughout South East Staffordshire, which was hoped contributed to the Labour local election victory. A recent trip to Yorkshire to visit Albert Hall Farms and the Machin brothers resulted in a very irate Geoffrey Hall, one of the biggest veal calf dealers in the UK, who had to be restrained by his wife. It appears he has laid off quite a few of his workers and is contemplating farming in Spain! The Machins, sheep dealers known for illegally sending British animals to non-approved slaughter to France and Greece, were surprised to see the protesters and they were delighted to air their views on their doorstep. Lots of people turned up for the first protest outside ITF investor and exporter Graham Gilder's home which had been arranged over the telephone yet the police were there in force long before they arrived. On 23rd May, Bernard Marlow Davis, formerly a driver for Peter Gilder is due to appear in Cheltenham Magistrates' Court charged with common assault on a female protester.

Dover: 3rd June. Dover group KALE sprang into action last week when they were given the news by APB that shipments were to commence once again on Monday 3rd June. The committee drew up a contingency plan and, when accurate details were known, contacted KALE members and groups across the UK. Before the Cap Afrique arrived on 3rd June, CIWF had organised a wreath-laying ceremony and by the afternoon the demo had swelled to over 150 people. As the first lorry with 400 lambs arrived, various tactics were used to block the port access. While some people sat in the road, others scrambled up the sides of the truck. 4 people chained themselves to the lorry's slats with handcuffs and succeeded in delaying the truck for long enough to bring traffic to a standstill. Ready with bolt cutters, the police cut the protesters free which did not deter two of them from re-chaining themselves to the lorry. Two hours later four animal lorries plus one with ordinary freight, were escorted down Jubilee Way under heavy police guard. With such massive police reinforcements, it was impossible for protesters to stop the trucks. The ship was delayed for two hours as local LVI's had refused to inspect the lambs. It is still not known who issued the health certificates from the non-EU approved lairage at Bull farm, near Cranbrook, Kent where the lambs were rested prior to their journey.

Ashford Market: 28th May. A regular market-watcher took her 11 year old daughter to the cattle market. The woman left her daughter with two other market-watch women while she went in search of the RSPCA inspector to introduce to one of her party. While the little girl and the women were watching the sheep auction a six foot farmer rushed up to the girl, grabbed her video camera (which she was not using) and, as he did so, bent her fingers right back and smashed the camera to pieces on the ground. The girl was extremely frightened and in great pain with the injury to her hand. The police were called and spent 30 minutes trying to locate the farmer who was eventually found lurking in the auction room. He was arrested and taken to the police station where it was discovered that he was already on 28 days bail. The farmer has now been charged with criminal damage. There were at least 40 farmers who stood by and did nothing.

Coventry: 17th June. On the evening of 17th June CLEPG supporters arrived at PJ Services near Daventry, the farm owned by sheep exporter Patrick White. 19 protesters were arrested and jointly charged with conspiracy to commit criminal damage and GBH and violent disorder. Those arrested were confined at three separate police stations for two nights, their clothes taken away, their homes searched - including a door being broken down. The farmer is alleged to have rammed one of the protesters' vehicles several times. Following a brief court appearance on 19th June all were released on conditional bail.

Dover: 3rd July. CIWF supporters demonstrated at the entrance to the Eastern docks to protest against the imminent resumption of live lamb exports from Dover to the continent.

London: 29th July - 1st August. A 74 hour hunger strike was staged on the Ministry of Agriculture's Whitehall doorstep in protest at the Government's failure to oppose the live export of farm animals - a trade which recommenced in June after a lay-off caused by the BSE crisis. The protesters, known as SOS (Save Our Sheep) started their hunger strike on July 29th and finished at 10.30am August 1st. 12 protesters from Cambridge, Brightlingsea and London took part in the demonstration outside MAFF, sleeping there at night. Carla Lane, Glenda Jackson and two MPs, Tony Banks and Sir Andrew Bowden, visited and spoke to the press. On August 1st the fast ended and food was brought by the Young Indian Vegetarians and Quaker Concern for Animals. Nearly 2,000 signatures were collected on a petition and over £100 was made, so a substantial donation was given to the Kent group KALE. A number of activists from London and further afield visited daily to give emotional and practical support which was much appreciated.

The events listed above are a small selection of actions taken from The Animal Protesters' Bulletin available from:

*Liz Long,
13, Roseneath Road, London SW11 6AG
(0171 223 3829)*

A donation of £5 for 10 issues would be appreciated!

Sabbing News

NEW ADDRESS

The Hunt Saboteurs Association has moved! After a long spell in Nottingham the HSA office has transferred down to Brighton. The new address for all letters is: PO Box 2786, Brighton, BN2 2AX. The telephone and fax number is now 01273 622827. Members receive the excellent magazine Howl four times a year with detailed information on direct action against bloodsports from around the country. Those of you with computers can e-mail them on hsa@gn.apc.org or reach their site on the internet at <http://envirolink.org.adn.has/hsa.html>

LIVE BAITING

The 15th June was the start of National Anti-Angling Week, and Pisces (formerly Campaign for the Abolition of Angling) launched its campaign to get live-baiting banned. Live-baiting is a barbaric yet not uncommon practice in which live fish are impaled on treble hooks by anglers to catch predatory fish such as perch and pike. Not only does this cause extreme suffering to the fish but it is also a severe threat to the aquatic environment through the spread of disease and introduction of new fish species. Livebaiting has already been banned in more civilised countries such as Ireland, Germany, Norway and the US. The Netherlands plan to ban it from January 1997.

Sabotage of angling matches took place around the country throughout the week and these appear to have been very successful. Angling sabs are becoming more frequent these days and public attitudes are slowly turning against this once-neglected bloodsport.

For more details write to Pisces at: PO Box 90, Bristol BS99 1ND.

BFSS LOSES FRIENDS

The British Field Sports Society, the main organisation promoting fox-hunting and other bloodsports, has found itself a bit of a social outcast just recently. The British Association for Shooting and Conservation rejected plans for it to merge with the BFSS at its AGM in June 96. This follows attempts by the BFSS to pull the angling community into its ranks which were scuppered when an Angling Times poll showed that 91% of anglers were against closer ties with fox-hunting. A motion to affiliate the National Federation of Anglers to the BFSS was rejected recently. The bloodsports fraternity is heavily split over this issue and can often be heard in the media bickering amongst themselves. Too often animal rights groups can waste time and effort with infighting so it's good to see the opposition doing it and doing our job for us!

The BFSS has also been rejected over advances it had been making to the Labour Party, and the RSPCA also seems to have shaken off attempts by hunt scum to infiltrate it. Earlier on in the year the BFSS and the Countryside Movement heavily pushed the idea of getting bloodsports fanatics to join the RSPCA with the aim of taking them over and ending their opposition to hunting. At the RSPCA's AGM in June 96 loopholes in their constitution were changed to ensure the hunting lobby's infiltration was nipped in the bud.

COUNTRYSIDE MOVEMENT

The Countryside Movement, which was launched in November 1995 to polish up the image of bloodsports is turning out to be pouring money down the drain. The BFSS were revealed in a leaked document to have contributed over £250,000 to the Countryside Movement which according to its chairperson, David Steel, "is not a pro-hunting organisation." The CM planned to spend £5million a year on high-profile advertising and media campaigns to attract members. In the first four months only 25,000 people had joined. This is despite the fact that it is FREE to join and includes all the sabs and anti-bloodsports campaigners who joined to see what barmy stuff they would come out with!

Lt. Col JRD Kaye, East Anglia's Regional Director of the BFSS said: "This is not good enough. It is our duty to join, and to make everyone that we know enlist for the Countryside Movement, in order to protect our way of life in the countryside."

SABOTEURS ACQUITTED

Three hunt protesters, two from East Northants Anti Bloodsports, the other a student at Churchill College, Cambridge, were acquitted of aggravated trespass last month at Leicester Magistrates Court as the prosecution case collapsed into a shambles. The case highlights yet again the ineffectiveness of the Criminal Justice Act, which was met with widespread condemnation from civil liberties organisations when it became law in November 1994.

The only two prosecution witnesses out of a total of seven who actually claimed to have seen the defendants commit any offence not only contradicted each other, but also contradicted the evidence given subsequently by the police. The magistrates were moved to comment that the prosecution witnesses were "less than reliable". Needless to say, the case brought by Leicestershire CPS promptly collapsed.

LEDGBURY HUNT BALL

On Friday 17th May about 100 sabs turned up to welcome hunt scum to the 150th Ledbury Hunt Ball at Eastnor Castle in Herefordshire. The small number of police present meant several vehicles had their windows smashed in. There were six arrests for criminal damage and one hunter had a heart attack on the ball floor!

HORSE AND HOUND HUNT BALL

Horse & Hound is the main magazine for fox-hunting aficionados and every year hosts an upmarket disco with booze and grub, pompously known this year as the "Atlanta Ball". In years gone by, this event was always held at the posh Grosvenor House Hotel on London's Park Lane. Perhaps indicative of the state of fox-hunting nowadays, and with no disrespect to Birmingham residents, it is now held in the grim and not very pleasant surroundings of the National Exhibition Centre on the outskirts of Birmingham. A large welcoming committee of sabs was there to meet the guests as they arrived, just in case they forgot about us. A barrage of abuse and a spray of spittle were the most popular greetings. Most ball-goers arrived by coach, but those foolish enough to park nearby with bloodsports stickers on their vehicles must have found a few of their windows missing on returning.

WILD MAMMALS PROTECTION ACT 1996

This Act came into force on 30th April 1996. It makes it an offence for any person to "...mutilate, kick, beat, nail or otherwise impale, stab, burn, crush, drown, drag or asphyxiate any wild mammal with intent to inflict unnecessary suffering." Unbelievably, before this law was passed it was perfectly legal, for example, to play football with a live hedgehog. Originally the Act would have banned hunting with hounds, but due to pressure from powerful hunt supporters these parts were removed. It does however mention that during bloodsports sessions the quarry must be killed in a "... reasonably swift and humane manner" or the person responsible could be liable to prosecution. The maximum penalty is a £5,000 fine and/or imprisonment of up to six months.

GLORIOUS TWELFTH

August 12th is the official day when it becomes legal to blast grouse out of the sky with shotguns. Known as the "Glorious Twelfth", it is the day when hundreds of inadequate sadists travel up to the grouse moors of Yorkshire, Cumbria and Scotland and pay vast sums of money to murder small defenceless birds in their hundreds. Luckily for the grouse van-loads of sabs are also roving around the moors looking for these scum and many shooting parties have their day ruined by effective sabotage methods. Traditionally the very first grouse to be shot on the twelfth are sped down to London by helicopter or fast car to London's top restaurants who "race" to see who gets the first bird cooked and on the table. In previous years posh hotels such as the Savoy and the Ritz in central London have trumpeted the arrival of the first grouse to their restaurants. This year demonstrators were present outside the Savoy, who were remarkably reticent about when it was arriving and even tried to blame the Ritz for participating in this sick ritual!

SUSSEX POLICE FUND SABS

A West Sussex sab was paid £200 in an out-of court settlement by the Sussex Police. It follows an incident in October 1995 at the Crawley and Horsham foxhounds when he was arrested at the meet and held for about an hour before being released without charge. The sab, Simon Wild, said: "This is the fourth out-of-court settlement made to me by Sussex Police since 1992. Previously they have paid me a total of £1,100 in settlement plus full legal costs. Given that the police like the courts to fine the public who act unlawfully, it seems appropriate that I should fine the police when they act unlawfully". Sussex Police understandably said: "No comment".

HUNTING - Issues & Arguments

by Tim Spencer

If you're going to take any part in the campaign against bloodsports it's useful to know the relative arguments as thoroughly as possible. Arguing with hunters is rarely productive, but as a sab you will want to explain to other people exactly why hunting should be stopped.

Foxhunting is primarily dealt with here, but I have mentioned other bloodsports briefly, as it is dangerous to assume the same arguments apply. A good booklet to read is "Wildlife Protection - The Case for the Abolition of Hunting and Snaring", available by mail order from the League Against Cruel Sports.

Killing animals is wrong

Why? To you and me this may seem obvious, but it isn't to others. In short (a) the animal is deprived of all the pleasures it would have enjoyed in the future: food, play, sunshine, sex, etc., and (b) the animal undergoes mental and physical suffering when hunted. Hunters will sometimes try and deny this, but Zoologists agree that other animals feel pain. Don't forget about mental suffering either.

The hunted animal can be chased for long distances by hunts, maybe for ten or more miles. Foxes are not suited for long distance running, and are built for speed not stamina. The opposite is true for hounds who are deliberately bred this way, so that the hunt can have a long chase. Hunters will claim that the fox dies from a 'quick nip in the back of the neck', but those who have seen kills (and sometimes recorded them on video), can tell you that the truth is somewhat different.

Some foxes 'go to ground'. In this situation, terriers are put into the hole, either to flush the fox out, to provide a longer chase, or to fight it until the terriermen dig down to it. A terrier is a formidable opponent for a fox. In one case in 1989, a cornered fox was so desperate to dig its way out of a hole in which it was being attacked by a terrier that it died with its lungs filled with earth. An underground fight like this can easily last for half an hour, and may even go on for two to three hours on occasions. All the time, the fox is fighting for its life. When the terriermen reach it, if it is one of the lucky ones it will be killed quickly by a bullet or by a spade.

Is hunting pest control?

This is the major myth that hunters use to excuse their activities.

The fox is not nearly the incredible menace to rural society it is sometimes made out to be. The MAFF (Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries, and Food) regard the threat from a fox as 'negligible'. Scientific studies have shown that a fox may take dead or dying sheep, but a healthy sheep is easily a match for a fox. Sometimes foxes may get into sheds and take chickens, but if the shed was made reasonably secure this would not happen - and most chickens are kept in factory farms anyway. In the end, you are left with the farcical image of a fox with a crowbar.

Scientists such as Steven Harris and David Macdonald have disproved this. In studies carried out in Scotland, an absence of fox 'control' had no effect on the population, or on lamb mortality. From information gained during rabies control in Europe, it is known that to have anything other than a very short term effect on population, 70% of foxes need to be killed. The reason for this is that fox populations are very stable, and adapt to the available food supply. As the death rate varies, more or less vixens will breed, maintaining the population at the level appropriate to the food supply.

Hunts tend to kill 2.5% of the local fox population a year. These are BFSS (British Field Sports Society) figures, so if anything are exaggerated. Plainly, hunts do not control foxes, even if there was the necessity.

Furthermore, this tiny drop is generally more than compensated for by the efforts hunts make to increase numbers: creating artificial earths, discouraging shooting and snaring, and importing foxes (e.g. Isle of Wight and Australia). Sheep carcasses have been known to have been left outside earths.

As far as hare hunting is concerned, hares are on the decline due to changes in modern farming methods. In East Anglia, the population level is possibly stable, but is nowhere near what it was. Hares are not pests anyway - and hare hunters will rarely, if ever, attempt to use this as argument.

Mink are not native to this country, but again, there is no evidence to suggest it is a pest. Remember that the people who go mink hunting are those who hunted the otter to the brink of extinction, and when otter hunting was banned turned to mink to satisfy their bloodlust. Mink hunts are also often condemned for vandalism to the river bank and the otter's habitat.

The situation with deer is more controversial, in the absence of any conclusive scientific studies. One thing is certain however, a well trained marksman can kill a deer instantly, whereas a deer hunted with hounds undergoes extreme suffering - a hound pack is unlikely to kill a deer unaided, usually there is a wait for the kill, while someone finds a gun. In Scotland, shooting is the only legal way to kill a deer, although untrained 'sportsmen' pay some Highland estates for the pleasure of shooting deer in the annual cull. Another point of view, is that as man caused the mess that results in the so called 'overpopulation' of deer (and this is only 'overpopulation' by man's definition), man cannot be trusted to solve it, and so the killing of any deer should be banned. The species on the planet with the biggest overpopulation problem is not being culled after all.

The inefficiency of hunting

Hunting with hounds is deliberately inefficient as a method of killing, because it is about a perverted definition of 'good sport', not pest control. Hunts would use cubhunting tactics all season if they wanted to maximise kills; they don't.

Hunts often bolt foxes that have gone to earth - digging would be much more likely to end in a kill. Hounds are bred to be slow - and so may often lose their quarry. If hunts were serious about maximising kills they would use dogs fast enough to bring the hunted animal down quickly. "Hunting is less cruel than other methods of fox control" Another old chestnut from the bloodsport fraternity. Hunted foxes suffer a lot, and most significantly, hunting is not control anyway.

Fox conservation

The opposite of the control argument; some hunters maintain that the fox would be extremely rare or extinct without hunting. While hunts may encourage foxes, the fox population would survive perfectly well without them - the fox is very adaptable. Humans are unlikely to have a terminal effect on the species, but they do inflict great suffering on individual animals: that is where we come in. "We don't kill many"; "The kill is not the important part of the hunt"; "Hunting is the only way to get an exciting ride". - These whines are heard from the kind of rider who isn't really into the killing side, and may even feel vaguely guilty about it. 11 000 - 12 000 foxes are killed each season. That's up to 12 000 premature deaths. These riders still contribute, through subscriptions that keep the hunt going, to the deaths. "The fox has a sporting chance" - The fox has no chance to decide not to participate in this 'sport'. "Hunting is an integral part of country life"; "Hunting is traditional" - Foxhunting has been going on since the 18th century, when there were no more wild boar to hunt, and a lot less deer. Hare hunting has been going for longer. None of this however has any bearing on the rights and wrongs of hunting. Wars have been taking place for long enough - would the hunters say that wars are good things to have once in a while?

Foxhunting can be very disruptive to rural life, as hunts rampage through villages, gardens and farmyards. Hounds may 'riot', going after any animal that has the misfortune to get in their way - for example hares, deer, pets and sheep. "Antis are townies who misunderstand the ways of the country" - Anti-hunt campaigners have to know a lot about hunting to campaign against it effectively. Hunt saboteurs need to know how a hunt works to sab effectively. And many live in the country. The last time I heard this, it turned out that the only experience and knowledge of hunting of the person concerned was standing in the village on Boxing Day watching the hunters gather for their mince pies, etc. I knew far more than he did, and so do you, having read thus far.

Treatment of hounds

Hunters are fond of accusing sabs of mistreating hounds. In fact hounds suffer greatly at the hands of hunters. They are harshly disciplined; they will be whipped if they are really disobedient.

Very few foxhounds die of old age. A very small number may become minkhounds or draghounds in old age, and a very few probably become family pets; however, most are killed as soon as they become a little to slow for the pack, generally at 5-7 years of age.

Any really disobedient hound will be killed at any stage of its 'career'. Some hunting authorities, notably the Duke of Beaufort (see 'Foxhunting', by the said Duke), recommend breeding a large number of puppies and then killing all but those who prove to be the best hunting material.

Hunting very often involves taking hounds into danger. During the chase they are likely to be involved in road or rail accidents, or injure themselves in quarry or barbed wire fences. Many such incidents are reported every year, and have been recorded on film.

Hunters say that if hunting were abolished, the hounds would have to be put down. There would be no actual need for this; the ex-hunters would be wealthy enough to maintain the hounds for the rest of their natural lifetimes. If they killed them, it would be out of callous indifference, and not no choice. Hopefully anti-hunting legislation will include a requirement for hunts to make arrangements for their hounds before disbanding. A similar argument is put forward in relation to horses - but people will still continue riding, whether they can go hunting or not.

Violence to animals and violence to people

It is no coincidence that those who arrange the nasty and premature deaths of foxes inflict harm on sabs.

Hunting and the law

Hunting has tradition and the support of very powerful people on its side. The influence of these people meant that hunting has been left untouched by legislation - the Protection of Animals Act only covers captive and domestic animals.

It is likely that the police would regard hunting as unlawful if it were a new activity. Surely, letting an excited pack of carnivorous animals career about the countryside, across roads and through villages, only partially under anyone's control, amounts to a breach of the peace?

"Hunting provides employment"

Hunting in Britain provides full-time employment for no more than 750 people, probably less (source -LACS - I think this figure refers to all hound sports). Spread over the whole country, this would hardly be a huge blow to the rural employment situation were hunting to be abolished, especially as (a) at least some hunts would become draghunts, and (b) all those riders who didn't want to draghunt would suddenly have a lot of disposable income with which to create new jobs elsewhere in the leisure sector of the economy.

Often the BFSS quote much larger figures than 750, but they include jobs which will still exist when hunting is abolished (people will still be riding horses, and require the associated services and equipment). In any case, employment is never enough to justify immoral practices.

"Hunting is natural"

Would-be BFSS intellectual, Ian Coghill, claims that we are biologically equipped to be hunters, with all the necessary teeth, enzymes, and instincts - BUT not everything we are mentally and physically equipped to do is a morally acceptable pastime.

Hunters also speak of the inevitability of death and suffering in the biological world. This is never though to be an excuse for murder and rape (humans are a part of the biological world too), so why should it apply to hunting? Neither can hunting be seen as a natural activity for hounds. Hounds are painstakingly bred and trained to hunt. Furthermore, no pack animal will chase an animal the size of a fox for the length of time a hound pack chases a fox. It simply would not provide anywhere near enough food for the pack.

The environment

Landowners derive no income from hunting with hounds which could be channelled into conservation, and so would be no less financially capable of doing it in the absence of hunting. Sometimes they will say that landowners retain woodland for hunting. A survey by Cobham Resources Consultants, commissioned and published in 1983 by a pro-bloodsports group stated that creating fox coverts was the "least significant motive" for landowners retaining or planting woodland.

Also, the 'guardians of our countryside' have made a poor job of it. Look at the bare expanses of fields with their lack of hedgerows, around East Anglia, as one example. Another example is that about half of the ancient natural/semi-natural woodland Britain has disappeared since the 1940s.

It is often argued in the case of the grouse moors, that the fees paid by shooters maintain the grouse moorland. However it is worth pointing out that (a) tourism has a far greater economic significance in these areas, and (b) the grouse moors are not a true natural environment, and would largely disappear if nature was simply left alone for a change.

The influence of the hunters has failed to stop development in the countryside - e.g. roads, urban sprawl. Hunts are relatively weedy to take on powerful economic forces such as these. The obvious solution is genuine conservation measures, now.

Hunting with hounds has few significant detrimental environmental effects, however it is worth mentioning the disturbance of badger setts through earth stopping and digging out, and the obvious impact of a convoy of hunt vehicles polluting its way through the countryside. Most coverts are drawn too infrequently to have a significant effect on the wildlife there; however wildlife trusts may make sure of this by banning hunting on their land.

Hunters' hypocrisy

You will have noticed that a common thread of hypocrisy runs through many of the pronouncements of the hunting community. They mistreat their hounds, while posing as animal lovers and accusing sabs of hurting their animals. They are violent, but claim to be the victims of intimidation and assault; and so on ad nauseam.

"Meat eaters should not oppose hunting"

Hunters like to criticise the hypocrisy of anti-hunting people who eat meat, wear leather or whatever (though I have still to meet a non-vegetarian saboteur). There is an element of truth in this, however it is still no defence of hunting to point out the cruelty and suffering other animals go through.

"Anti-bloodsports campaigners are motivated by class hatred"

Bloodsports are not the prerogative of the wealthy. Hare coursing still exists, and is to a large extent, a working class sport. Even a foxhunt consists of a wide spectrum of people. You have to be rich to be able to afford to ride with the hunt, but not to be a terrierman, a foot follower or a supporter. These people are not just the puppets of the aristocrats: they are enthusiastic participants in the hunts. People opposed to hunting come from all backgrounds.

"Cubhunting usefully disperses the foxes in autumn"

A rare and rather desperate defence of cubbing. Cubbing does indeed scare young foxes away from their birthplace, leaving the fox population more evenly distributed across the countryside. However, the foxes would move of their own accord, a couple of months later. Cubbing does nothing of lasting significance in this respect. The fox population is quite capable of spreading itself across the countryside on its own. Cubbing must, however, traumatise the adolescent foxes which are forced away from home before they are ready to leave.

Spreading of disease

Disease may be picked up by hounds, and spread wherever they go. Also, killing a fox means that another fox may move into that area to replace it. This means that there is more mobility in the population than there would otherwise be, and therefore a greater potential for the spreading of disease.

Hunting and individual choice

"So you don't believe in personal freedom" said the same guy who had accused me of being an 'ignorant townie'. This argument is fundamentally flawed - who would suggest we have the freedom to take the lives of other humans? Who would say we have the freedom to mutilate a pet dog? Similarly, all animals should be regarded as sensitive living beings who deserve respect and consideration.

Please circulate this article - it is strictly anti-copyright!

What the Papers Say

A Selection of Press Cuttings from the Past Few Months

Gamekeeper hurt in grouse protest

A GAMEKEEPER was injured yesterday in a confrontation between hunt saboteurs and a shooting party on the first day of the grouse season.

Many estates decided against shooting to avoid the threat of disruption and to give time for an expected improvement in prospects during the next few weeks.

Several parties enjoyed moderate success in North Yorkshire and Co Durham, and in Renfrewshire and Strathspey in Scotland. One shoot was disrupted at Stanhope Common, Co Durham, when up to 50 demonstrators converged on 12 shooters.

One gamekeeper was slightly injured and a vehicle belonging to the shooters was damaged. Forty police were called to allow the shooters to withdraw in safety.

A spokesman for the British Field Sports Society said: "All the protesters are interested in is causing havoc and disrupting other people's enjoyment."

The Savoy Hotel in London, where grouse was on the menu, was besieged

By Auslan Cramb and Paul Stokes

by protesters from London Animal Action and the Hunt Saboteurs' Association. The protest continued in The Strand after police moved them from the hotel entrance.

On the estates which did shoot, bags were slightly bigger than in recent years. One estate in Renfrewshire reported good results for a party of visiting Frenchmen although most estates in Perthshire and the Angus glens did not shoot.

One group called for an end to grouse shooting in Scotland. The League Against Cruel Sports said that Scottish landowners should abandon the "outmoded bloodsport" and develop the land for tourism and the revival of natural forests.

Graeme Gordon, of the Scottish Landowners' Federation, said that the suggestion was out of touch.

He added: "What the League does not recognise is that without grouse shooting there would not be grouse in any number, and without grouse there would not be heather."

'Cruel and barbaric' cockfighters jailed

Three men arrested when police and RSPCA officers swooped on a cockfight were yesterday jailed for what were described as "cruel and barbaric" offences.

Stipendiary magistrate Ian Gillespie told them, and three other offenders at Durham City court, that it was "quite incredible that on the eve of the 21st century I should be dealing with such illegal and barbaric practices".

William Ross, 49, of Kelloe, Co Durham, was jailed for four months after admitting cruelty to a cockerel by causing it to fight, permitting premises to be used for cockfighting, and possessing equipment for cockfighting use.

Joseph Kelbie, 34, of Newark, Nottinghamshire, and John Hawthorn, 42, of Murton, Co Durham, were sentenced to 10 weeks and eight weeks respectively after admitting to having assisted in cockfighting. All three were banned for life from owning cockerels.

Kelbie's offence, the magistrate said, was aggravated by the fact that he took four birds to fight, and had his eight-year-old son with him.

The court was told that the men had been arrested when police and RSPCA officers swooped on an allotment shed near Ross's home in Kelloe on 19 March last year. Two cockerels were fighting in a ring with more than a dozen men standing watching.

Thomas Waugh, 32, David Littley, 34, and John Bell, 27, all from Co Durham, admitted being present at a cockfight. Bell was fined £800, and Waugh and Littley £200 each, plus costs.

All six men pleaded guilty.

Δ INDEPENDENT 6-6-96

Man charged over Bristol bombs

An unemployed man appeared in court yesterday on three explosives charges. Barry Horne, 44, of no fixed address, was accused of two counts of acting with intent to cause an explosion and another of possession of explosive substances with intent to cause injury. He was arrested after devices were found in shops in Bristol's Broadmead shopping centre on Thursday.

Δ DAILY TELEGRAPH 13-8-96

$1.5m for bomb blunder

A jury yesterday ordered the city of Philadelphia to pay $1.5 million in reparation for a blundered police operation against radical militants in 1985. Eleven members of the black revolutionary cult, MOVE, died when their house was bombed at the climax of an armed siege by police trying to serve warrants on them. The resulting blaze, carried by strong winds, gutted 61 houses in West Philadelphia.

After serving six years in prison for rioting and conspiracy, a MOVE survivor, Ramona Africa, 40, proved in a three-month trial that her constitutional rights were violated by the police operation. The jury's award is to be divided between her and the relatives of two other deceased victims. Hugh Davies, Washington

DAILY TELEGRAPH 25-6-96

Cheshire ostrich goes under

THE Pinstripe Farming Company, a Cheshire-based ostrich breeding investment company, has filed for voluntary liquidation after Department of Trade and Industry moves to have it wound up.

Pinstripe chose accountants Stephen Conn & Company as liquidator, but the DTI plans to continue its petition in the High Court and will seek to have the Official Receiver appointed provisional liquidator at a hearing on June 12. Stephen Conn said yesterday: "Pinstripe has about 300 investors and 700 birds. As far as we know all investors have had birds allocated to them."

In April, World Ostrich Farms went into creditors' voluntary liquidation after a prebe by the Securities and Investments Board. Earlier, the DTI moved to wind up the Ostrich Farming Corporation, now the subject of a Serious Fraud Office investigation.

Δ DAILY TELEGRAPH 31-5-96

Δ SUNDAY INDEPENDENT 28-7-96

Animal-rights link to booby-trap mail

By Paul Routledge
Political Correspondent

BOOBY-trapped letters sent to senior politicians at Westminster are the work of animal-rights activists, police believe.

In the past two weeks, letters containing slivers of razor-sharp metal have got through Parliament's elaborate security system to Sir David Steel and Lord Donoughue, the People reports today.

The blades were concealed in Blu-Tack stuck to a folded sheet of blank newspaper, and were so small they escaped detection by sensitive equipment installed to filter out dangerous packages.

Jill Clements, secretary to Sir David, said the letters were designed to "rip your thumb or index finger to pieces". "It was pure luck that I didn't."

The choice of Sir David was initially thought to relate to his campaigning for abortion, but a second terror letter to Lord Donoughue, a former adviser to Labour prime ministers with no links to the pro- or anti-abortion lobby, prompted a rethink.

Lord Donoughue, who supports foxhunting, said: "These people are not animal-rights activists. They are animal terrorists. They don't believe in rights - not for human beings anyway."

Lord Donoughue is a leading figure in the Leave Country Sports Alone campaign to halt Labour plans to ban foxhunting. Sir David has also spoken against animal-rights fanatics, describing them as "the new fascists".

Superintendent Bob Wood, deputy head of security at Westminster, said: "It doesn't take a genius to work out that it's probably the work of animal-rights activists."

Δ INDEPENDENT 28-4-96

▽ THE TIMES 20-8-96

Indian police swoop

Delhi: Tipped off by animal rights activists, Indian authorities arrested two dozen snake charmers before the start of a Hindu festival celebrating serpents, the United News of India news agency said yesterday.

The agency said wildlife officials swooped on the charmers and seized nearly 100 snakes as they were preparing for the Nag Panchami festival in the central city of Nagpur.

The charmers were charged by police under the Wildlife Protection Act and the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, the agency added. The police were tipped off by a local section of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Hindus regard snakes as symbols of divinity and do not feed them after they are captured but offer them milk, which herpetologists claim they do not drink.

Often, the snake charmer repeatedly dunks the reptile's head in a pail of milk, drowning it, a practice which wildlife wardens are trying to stamp out.

The festival of Nag Panchami attracts snake charmers from different parts of India and gives them a chance to display their snake-catching and handling abilities without removing a snake's poison. (Reuter/AP)

▽ EAST ANGLIAN DAILY TIMES 10-5-96

Meat firm workers fear for future

WORKERS at a major Suffolk firm where nearly 100 jobs will be lost unless efficiency improves spoke yesterday of their fears.

Meat company Harris has warned staff at Elmswell, near Stowmarket, that cuts in the 400-strong workforce are "inevitable" unless urgent savings are made.

Employees leaving the bacon plant yesterday afternoon said they believe the jobs threat is the opening move in a campaign to reduce wages at the factory which has supported generations.

A 29-year-old butchery worker, who declined to be named for fear of losing his job, said: "A lot think it is the beginning of a wage cut, either in the hourly rate or our bonuses."

"Perhaps jobs will go, people just don't know what to expect. There have been quite a few made redundant in recent years - we have been beaten, beaten and beaten again."

Unions have started negotiations with the firm, bought in February by dairy giant Unigate. The company has reassured staff closure is not being considered but says the site is currently running at an unsustainable loss.

by CAHAL MILMO

Details of the shake-up, which comes after the new owners found a "surprising scale of inefficiencies" at the plant, have not been released. Harris recently announced the closure of its Ipswich factory with the loss of at least 400 jobs.

Another Elmswell worker, who also declined to be named, said: "I have worked here for almost 30 years and the company has done me well. But things have changed, there are fewer and fewer people."

Villager Amanda Davies, 34, said: "Any job losses are bad news, a lot of families rely on the bacon plant for their income. I hope it doesn't come to that, a job which pays less is better than none at all."

Unions are expected to continue negotiations with Harris early next week.

Police link animal activists to firebombs

By JAMES LYONS

They believe the cache may have belonged to activists who intended to target the poultry plant, which employs 140 people and processes a quarter of a million birds a week.

A spokesman for the force said: "These sort of devices are typical of the type used by animal rights activists."

"No one has come forward to claim responsibility yet, as is normally the case, and we are investigating other leads but all the pointers suggest that it was a group of that sort."

"The firebombs - designed to set fire to things rather than blow things up - are commonly used by such activists, and factories of this type have often been targeted in the past.

"It could be that the explosion in the field was the result of a 'test-run', or it could have been an accident."

"It may even be that it is not connected, although that is unlikely."

"We need anyone who might have heard an explosion or seen a flash between Saturday and Tuesday to contact us."

No one from the Frank Bird factory was last night prepared to comment on the incident.

Δ JOURNAL 27-6-96

Farmers and vets needlessly and sometimes illegally mutilate millions of livestock every year, docking piglets, castrating lambs and calves and de-beaking hens as a matter of routine and often without anaesthetic. Compassion in World Farming said yesterday. The British Veterinary Association denied condoning illegality and said many of the practices were for the animals' long-term welfare.

Δ THE TIMES 7-8-96

Pickaxe mob turns the hunters into the hunted

MORE than 100 saboteurs, many masked and wielding pickaxe handles, brought highly-orchestrated violence to Prince Charles's favourite fox hunt at the weekend.

Protesters attacked horsemen and smashed up dozens of hunt supporters' cars — one of them while a mother and her five-year-old daughter cowered inside.

Young thugs even turned on 80-year-old farmer Arthur Smith, who bravely swopped punches with one man, as he tried to get them off his land.

The doors of his Land Rover were kicked in by a 20-strong mob clad in balaclavas. Several people were treated for bloody noses and bruises. Three people went to hospital.

Amid the mayhem, a neatly-dressed man in suit and tie, thought to be a legal adviser to the saboteurs, directed operations and took notes.

The traditional half-term gathering of the Beaufort Hunt at Luckington, Wiltshire, included many women and schoolchildren.

A spokesman for the British Field Sports Society, Mal Treharne, said of the saboteurs: 'It's absolutely disgusting. They came just to cause violence and hurt people.'

'They have nothing to do

Daily Mail Reporter

with animal welfare — these people were beating horses and dogs.'

Prince Charles and Camilla Parker Bowles, both familiar faces at the hunt, were absent. They were warned to stay away by police who expected a demonstration but not a full-scale attack.

Only two constables were on duty on Saturday when six van loads of saboteurs descended on the hunt which was attended by former showjumper Richard Meade.

A statement issued by Bristol Anti-Bloodsports, which was part of a peaceful demonstration at the hunt, hailed the disruption as a success. It said the saboteurs 'managed to call the hounds away from several foxes'.

By the time 100 police reinforcements arrived the violent saboteurs had fled. No arrests were made.

THE TIMES 21-8-96 ▽

Animal activists to stand in Tory seats

Animal welfare activists are to challenge 40 Tory MPs in marginal seats at the next election in protest at the Government's refusal to ban live-animal exports. Respect for Animals, formerly the anti-fur trade group known as Lynx, believes there are enough traditional Tory supporters who back their campaign and are willing to vote against the Government.

Under the campaign slogan, "Don't vote for a cruel Government", the group's candidates will not seek to attract votes themselves but instead will urge people either to abstain or to vote for a party other than the Tories.

THE INDEPENDENT 2-5-96 ▽

Co-op calls for ban on animal tests

By David Brown, Agriculture Correspondent

THE Co-op, Britain's biggest retailer, will launch a campaign today to ban thousands of painful tests on animals designed to make sure cosmetics and toiletries are safe.

The store chain said yesterday it had decided to take a lead after discovering that the European Union is to delay "indefinitely" its own programme to end these experiments throughout Europe.

Its own research had shown that four out of five customers supported a ban and that most were "stunned" to learn that these tests were still being carried out 10 years after Britain's Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act was introduced to minimise suffering to laboratory animals.

From today the Co-op will pledge financial support for Frame, the charity leading research into alternative tests. It will also issue leaflets in its stores setting out the animal testing policies of all of its cosmetic and toiletry suppliers.

All the suppliers, who are named in the leaflets with their products, have been given the chance to explain their animal-testing policies. So far more than 60 per cent of them have failed to meet the Co-op's deadline.

About 2-4 million live animal experiments are carried out in Britain each year involving monkeys, dogs, cats, rabbits, guinea pigs, rats, mice and other creatures. About 3,500 of them are tests for cosmetics and toiletries.

△ DAILY TELEGRAPH 17-6-96

THE intelligence services are seeking new powers to intercept conversations on digital mobile telephones, which can be used by terrorists and organised criminals without fear of eavesdropping.

The telephones, which cost as little as £5, are a challenge for the most sophisticated computerised decoding techniques used by MI5 and Scotland Yard's Anti-Terrorist Branch.

Each telephone has its own "rolling" code, which scrambles every call. Conversations could be intercepted easily, however, if the intelligence services were given access to the encryption keys, which are known only to the telephone companies.

MI5 and the Anti-Terrorist Branch have urged the Department of Trade and Industry to grant them access to the encryption keys as part of new legislation being drawn up to safeguard the burgeoning international telecommunications network.

Rhino raid

A rhinoceros horn worth almost £15,000 was seized from a London herbalist yesterday in a police clampdown on illegal trade in rare animal parts. Police believe it was due to be sold as a nose-bleed cure in the form of pills. Western demand for oriental health products is threatening the world's rhino population.

THE TIMES 7-8-96

RSPCA bans field sports supporters

MEMBERS of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals voted overwhelmingly yesterday in favour of changing its constitution to stop field sports supporters joining.

The animal welfare society was told that more than 3,000 members of the British Field Sports Society have already joined covertly with the intention of reversing the group's opposition to hunting.

△ SUNDAY TIMES 23-6-96

Animal protest

More than 1,000 animal-lovers lobbied Parliament to change the status of animals in Europe. The lobby, organised by Compassion in World Farming, was to support the campaign to get all EU countries to recognise animals as sentient beings. The campaigners are demanding a total ban on the export of live cattle.

THE TIMES 20-8-96

Abuse Rife in Export Zones

Export-processing zones, employing up to 40 million workers around the world, have become concentrations of child labour, toxic waste dumping grounds and centres for the harassment and murder of union activists says a report published by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Free-trade enclaves, where multinational companies are given tax and labour-law exemptions to produce mainly for export, have mushroomed in the past decade, mainly in the Third World and are used by household names including Phillips, Sony, Nike, Reebok and Wrangler.

Δ GUARDIAN 1-5-96

THE NUMBER of cattle infected with BSE is six times greater than the cases confirmed by the Government, the study shows.

While official figures show that 161,412 cases of the disease were confirmed by this summer, the Oxford University team has used new mathematical methods to show that 900,000 cattle were infected up to the end of last year. Most of the cattle ended up in the food chain before symptoms of the disease developed.

Prof Roy Anderson, who led the team, said: "Using some quite sophisticated computational techniques, we can back-calculate the total number of infected animals and when they were infected."

"This number peaked at 300,000 new infections in 1987 and 900,000 overall.

"The reason there is an enormous difference is that most of those animals were slaughtered and went into the food chain before BSE developed," he said. "Prior to the specified offal ban in 1989, 440,000 went into the food chain."

A runner falls in central Pamplona yesterday during the "running of the bulls" on the first day of the week-long San Fermin festival, which attracts people to the northern Spanish city from all over the world.

Among those willing to risk their lives was Robert

Δ INDEPENDENT 13-7-96

Goose cull grounded by flares

Christchurch: A planned mid-air mass killing of thousands of Canada geese in New Zealand had to be called off yesterday when protesters began firing flares. A local conservation group was going to use shooters in helicopters to kill 3,500 geese at Ellesmere, south of here, in an attempt to control their population. But Brian Webb, the North Canterbury Fish and Game Council manager, said protesters began using flares.

He said only 300 geese had been killed when the protesters fired flares from boats and became a safety risk. The culling was then called off. He said there would be no more shooting until next year.

Last year's cull of 3,000 birds on the lake was described as barbaric by local protesters. The council wanted the Canada geese cull to meet a statutory obligation to reduce the population to 6,500 by 1998. (AFP)

Δ THE TIMES 20-8-96

Ospreys take to the air in Rutland

NICHOLAS SCHOON

Environment Correspondent

Five young ospreys have been released at Rutland Water, Leicestershire, one of Britain's biggest reservoirs, in the hope that the rare fish-eating eagles will breed there.

Ospreys have not raised any young in England since 1842, due to persecution by man. After a long absence in Scotland they began to nest there again in 1954, and the population north of the border now stands at 100 breeding pairs.

A few young birds have visited Rutland Water on their way back to Scotland from wintering in West Africa. The local wildlife trust and Anglian Water built artificial nests in the hope of persuading them to stay, but in vain. In a further attempt to establish the birds, seven chicks were taken from nests near Inverness last month, with the permission of Scottish Natural Heritage, and brought to Rutland.

Five of the birds have taken to the air so far but one of these has been found dead. After nervous starts, the other four flying birds have been learning to fish, diving at high speed into the water.

Δ INDEPENDENT 13-8-96

ALPACAS, smaller cousins of the camel and the llama, have joined ostriches as the latest exotic livestock to tempt British farmers with the promise of future profits.

On the 150-acre Gay Street Farm, near Pulborough, in West Sussex, Kelvin Maude, an Australian alpaca expert, and his wife, Jill, are assembling one of the biggest herds of the beguiling creatures outside their South American homeland.

Some 300 alpacas, which resemble sheep with long necks and emit a gentle humming noise when happy, arrived on the farm from Chile last January after spending six months in quarantine in South America and another three in England. At the weekend, Mr Maude left for Chile to collect another 300 animals, which will be flying back with him to England later this week.

Trains on the Settle-Carlisle line were stopped for several hours last night after homemade devices linked to animal rights activists were found near by. Police believe the target was a nearby poultry farm at Langwathby, Cumbria. The devices, including petrol bombs, were found in a holdall and a rucksack. Army bomb disposal experts examined the find.

Δ THE TIMES 15-8-96

THE TIMES 26-6-96 Δ

Pamplona tourist gored

Therwell, 25, who was gored in the groin. The South African underwent an operation, but there was no immediate information as to his condition. The goring came a day after a man from Madrid, aged 50, died in Fuentesauco, western Spain, in a similar bull run.

Pamplona's festival was made famous by Ernest Hemingway in his 1926 novel The Sun Also Rises. Each morning six fighting bulls are let loose on an 825-yard dash along narrow streets from a corral to an arena.

A 22-year-old American runner was killed in the Pamplona bull run last summer, the first to die in 15 years; 13 have died this century. (Reuters)

Υ THE TIMES 24-6-96

Fire bomb attack on livestock firm

An incendiary device failed to ignite beneath a lorry when it was driven by a livestock transporter company owner away from two others, a car and a barn which were burning after another device had exploded at a yard in Dry Drayton, Cambridgeshire.

Michael Speechley, 42, arrived at the yard at 2am to find the blazing lorries. He jumped into another one to move it to safety. Police later found a device attached to the front wheel.

No action after pupils see fox torn apart

POLICE are taking no further action against a fox hunt which allowed its hounds to kill a fox in a school playground.

Several children aged between five and ten watched the fox being torn apart through a classroom window at Langeliffe Primary School, near Settle, in the Yorkshire Dales, last week. The school gates were locked and the hounds jumped over the playground wall to kill the terrified fox.

Head teacher Hilary Foster said she was "horried and appalled" over the incident which had left some of her 44 pupils "shaken" and "frightened".

Lunesdale Hunt chairman Eddie Braithwaite yesterday said the hounds became separated during a chase and it was deeply regretted that they killed the fox in the school playground.

Υ EAST ANGLIAN DAILY TIMES 19-3-96

Arkangel Comment

This is the section of the magazine where you get to have your say. We try to print everything we receive - providing it is to do with Animal Liberation, and is not intended to further some other aim - political or otherwise. The articles do not necessarily represent the views of the editors. Please remember, an article submitted on computer disk (any format) will save us a lot of typing, but of course we welcome your thoughts in any form!

Humans Are Animals Too

by David Olivier

Translation by Pierre Querinci

- Should animal liberation activists ally themselves with no matter whom, including extreme right-wing activists?
- Should we ignore those traditional political problems which relate only to humans?
- What should our attitude be towards speciesists and meat-eaters?
- Should we, in the struggle for animal liberation, favour economic sabotage and direct action or rather theoretical, cultural and overt political action?

Five years ago in the pamphlet 'Nous ne mangeons pas de viande pour ne pas tuer d'animaux' ("We do not eat meat so as not to kill animals"),¹ about non-vegetarians who campaign for human causes I wrote: "I have spent a good part of my life fighting at their sides against racism, sexism and oppression of humans, etc. I should still like to feel motivated to do so today, but I cannot. One small point nags at me (...): how can they demonstrate against a murder when they so easily kill each day?"

This passage, which seems to have been misunderstood by those who criticize us, was intended to express not an indifference towards the struggles against racism, sexism etc., but rather a tension between, on the one hand, my wish to participate in them and, on the other hand, my feelings towards the persons with whom I would be involved. Faced with the enormity of the violence inherent to the oppression of non-humans I find it difficult, as others do, not to be put off, sickened even, by the attitude of those who devote themselves, often generously but so exclusively, to human problems while at the same time deliberately and gratuitously participating in the butchery of non-humans.²

This profound uneasiness easily translates into hostility and even hatred towards meat-eaters. These negative feelings themselves warrant criticism; a point I return to below. This can go even farther. For a long time, when first I became an animal rights activist, I was no longer able to feel any empathy, not only towards meat-eaters campaigning against human suffering, but also towards human suffering itself, towards the suffering with which campaigners of recognized causes are routinely concerned. I felt only annoyance or hostility, or at best indifference, towards children with muscular dystrophy, victims of famine, exploited workers, deported immigrants and raped women, and this not because these humans eat meat like everyone else, but simply because they were, being humans, the objects of the selective sympathy of "right-thinking" persons. Every human being, however unfortunate he or she might be, I saw only as part of the globally privileged category to which the human species belongs.

This is what I felt, but it is not what I thought. In spite of what I felt I never thought that human suffering deserved indifference or hostility; this kind of resentment - as should be immediately obvious to all - is absurd and unjust. An individual may well be part of a globally privileged category without thereby necessarily being privileged him or herself. Even if s/he is, the privilege is of necessity relative and does not render the suffering unimportant. There is always someone worse off than oneself but the existence of pains greater than my own does not make mine negligible. If I were a black South African I would no doubt find it difficult not to hate all white South Africans, even babies. Similarly it is quite natural for someone dying of AIDS in the third world, where money spent on prevention is ridiculously small, to feel aggressive towards the obscene Telethons which raise the equivalent of tens of millions of pounds for a handful of sick people in France; and it would be difficult to keep this resentment from rebounding upon these sick people themselves. It is natural to feel that way, but it is not right. Even if it is natural that an animal rights activist should share the feelings I have described, s/he is never justified in allowing such feelings to determine her or his political judgement.

One often hears animal liberation activists saying things like: "The sufferings to which animals are subjected are incomparably more numerous and more intense than those of human beings." That they are more numerous, I agree; but as to their being more intense: I don't. There is no reason to assert that the sufferings inflicted upon individual non-humans is always more intense than that of individual humans. I would much rather be an elephant in Africa, even if my destiny was to be killed by a poacher after a period of untroubled existence, than a poor child dying of malnutrition or even a rich one with muscular dystrophy. I am not even sure that the lot of the human populations which kill elephants in Africa is not itself more tragic, because of the extent and degree of their own sufferings, than that of the elephants themselves. The fact that I am an animal rights activist does not imply that, when I have to choose between improving the lot of some elephants and that of some humans, I should automatically choose to favour the elephants. Humans are animals too.

On the other hand it is true that the sufferings inflicted on non-humans are, taken all together, much more numerous, and their intensity is often comparable to human suffering at its worst. This would certainly be a reason for giving priority to animal liberation - if it is necessary to make such a choice. I must emphasise that this is a global judgement. Individuals themselves are to count equally; i.e. the like suffering of one individual or of another is of equal importance, regardless of the group to which s/he belongs. If one has to choose between helping one or the other of two given groups, numbers should be taken into account, but numbers are a characteristic of groups, not of individuals. One may not say that the suffering of one individual is less important than that of another, when both suffer equally. The fact that (in France) ten times as many pigs are slaughtered as are calves does not make the suffering of one calf less important than that of one pig!

I have laboured this point because I think it brings out an essential aspect of animal liberation: that individuals should be taken into account for what they are, not as representatives of a more or less arbitrarily formed group - whether it be that of humans or non-humans, of blacks or whites, or of left-handed people or of those born on Tuesdays. Like any liberation movement animal liberation has to base its struggle on existing categories: we speak of animal liberation as if the category of (non-human) animals were in itself a valid one. As with all liberation movements, however, the objective is to abolish such categories qua discriminatory categories. The attitude that we sometimes see and that gives priority to non-humans while putting off to some indeterminate future the tackling of the most serious human problems, simply because they are problems of humans, only serves to consolidate the boundary between humans and non-humans that is established by the ideology we are fighting.

Some will object that one important difference between humans and other animals is that when the former eat meat they are oppressors and therefore do not deserve our compassion. This vengeful attitude which casts all humans together also shows up in the statements we hear such as: "All humans who exploit and eat animals are the same. Only humans who do not exploit animals have worth." In other words only very few people have worth. This is, as I have said, a natural reaction, but not a right one. Did my nature change the day when, at 29 years of age, I ceased to eat meat? Did I deserve before that all the ills which could befall me, but not after? Again, this sounds absurd to me. Had my personal circumstances not been favourable no doubt I would not have become a vegetarian. Had I had to fight for survival in some part of Rio de Janeiro I would not have given the matter any thought at all. It would not have been any more right for me to continue eating meat; but that's what I would have done. I find it difficult to believe that we have a kind of essence that changes so completely according to random circumstances.

All of this, you may say, is just discussing pure principles, a kind of vain intellectual masturbation.³ We are frequently told that we must fight for "the actual, physical, liberation of animals here and now." What we are not told is just how this is to be accomplished. How does one achieve the actual, physical, liberation of the 800 million chickens the French eat every year? By opening their cages? Or through a campaign of economic sabotage carried out by a handful of masked activists? This is absurd. The only way is to convince at least a great proportion of the humans who eat meat to stop doing so - in other words, to act upon their ideas. Opening cages, sabotaging businesses, become very important if they serve to propagate ideas, to publicize them, and to give them impact. In France there have been illegal acts, that have actually and physically liberated a few animals, but unfortunately they serve relatively little purpose as long as all that the activists do in matter of propaganda is to paint slogans like "Vivisectors are monsters." The fact is that this is not true; vivisectors are no more monsters than I am myself or are the readers of Arkangel, who, for most of them, ate meat during a great part of their lives in full knowledge of the fact that it was the flesh of a sentient being who had been killed to provide it. Illegal action would be much more useful if, generally speaking, it was conceived primarily as a means of illustrating and propagating the ideas of the animal liberation movement, i.e. the simple fact that the interests of individuals should be respected equally regardless of what species they belong to.

Jeering at our opponents has no practical value unless it can bring them to change their ways; and if they are able to change it is because their basic character is not defined by their present behaviour. In practice, as in theory, it is not individual meat-eaters who must be censured, it is their actions. These individuals, whether we like it or not, must be seen as potential allies. If we feel nothing but hostility or indifference towards human meat-eaters and their problems, how shall we be able to convert them? If we do not share the compassion and solicitude they have for their fellow humans, where in them shall we find compassion and solicitude for non-humans? Moreover, if we reject intellectual activity how shall we bring about such a major cultural change as the abolition of speciesism?

To say, as is said, that liberating animals should have priority over liberating human beings is all very well in theory if one has to choose between liberating the ones or the others; but, in practice, does this choice have to be made? To me personally it seems clear that human misery is one of the main obstacles in the way of animal liberation. The more human beings are oppressed the more they tend to be themselves oppressors. This was clear among humans in Germany after the first world war, in Vietnam after the departure of the Americans, and in Algeria after the departure of the French. It is confirmed every day in the poverty-stricken ghettos of the United States and South America, and one may fear it will be confirmed in South Africa. Closer to here it is confirmed each time an exploited worker, on returning home, abuses his wife, his children and his dog. It seems difficult to me to persuade human beings who live in the direst misery to stop oppressing non-humans. Let me be clear about this. It is not a question of saying that in these cases "human beings are really more important." It is simply that, as we say, "an empty belly has no ears." The fact that it should in no way changes the fact that it doesn't.

The struggle waged against human suffering therefore has for me, in addition to its intrinsic importance - that of that suffering itself - an indirect importance, because of its relevance to animal liberation. I am sometimes inclined to think that in order to bring about animal liberation in the long term it would be best to forget about it for today and to concentrate on improving human conditions. This too however would be wrong because I also believe that, reciprocally, one of the best things that can help human liberation is to forward animal liberation. To coin a phrase which, of course, by itself proves nothing but which rings true and encapsulates the idea, I would say that a species which oppresses others cannot itself be free. Speciesism is a lie with which humans deceive themselves, and exposing this lie can only help progress. Since at present there are so few of us who do expose this lie, it is certainly by doing so that we can make most impact.

All this may seem very convoluted, or outright cynical; it looks like saying that human liberation would merely be a means to animal liberation - and vice versa... The thing is that, I believe, contrary to a deeply entrenched political tradition, liberation, be it of humans or of animals, will not come about tomorrow morning.⁴ Between now and then there is a great deal of ground to cover. In walking from point A to point B, whether or not the priority is to get the left foot to B or the right one, both feet must be moved. Little progress would be made in following the advice of those who say, "First let's get our left foot there, and after that we will care for the right foot."⁵

This does not prevent us from reaffirming whenever appropriate, as a matter of principle, that since the sufferings of non-humans are as important as those of humans, and because the former are much more numerous than the latter, the liberation of non-humans is the more important. On the other hand those who think that certain individuals, because they are humans and Jewish, Arab, Black, female or whatever, should be oppressed, cannot be seen as treading the same path as ourselves just because they also campaign for animals. I have no hatred for right-wing activists but I do not see how we can think of making progress in promoting the struggle for equality of all individuals by allying with them. I do not see what can physically be gained by it. I do not see how the public can be expected to understand anything about the animal liberation message unless we stand by the principle that to oppress an individual human is as serious, nor more nor less, as oppressing a non-human. It is not a question of expressing a preference for an anti-racist vivisectionist or a right-wing vegetarian, as we are summoned by our critics to do, for someone paralysed in the left foot or in the right one - it is a matter of knowing with whom we can progress towards the desired goal.⁶

A common element in the negative feelings I have criticized here, which, as I have said, I have myself felt, is a hostility towards humans culminating in a sort of inverted speciesism. This is understandable when it is realized that humans have the capacity to understand their actions but do not use it, whereas a cat, when s/he plays with a mouse, having no notion of responsibility, is innocent.

The concept of responsibility is a complex one, and I shall not plunge into a discussion of it here. Let me just say that although I do believe it is very important that everyone should see him or herself as responsible as possible for her or his actions, in the sense that no one else makes the decisions for him or her, and although I consider it very important to stress this point - by for example by telling each meat-eater that it is s/he who is responsible for the raising and slaughtering of cattle - I give only a limited practical value, and no theoretical value at all, to the punitive aspect of responsibility, i.e. to the notion of culpability. To say that I was guilty when I used to eat meat does not lessen by one gram the amount I ate. If I ate meat, it means the circumstances in which I found myself coupled with the degree of intelligence and courage I then had or hadn't made me act as I did. Period. Similarly to hate and scorn evil meat-eaters in no way helps the animals and will have no concrete result other than giving the scorners a feeling of satisfaction about being able to view themselves as better than all others.

The attitude I prefer, and which finally managed to bring me a minimum of peace of mind in my dealings with meat-eaters, is to view them with the same indulgence as that with which we may view non-humans; to view them as, for example, we view cats. What they are doing may well be terrible, and be terribly sad, when one considers how easy it would be for them to do otherwise; but at the same time they are not fundamentally evil. Often they are kind and benevolent. Just like our minds, theirs are full of false ideas, to which they cling. Hypocrisy is rampant among them, and their efforts to be otherwise are meek. Unlike cats they are accessible to discussion - sometimes with the help of a kick in the pants - so let's try by those means to push them in the right direction.

I also see an anti-human attitude in the oft expressed idea that the only thing which animals want is to be left alone, "to live in peace." Implicitly, and sometimes explicitly, this attitude conveys the idea that humans can do nothing but harm to animals; that humans are a perverse and evil species (there is a diversity of myths carried around about this - that only humans kill their own kind; that only humans kill needlessly; that only humans rape; that only humans are cruel, and so on). Certainly, in view of the suffering and killing due to factory farming, it would be better if we were to allow the animals to live without human meddling; but I do not see any reason to forget that in nature too animals suffer intensely, from disease, famine, emotional deprivation, and predation by other animals. I do not see why suffering, just because it is not inflicted by humans, should not be regarded as important, and I suspect that put together such suffering is even greater than that which results from animal husbandry and so on. It cannot be on our agenda today to call upon humans to do much against this suffering, as long as they themselves continue to cause such great suffering gratuitously; but as far as I can see, converting all humans to vegetarianism is itself in a way just one first step. For this reason too, it is in my view vital that this vegetarianism should come about as a consequence of the downfall of speciesism rather than being the result of worries about cholesterol levels or just a change in fashion.

Human beings, whether they like it or not, are the masters of the planet; this is what evolution has brought about. There is nothing in it to be proud of, or ashamed of. Were we not the ones, maybe after another few million years some other species would have done it - another ape maybe, or some other of the more intelligent species. It just happens to be us, and it gives us responsibility. We should make the best of it, for all sentient beings.⁷ What some snort down at as being just "human-human" affairs concerns more than just humans. The mental health of humanity and its capacity for benevolence are of the utmost importance for the well-being of all, human and non-human. Unfortunately this mental health is not at its best, and to make it better I see no use in allying ourselves, in pursuit of a mythical quick result, with those very people whose ideas are in a fundamental way directly opposed to this objective, whose ideas promote only hatred and desolation.

Notes to accompany the text:

¹ Collective pamphlet, published by Y. Bonnardel (1989), available from Les Cahiers antispecistes, 20 rue d'Aguesseau, 69007 Lyon, France. Cost 18FF or £2 pp.

² The waters are muddied somewhat by the fact that there are also many humanists who in fact don't care about the fate of human beings - their fate being of less concern to them than the maintenance of the species barrier as a moral barrier. It is these people who ask, like F. Reynaert did in Le Nouvel Observateur (29.10.1992) "How far shall we go in negating humanity if, today, we demand that cattle be accorded the same solicitude as was accorded to Blacks yesterday?"

³ Some of us, at the Cahiers antispecistes and elsewhere, are sometimes accused of working only for our own "intellectual pleasure." This reproach is aggressive and unfair. Each one of us has, in addition to her or his sincere and publicly advertised goals, other, more down-to-earth motivations which are just as real but tend to be less advertised; in my case there is indeed a certain intellectual pleasure, and a pleasure that comes from trying to change the world, from meeting celebrities, from getting known, from typing on a keyboard, and also a certain pleasure in feeling myself morally superior at small cost - this last unpublicized motivation being in my eyes the most dangerous one. In all groups there is also the attraction of making new friends. Some activists seem to find it necessary to go as far as possible in the opposite direction, into asceticism, into taking no pleasure in this sinful world as long as there still are animals in pain - no pleasure, except the one that comes from feeling morally superior, from being part of the small elite group of "good," virtuous humans. What actual and physical effect will such an attitude have, if not that of turning away most potential activists? The existence of additional, unpublicized motivations does not disqualify the more openly advertised ones. The only important thing is to ensure that there are no contradictions between them - or at least, not too many. For my part I believe that the pleasure of trying to show how intellectually fecund challenging speciesism can be can help to attract influential intellectuals. On the other hand, one of the main themes of the present article is to nail in the fact that self-indulging in the pleasure of putting oneself on a pedestal, in pouring scorn upon the pains and worries of mister average, with all his imperfections, does not advance the cause of animal liberation.

⁴ A large part of the literature from ALF sympathisers exhort us to save animals here and now; but how many animals can one sincerely believe to be able to save here and now? Similarly, how do these activists propose to change, in practice, all omnivorous humans into vegetarians? In my view, the kind of attitude which calls for direct radical action as opposed to "pointless discussion," an attitude found in revolutionary circles as well as elsewhere, compensates for, and conceals, a sense of despair, an unconscious lack of belief in the real possibility of radical change both in the short and long terms. Everyone knows that saving animals here and now is possible only on a relatively very small scale. Once we on the contrary really believe, be it as in my case not unreservedly, in the possibility of long term radical change saving the millions of millions of animals who otherwise would certainly be reared and slaughtered in the coming centuries, it seems to me that this is the most worthwhile objective for our struggle. This implies arguing in a different way, perhaps in a more abstract way, but with results just as real and physical as a goal.

This should not prevent us from saving animals here and now whenever possible, not even prevent us from doing no more than that if that is what we feel best fitted to do; but there is no reason why those who choose to undertake direct action should denigrate and put spokes in the wheels of those who believe in other forms or action. They could instead ask themselves how immediate direct action could at the same time contribute to long term goals.

⁵ I want to stress that this convergence concerns liberation movements in the long term, and results from their basic logical unity. On the other hand there is no reason for, in the short term, anything which benefits one oppressed group to also benefit all others. It is for example a pure coincidence that vegetarianism benefits both non-humans and third world peoples. So much the better if it does, but there is no reason to postulate a sort of cosmic harmony which will always make the interests of all oppressed come together. There may well be for example a conflict between the interests of many third world people and those of the fish they eat. As another example, the Second World War was a catastrophe for humans; but for the wild animals living in France, where hunting was at that time forbidden (because possession of guns was restricted), it was a blessing.

⁶ Here too I have to stress that this is only the case for long term projects. If it is a matter of my helping a road accident victim I see no reason to refuse aid from whomever it may be. In such a case I may well have personal preferences depending on the circumstances: if the victim is a coloured person I prefer the helper to be an anti-racist vivisectioner rather than a right-wing vegetarian; if the victim is a chicken, my preferences are reversed. For several years a friend and I have helped an old lady who looks after feral cats. We always regretted her being an anti-Semite who voted for the Front National, and a meat-eater, but at the same time we found her devotion to those cats admirable. I have never had qualms about helping her in her tasks, but it would have been quite another matter working with that sort of person for animal liberation - since animal liberation means aiming at equality for all sentient beings, including equality for all humans.

⁷ Some may say at this point that I show myself here to be speciesist, in that I place human beings in command. However, I am not the one who places them in command, that is just how things are, at least in this century. Moreover, the difference I see in humans is qua moral agents - i.e. the fact that humans, being generally better capable than individuals from other species to modify their environment according to their intentions, and also to universalise their spontaneous goodwill through ethical reasoning, are moral agents, which other animals are not, or to a lesser degree. I give no special status to humans qua moral patients, i.e. no special intrinsic importance to their pains and pleasure. Denying the factual differences which often exist between individuals of different species has never been the aim of the anti-speciesist struggle.

Ostriches in Scotland

Justice & Rights, a group dedicated to stopping the import, export and exploitation of the ostrich is urging people to write strong letters of complaint to the Secretary of State for Scotland at the Scottish Office after it was disclosed that a slaughterhouse has been authorized to kill thousands of ostriches at Ellon, Aberdeenshire.

*The Scottish Office, St Andrews House, Edinburgh EH1 3DG (0131 244 2683 Fax: 0131 244 2683).
Aberdeenshire Council, Planning and Economic Development, Gordon House, Blackhall Road, Inverurie AB51 3WA (01467 620981 Fax: 01467 624285).*

For further information concerning the campaign to stop the exploitation of the ostrich please contact:
J & R Associates, PO Box 83, Bracknell, Berkshire RG12 7QH.

Killing for Kicks

by DP

What does it feel like to be hunted down in terror and then torn apart while still alive? Certain types of experience are so horrific that their nature is hard to contemplate for long without feeling physically sick. The infliction of agonising pain on another sentient creature might at least seem in need of some compelling moral justification. It may come as a shock, however, to find The British Field Sports Society promotes the institutionalised rituals of such cruelty - for fun. This chillingly ill-named outfit has lately been trying to infiltrate and subvert the hopelessly inoffensive Royal Society For The Prevention Of Cruelty To Animals. Members are even being offered cash bribes for procuring new recruits with a similar taste in ritualised abuse.

It is always difficult to predict the likely moral values of our descendants. Yet the advocacy and systematic practice of terrorising the vulnerable and defenceless - simply for thinly-disguised kicks - will surely strike posterity as among our vilest social traditions. If a functionally equivalent human infant or toddler, or a much-loved family pet, were preyed upon and physically torn limb-from-limb in the way living "wild" animals can still be treated, then the full sanctions of the Law could be brought to bear against the perpetrators. We would regard such depraved thrills, quite rightly, as barbarous beyond belief. Yet as things stand at present, this sort of perversion is still perfectly legal if performed in the name of a traditional "sport".

In the old American South, runaway slaves were medically diagnosed as suffering from "drapetomania" - the pathological desire for freedom. The condition could be "treated" by the use of torture. The British Field Sports Society peddles an almost equally Orwellian parody of the abuse of language and for no less self-serving ends. Ineffectual pacifists who try and disrupt the slaughter of the innocent are damned for their "violence" (sic). Peaceful direct action to defend terrified victims is denounced as "terrorist". Socially responsible animal activists who use non-violent tactics to protect their fellow creatures are labelled as "criminals"; while the violence frequently practised by hunters on their opponents is described euphemistically as mere "over-reaction" by law-abiding citizens. In an Alice-in-Wonderland, blame-the-victim syndrome, even the helpless quarry are held responsible for their fate. Deer, for example, are condemned for being "destructive"(!) because they "overfeed". It's hard to know how much of all this rationalising sophistry is self-deception, and how much is calculated deceit. In either case, the end-product is the same.

Hunters often like to point to the huge amount of suffering in the world as though its existence somehow justified our wantonly adding to it. They bewail the remoteness of animal activists from the "realities" of country life - as if one's first-hand ignorance of the realities of, say, torture, somehow debarred one from putting the case against it. At the risk of showing an unduly naive faith in the mechanisms of parliamentary democracy, it seems likely that a free vote in the House of Commons under the next Labour government will finally bring this despicable chapter in British social history to a close. Until then, the horror and the hypocrisy goes on; and so must the campaign to stop it.

STOP PRESS (8 August 1996)

This article was posted on the Internet. The BFSS is attempting to have the article censored. Its Chief Press Secretary is using the threat of a possible court injunction and legal damages against the author and his Internet Service Provider unless it is removed from the server within 7 days. Net-users opposed to censorship in cyberspace may wish to make their views on freedom of expression - or otherwise - known to the relevant parties.

Contact the BFSS :
101456.1641@compuserve.com

ANIMAL RIGHTISM AND THE IDEOLOGY OF THE SINGLE ISSUE

(author unknown)

"What single issue politics does is attend to 'symptoms' but not attack the disease itself. It presents such issues as if they are aberrations or faults in the system. In reality such problems are the inevitable consequence of a social order based on exploitation and hierarchical power." (reprinted from "As long as there are slaughterhouses... then there shall be battlefields.", 1991.)

The animal rights movement has unfortunately become a single issue. Rather than extend its disgust with the way non-human species are treated in this society to a criticism of this society itself, the movement tends to disappear up its own arse and wallows in its own cliquey issues. Rarely do the 'voices' of the animal rights movement speak about anything other than animal rights, almost as if nothing else existed...but it does.

"...there is an undercurrent of misanthropy in the movement; the idea that all people are evil and if only they could be done away with in some way everything would be alright" - P. Gravett, Arkangel #5.

The fact is that the animal liberation movement is made up of human beings and we can't get away from that. Issues relating to OUR lives are important to us, as individuals, yet somehow the movement presents the image that the only true struggle is that for animal rights. Somewhere down the line the animal rights movement has lost its critical tongue, it has ceased to analyse society. Any critical look at society would show that all of the issues are linked together, that the thread of exploitation spins a web in which we are all trapped.

Just like our lives, the struggle to relieve animals from cruel exploitation is very political. Each particular aspect (i.e. who owns the land on which hunts devastate the wildlife, who dictates psychological control experiments (tested on animals before being applied to humans), who profits from the vast food industries, who decides to mount the huge surveillance operations, etc., etc.) is intimately linked to our own lives and the problems we face. There is a huge political system out there, which perpetuates the abuse of animals, the wholesale destruction of the environment and our own enslavement into lives dulled by work and alienation, because to do so is profitable for a small class of people. However, some people have forgotten this!...

"What reason for living do ordinary, unenlightened people have, dragging out their tiny meaningless lives, changing nothing, achieving nothing, merely taking up space in an already grossly overcrowded world? As I look out of the window of a train, gazing down on a town or a city, and see all the rows and rows of houses stretching into the distance my mind recoils in horror with the thought, "How can they stand to live?"; "How can there be enough within their lives to make it worth the effort." - Ronnie Lee, Arkangel #5.

The notion of a passive and guilty public - of public opinion as if it were something real and concrete is becoming worryingly prevalent. Individuals struggling for a better world often become bitter and cynical, suggesting that "ordinary people" really do believe everything that is said to them by the media - as if they don't think or talk about it. Often individuals involved in the animal liberation movement talk about the public as if it were an abstract thing not a vast collection of individuals, each capable of thought and subjective opinion.

Because the public is seen or perceived to be not listening or changing, a contemptuous attitude emerges in which ordinary people are condemned as being non-thinkers, passive or ignorant. "Ordinary" people even become the enemy to some people.

This is undoubtably one of the main reasons why working class people are so under represented, and why the animal rights movement hasn't developed even the vaguest hint of class analysis.

The fact that the media tends to be the key information source in society, that it is perpetuating the status quo (and that most definitely includes animal abuse), and that it is but one of a whole host of factors playing upon every individual cannot be just conveniently ignored.

Society makes life a bit easier if individuals appear to be inconsiderate, passive or naive. Most people have little control over events in their lives and all around images and information are displayed re-enforcing this notion.

Single issue campaigns fragment the struggle for a sane, free world by containing each problem within its own isolated campaign. Dedication to the campaign is what is required. To concentrate energy - which might otherwise be expended in activities which would really change society - into campaigns for specific issues. Once confronted with concrete, moderate and "realistic" demands, the state can grant them, partially grant them or stall them indefinitely. (The long awaited ban on hunting with hounds being a clear example).

It's unfortunate that even the most ardent and sussed activists can become sucked into the all-pervasive single issue ideology of it all; even to such an extent that people who should know better accept the idea of petitions to the government or the European Parliament or consumer boycotts. Animal rights campaigners excuse such things by saying that they attract people to stalls, etc. - maybe so, but in doing so it is just re-inforcing the notion that we have no control - we sign away our control to THEM with petitions. "Someone will sort it out, legislate about it." Really? When?

Even more repulsive is the inclusion of articles by blatantly fascist people in Arkangel under the pathetic excuse that it has a policy of non-censorship. Fascists are the ultimate censors - you cannot allow freedom of speech to those whose ideology promotes the restriction of freedom of speech. Such scum have latched onto every issue out to try and bolster some support for their archaic cause. Those in the animal rights movement who want unity with fascists and still describe abattoirs and laboratories as Belsen or Auschwitzes are not only incredulously hypocritical but also dangerous. Some of us won't accept fascists on our streets never mind being allowed a voice in our publications. Fascism is based on hierarchical power and the notion of superiority, in exactly the same way animal abuse is. There can be no unity with authoritarians and as ever the song remains the same "the only good fascist is a dead one".

"Those who's revolution only goes half way dig their own graves"

The legislation cited as victories by animal rights magazines, etc. are no more than token gestures and a whole lot less than half measures. All too often the adaptive flexibility of the economic market and its protecting ideologies in parliament and the media are totally ignored. Since animal abuse is, in the end, about making money supported by the idea that animals are ours to do with as we please - by ignoring and avoiding criticising the market we are going nowhere.

Capitalism is the totalitarianism of economics over life. All life becomes a commodity in this society. That's what animals have been reduced to; that is what the majority of people in the world have become. How long are we going to waste all our compassionate anger quibbling about the small details? For animals and ourselves liberation must be total or it will be nothing.

One of the ways that direct actions are so crucial is that they demonstrate by example that we need not be passive, that we need not have our struggles fought by representatives and that there are ways in which everyone can, quite easily, act against the enemies.

(Note: A couple of minor changes have been made to the text where it could be construed as inciting. Ed.)

Mankind

by Edward Edwards AD

Mankind, for the most part, is a self-pedestalled being incapable of loving anything or anyone with only self-gratification guiding the actions. A long, long time ago before the Sermon on the Mount, the flood, the 12 Commandments, the Crucifixion, the Magna Carta, 1066 and all that, animals came on the scene and lived for millions of years in freedom until Man appeared about half a million years ago, a 'Johnny come lately' if there ever was one, and started to enforce his strange ways on the rest of the world's teeming life. The plants, grass, trees were the first to be ill-treated, then the animal life and those he couldn't eat he caged/imprisoned, worked, made fools of and generally buggered them about and still does. How many are there that do not need to see another plant or animal, bird or fish but simply know that they are free - being enough to give satisfaction in the knowledge that victims are not being used and ill-used and abused in the cause of profits or selfish pleasures?

Love, being the most abused four letter word around, is used to describe, illustrate and commend almost anything and quite often in so many varied and puzzling ways that defeat comprehension such as the butcher having not executed a pig because his child objected being labelled 'an animal lover', or a jockey who beats and whips a horse on the race track into running faster and faster, is said to 'love horses'. The only ones capable of being true to the word are the vegans yet they rarely use the word, preferring to speak of respect in relation to true regard for another, be it tree/flower/grass, animal/bird/fish or man/woman/child.

Respect for another's rights and freedom to live in peace with each other and not to which mankind has deteriorated to what he/she is now. Perhaps 'they know not what they do', let alone say. But is that a reason for not speaking up and remaining silent? The fact that Man is not responsible for his actions, that he is the conditioned, manipulated puppet of those who made him in the first beginning is acceptable only if all mankind were similar in their words and actions, but they are not. Vegans, knowing the score and applying the truth to ALL things, when they know the truth, and acting out their part in the scheme of things in the cosmos, recognizing that ALL life has rights - and to never show arrogance to another. The titanic mountains of dead animals required by the flesh eaters, some 99% of the population, is mind boggling to such as the vegan because it is unnecessary. But the flesh eater is enclosed in a kind of time-warp, encompassed in a valley of the blind syndrome, afraid to see the REAL world - afraid of change of those things which have always seemed to be. Thus Man has been and still is a prisoner of the dim, dank, violent bloody past and loathe to leave it completely, retaining hold of it still. Mankind is under the false illusion that it has been endowed with a mythical, handed-down free will but until Mankind realises it is not a free agent in this world to do as he/she pleases, then we shall not see the change from negation to the progress of acting in a positive manner.

(Note: This article has been edited for reasons of readability. Ed!).

Viva! - Fighting for the Animals

by Tony Wardle

Modern farming is the single biggest cause of animal abuse. For sheer scale, nothing else comes remotely near its mass production of misery and death. In Britain alone, over 750 million creatures reared and slaughtered every year under conditions which should shame a society which thinks itself civilised. Feeling, breathing creatures have become nothing more than another commodity quoted on the stock exchange.

It was into this global nightmare that Viva! stepped. Its aims were far greater than its resources but they were absolutely clear - to force the vegetarian and vegan debates back on to the media agenda and to save animals by increasing the number of people who no longer eat them. It felt there were already enough talking shops and what was desperately needed was a charity dedicated to fighting for farm animals. Its remit was positive campaigning and youth education - laying the ground for a more compassionate tomorrow.

Viva!'s founder and director, Juliet Gellatley, was already well known for her work on these issues. Now, less than two years after its launch, Viva! has established itself as a truly effective campaigning vegetarian and vegan charity.

It launched with the highly effective Convert-a-Parent, reported in over 100 newspapers and by almost as many radio stations. Most importantly, it worked and many young people did convert their parents. Its CRATE campaign took the live exports issue to inland cities with 11 colourful marches and rallies for young people. The top 100 entries in The Crate Escape Competition, to design a poster against live exports, will be on display at the David Land Arts Centre in Brighton from September 10 - 22.

Viva! has trained a network of over 100 school speakers who are carrying the arguments into classrooms nationwide and is currently in the process of producing a tailor-made video to make their work even more effective.

Who Loves ya Babe, used the film Babe to expose the reality of pig production with the support of animal rights groups everywhere. It produced over 100 picture stories and some 50 radio interviews. When pork sales dropped, a second run of stories appeared.

The You'd be Mad to Eat Beef adult campaign was equally successful and made the 1.00pm, 6.00pm and 9.00pm news. It was Viva! who first raised the gelatine and beef derivatives concerns and alerted the public to the danger of bonemeal, meat and blood in fertilisers. Viva!'s BSE Helpline was publicised in over 200 newspapers across the country and handled thousands of calls, mostly from meat eaters, many of them wanting to go vegetarian.

Viva!'s 12 Guides on the vegetarian issues - from food poisoning to environmental destruction, the life and death of animals to impoverishment of the developing world have now been expanded with three new titles. Vegetarian/Vegan Pregnancy and Feeding Your Baby are both written by Rose Elliot. The L-Plate Vegetarian is a great new guide to the supermarket shelves for young virgin veggies with few cookery skills.

Launched in April was Juliet Gellatley's book The Silent Ark, (Thorsons) a chilling expose of meat as a global killer. The reaction to it can only be described as fantastic. Still to come in September is her second book - for young people - called The Livewire Guide to Going, Being and Staying Veggie (Women's Press).

In its next campaign Viva! is Going for the Kill by attacking the myth of humane slaughter. It will also be exposing the growing industry of ritual slaughter and calling for it to be banned.

We knew that our work was having an effect when the ITV network devoted an entire documentary at peak viewing time to Viva! The aim was quite clearly to destroy us but it has backfired and Viva! has gone from strength to strength.

ethical
WARES
cruelty free footwear and clothing

a stunning range of outdoor and leisureware combining the finest synthetic materials with quality craftsmanship and design. Suitable for vegans, vegetarians and all those who care about the environment

For a FREE full colour catalogue call or fax 01929 480360 or write to:
Ethical Wares, Dept FL,
17 Townsend Road, Corte Castle,
Wareham, Dorset, BH20 5ET

The Gentle Army

by John

Economic sabotage? The best form of economic sabotage, indeed the only form that genuinely works, is raising people's consciousness. Our battle against cruelty and bloodshed is just that; a battle - a battle for hearts and minds. It must be realised that unless you've won over a person's heart and mind, then you've won nothing. 'Direct action' economic sabotage may temporarily throw a spanner in the works, but once everything has been tidied up and the insurance money has come through, they'll be back in business just the same as before. Even if one of these 'merchants of cruelty' is put out of business, some other unscrupulous person will soon come along to fill the gap in the market and supply the demand. Violence does not destroy markets.

Slaughterhouses, vivisection laboratories, the trade in animal skins, etc., these things only exist because down through the centuries people have been blinded and misled by false spiritual teachings. Once I was a carnivore. I'm sure most, if not all Arkangel readers were too at one stage, but due to the cumulative effect of person or persons unknown or forgotten (to us), who gave us their 'light', we have arrived at our present stage of consciousness. The task at hand, whilst still seeking ever higher light ourselves, is to give our 'light' and understanding to those following on behind us.

For every soul we guide out of darkness into the light, for every person we convert to vegetarianism/veganism, we (ultimately) redeem dozens, if not hundreds of little souls from the slaughterhouse, trawl-net, laboratory, trap and snare. Whether you seek to kindle love in people's hearts by teaching great spiritual truths like boundless love or the oneness of all life, or whether you seek to instill compassion in people from a moral standpoint, or perhaps even both, is irrelevant - each to his or her own. But the all-important thing is for as much light as possible to be sent forth, because that ultimately is THE only way to precipitate the decline and demise of these cruel practices. The truth of this is abundantly evident in recent times. Every day more and more people are embracing compassionate living. Every day this huge tide of cruelty is slowly but surely being forced back.

In times to come, when humankind has attained an overall higher state of consciousness, future generations will look on our abuse of the animal kingdom with the same abhorrence that we now view the Holocaust or the slave trade. In life, the easiest thing is to take the path of least resistance. I think history will be very kind to those noble people who saw suffering and stopped to render their service, unlike so many of their fellows who 'passed by on the other side', either not knowing, or worse still, knowing but pretending not to see.

Vivisection: Useless and Dangerous

by Dr. Tony Page

The deliberate inflicting of disease, suffering and death upon animals in vivisection laboratories is an obvious moral affront to all human decency, yet what is not sufficiently widely realised or promulgated is that all such experiments are in addition utterly useless.

Animals vary at the microbiological level from humans to a striking degree, which means that whereas one may obtain a specific reaction from an animal when it is given a new chemical or drug, one can have no way of being sure that the same reaction (positive or negative) will be obtained from a human subject. Hence the numerous cases of drug damage. Relying largely upon animal data is a foolhardy and dangerous procedure in the development of new medicines or chemicals, etc.

To illustrate the divergences between animals and humans we could cite the case of strychnine; this deadly poison can fell a human being if he or she swallows just 0.5 mg/kg, whereas rabbits can survive almost 15mg/kg of this noxious substance - 30 times the amount (relative to body weight) which can despatch a human to an early grave. Likewise, potassium cyanide is so deadly to us that the very inhalation of its fumes can kill us - yet dogs, rabbits and mice can swallow the stuff and live! Again, we could cite the example of scopolamine, a poison which will bump off humans at a dosage of just 5mg (in absolute terms), but which cats and dogs can survive at levels of almost 100mg. If we followed the indications of such animal test results - we would all be dead!

Cancer is another area of vivisectional uselessness. Animals in laboratories get biologically different kinds of cancers from us, so studying such tumours in a quest for a cure for human cancer is futile. The chemotherapy approach to cancer (based largely upon animal studies) meets with "... almost invariable failure," according even to Dr. Albert Braverman, writing in The Lancet of 13th April 1991.

The British Anti-Vivisection Association (BAVA) is a voluntary, unsalaried body of committed workers seeking a peaceful end to vivisection by spreading the message of its medical uselessness.

For more information, please contact:

BAVA, PO Box 82, Kingswood, Bristol BS15 1YF.

Membership is just £6.00 per year.

Dr. Tony Page is a writer, public speaker and peaceful activist for the abolition of all animal experimentation. (A book written by Tony is available from the above address. 'Vivisection Unveiled' costs £4.00 and is highly recommended! - Ed.)

News & Views!

by Robin Webb

Thought I'd mention it eventually...

Some of the bits and pieces written by me during the past year or so never got into print for various reasons, including bail conditions. Not being one to waste effort, even though some of the items maybe a little out of date by now, there are a few which I'd like to share with you. Aren't you pleased that you haven't missed out after all? Answers are not really necessary, please use the postcards to send messages of support to the prisoners. Meanwhile, just read on and complain the next time you see me...

The Hampshire loonies revisited.

One incident I included in a report of what was happening to me during my time in Winchester prison last year, occurred during my committal hearing. Most of the account is now of little consequence but I believe the following tale of bizarre police behaviour is a gem:

On the second day of the hearing (11th April 1995) some friends brought in some vegan food for my lunch and handed it to the solicitor for me. Bringing it into the cell area he was stopped by the redoubtable DCI (now Det. Supt.) Desmond Thomas, the Hampshire police version of Basil Fawlty, and told that I couldn't have it.

While my solicitor was explaining to DCI Agitated that he didn't have any jurisdiction there, my counsel (barrister) went to walk past, only to be physically pushed back by officer Fawlty. Looking into the wildly staring eyes of the troubled DCI, my counsel said, "Mr. Thomas, may I suggest that you take several very deep breaths and think very carefully about what you are doing" ...the food finally arrived in my cell.

During adjournments in the court proceedings any attempt by friends to speak to me were stopped by the same DCI as being 'unauthorised visits', even when my police escort had said it was OK!

Molotovs and milk trucks.

Towards the end of May 1995 incendiary devices were used to attack the dairy industry; as many as 38 milk tankers and other vehicles were reported to have been destroyed in Cheshire. Around the same time the European Union were in the middle of preparing another whitewash. I wrote as follows:

'Although there were various estimates the consensus seems to be that a total of 29 milk lorries went up in smoke at a cost of £3m'. This puzzled me at the time as I have always thought that milk had to be emptied out of bottles and replaced with petrol when preparing Molotov cocktails; from the two places hit in Cheshire it would seem that milk (and other dairy products?) is itself flammable. Oh well, you live and learn.

With the European sell-out compromise-on-a-compromise-on-a-compromise the live exports protests aren't going to go away. In fact, people will just become even more aware that lawful campaigning is treated with contempt by the establishment which at the same time encourages such actions in order to dissipate the anger and energy of rightful protest in the least harmful way to the status quo.

Surely such cold, calculated, cynical exploitation of innocent animals and well-disposed, passionate demonstrators can only serve to force more and more caring people to the conclusion that "the law doesn't work so we'll have to work outside the law". Whatever the establishment says, compassion can never be a crime. Live exports will stop, we will all make sure of that. It's time to stop it now before the public become so angry that the State loses control completely ...if that situation is reached then all laws could be irrelevant.

I've said it many time before but it's worth repeating. We aren't asking for shorter journey times or better travel conditions, we're demanding no journeys whatsoever. Nothing less will do.

Even less protection for animals in UK laboratories.

Eight new members were appointed in December 1994 to the Animal Procedures Committee (APC), the body responsible for overseeing the vivisectioners' charter (sorry, I mean the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986). I'm sure that the barrister and philosopher will be a great help as will the three vets, two of whom are with universities with the third being a recent past-president of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons. A real history of concern for animals so far. Who are the remaining three? Dr. Christopher of Huntingdon Research Centre, Dr. Flack of Hazleton Laboratories and Dr. Purchase of Zeneca Central Toxicology Laboratory. That's right, three major contract testing labs that make profit from pain.

It may be worth mentioning that one of the continuing APC members is Dr. Tony Suckling, Scientific Director of the RSPCA. I was on the RSPCA's National Council around the time he took up his post with the society and will always remember part of our first conversation. Dr. Suckling had been using animals in 'research' for some 20 years and wanted a change when the RSPCA vacancy came up. However, he admitted, if it had meant taking a drop in the standard of living for him and his family then he would have continued using animals in 'research'. Doesn't it give you faith? Well, I guess it gives you something...

The Media and the Truth... will they ever meet?

Tuesday, 4th July 1995 saw four letter bombs, presumably from the Justice Dept., delivered to hunt targets in Cheshire. These were dealt with by the army bomb disposal squad; the fourth detonated at the home of David Woolley, Master of the Cheshire Hunt.

The following days' newspapers carried reports with headlines such as 'Letter bomb injures six year old boy', containing the claim that Woolley's son Joshua 'suffered slight eye injuries and must return to hospital ...to assess any permanent damage'. Accompanying photographs from the press conference showed a bright-eyed Joshua with an unblemished complexion. And they claim that animal rights people play on emotion and sentiment ...and as for downright lies!

Are you SURE the police are serious?

Do members of the constabularies really live in the same world as the rest of us? If so, why? One element of their dream world is code words and phrases. For example, Keith and Viv were arrested in October 1991 during Operation Igloo. The arrest of Gurj was code-named Operation Gloucester ...this was also the code under which SO13 (the Anti-Terrorist Squad) arrested me and Dave Hammond in Hove, although some of those papers have, for some unknown reason, been amended to Operation Steeple.

My Hampshire lunacy which was tried at Winchester Crown Court last December was, regretfully, not Operation Fawltly Towers but Operation Washington; my personal code-name for surveillance purposes under Operation Gloucester/Steeple was 'Biscuit Tin' (be fair, I couldn't possibly make that up despite my weird sense of humour!).

Don't you feel safe knowing you've got people 'protecting' you who can think up such names? To be able to coin such titles is a special power, a power that no ordinary mortal could handle.

Would this have been what the Metropolitan Police Commissioner, Sir Paul Condon, meant when he said last year that: "police officers have awesome powers. Those powers need to be under control. Those powers need to be seen to be under control"? Hmm, yes, well, if you say so Sir Paul!

But, what's happening now?

Actions have been taking place up and down the country, without necessarily being claimed or reported, including the liberation of many rabbits, turkeys, guinea pigs and individuals of other species. That said, it wasn't really until the end of June that, to coin a phrase that should not be misunderstood, things began to hot up a bit ...in a manner of speaking.

During the early hours of Sunday 23rd June a slaughterhouse at Minsterworth in Gloucestershire had one lorry gutted and another severely damaged by incendiary devices. If anyone out there has similar appliances then please be careful; I understand they can be dangerous! At virtually the same time, at Dry Drayton in Cambridgeshire, someone made a complete ash of two cattle transporters, a car, a trailer and a barn.

Just a few days later police in Cumbria claimed to have found 5 incendiaries on a railway embankment near Langwathby. It seems that a fence is all that separated the railway from a lorry compound attached to the local poultry slaughterhouse. It may be that a planned raid was aborted due to a sixth device igniting in a nearby field ...or was it the beginning of a new campaign against rail privatisation?

The ALF Press Office.

The past couple of years have been difficult times with the police, alias the Establishment, trying to close it down time and again. From a 20 mile travel restriction to imprisonment to a complete ban on going anywhere or saying anything to do with animal liberation... it's all failed. They can't stop justice, they can't stop truth and they can't stop animal liberation. Slow it down a bit, maybe; stop it, no!

That said, the Press Office is in financial crisis. Not only has fund raising been virtually impossible during that period, this year hasn't presented the usual opportunities for such activities. Even if fund raising occasions had been available, the merchandise wasn't. T-shirts, badges ...even copies of the Animal Free Shopper ...are all in various police stations and have been for some time. Everything seized by the Lothian and Borders police more than 4 years ago is still in Edinburgh!

So, if you can help with donations or do some fund raising it would be most appreciated. It would also help show the Establishment that animal liberation just can't be stopped.

Also, the Press Office is still in business for highlighting to the media what's been done in the name of animal liberation. Although the mobile phone went while I was in Winchester the main number is still the same... 01954 230542. Not that I want anyone to go out and do an action just to let the Press Office know about it ...that couldn't be further from my mind! ...merely that the office is still there to be used as a news agency if anyone wishes to call anonymously. The address similarly remains the same: ALF Press Office, BM4400, London WC1N 3XX.

Speakers are also once again available for meetings and rallies; one invitation already fulfilled was the national anti-vivisection rally in Sheffield in June organised by Uncaged.

To recap briefly. If you've got some spare pennies, the Press Office could put them to good use (gold bullion would also be acceptable), if you've got news, the telephone number is still the same and speakers are still available to explain why animal liberation must not and will not fail.

The war goes on...

Recently I have tended to 'go on a bit' about the fight to end live exports. Although that goal is unquestionably an animal welfare, rather than liberation concern, its achievement would stop a lot of distress and suffering.

Live exports and hunting with hounds are the two areas of animal abuse we are closest to eliminating; would it not be wise to concentrate our main efforts there? When those battles are won we can go forward triumphantly with renewed determination and vigour to wage war on all the other cruelties and injustices.

That is not to say other abominations should be neglected. Those who are particularly anxious about vivisection, the fur trade, angling, etc., should rightly focus their energies in specific areas; it would be quite wrong to disregard such absolute evils. But there have to be priorities; while a wholefood co-operative selling free-range eggs would ultimately be a legitimate target because of the abuse and exploitation of hens, surely a butchers or Cancer Research Campaign shop in the same street would rank considerably higher on the animal liberation list of priorities?

So, let's really go for what's immediately attainable whilst not forgetting all the other horrors being inflicted constantly on our brothers and sisters out there. Let's concentrate our power and work together to rid the world of these obscenities. Let's go forward together for Animal Liberation!

Prevent Unwanted Pets

by Christine Scott

Every day in Britain approximately 4,000 healthy stray or unwanted dogs, puppies, cats and kittens are destroyed, so nearly 1.5 million are destroyed each year. In Nottingham every day, approximately five stray dogs and two cats are re-homed and approximately ten dogs and two cats are destroyed. Many animals too go to homes where they are cruelly treated.

I am writing to ask if anyone could help organise a petition in their own areas requesting their local councils to start low-cost spaying and neutering schemes for dogs and cats belonging to people on low income? I would be glad to co-ordinate the work - for example, I could send out information and advice to anyone wishing to help and if I heard from more than one person in the same area wishing to help, I could put them in touch with each other (it would be important to tell me the name of your local council if you get in touch with me, also I'd be glad to hear of successful petitions!)

Due to petitions to local councils in my area, six councils now have schemes (three for cats as well as dogs) and another council plans to start a scheme in a few weeks' time. Altogether there are 37 councils (known to me) that now have schemes.

For more information, please contact me at:

28 Rushworth Avenue, West Bridgford, Nottingham NG2 7LF (0115 9696018)

Hi, I'm Uri Geller

and boy, am I glad to be vegan! What with BSE in dairy cattle, salmonella in chicken and eggs, the threat of a yield-promoting hormone (BST) in milk, listeria in some soft cheeses - not to mention the high, artery-clogging saturated fat content of fibre-lacking dairy foods and eggs - and who knows what other health hazards still to be uncovered - it has never been a better time to take that next small step to becoming animal-free.

So, if you're looking for peace of mind, good health, and enough energy to join me in my 50 miles-a-day cycling routine, simply send two-first class stamps to my friends at the Vegan Society. They'll be pleased to help you on your way!

Promoting a diet free of animal products for the benefit of people, animals and the environment

The Vegan Society, Dept AK, Donald Watson House, 7 Battle Road, St Leonards-on-Sea, East Sussex TN37 7AA (Tel. 01424 427393)

Live Exports from Ireland

by Anon.

Since the winter of 1995, when the bitter protests against the live export trade began in earnest, the spotlight turned on Ireland's live export trade which up until that time had continued unchallenged and unhindered. Media coverage reached a level never seen before by Ireland's animal welfare groups. The trade in live animals to the continent presently continues courtesy of Irish Ferries plc, which carries all categories of animals including veal calves on its routes to France. (One of the major users of this 'service' is H. Dixon., Maltpool, Claremorris, Co. Mayo, Ireland - Tel: 010 353 94 71793 if you would like to complain!!).

The darker side of animal exports from Ireland causes serious concern to animal welfare groups with the re-emergence since 1993 of live cattle exports to non-EU countries chiefly (in order of importance) Egypt, Libya, Saudi Arabia and up until 1995, Yemen. This trade has been influenced by various market forces, such as the present BSE crisis, the BSE crisis of 1990 and the economic fluctuations and u-turns by successive EU Farm Commissioners. The trade remains viable as a result of 'refund payments' or export subsidies payable to exporters of up to £300 - £400 per ANIMAL. This results in a reduction of the EU 'beef mountains', thereby solving the age-old problem of over-production of food within the member states of the EU.

Three ports are actively involved in the trade in live cattle: Cork, Waterford and Greenore, Co. Louth near the NI border. HORGAN LIVESTOCK LTD. (Director John Horgan, Gortalough, Rochestown Road, Cork - Tel: 010 353 21 894941) would be the major player in the Cork area, with Purcell Livestock Ltd., 34 The Mall, Waterford City, covering the South Eastern area of Ireland. Statistics show that 300,000 live cattle left Ireland in 1993/4 to die in inhumane death in Muslim countries. Ireland stands condemned along with just two other countries - Germany and Australia - who also send their cattle to such a death.

Ships are normally 'purpose built', or converted from other use, and are chartered by the exporters. Countries of origin would be Egypt, Philippines, the Lebanon, etc., all places known to be far from animal friendly! Ships consist of up to three decks, with pens for holding the animals, most ships having a carrying capacity of up to 2,000 cattle depending on ship size. Some pens are exposed to all weathers, with pens below deck ensuring animals will suffer in the heat and humidity once in North African waters. Journeys take from 10 days to three weeks depending on destination and weather conditions or mechanical problems.

Recently, during the March 1996 BSE scare, Egyptian authorities stranded almost 4,000 cattle in boats from Ireland outside the port of Alexandria for almost 11 days before being given safeguards by the Irish Prime Minister that they were BSE free. Two cattle are known to have died, with the condition of the rest still a mystery. (Shipments courtesy of the aforementioned Mr. Hogan...)

Animals have access to water and hay rations during their journeys, administered by sailors who are invariably untrained in animal care procedures. Animals have no access to bedding and have to stand on concrete for the duration of their journey. Ships' drainage systems are not designed to cope with straw bedding as it clogs the drain holes, thus ensuring foot ulcers and pneumonia. By the time they reach their destination they are standing in up to six inches of their own excrement and urine, and with the heat and humidity taken into account, conditions can only be described as dire. After enduring rough weather, and the stress of a two week journey by sea of up to 5,000 miles, these animals face death by having their throats cut without pre-stunning, left to bleed to death at the hands of people to whom animal welfare is an unknown quantity. We cease to have any information about these animals once they leave our ports, their condition on arrival or how much onward transportation they face once they arrive.

The whole trade is shrouded in secrecy, despite calls by welfare groups, politicians and the media to have open and urgent debate on this issue. An increasingly aware public is pressing for action to be taken as they feel that if this trade is as 'welfare friendly' as our Agriculture Minister says, then long promised veterinary reports in place since 1993 should be published without delay.

In 1995 three cases of multiple cattle death tragedies became known to the public. In February 1995, a cattle ship departed from Cork port, and within seven days the ship encountered violent storms resulting in the deaths of 77 cattle. In a separate shipment 138 cattle died in February 1995 during a shipment to Saudi Arabia, and finally 264 animals died during a voyage to Saudi Arabia and Yemen in 1993. All animals will have died agonisingly in two of the three instances, with the exception of the 77 who were treated by a veterinary surgeon as ships on their maiden voyage must have a veterinary official travelling (Govt. regulations). Horrifying injuries such as broken legs and ribs as well as shock, suffocation and heat exhaustion have been recorded in all three tragedies. One veterinary inspector was said to have watched animals legs "snap like matchsticks" during a severe storm encountered in the Bay of Biscay. It is a disgusting and heartless trade, with no up-to-date information given as to the fate of these cattle.

In October 1995 our Agriculture Minister, Mr. Ivan Yates put legislation in place to ensure that this trade is secured for years to come. Stricter 'controls' on the suitability of ships and their crews were hastily rushed through the Dail (Parliament), with penalties for exporters who transgress and veterinary presence on pre-selected voyages, and a ban on sailings when severe weather is forecast. This legislation covers the endemic flaws in this trade; that it is morally unacceptable to transport animals over such vast distances to die in such inhumane fashion in countries where EU slaughter rules do not apply. It has been proven that this trade could easily be replaced with beef contracts, one Irish beef exporter has said that without the live animal trade from obliging countries such as Ireland and Australia, there is no other source for live cattle. As an Irish person I am appalled that EU taxpayers' money is being abused in this way, and an ever increasing number of Irish people are beginning to question the morality of animal exports. Given the choice, wouldn't all animals prefer NOT to die at the hands of those who see ritual slaughter as a religious 'freedom'? Unfortunately, they have no such choice.

Protests on the scale of those seen in England would be unlikely to happen in Ireland. However, awareness is growing among interested politicians and public alike, especially in light of the three tragedies in the public domain since 1995. It begs the question: Do we want to be part of a so-called 'progressive' European Union which spends such vast sums of money bolstering an outdated and heartless trade?

Hotel Cockroach Revisited

by Gillian Peachey

Greetings from Hotel Cockroach where all continues as passes for normality in these dumps. Nothing at all that can't be handled, just the long old wait to eventually get to trial (have you heard this somewhere before?). As always, my very real thanks to all of you who take time out to write, it really does make a difference I promise you. I love my (personally delivered) mailbag but will give you all a public apology for the eyestrain I cause with my indecipherable scrawl!!

Brilliant to hear of so much action going down out there against the abusers everywhere, and that's just what you can tell me about! In prison we may be in a period of forced inactivity but we're always out there in our thoughts, and, contrary to beliefs held by the authorities we do not leave our brains in the reception area along with our property. Brain, mouth and writing hand's still in good working order thank you very much and all working overtime to make up for the body's slothfulness. You get well fed up sometimes with 'stupid question time', but then that's not exclusive to prisons as any of us who've done street stalls know to our cost. Amazing how many questions ALF, Justice? or Shoreham protest t-shirts can raise (no my name's not ALF - but there you go). All I'm trying to say I guess is that while you cannot continue with vital direct action when you're stuffed up in prison you can still make a small contribution to helping our friends. OK, it's not where we'd ever want to be nor what we'd choose to be doing but we're still not totally ineffective. Whatever they do to us, no matter where they put us or what prison sentences they give us they will never shut us up and we ain't going to go away either.

The length of prison sentences given out over the past year certainly reflects the fact that the hierarchy have belatedly recognised people committed to animal rights are a force to be reckoned with, but do they honestly believe that these sentences will deter anyone? I think not.

To every one of you out there who continues to give all they can to try to alleviate and halt the atrocities against all sentient species, my respect and support. To those of you who sit and talk about it, don't you think the time is overdue for you to get out of your chair and go do something positive in support of our friends, instead of merely pontificating on their behalf.

I'm not advocating that you go trotting off to do anything to break their laws (heaven forbid) but I am saying, please do everything that you personally feel able to do. Nobody won anything by sitting on their backsides and the time for animal rights is now - and now is still years too late for many millions. Think about what you can do and make those thoughts into deeds - the animals all need you more than ever and THEY NEED YOU NOW.

Animal Liberation in France (Vegans in the land of Pâté)

by Vincent Berraud

In France there is a gap between Animal Defence and Animal Liberation. There are plenty of animal defence groups, such as the SPA (French RSPCA), the Rassemblement des Opposants à la Chasse (anti-hunt) or the LAF-DAM (anti-vivisection league). Most of them are led by conservative individuals who sometimes have links with the Front National (extreme right party). And worst of all we have Brigitte Bardot who, though she is against fur or factory farms, is not at all a supporter of Animal Liberation. She married a member of the Front National, and she declared that she is no longer a vegetarian because it made her feel too weak...

Yet racism is dangerously growing: at the last presidential elections the extreme right obtained 20% of the votes. Unemployment rates get higher every month (the national rate is around 12%) and every political party is corrupt, so people start to look for alternatives. We could offer a humane and decent alternative, but this society is based on money so only the rich have wide access to the media, and the multinationals have lots of funds... ignorance is their power.

So this must be one of the main reasons for our insistence on the differences between animal defence and animal liberation. In Britain, animal liberation groups seem to be very radical in actions (ie the ALF), in France we are radical in our thoughts; we ask ourselves exactly what our aims are. But I wouldn't say we take much action, though we do support the ALF and we do produce some good propaganda.

We have small collectives in every big city, except in the south where the Latin tradition of fishing and bullfighting is still present. There is only one major animal liberation magazine, les CAHIERS ANTISPECISTES, and an 'anti-speciesist federation' was created last year in order to improve co-ordination and communication between the individual collectives. But it is already a failure because of internal conflicts. Our main problem is finding ways to reach people who know nothing of our struggle.

We declare ourselves anti-racists, anti-sexists and anti-homophobics because we stand for animal liberation and human emancipation. As long as an animal is oppressed, whether it's a rat, a deer or a human, liberation won't be achieved. Whereas human beings (who are clearly more intelligent, can change their social organisation or what they eat, and can think about the future) can and should liberate themselves, the liberation of the animals can only be the task of human beings - and how can people stop oppressing non-human animals if they are accustomed to oppressing women, homosexuals or coloured people? Or if they are oppressed themselves?

Of course we still spend more energy to struggle against animal killing and exploitation, as there are already other associations dealing with purely human problems, but it is important to be ethically coherent by taking a stand against every oppression.

In our fight for the animal cause we make no concessions. We want abolition; you don't legislate slavery!! We don't want 'bigger cages and longer chains'. And most of all we try to explain our ideas and introduce anti-speciesism (who thought about the killing and the sufferance of the fish caused by nuclear testing?).

I am a member of the Parisian Collective for Animal Liberation and I would be interested to get in touch with animal liberationists from other countries to share our struggle and to encourage each other by exchanging ideas and experiences.

Vincent Berraud, 1 rue Edgar Poe, F75019 Paris

Cahiers Antispecistes:
6 rue de la victoire, F69003 Lyon

CLAP (Collectif de Liberation Animale Parisien):
c/o PADI, F75624 Paris cedex 13.

MAKING MINCEMEAT OF McDONALD'S !

Arkangel presents an update on the McLibel Trial. The trial, already the longest civil case in British history, is a mammoth legal battle between the $30 billion a year McDonald's and two activists (Helen Steel & Dave Morris) who the company is suing for libel over a 6-sided Factsheet produced by London Greenpeace entitled "What's Wrong With McDonald's? - Everything they don't want you to know". For perhaps the first time in history, a multinational corporation has effectively been put on trial over its business practices - promotion of junk food, exploitation of workers and animals, advertising to children, and damage to the environment. The alternatives have also been successfully aired and defended. Despite the unfairness of the battle and the oppressive libel laws, and the Defendants' exhaustion, the general feeling of observers is that McDonald's critics have been completely vindicated by the evidence during the trial.

McDONALD'S AND RAINFOREST DESTRUCTION

McDonald's current use of cleared Amazonian rainforest land

Sue Branford, a Brazil specialist and expert regarding the social and economic forces impacting upon the Amazon region, testified for the Defendants. She criticised the cattle ranching industry for causing environmental damage, and for causing the violent displacement of small farmers and indigenous peoples. In particular, she had visited regions which McDonald's have admitted as past or current sources of beef supplies for their 200 Brazilian stores. For example, she had visited areas in Goias State where McDonald's had admitted to the Defendants (in a statement from Roberto Morganti, the Director of McDonald's local hamburger manufacturers, Braslo Ltd.) that they still obtain their beef - especially along the River Araguaia (which flows into the Amazon) and its tributaries. She had travelled extensively in this vast region (including towns named by Mr. Morganti) and testified that in the early 1970's it was an area of Amazonian tropical rainforest. Ms. Branford had witnessed it being cleared and burned for cattle ranching from the mid-1970's up to the mid-1980's (with indigenous people being forced out). She said forest clearances continue, but at a slower pace.

Sue Branford's evidence was fully corroborated by a written submission from Defence expert witness Professor Susanna Hecht (who has conducted extensive field research in the relevant regions) who added: "I am certain that a substantial proportion of cattle supplied to Cuiaba meat plants (1979 - 82) and to Goias Carne [which still supplies beef for McDonald's use] for the last 20 years up till now would have been cattle from rainforest areas".

This evidence, based on McDonald's own information which the Defendants finally forced the company to disclose after 3 years of legal applications, completely nails once and for all the Corporation's lies distributed to the public worldwide about never using any beef raised on ex-rainforest or recently-cleared ex-rainforest land.

Brazilian beef exports to McDonald's UK - Meat magnate forced to testify

In July, McDonald's much-vaunted claim that it is not connected in any way to rainforest destruction was dealt one more devastating blow. The court had already heard much evidence about the import of five consignments of Brazilian beef for McDonald's UK stores in 1983/4. These shipments only came to light due to a confidential letter mistakenly disclosed to the Defendants in 1994 by McDonald's lawyers, in a bundle of other documents. Clearly, McDonald's would have preferred this to remain a secret. An earlier letter from the US Corporation to a member of the public in the UK in 1982 had stated: "we can assure you that the only Brazilian beef used by McDonald's is that purchased by the six stores located in Brazil itself". The shipments also contradicted McDonald's stated policy of only using European-produced beef in the UK.

Lord Vestey, Chairman of Vestey Group Limited (international meat export/import business), was served with a subpoena by Helen Steel and was forced to come to court to be questioned. In 1983 he was Director of the Vestey family group of companies, who had supplied McDonald's UK with the Brazilian beef from the Vestey plant at Barretos (in the state of Sao Paulo). A letter written at the time, from David Walker (Chairman of McKey Foods, then a subsidiary of McDonald's UK) to the managing director of a Vestey subsidiary revealed that the imports were a matter of great controversy. The letter stated that Prince Philip (President of the World Wildlife Fund) had recently met the President of McDonald's Canada, and had said: " 'So you are the people who are tearing down the Brazilian rainforests and breeding cattle' to which the reply was: 'I think you are mistaken', whereupon HRH said 'Rubbish' and stormed away". Following this, the letter stated that the Chairman of the McDonald's Corporation, "issued a worldwide edict that no McDonald's plant was to use Brazilian beef". The very same letter revealed that McDonald's UK, had given Walker permission to use the Brazilian beef imports.

Since the Brazilian shipments were being arranged at the time of this dispute with Prince Philip, Lord Vestey had been asked by David Walker to write a letter 'confirming' that the beef was not "coming from reclaimed land from destroyed rainforests"

Lord Vestey delivered the requested letter in which he stated that the cattle supplied to the meat plant were not from any rainforest region. However, in court, the assurance given in this letter was completely blown apart. Lord Vestey admitted that most of the cattle slaughtered at the Barretos plant were from untraceable sources, having previously been trucked into Sao Paulo State to be fattened up. He said: "We kill 200,000 cattle a year... approximately 10%.. are ours [from company-owned ranches]." The rest "we have not any means of knowing where they have come from". Professor Hecht later testified in response: "In my opinion it is a certainty that a substantial proportion of such cattle would have been those which had been raised in former rainforest areas".

Sincere in wanting to preserve the environment?

Defence expert Ronald Cummins concluded: "If McDonald's, Burger King and other fast-food giants are sincere in wanting to preserve the environment in general, and tropical rainforests in particular, they should immediately call for: (1) A ban on beef imports into North America from Central America; (2) A halt in the expansion of North American style fast-food restaurants into the third world; (3) The promotion of sustainable, equitable, environmentally friendly agricultural policies (both in the North and South); and (4) A change in the menus (healthier, less beef and meat-centred, locally and sustainably produced foods), advertising, marketing and purchasing practices of their own and other multinational food corporations."

PUBLICATION OF THE FACTSHEET

The last section of evidence in the trial concerned the publication of the 6-sided London Greenpeace Factsheet, subject of the libel action. In April 1996, McDonald's were allowed to amend their Statement of Claim (their original case against Helen Steel and Dave Morris). Previously, McDonald's case regarding the distribution of the Factsheet had always been that the two Defendants were responsible for the handing out of the leaflet on a handful of specific occasions in 1989/90. McDonald's now claim that the Defendants, by virtue of their involvement in London Greenpeace, were responsible for the production and distribution of the Factsheet "wheresoever and whensoever" it had taken place! The Defendants were unsuccessful in their appeal against this ruling.

The Judge also ruled that the Defendants could amend their Defence to claim that, because McDonald's infiltrators had been actively involved in the group and had helped to circulate the Factsheet, McDonald's had consented to its distribution.

Keeping Tabs on Protesters

Terry Carroll (Head of Security of McDonald's UK) gave evidence about protests against the company. Prior to joining McDonald's, Mr. Carroll had spent 30 years in the Metropolitan Police, reaching the rank of Chief Superintendent.

Mr. Carroll said he regularly sent out instructions to all McDonald's branches on what steps to take when the stores were picketed. This included advice that wherever possible photographs should be taken of protesters and these should be sent to regional headquarters along with copies of any leaflets obtained. Mr. Carroll stated that prior to the company's regionalisation in 1990/91 all reports and photographs of demonstrations had been sent to him. The purpose of this was to try to identify if there was a "hard core" of people carrying out protests all around the country. He said the company discovered that, in fact, protests were generally local people picketing their local branch. He said "literally hundreds" of leaflets had been sent to him and that so many came in that the files became "unwieldy". He stated that no legal action stemming from these files had ever been taken against protesters.

Sid Nicholson (McDonald's UK Vice President) formerly in charge of Personnel and Security, testified for the second time in the trial. Mr. Nicholson joined McDonald's in 1983 as Head of Security. Prior to this he had spent 31 years in the police force, firstly in South Africa, and then in the Metropolitan Police, reaching the rank of Chief Superintendent.

Mr. Nicholson admitted that in September 1989, he had had a secret meeting at McDonald's Head Office with two members of Special Branch where he obtained information about people involved with London Greenpeace. He stated that during the picket of McDonald's HQ on 16th October 1989 (World Day of Action against McDonald's), two Special Branch agents were in attendance, one of whom stood with him passing on information about protesters. Company documents revealed that McDonald's continued to receive information from Special Branch until at least 1994.

Mr. Nicholson stated that McDonald's security department "are all ex-policemen", and had a great many contacts in the police from whom they may get information about protesters. He also admitted that the company had subscribed to the Economic League which he described as an organisation which existed "to defend multinationals and the interests of multinationals". He said that McDonald's had received information from the Economic League about London Greenpeace and the Transnationals Information Centre, who published Working for Big Mac, and said that "we may very well have got reports on union activity". [N.B. The Economic League kept a 'blacklist' of 'subversives' - political or trade union activists - gleaned from various sources, which subscribers could use to vet prospective employees. It was the subject of great controversy in the late 80's/early 90's and has since closed down.]

Infiltration and Dirty Tricks

Mr. Nicholson was questioned in detail about the steps taken by the company against London Greenpeace and other critics. He admitted that, in 1989 when considering legal action against the small environmental collective, McDonald's had hired two private investigation agencies -

Kings Investigation Bureau and Bishops (part of Westhall Services) - to infiltrate the group. A total of at least seven agents participated in the group for varying lengths of time between October 1989 and Spring 1991. Mr. Nicholson further admitted that approximately four of the seven spies remained in the group after writs were served on the Defendants in order to monitor the response.

One of the 'enquiry agents', Mr. Brian Bishop, gave evidence about twelve of the meetings and events he had attended on behalf of McDonald's, between mid-May and the end of September 1990. He confirmed he had "manned" a stall, some of the time on his own, at a "well attended" public event, where, he said, "to the best of my knowledge" the anti-McDonald's Factsheet was available for the public to take away.

At the first meeting he had attended, Mr. Bishop had noted that the windows in the then London Greenpeace office "had no security locks" and that "I imagine [the next door office] is occupied 24 hours a day". Questioned as to the relevance of such information Mr. Bishop denied that it was there to give advice to anybody interested in getting into London Greenpeace's office to burgle them. He did however admit to taking a letter about McDonald's which had been sent to London Greenpeace, and said he had passed it on to the detective agency.

A second 'enquiry agent', Mr. Allan Clare who had been employed by McDonald's to infiltrate London Greenpeace, also admitted taking several letters sent to the group, although he claimed to have returned them after making photocopies for McDonald's use. He admitted to breaking into London Greenpeace's office and taking photographs in there, stating "the door lock on the office to London Greenpeace was basically not very strong and it was decided by me and my principals that entry to it would not be a problem"..... "I used a phone card to swipe the lock". Mr. Clare attended at least 19 meetings of London Greenpeace. He admitted sending out anti-McDonald's leaflets including the Factsheet.

Another 'enquiry agent', Mr. Roy Pocklington, said he had attended at least 26 meetings and events of LGP between October 1989 and June 1990. Questioned by Mr. Rampton QC as to the group's attitude to McDonald's, Mr. Pocklington said "The group felt that McDonald's were somewhat sinister, somewhat exploitative, and their attitude was one of disgust and dislike for McDonald's". He said that people in the group appeared sincere in their beliefs. He said that the group was friendly and open but that in order to continue attending meetings he felt "it would be beneficial to show willing and help out where I could in the office". He had therefore volunteered to help answer letters sent to the group, including on one occasion spending 8 hours in the Greenpeace office writing replies, and enclosing anti-McDonald's leaflets, including the anti-McDonald's Factsheet.

Mr. Pocklington agreed that he had prearranged to leave meetings talking to certain individuals in order that they could be followed home, and that he had provided a parcel of baby clothes for Mr. Morris' son, in "an attempt to discover Mr. Morris' address".

McDonald's Agent Appears for the Defence

Throughout the case McDonald's had refused to identify more than the four 'enquiry agents' they were calling as witnesses. However, after the Defendants obtained and served a statement by Frances Tiller, another agent, McDonald's had had to admit that in fact the group had been infiltrated by at least seven agents. Ms. Tiller gave evidence for the Defence on 28th June, the second anniversary of the trial. She testified that "I felt very uncomfortable doing that particular job", "I did not like the deception, prying on people and interfering with their lives". "I did not think there was anything wrong with what the group was doing" she said, adding: "I believe people are entitled to their views".

CLOSING SPEECHES REMAINING

The evidence closed in mid-July after the testimony of Helen Steel herself, who was in the witness box for four days. Both sides will return to court in October to present their closing speeches (lasting up to 9 weeks). The Judge's personal 'verdict' is expected in early 1997.

ADOPT-A-STORE

The last 6 years have seen a sustained and determined campaign to expose McDonald's practices in defiance of the company's attempts to silence its critics. Over 1.5 million leaflets have been handed out in this country alone since the writs were served on Helen & Dave, and pickets and protests continue to grow (last year on October 16th over 250 McDonald's stores were leafletted in the UK).

Please 'Adopt-a-Store' now to assist in the coordinated leafletting of all 700+ McGarbage outlets when the trial ends (probably in the Winter of 1996/7) and on other future days of action. The aim is to have a group or individual campaigner associated with every branch. Where a town or city is blighted with more than one McNasty, a contact is needed for each one. Let us know the specific branch that you will be at. 'Adopt-a-Store' forms for completion can be obtained from the address below.

October 16th every year is the Worldwide Day of Action Against McDonald's - please leaflet outside your local McDonald's store on that day (leaflets from Veggies: Tel. 0115 958 5666).

HOWARD LYMAN SPEAKS: THE REAL STORY ON BSE

Spongy Brain Disease

It could be you

Hear what American rancher-turned-environmentalist Howard Lyman had to say to UK audiences about BSE, sustainable agriculture and the future of farming. A cassette tape is now available of his riveting, rousing talk in Edinburgh, delivered during his publicity-filled speaking tour at the height of the BSE crisis in March. The tape also features an introduction to the McLibel Trial, and the song "Red, White & Moo" by Robb Johnson. If you would like a copy, please send 4 pounds each within the UK, or 5 pounds / $8 each outside the UK (all inclusive of postage) to the address below.

Please send donations and/or requests for information to:

McLibel Support Campaign,
5 Caledonian Road,
London N1 9DX, UK.
Tel/Fax 0171 713 1269.

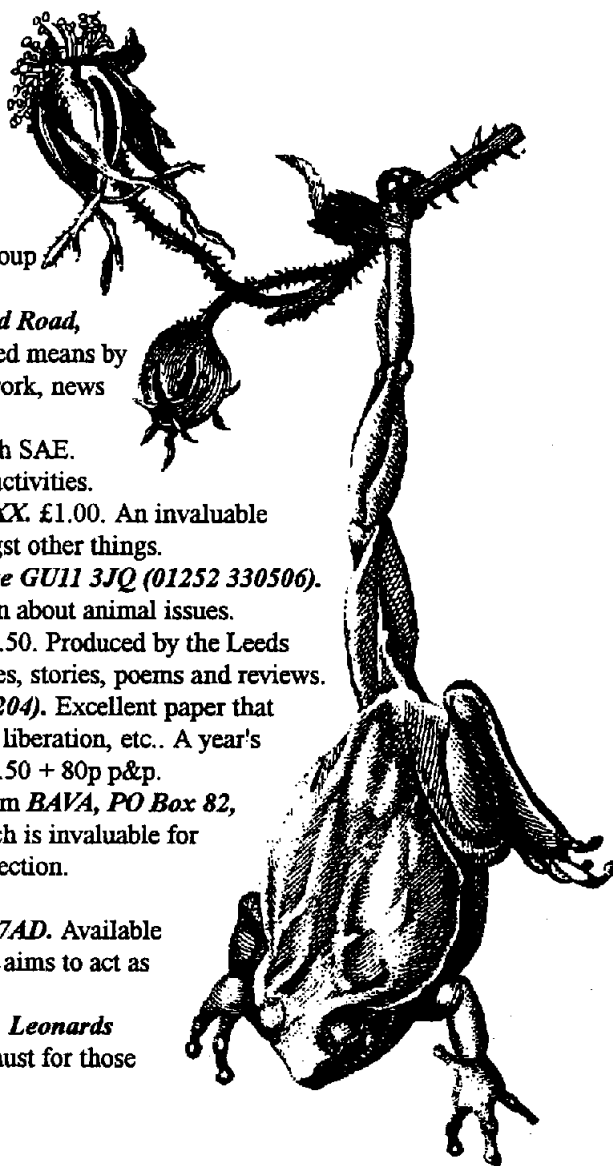

E-mail & Listserver: dbriars@world.std.com

(Cheques to 'McLibel Support Campaign')

Independent Internet info on McLibel, McDonald's and multinationals at:
<http://www.mcspotlight.org/>

Some Recommended Reading..

- ALF SUPPORTERS GROUP NEWSLETTER: BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX. £1.50. Contains information concerning A/R prisoners and defence funds, articles and news. Quarterly.
- ARC NEWS: PO Box 339, Wolverhampton WV10 7BZ (01902 711935). Free with SAE. Contains reports of local group activities as well as an up-to-date list of events.
- ANIMALS CONTACT LIST: Veggies, 180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HW. £3.00. The list provides a coordinated means by which groups can contact one another with details of their work, news of campaigns and requests for support.
- ECO-VEGAN: BM Heal, London WC1N 3XX. Free with SAE. Contains information concerning A/R and Earth Liberation activities.
- GREEN ANARCHIST: BCM 1715, London WC1N 3XX. £1.00. An invaluable paper which contains news, views and an ALF hit-list amongst other things.
- GREEN WORLD: 49 York Road, Aldershot, Hampshire GU11 3JQ (01252 330506). Contains news on the Green movement as well as information about animal issues.
- INTERBEING: 91 Clarendon Road, Leeds LS2 9LY. £1.50. Produced by the Leeds Network of Engaged Buddhists, the magazine contains articles, stories, poems and reviews.
- SQUALL: PO Box 8959, London N19 5HW (0171 561 1204). Excellent paper that covers issues such as Road protests, Animal liberation, Earth liberation, etc.. A year's subscription (four issues) costs £10. Individual copies cost £1.50 + 80p p&p.
- SLAUGHTER OF THE INNOCENT: Available from BAVA, PO Box 82, Kingswood, Bristol BS15 1YF. A book by Hans Ruesch which is invaluable for those wishing to know about the medical fraudulence of vivisection. £5.50 (inc. p&p).
- VEGAN VIEWS: 6 Hayes Avenue, Bournemouth BH7 7AD. Available through subscription of just £3.00 for 4 issues. The magazine aims to act as an exchange between its readers.
- THE VEGAN: Donald Watson House, 7 Battle Road, St. Leonards-on-sea, East Sussex TN37 7AA (01424 427393). £1.75. A must for those already vegan or those seeking a vegan lifestyle. Quarterly.

Donations

We are extremely grateful to the following people who have made a donation of £4 or more to help us produce and distribute this magazine: Alexia Askaridou, B & S Besford, R Banham, P Croxford, Stuart Forrest, Mary Hoad, Lee Hall, Angela Hogan, Christina Maier, Hrvoje Nezic, Dave Pope, P Querinci, Shirley Stones, JB Sleath, Mark Shaw, John Tomkins, Sue Tilley and C & I Taylor.

Extra thanks go to: Bob Brierley, Beryl Clifton, PR Fenn, Jack Ivin, JI, and Anne Page for their invaluable help, and to M Cooper, Sandra Francis, Monica Harvey, C Humphries, Michael Maas, Mary McShane, Pat Murgatroyd, Philip Magor, Mark Organ, Anne Page, Montserrat Thompson, Diane Westwood, Dave Wetton and P & J Zehler, who are all donating on a monthly basis by standing order.

THE ROAD TO VICTORY!

USA researchers claim that soya bean products eaten regularly can cut total blood cholesterol levels, and soya protein is also thought to prevent breast cancer, prostate cancer and osteoporosis. (Independent 24.11.95)

Beef sales are down 25% year on year, and there is still a steady decline. 1.4 million households have stopped buying beef over BSE fears. (Independent 28.12.95).

Police have raided a Scottish farm in an investigation into forged health certificates from herds infected with mad cow disease. Detectives fear up to 400 cows with BSE have been sold on the open market over 18 months. An abattoir is also being investigated. (Times 24.2.96).

A breast cancer drug widely credited with reducing death rates in older women with the disease, can cause womb cancer, according to the World Health Organisation. The drug, Tamoxifem, taken by thousands of British women, is increasing the risk of a tumour originating from the inner lining of the uterus. The Medical Research Council has twice refused to back preventative trials for Tamoxifem as a preventative treatment in healthy women with a family history of breast cancer. Earlier this year, a panel of state scientists declared Tamoxifem 'carcinogenic'. Tamoxifem, available since 1973, is now worth £350m in sales annually, for its manufacturer, Zeneca, almost one fifth of the company's sales. (Independent 26.2.1996).

Proctor & Gamble was fined £18,000 with £7,000 costs after a worker was decapitated whilst using machinery to fill washing powder trolleys. Proctor & Gamble who made £140m annual profit, admitted an error. (Independent 29.2.1996).

Three women, arrested in December 1995 near Fareham, Hants., on 6 serious animal rights charges, have had 5 of their charges dropped, leaving only one charge left: conspiracy to commit criminal damage by arson where there was no damage committed. One, Gillian Peachey remains on remand in Holloway Prison. They are due for trial in October.

Staff at 16 Sea Life centres are to provide a national network to respond to emergencies among the seal population around Britain. The centres, attractions featuring marine life in natural settings, will deal with problems caused by pollution, abandoned nets and uncaring parents. (Times 4.3.1996).

The Vegetarian Society's latest campaign, which consists of two ads in two magazines cost less than £10,000 but the Meat & Livestock Commission which last year spent £15m on advertising, is drafting a complaint to the Advertising Standards Authority about it. The National Farmers Union's objection has already been lodged. Meanwhile, enquiries for Vegetarian Society membership packs, normally about 20 a week, are running at 500 a week. (Independent 5.3.1996).

A group of 40 saboteurs, some carrying pickaxe handles, forced the Leconfield & Cowdrey Hunt to abandon its meet at Petworth Park, West Sussex. (Sunday Telegraph 10.3.1996).

Plans to bring a McDonalds restaurant to Bermuda have caused a political storm, described as a 'folly' and decried the 'rape' and 'cheapening the quality' of the colony. (Independent 13.3.1996).

E.U. Ministers outvoted Britain and agreed to tighten a ban on the use of hormone drugs in meat production. Britain, which opposed the decision to ban hormones in 1989, stood alone in demanding that farmers should be free to use growth-promoters which pose no risk to human health. Tony Baldry, Agriculture Minister of State, urged colleagues to continue the use of five natural hormones, which the U.S. already permits. U.S. beef is already excluded from the E.U. because of the hormone use, although the U.S. has lodged a complaint with the World Trade Organisation. The E.U.'s overwhelming view was that the permitted use of hormones would lead to a consumer backlash, triggering a 30% beef-market collapse, much like BSE has. (Independent 19.3.1996).

Humans can catch mad cow disease from eating infected beef, the Government will admit today. Health Secretary Stephen Dorrell will accept this, 10 years after Ministers insisted it was impossible. Experts fear we may have already eaten a million infected animals. As the incurable killer disease can take 10 years to show up, many people are living on borrowed time. This follows an upsurge in human cases; 55 cases in 1994, 13 higher than the previous year, and double the figure of a decade ago. This is even though last October the CJD surveillance unit said there was "no conclusive evidence" of a link. At least four cattle farmers have died of CJD; if it were by chance, we'd expect one to get the disease every 50 years. Even vegetarians may have eaten the infectious agent by eating gelatine. (Daily Mirror 20.3.1996).

Wild Boar have been reintroduced into the New Forest for the first time in 90 years, where they once roamed for centuries. The fearsome aggressive animals, weighing up to 25 stones, were killed off because of tourism. The last one was killed by a keeper in 1905. 13 of the beasts have moved into their electrically fenced 8-acre quarters. Wild boar were hunted in England to extinction in 1525, then reintroduced in 1850. (Daily Mail 21.3.1996).

21 people have died on the Zanzibar Island of Penba this week after eating poisonous turtle meat. The death toll could rise further because another 13 victims in hospital are reported to be in a critical condition. (Independent 21.3.1996).

The recent fall in beef consumption is only part of 23 year trend in which Britons have turned away from meat, according to the data collected by the Economic and Social Research Council. The trend has been most pronounced in women and young people. 4.5% of adults now class themselves as vegetarian. Sales of meat substitutes have increased by 279% over the period 1988-1991. The more educated the family, the less likely it is to eat meat. (Independent 22.3.1996).

Dr. Rob Will, who has headed CJD surveillance unit since 1990, said three weeks ago that the risk from BSE was "a remote theoretical risk". Now he has changed his mind, having now become aware of ten new patients with a new form of CJD, for which it is only logical to consider a risk. The new cases are different from previous cases. A Government committee has been set up to look into the implications of passing the disease on to other animals. It could be one of the worst moments a Health Secretary has faced since the Thalidomide scandal. (Independent 23.3.1996).

Glaxo Wellcome's chief executive, Sir Richard Sykes, took a total emolument of £2.15m in 1995. The company made 7,500 redundant that year. (Independent 23.3.1996).

A Merseyside doctor who was a J.P., a government advisor on health, and also chairman of a medical ethics committee, who used his patients as guinea-pigs for drug trials without their knowledge was struck off the medical register. Dr. Geoffrey Fairhurst, 57, of Warrington, Cheshire, received £15,000 and payments from Glaxo Pharmaceuticals and other drug companies for trials. He used his patients as unknown recipients of potentially dangerous drugs. (Independent 23.3.1996).

Cockfighting was banned in this country in 1846, yet last week a court rejected the appeals of two men against prison sentences imposed for cockfighting offences. John Lee, 43, of Belvedere, Kent, is now serving 3 months, whilst Mark Giles, 31, is serving one month. Together with 12 other men and a 16 year old youth, they were caught when 40 police and officers from the RSPCA raided a caravan park at Belvedere last year. Those not jailed were fined up to £400 except the youth who received a conditional discharge. The case was only the fifth prosecution brought since the act was brought in. Another case is pending after a raid in Kelloe, Co. Durham. (Independent 25.3.1996).

Supermarket sales of beef are down by 40%. The three biggest beefburger retailers have switched to foreign beef. Tens of thousands of jobs would be jeopardised. (Independent 26.3.1996).

CJD may have been spread through the water supply by blood fertiliser from abattoir waste contaminating rivers. Government scientists from the Environment Agency (EA) will call for an end to farmers spreading blood and intestinal contents from cattle on their land. It suspects the BSE agent could enter the water supply. The ban is backed by MAFF, the DoE, and independent scientists. The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) said it had considered the issue but thought the risk was low. A Labour MP is to raise the issue after complaints from constituents about fields red with cattle blood and abattoir waste spilling onto roads. The National Rivers Authority was alerted by residents near a Bradford reservoir after animal waste, possibly containing banned specified bovine offal, turned to foam on the Bradford reservoir water. (Sunday Times 31.3.1996).

In 1923, in a small Swiss town, philosopher and teacher Rudolf Steiner posed the question: "What would happen if the ox were to eat meat directly instead of plants?" Steiner was an early advocate of organic farming and although his standards might not count as good science, his words were prophetic. "If an ox were to consume meat directly, the ox would go crazy." (Independent on Sunday 31.3.1996).

The beef scare has knocked up to £1bn off the share value of food, dairy and animal feed firms. Among those worst hit have been Unigate, Dalgely and Northern Foods. (Independent on Sunday 31.3.1996).

A 300% explosion in the sales of vegetarian books in England means another bad week for beef. The Moosewood Cookbook sales have soared by 600%. Other book sales are up nine-fold over Christmas. The BSE scare is thought to be responsible. Vegan book sales are also up. Vegan titles are expanding as people are worried about dairy products too. The Vegetarian Society says enquiries have doubled in the past two weeks, including from beef farmers. A lot of people are worried about gelatin and beef products. Patrick Holden of the Soil Association said this was the revolution he had been waiting for. BSE has tipped the balance. (Independent on Sunday 31.3.1996).

More than 5,000 people who handle meat and poultry have been sacked or put on short time; thousands more will follow. 700 were laid off from the meat industry on Friday in Northern Ireland. World demand for British beef has fallen 90%, and livestock markets all over the country stood empty. The UK meat business is worth £3bn a year. To add to the difficulties, the now banned bonemeal is costing £100 a ton to dispose; it used to be worth £15 a ton to them, regardless of where it comes from. This used to be worth £80m a year. (Independent 31.3.1996).

Increasing your vitamin E intake can cut the risk of heart attacks by 70%. It is available in wholefoods and bread. (Radio report).

Scientists who clone sheep, hailed last week as a technological triumph, failed to disclose bewildering abnormalities which may prevent the technique from ever being applied. The Government-funded Roslin Institute near Edinburgh has revealed that one lamb grew to twice the normal size and had to be delivered by Caesarean section, three died shortly after birth with malformed internal organs, and all but one of the five cloned lambs were at least 20% larger than they should have been. The scientists' reports illustrated the only two surviving lambs. (Sunday Times. Unknown date).

A pet mongrel was given a new home after his owner was found guilty of neglect and banned from owning a pet for 5 years. James Scott, 42, of Anerley Vale, Upper Norwood, denied causing unnecessary suffering to his black mongrel Joey. He was also ordered to pay a £50 fine and £100 costs. A juvenile from St. Bernards Close, West Norwood was found guilty of cruelly ill-treating a kitten. The 17 year old was spotted tying wire around the kitten's neck before swinging it. The youth was ordered to pay £100 costs, given 12 months conditional discharge and disqualified from owning any animals for the next 5 years. A vet said the kitten probably avoided strangulation because of its light weight. (South London Newspaper).

The Serious Fraud Office will launch an official investigation this week into the collapse of the multi-million pound Ostrich Farming Corporation amid mounting concern from thousands of investors who thought they were backing the latest fashionable investment. (Times 10.4.1996).

A species of red deer believed to have become extinct in Tibet has been rediscovered by Chinese and US scientists. (Independent 12.4.1996).

Opposition to salmon farming has reached a peak in Western Ireland with a sabotage attack on a fish farm in which up to IR£1m - worth of young salmon were released. The Irish Government has ordered a special enquiry into another incident when a salmon company lost its entire 1997 output when fish cages were cut open and 250,000 smolts were lost. (Independent on Sunday 14.4.1996).

The otter is storming back into England according to an exhaustive survey to be published next month. Britain's most popular wild animal is now found throughout England and on parts of every river catchment. The number of sites where its droppings are found has quadrupled in 14 years. 'Decline and recovery of the otter in England', a report by Rob Strachan and Don Jefferies, is available from the Vincent Wildlife Trust, 10 Lovat Lane, London EC3R 8DT at a cost of £8.00. (Independent 15.4.1996).

Vital medical research and the safety of scientists is threatened by the rise of the anti-vivisectionists. Animal rights attacks are up yet again. One immunologist, Dr. David White, who hopes to produce animal organs for human transplantation, has had his home wrecked three times, with 'murderer' painted across his walls. Then, someone put a hose through a skylight and left water pouring through for the whole weekend. (Polly Toynbee, Independent 22.4.1996).

Sir. David Steel and Lord Donoughue were sent booby-trapped letters by animal rights activists. Both have spoken out against animal rights. (Independent on Sunday 23.4.1996).

Beef sales in the Co-Op stores are down by 70%. (Radio Interview 27.4.1996).

Professor of Neurology at Glasgow University, Peter Behan, who diagnosed the latest case of CJD in a dying 15 year old girl, has failed to attend a press conference, amid speculation that he has been silenced. Professor Behan said the girl has got the BSE-pattern CJD and picked it up from eating hamburgers. (Independent on Sunday 28.4.1996).

One of Britain's leading meat companies, G. G. Baxter of Colnbrook, near Slough, founded in 1836, and who supplied Buckingham Palace and leading London restaurants had mould growing on pipes in its factory, sterilising equipment that didn't work and broke Government hygiene regulations. The shocking conditions were revealed in an internal report which raise serious questions about the standards behind the scenes in Britain's meat industry, and the efficiency of the environmental health inspection system. (Independent 29.4.1996).

Aborigines armed with staves and petrol bombs occupied a pier to prevent the unloading of nuclear waste on their island. About 400 people of the Yami tribe were refusing to let a ship of the state-run Taiwan Power Co. unload 168 barrels of nuclear waste. (Independent 29.4.1996).

A plan by Norwegian smugglers to illegally export 60 tons of whale meat into Japan was foiled after a consignment of 6.1 tons was found by customs officials. In Japan, Minke whale meat has a market value of around £200 per kilo and the smugglers were set to earn around £15m. (Big Issue May).

A high court attempt to wind up the Ostrich Farming Corporation, which attracted thousands of investors, was adjourned and is expected before August. The S.F.O. is investigating after the Dept. of Trade issued a petition against the company. (Independent 9.5.1996).

An animal sanctuary is expecting more than £3.5m from the will of the wife of the man who launched the Berni Inn chain of restaurants. It was disclosed yesterday that she bequeathed the bulk of her £4,769,134 estate to animal charities. The chief beneficiary is Animal Concern's Holly Hedge sanctuary in Barrow Gurney near Bristol. (Daily Telegraph 10.5.1996).

A Dutch taxidermist who smuggled the feathers, skulls and skins of some of the world's most endangered species in and out of Britain was jailed for two years yesterday. (Daily Telegraph 10.5.1996).

The only pair of breeding Golden Eagles in England have hatched at least one chick at their Lake District eyrie for the first time in three years. A round-the-clock guard has been mounted by RSPB staff and volunteers. (Daily Telegraph 14.5.1996).

An agreement has been signed that could end elephant culling in South Africa's national parks. The International Fund for Animal Welfare has handed over a £1.6m cheque to the National Parks Board to expand and secure elephant habitats. (Daily Telegraph 15.5.1996).

The dung beetle, the skylark and the dormouse were yesterday awarded sponsorship under a Government-backed programme for endangered species. (Daily Telegraph 16.5.1996).

Up to 20 high street butchers are being driven out of business each week by the BSE crisis. The National Federation of Meat and Food Traders' president, Roger Kelsey, said it was his guess that we are losing 30-40 butchers a week, at least half because of BSE. Last week, the only remaining butchers shop in Havant, Hants., closed down. The former butcher, David Tallant, has a new job overseeing the cattle cull. (Sunday Telegraph 19.5.1996).

Robert Vose, 52, of Ryhope, Sunderland, was yesterday fined £750 by local magistrates and ordered to pay £50 costs after he admitted 4 counts of possessing schedule 1 & 2 eggs under the Wildlife & Countryside Act of 1981. (Daily Telegraph 23.5.1996).

Administrators appointed by the High Court were called in to Cricket St. Thomas Dairies in Somerset, and 1,000 jobs are at risk. Difficulties were compounded by a drop in milk sales after the BSE scare. The company has a turnover of £90m and employs 400 dairy workers and 600 at its 16 depots. Meanwhile, Dairy Crest is considering a floatation valued at £200m. (Times 29.5.1996).

Concern about the welfare of the harvest mouse has prompted an unlikely joint venture by naturalists and the sports world. More than 11,000 tennis balls are being converted into humane traps and distributed to members of the Mammal Society to assess how the tiny rodents which weigh about the same as a 20p coin - are faring alongside modern farming methods. The scheme is backed by English Nature, the People's Trust for Endangered Species, and Slazenger, which donated the tennis balls. (Times 3.6.1996).

One of the biggest turtles yet seen off the British coast has been freed after being trapped in mooring lines. Details of the rare 10 ft long Leatherback Turtle found at Coverack, on the Lizard Peninsula, Cornwall, are being sent to the Natural History Museum. (Times 3.6.1996).

A pair of ospreys at Loch Garton in the Highlands have hatched a third egg to add to their two chicks, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds said. Last year the same ospreys successfully raised three young. (Daily Telegraph 5.6.1996).

A terrier given up for dead after vanishing 3 weeks ago survived on water at the bottom of a 3 foot pit into which it had fallen. The terrier, Gizzie, had lost a lot of weight and would be 'spoiled rotten for a few weeks'. An RSPCA spokesman said: 'Cairns are fairly robust and sometimes animals can call on an inner survival instinct. But without the water she would have died'. (Daily Telegraph 6.6.1996).

Turkish anti-terror police questioned the cook and staff of a firm supplying food to the UN habitat conference after 70 security officials had food poisoning from chicken sandwiches. (Times 13.6.1996).

A family of hedgehogs survived being vacuum-packed and transported hundreds of miles inside a bale of hay. The girl who bought the hay discovered the creatures when she opened the bag at home. Wildlife rescuer Dorothy Squires said: "It is the most extraordinary thing that any of them had survived. The mother was dehydrated and she must have been living on the condensation that was caused by their breath inside the plastic." (Times 19.6.1996).

Last year the Government awarded a budget of £800,000 to help farmers convert to organic systems but spent only £300,000. By contrast it spent £2,000,000,000 on intensive systems. Farming is losing 12,000 jobs a year. (Daily Mail 19.6.1996).

MP's are calling for a ban on pet shops selling dogs, part of a sickening trade which breeds 50,000 dogs a year for massive profits on unlicensed farms in appalling conditions. The Commons All Party Animal Welfare Group is part of a group which has produced a report on the trade. The current penalty for unlicensed breeders is £2,500, but the group recommends tougher action. (Independent 26.6.1996).

The army bomb disposal squad was called in to defuse incendiary devices found on a railway line running alongside a poultry farm. They were found on the Settle-Carlisle line at Langwathby in Cumbria. Detective Inspector Peter Brown indicated that they involved an animal liberation group. (Independent 26.6.1996).

The car enthusiasts who have made Daytona Beach a by-word for speed and beach parties are under pressure from environmentalists who fear they pose a threat to the Loggerhead Turtle. In a dispute that could have dire effects on the local economy, environmentalists have sued Volusia County, the area covering the beach, arguing that cars are destroying turtle nests and killing hatchlings. Last summer a federal court forced the county to prohibit beach driving at night. Now the environmentalists are seeking a total ban between May and October. (Times 26.6.1996).

A £6m water treatment scheme has been held up while two sets of nesting birds raise their families. (The Journal 27.6.1996).

A man who clubbed two lambs to death with a railway sleeper in a bid to make some money has been jailed for 5 months and banned for keeping animals for 10 years. Sean Hunt, 22, from Rugby, Warwickshire admitted stealing the lambs from a farmer's field and slaughtering them. (RSPCA Wildlife Summer 1996).

Jason Lidbury of Stockwell, South London, admitted 6 summonses brought by the RSPCA under the Wildlife & Countryside Act. Lidbury was guilty of stealing pigeons from Trafalgar Square. He was fined a total of £475 for intending to take wild birds, possessing them for sale and having them in his control. (Times 2.7.1996).

A project to re-establish the habitat of rare woodland butterflies, was launched by the Forestry Authority yesterday. The three-year scheme will provide grants to landowners to support coppicing in several areas. Marcus Warren of the charity Butterfly Conservation said: "This new initiative is probably the single most significant step that has been taken to save Britain's butterflies." (Daily Telegraph 5.7.1996).

A range of top-selling drugs to treat high blood pressure has been linked with an increase of cancer. Patients taking calcium channel blockers were twice as likely to develop cancer as those taking other anti-hypertensive drugs. The drugs include the world's second best-selling drug, Adalat (nifedipine), made by Bayer. American researchers had suggested a 60% greater risk of heart attack compared with those on cheaper alternatives such as beta blockers. High blood pressure affects one quarter of the adults in the country, about 14 million people. Another study suggested calcium channel blockers caused gastro-intestinal bleeding in elderly patients. Doctors requested patients to continue taking the tablets until the result of a clinical trial is reported in 6 years' time. (Independent 6.7.1996).

Gareth Krisman, 26, an animal rights campaigner, has accepted substantial libel damages after a Daily Express report portrayed him as a violent thug and 'assassinated' his character. It also accused him of being part of a sinister group of veterans of poll tax and Criminal Justice Act riots. (Independent 6.7.1996).

Johnny Morris, the presenter who gave voices to animal characters such as Dotty the lemur and Brolly the umbrella cockatoo in the classic TV series Animal Magic, condemned Pets Win Prizes, BBC1's hit Saturday evening show, as 'disgusting'. Chief Veterinary Officer for the RSPCA said the society had written to the programme and he personally said he did not approve of animals being used in this way. "I don't find it suitable family entertainment." (Independent 6.7.1996).

Alan Clarke, the former Tory minister, is spearheading a campaign to prevent the Government scrapping a law that curbs the trade in seal skins. The Trades Descriptions (seal skin goods information) Order 1980 prompted a huge drop in seal skin imports after public distaste at television pictures of sea cubs being clubbed to death in Canada. A MORI poll this weekend found that 92% of people supported retaining the law. (Times 8.7.1996).

A bull gored two runners simultaneously at the notorious annual San Fermin festival in Pamplona, Spain. (Independent 13.7.1996).

A Brazilian fisherman choked to death near the remote Amazon city of Belem after a fish unexpectedly jumped into his mouth. The man was fishing by the Maguari River about 30 miles south of Belem, when the 6 inch long fish suddenly leapt out of the river and became lodged in his throat while he was in the middle of a long yawn. The fish obstructed his throat completely and he couldn't pull it out because he couldn't reach the tail, a doctor said. (L. A. Times).

The Thai tourism authorities have asked South Korea to warn its nationals not to visit Thailand to eat bear parts which the Koreans consider a delicacy. The warning comes amid public uproar sparked by the arrest of five South Korean tourists after police discovered bear paws and bear entrails in their van during a traffic stop. (Evening Standard 7.8.1996).

Five men were last night charged with the murder of Ronald Smith, 49, who died protecting his pet pigs from a gang who had allegedly threatened to kill them. (Daily Telegraph 8.8.1996).

Sandra Bernhard, US celebrity, features in PETA's current campaign against the production of Premarin, which involves the repeated impregnation of mares, the automatic slaughter of 'surplus' foals, and constant dehydration to ensure an adequate concentration of the hormone. The advert is designed to raise awareness of the oestrogen derived from the urine of pregnant mares for the hormone replacement drug Premarin. (Vox August 1996).

Three collectors of birds' eggs were fined a total of £7,600 for illegal possession of rare specimens. Geoffrey Peirson, 48, was fined a total of £5,000 with £80 costs, while Anthony Parkes, also 48, and Michael Sloane, 36, were fined totals of £1,600 and £1,000. (Independent 14.8.1996).

ARK ANGEL

THE TRUTH IS OUT

NUMBER 17

£1.80

The Arkangel Editorial

With each day that passes animal liberation comes one step closer and with each day that closes the industries and individuals who abuse animals are being buried deeper in the cesspits of their own making.

The corrupt and the greedy who tried to turn vegetarian animals into carnivores are now reaping what they have sown - disease and huge financial loss. While governments were still reeling in the wake of the BSE/CJD scandal, along came another reminder of just how sick the society in which we live has become. E. Coli, and with it unprecedented cases of fatal food poisoning, is the result of a society which demands the flesh of other animals.

Fortunately, there are people who have woken up to the reality of the horror surrounding them. Enquiries to both the Vegetarian and Vegan Societies have reached record levels, with more and more people turning to meat-free and dairy-free lifestyles. Of course, it is easy to become despondent in the face of such overwhelming cruelty perpetrated against animals, but the Animal Liberation movement is growing by the day and more people than ever before are fighting for the lives of other creatures.

Governments may pass laws which protect the guilty and imprison the innocent but that will never stop the tide of compassion now sweeping into the hearts of so many. There are those who it appears will never change and who will go on feeding off murdered animal corpses, wearing their skins and torturing their bodies, but they will be swept aside and left to pay the ultimate price.

The Animal Liberation movement has the ability to achieve its aims and objectives now that it has become fully aware of its inner strengths and purpose. This movement is comprised of a body of people both strong and determined, a powerful force to be reckoned with, and one which can never be defeated.

ANIMAL RIGHTS PRISONERS

Arkangel gives its full support to animal liberation prisoners. In the past we have given details of names, locations and prison numbers. Now we only list the names of those in prison and ask those who wish to make contact with prisoners to contact the ALF Supporters Group for up-to-date information. This is because Arkangel Magazine is produced less frequently than the ALFSG information and could be out-of-date by the time you read it; so this change is for purely practical reasons.

For further information please write to:
ALF SG, BCM 1160, London WC1N
3XX

Prisoners at the time of going to press:
Dave Callender, Darren Cole,
Rod Coronado, Michael Green,
Kenny Gloster, Barry Horne,
Frank Kocera, Eric Van De Laan,
Keith Mann, Gillian Peachey,
Mike Roberts, Geoff Sheppard,
Charles Skinner, Joe Taylor, Barbara Trenholm, Justin Wright.

Arkangel Back Issues & Cards

Arkangel Back Issues: Numbers 2, 4 and 12 are still available and are FREE of charge! (But please send 50p per magazine to cover the postage - £1.00 outside of the UK).

Cards: A set of three cat 'Surimpressions' postcards are available. Prices are as follows: 10p each, 12 for £1, 100+ cards 5p each. Please add 25p p&p for orders of less than 50 cards.

Order from: Arkangel, BCM 9240,
London WC1N 3XX.

*Please make cheques payable to
'Arkangel'*

Advertisements

Arkangel Magazine is an entirely independent publication. We do carry some advertisements, but these are printed without charge and at the discretion of the editors.

Local Group Reports

Animal Rights Cambridge

74 Sturton Street, Cambridge CB1 2QA

(01223 311828, Fax: 01223 300318)

There are two campaigning groups in Cambridge - Animal Aid and Animal Rights Cambridge. Between them they have met monthly for the last 20 years and held weekly street stalls for 17 years. The two groups, although having separate identities, work very closely together as well as with local hunt sabs and recently they have had a number of joint campaigns - going together to live export demos, and to protest at the Eid Festival in France. The group has concentrated on the live export issue but has also given much time to protesting against the exotic meat trade, and locally against an intensive poultry rearing complex, joining others at Bernard Matthews.

Animal Rights Cambridge meet at 8pm on the fourth Tuesday of every month at The Bath House, Gwydir Street, Cambridge. The group look forward to seeing new members and welcome all to their meetings.

Animal Rescue

PO Box 233, Liverpool L69 7LF

Animal Rescue have successfully campaigned for the closure of a puppy 'supermarket' at Tarleton, Lancashire. The group ran an intensive investigation against the company, including secret filming of bad practises, months of weekly stalls, and heavy lobbying of the local council - regularly making headline news in the local and national press. They have also campaigned against intensively reared lambs, which caused supermarket giant Sainsbury's to cease trading with rogue farms. Contact the group for further information on these and other campaigns.

Animal Rights Warrington

c/o Winmarleigh Street, Warrington, Cheshire

WA1 1NB

Animal Rights Warrington are campaigning for a boycott of all Procter & Gamble Products until the company ceases all animal research and experiments. On receipt of an s.a.e. the group will happily provide petitions, leaflets and postcards to assist with their campaign. They are a new group who would welcome new members. Contact the group for further information.

Barnet Animal Rights Group

PO Box 76, Barnet, Herts EN4 9AW

BARG primarily covers the Barnet and Finchley areas. They hold regular meetings on the first Wednesday of the month at 8pm at the Quaker Meeting House, 58 Alexander Grove, West Finchley, London N12. Regular leafleting sessions are held on a Saturday morning in Barnet or Finchley. New supporters are always welcome.

Belfast Animal Rights

PO Box 148, Belfast BT1 2LZ

(01232 314076)

Much of Belfast Animal Right's time at the beginning of the year was taken up with the anti-live exports campaign; trying to stop the shipment of calves and pigs through Belfast International Airport at Aldergrove. The Northern Ireland Groups Against Live Exports was set up and began a 24 hour vigil at the airport which was to last for six weeks before the flights stopped, although the airport authorities have refused to state whether this cessation of animal abuse is permanent. Given the unique problems involved in blockading Aldergrove Airport, with its two cargo entrances, one public entrance and five via the RAF camp, all within the security zone, NIGALE efforts were a significant contribution to an unprecedented campaign.

Belfast Animal Rights produce a very informative newsletter called Ermintrude and together with the Vegetarian Society of Ulster run the Rainbow Shop in Lombard Street, Belfast. For information, details of the group, etc. please write to the above address.

Bristol Animal Rights Network (BARN)

Box 53, Greenleaf Bookshop, 82 Colston Street,

Bristol BS1 5BB

(0117 951 2942)

BARN campaigns against all areas of animal abuse including factory farming, bloodsports, the pet trade, live exports, etc. They hold fortnightly meetings in central Bristol and organise regular actions and events.

Beagle Breeders Closure (BBC)

c/o MARC, 54 Alison Street, Digbeth, Birmingham

(0121 643 2445)

In June 1996, a new campaign against Consort and Interfauna was launched and a small demonstration against Interfauna took place. Since then regular picketing has taken place at Consort, and national demonstrations have seen the liberation of some dogs. For more information about this ongoing campaign please write to BBC.

East Kent Animal Welfare

*Tremont, Claremont Road, Kingsdown, Deal, Kent
CT14 8BU
(01304 363071)*

EKAU have been active since 1993, supporting national animal welfare groups in the UK and abroad. The group has been very involved in the campaign against live exports. EKAU raise funds for hunt sabs, hold circus demos, run stalls and public meetings, and run a small animal sanctuary/rescue service.

Eltham Station Pigeon Campaign

*c/o 1 Chesterfield Court, Granville Park, London
SE13 7DU
(0181 852 0347)*

This campaign was launched to provide help to pigeons trapped in netting put up above the platforms at Eltham Railway Station in South East London. Many young and adult pigeons have died of starvation after being caught in the nets and despite a concerted effort the rail authorities seem unwilling to provide a satisfactory solution. This method of 'pest control' is common to many places and anyone with a similar problem in their area should get in touch.

Friends of Animals Under Abuse (FAUNA)

*PO Box 156, Cardiff, South Wales CF5 5YD
(01222 569924)*

FAUNA is an active group whose campaigns include lobbying local councils about pigeon culls, ostrich farming and pet shop licences. They have been targeting chicken and meat production, and have produced a video which was secretly filmed revealing the disgusting conditions in which broiler chickens live out their short seven week lives. For further information about the group's activities, please write or phone.

Gosport and Fareham Animal Aid

*26 Brune Lane, Rowner, Gosport PO13 9RA
(01705 5880516)*

This group has had a busy year working closely with other groups in the area and also arranging their own protests against local establishments. They run regular stalls and have helped with CIWF campaigns. Together with other local groups they held a demo and rally against Wickham Research Laboratories which received favourable attention from the local press. Contact the group for further information on current campaigns.

East London Animal Rights / Epping Forest Animal Welfare

*PO Box 216, Forest Gate, London E7 9RB
(0181 555 6683)*

These two groups have recently merged and are dedicated to ending cruelty and suffering to all animals. They organise circus pickets and regular vegetarian fairs. They hold meetings on the second Thursday of each month. Contact the group for further information.

London Animal Action

*BM 2248, London WC1N 3XX
(0171 278 3068)*

LAA have continued to be very active over the last six months. The anti-fur campaign is the main focus of activity with weekly pickets and the occasional big demo at one of London's few remaining fur shops. Home visits to various furriers and other pro-fur people have also proved a success. The group organised a successful and noisy demonstration at the meat industry's Royal Smithfield Show at Earls Court, which was supported by campaigners from all over the country. The artist Damien Hirst has also been a target for campaigners since he opened his new restaurant, Quo Vadis, in London's Soho, which displays some of his gruesome artworks. Successes include Janet Reger resigning as unofficial spokesperson for the fur industry and Lord Andrew Lloyd-Webber giving up the notion of running an ostrich farm. Both these changes of heart were entirely due to strong pressure from activists. The group hold regular protests against circuses, vivisection establishments and events and support other groups' activities in the area. They hold weekly stalls, and produce an excellent monthly newsletter, London Animal Rights News, which includes a diary of forthcoming events and is available for £5 a year for 12 issues.

London Vegans

*c/o 7 Deansbrook Road, Edgware,
Middlesex HA8 9BE*

London Vegans organise various social events, catering and information stalls throughout the London area. Regular meetings are held on the last Wednesday of every month (except December) at the Millman Street Community Rooms, 50 Millman Street, London WC1. London Vegans produce an excellent mailout list on the activities taking place both in London and countrywide. They can now also be contacted by e-mail on 100121.1167@compuserve.com.

Midlands Animal Rights Coalition (MARC)

*PO Box 43, Dudley, DY3 3DG
(01384 456682)*

MARC have found it very productive working with other AR and hunt sab groups in the West Midlands area. MARC is a coalition of Wolverhampton Hunt Sabs, Animal Rights Campaign Group, Dudley Animal Concern, Walsall Animal Rights, Wyre Forest Action Concern. MARC is launching a new campaign in 1997 against its local laboratories and will be producing a leaflet and factsheet on vivisection. They carry out regular leafleting sessions and protests against all types of animal abuse in the area. Another campaign is Justice for Kangaroos - targeting shops and businesses selling all types of exotic meat. MARC is a very active and effective campaigning group - contact them for further details.

Kent Action! Against Live Exports

PO Box 177, Deal, Kent CT14 8GB

Kent Action! Against Live Exports has led a difficult campaign in Dover as they have never had the support of the local people. They have to rely on protesters travelling to Dover but remain determined to continue the fight until the live export trade is ended. KALE will be pleased to welcome new protesters and would be grateful for any donations to finance the ongoing campaign.

Newcastle Animal Rights Coalition

PO Box 1JY, Newcastle upon Tyne NE99 1JY

Please write to NARC for information.

South London Animal Action (SLAA)

PO Box 594, London SW9 6YA

SLAA members have maintained a busy schedule of action and have supported a wide range of animal rights campaigns. Joining forces with other groups they have made regular trips to Dover to support the live export campaign. SLAA campaigns against all forms of animal abuse in the South London area and, following a sustained campaign, have recently forced a local pet food supplier to stop selling live food for reptiles. SLAA runs a catering service called the Green Marmoset Catering Company, which donates profits to numerous local groups in need of financial support. The group meets on the first Thursday of every other month at 7.30pm in the Voltaire Room, Clapham Baths, 157 Clapham Manor Street, London SW4.

Stevenage Animal Rights

Box 6, Bowes Lyon House, St George's Way,
Stevenage, Herts SG1 1XY

SAR are very active throughout the year, continuing their campaign against Glaxo Wellcome laboratories. Demonstrations are held on the 1st or 2nd Sunday of each month and the group would appreciate support. They would also like support for a demonstration at Glaxo Shareholders AGM on Monday 19th May - 2pm, Queen Elizabeth Conference Centre, Broad Sanctuary, Westminster, London (contact 01438 359424). The group produces a cruelty-free guide to cosmetics, household products and restaurants and also have a range of T-shirts and badges for sale. SAR produce a very informative newsletter available through subscription for £4.50 a year.

Surrey Badger Protection Society

PO Box 911, Warlingham, Surrey CR6 9AF

(01883 344662)

This registered charity is affiliated to the National Federation of Badger Groups. The SBPS was formed to watch over the local badger population and to respond to any activities which may be detrimental to the animals' welfare. They give free advice and practical assistance in all problems involving badgers. Family membership is £5 with reductions for single adults, senior citizens and under 18's. A regular newsletter published by the SBPS is available to members.

West Sussex Wildlife Protection

PO Box 99, Chichester, West Sussex PO19 4GL

This group, together with the relaunched Bognor and Chichester Action for Animals group, ran a successful campaign to get wildfowl shoots stopped at Whites Creek, Pagham Harbour, West Sussex. WSWP are also active in fox hunt sabs. Anyone interested in further details can contact them at the above address.

West Norfolk Animal Rights

(01553 617521)

West Norfolk Animal Rights campaign against all forms of animal abuse and support their local hunt sabs and protests at Bernard Matthews' home. Contact WNAR on the above number for news of their current campaigns.

Yeovil Animal Action

PO Box 1760, Yeovil, Somerset BA21 5PN

01935 25195 / 410535 Fax: 01722 327146

YAA are continuing their campaign against the Porton Down hell-hole where animals are experimented on with toxic gases resulting in death and serious illness. YAA have produced a leaflet highlighting the charities, including the Leukaemia Research Fund, which fund animal-based research.

Publicise your Local Group and campaigns ~ contact Arkangel Magazine!

SANCTUARIES

Hopefield Animal Sanctuary

Sawyers Hall Lane, Brentwood, Essex CM15 9BY
(01277 201110)

The sanctuary provides homes for a wide variety and a large number of animals. The workers would be most grateful for any help with DIY - please contact them. They've also been given the use of a shop by the local council and welcome items to sell. An adoption scheme and merchandise are available.

Widewalls Animal Sanctuary

Advent, Camelford, Cornwall PL32 9PY
(01840 212300)

The sanctuary is home for over 30 horses, and donations of building materials, animal bedding and food will be gratefully received.

Freshfields Animal Rescue Centre

East Lodge Farm, East Lane, Ince Blundell,
Liverpool L29 3EA
(0151 931 1604 or 0421 535237 mobile)

The shelter welcomes help with fund-raising. They urgently need voluntary live-in workers for short or long term. They would also be most grateful for offers to home rescued animals but run a strict vetting service.

Celia Hammond Animal Trust

High Street, Wadhurst, East Sussex TN5 6AG
(01892 783367/783820)

The sanctuary is in need of voluntary help to care for the animals in their care. Literature is available from the above address and over 100 permanent residents can be adopted either individually or as in groups. Help is also desperately needed by Celia at her Lewisham Way clinic - caring for the stray cats and kittens, the odd rabbit and dog that stay permanently at the clinic until homed. Good A/R people are needed to generally tidy, clean, mop and hoover up and feed, water, clean out and befriend / fuss over the patients and strays. The address of the clinic is: Cat and Dog Neuter Clinic, 233-235, Lewisham Way, London SE4 1UY (0181 691 2100).

Pigeon Recovery

8 Vermont Road, Sutton, Surrey SM1 3EQ
(0181 644 7349)

Pigeons are considered vermin by the majority of people which makes the running of this sanctuary all the more essential and pigeons could not have better friends than the two sisters who care for them, nursing them back to health and returning them back to the wild. Lyn and Maggie Allen work tirelessly and in the face of adversity to care for these birds. They would greatly appreciate any financial help whatsoever.

Abandoned Animals Association

101, Bryniau Road, West Shore, Llandudno,
Gwynedd, North Wales LL30 2DZ

The AAA was formed over ten years ago in response to the ever increasing problem of unwanted pets in the North Wales area. The association has a non-destruction policy so no fit animal is ever destroyed. The AAA exists for all animals, however most of them are dogs, some of whom remain for a very long time, perhaps due to age, behaviour problems or poor health. These long-term dogs are greatly helped by our 'befriend a dog' scheme whereby people may sponsor a particular dog with regular donations thus helping to provide a few extra comforts. 'Befrienders' may also visit/walk their sponsored dog which hugely relieves the animal's stress and boredom. Recently, the AAA formed a Junior members group which aims to educate young people about the welfare of all animals in an interesting and enjoyable way. For more details contact Lucinda at the above address or telephone 01492 877233.

Farm Animal Rescue Sanctuary

25, Springhill Road, Fen Drayton,
Cambridge CB4 5SR

The sanctuary has been in existence for 8 years and the number of animals brought in has grown steadily. There are 450 sheep, 8 goats, 3 pigs, 2 calves, 3 bullocks and numerous small animals all in desperate need. The sanctuary now finds that due to the rising cost of animal feed and veterinary fees the sanctuary may have to close. It may be possible to find homes for some of these animals, but if funds cannot be found the fate of the vast majority is too dreadful to contemplate. They desperately need people to fund-raise.

Wildlife Rescue Centre (Wildlife Hospital & Education Centre)

29, Berkeley Drive, West Molesey, Surrey KT8 1RA
(07050 264625)

Established in 1982, the Wildlife Rescue Centre has developed many services specifically for wild animals that are sick or have been injured. The threatened closure of the Wildlife Rescue Centre in 1992 by the local council met with tremendous resistance and a successful campaign to save it began. The Rescue Centre is located in two and a half acres of what was scrubland in Cobham, Surrey. Many hours of hard work has left the site ready for a new centre to include aviaries, pens and a hospital wing for the on-site treatment of animals. Donations are essential for the survival of the centre.

Sussex Horse Rescue Trust

Hempstead Farm, Uckfield,
East Sussex TN22 3DL
(0825 762010 / 0403 864200)

The Trust acquires horses, ponies and donkeys which would otherwise be extremely cruelly treated or have their lives cut short in the slaughterhouse. The Trust visits auctions, rodeos and showgrounds to save as many of these animals as they can and to report on the terrible cruelty that takes place at some of these events. The Trust also loans horses, ponies and donkeys to suitable homes where they are visited regularly, but unfortunately for various reasons, such as behavioural problems or illness, they are sometimes returned to the sanctuary. A horse, pony or donkey can be sponsored for £10. Write for further details.

County Hall Animal Welfare & Rescue Club

c/o Ann Clarke, 105 Geraldine Road, Wandsworth, London SW18 2NJ

The Rescue Club rehomes unwanted, stray and feral cats. Following two break-ins during 1996 at the sanctuary, security has to be improved. Work on this is being carried out and donations are needed for the upkeep of the place. There are approximately 100 cats and sponsorship is available as well as merchandise. The club also produces a regular newsletter.

Hounslow Animal Welfare Society

PO Box 234, Hounslow, Middlesex TW3 2QG
(General enquiries 0181 560 5443)

In 1996, a total of 459 creatures were taken into the society's care for rehoming, including cats, dogs, rabbits, chinchillas, guinea pigs, terrapins and a hamster. The society also aided another 182 animals, mostly with routine and veterinary treatment but also by the provision of transport, occasional temporary accommodation and assistance in helping people with their animals in times of need. The number of generally assisted creatures comprise 136 cats, 32 dogs, 4 field mice, 3 rabbits, 2 foxes, 2 pigeons, 2 frogs and 1 hamster. Animal food can be donated to the society which leaves money available for other necessary expenses such as medical bills. Just £2 a month will help pay for the treatment of sick or injured animals.

Hillside Animal Sanctuary

Hall Lane, Frettenham, Norwich NR12 7LT
(01603 891237)

Hillside campaigns to raise public awareness about the plight of farm animals, particularly those abused in factory farming. Hillside will do everything possible to make sure that the animals in their care live out their natural life spans unaffected by human greed or neglect. There is now another sanctuary at Bridge Farm, Downham Market, Norfolk PE38 0AU. An adoption service is available for Doris Duck, Tessa Turkey, Pollyanna Pig and Dennis Donkey amongst others.

There are numerous other animal sanctuaries in the British Isles (far too many to list) and if you would like to find out about these, write to:

Veggies, 180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HW
(0115 958 5666)

for a copy of the Animal Contacts Directory (1997/98 Edition), price £4.

Eltham Station Pigeons

Helpers are urgently needed to help save pigeons which have become trapped under netting which has been put up above the platforms and walkways at Eltham station, South London. Many young and adult pigeons have died as a result of becoming trapped. If you are able to offer any assistance please contact:

Eltham Campaign,
c/o 1, Chesterfield Court, Granville Park, London
SE13 7DU (0181 852 0347 after 8pm)

National Groups

Animal Liberation Front

(Supporters Group)

BCM 1160 London WC1N 3XX

(01203 632873)

E-Mail 100302.1616@compuserve.com

The ALF (SG) exists primarily as a prisoner support group, helping those imprisoned for ALF activities in practical and financial ways. They produce an excellent quarterly newsletter with news and letters from prisoners and articles on previous liberation raids. Membership is £2 a month or £24 per year which is all used to help prisoners and their families. A wide range of merchandise is available with a discount to any SG member.

Animal Liberation Front (Press Office)

BM 4400

London WC1N 3XX

(01954 230542)

The ALF press office is independent of the Supporters Group and, indeed, the ALF itself. Its purpose is to explain to the media the reasons why activists are prepared to break the law to help animals. Speakers are available for meetings. The Press Office is run on a shoestring budget and donations are always welcome.

Animal Action

(formerly Animal Birth Control)

30 Westwood Road, Hilsea, Portsmouth PO2 2QH

(01705 679541)

A 24 hour helpline is available for all animals and due to good relations within the area Animal Action can provide aid and advice to cover most instances be they traffic accidents, cruel owners, neglect, etc. The group also runs an animal ambulance. They are a self-supporting group and any money sent goes towards the welfare of animals.

Animal Help, Advice, Information & Rescue Service (Animal Hairs)

2 Benedict Street, Glastonbury, BA6 9EX

(01749 860350)

If you have, or know of, any animal welfare problems - from needing a free name-tag to requiring assistance with transport - they can help! If you find an animal in distress or know of one being ill-treated they can attempt to rescue it. These services are free but the group is always seeking help and fund-raisers, and needs foster homes (which will be properly vetted).

Animal Aid

The Old Chapel, Bradford Street, Tonbridge,

Kent TN9 1AW

(01732 364546)

The Society is a national pressure group which campaigns peacefully against all animal exploitation. Recent campaigns have included investigations and protests at livestock markets, the proposed mass slaughter of Ruddy Ducks and the funding of vivisection on horses and ponies by the horse racing industry. They publish an informative bi-monthly magazine, 'Outrage'.

Animal Concern

62 Old Dumbarton Road,

Glasgow,

Scotland G3 8RE

(0141 334 6014, Fax: 0141 445 6470)

Animal Concern are a Scottish-based animal rights group which incorporates the Scottish Anti-Vivisection Society. They produce a quarterly newsletter and continue to run a variety of campaigns. They are currently experiencing financial difficulties however, so any donations would be gratefully received.

Animal Aid and Advice

(0181 889 9714)

This north London-based group encourages responsible pet care. They reinforce the fact that neutering and spaying is essential to prevent unwanted litters. AAA also rehome abandoned and unwanted pets and run a fostering service.

Action Against Puppy Farming

PO Box 2, Llandysul, Dyfed, SA44 4EB

Dyfed is known for its puppy farming where puppies are bred for profit and therefore suffering, cruelty and neglect are inevitable. AAPF spreads the message to not buy puppies from pet shops as they are usually bred in appalling puppy farms.

Animal Rights Coalition (ARC)
PO Box 339, Wolverhampton WV10
(01902 711935)

ARC encourages the coming together of all local animal rights groups. They produce a monthly newsletter which contains a diary of events, current campaign news and information from local groups around the country. ARC also sends out lists detailing addresses of current animal abuse establishments supplied by Arkangel Information. They urge all local animal rights groups to get in touch.

Arkangel

BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX

Arkangel aims to provide information and support for the AR movement, to encourage unity and to provide a forum for the exchange of news and views. Please keep Arkangel up-to-date with local and national group activities, newspaper cuttings of direct action reports, etc. Subscription to the magazine is currently £8 for 4 issues (£15 outside of UK.) Donations are always gratefully received.

Anti-Bullfighting Committee

PO Box 175, Liverpool L69 8DX

This group liaises with Spanish animal rights groups to persuade holiday-makers not to attend the bullfights and asks travel companies to publish a statement in their brochures discouraging people from attending bullfights.

British Anti-Vivisection Association (BAVA)

PO Box 82, Kingswood, Bristol BS15 1YF

BAVA has useful information on medical fraud. They campaign to abolish all animal experimentation and to increase public awareness of the hazardous nature of most medication. A current campaign is to persuade the BBC to introduce balance and impartiality into its reporting of matters concerning animal 'research', health, medicine, environmental pollution, etc. Posters, booklets and petitions are available. Subscription to the group is £6 a year.

Campaign Against Leather and Fur (CALF)

BM 8889, London WC1N 3XX

Leaflets are available on the fur, leather, silk and wool trades. The group's aim is to draw people's attention to the fact that fur and leather are basically the same thing - the skin of murdered animals. CALF sends out information packs to promote veganism, and these are free of charge, but please send an SAE to help towards postage!

Cetacea Defence

PO Box 11, SEDO Office, Manchester M18 8GU

This group is principally involved in protecting the world's whales and dolphins. They have recently been involved in the Free Corky campaign. They need people to act as on-the-spot investigators. Contact them at the above address.

The Captive Animals Protection Society (CAPS)

*171 Cherry Tree Road, Blackpool,
Lancs. FY4 4PQ*

(Tel/Fax: 01253 765 072)

This organisation continues the important work of requesting local authorities not to allow circuses with animals on to council owned sites. CAPS also continues to support and give encouragement to established and newly-formed groups overseas who work under difficult circumstances and often face strong opposition.

Dartmoor Badgers Protection League

*Riverside Cottage, Poundsgate, Newton Abbot,
Devon TQ13 7NV*
(01364 631231)

DBPL was formed to prevent the unjustified slaughter of badgers in the Devon and Cornwall area. The group produces an informative newsletter.

Doctors and Lawyers for Responsible Medicine (DLRM)

104b Weston Park, London N8 9PP
(0181 340 9813, Fax: 0181 342 9878)

The objective of this organisation is the immediate and unconditional abolition of all animal experiments on scientific and medical grounds. Animal-based research cannot be extrapolated to humans because of species differences and is therefore misleading and counterproductive. Contact this important organisation for further details and membership subscriptions.

Environmental Investigation Agency (EIA)

2, Pear Tree Court, London EC1R 0DS
(0171 490 7040)

The EIA has campaigned for most endangered species since its foundation in 1984. Write for further details.

The Fox Project

The Old Chapel, Bradford Street, Tonbridge,
Kent TN9 1AW

This group has saved the lives of many foxes by humanely trapping and moving them from potential threat. They take into care orphaned foxes and set them free when they are fit and well. They also produce T-shirts, sweatshirts, leaflets and a newsletter. Write for more details.

The Fellowship of Life

43 Braichmelyn, Bethseda, Bangor, Gwynedd,
North Wales LL57 3RD

A Christian-based animal rights group who support all aspects of the movement. They produce a regular informative newsletter. They plough every penny raised back into the group's work and always welcome new members.

Greek Animal Rescue

69 Great North Way,
Hendon,
London NW4 1PT
(0181 203 1956)

This group rescues stray, injured and abandoned animals in Greece, where strays are often thought of as vermin - in some cases being disposed of by being thrown alive over cliffs. A thirty minute video is available showing some of the atrocities towards animals that occur in Greece. The video also features the sanctuaries and shelters which are provided for abused and neglected animals.

Hunt Saboteurs Association (HSA)

PO Box 2786 Brighton, BN2 2AX
(01273 622827, E-mail: hsa@gn.apc.org)

The HSA prevents hunting by direct intervention on the killing fields. They have a large network of local groups all round the country. The head office provides legal and tactical support for local groups, can provide speakers for talks, and sells a wide range of merchandise. They produce the brilliant magazine Howl four times a year.

Hedgehog Preservation Society Knowbury House, Knowbury, Ludlow, Shropshire SY8 3LQ

For a very interesting newsletter and information concerning the campaign to protect hedgehogs, please write for further details.

International Animal Welfare Alliance

PO Box 43, Dudley DY3 3DG

This group was set up in the early 1980's, primarily to campaign against animal circuses. The group now has expanded and has several different projects namely, Circuswatch - campaigning against circuses, Seas in Crisis, Justice for Kangaroos - campaigning against the exotic meat trade, and the Campaign for Reptiles - against the pet trade.

Justice for Keith Mann Campaign (JFKM)

c/o ICA, PO Box 1135, Downs View Road,
Hassocks, West Sussex
BN6 8AA

In November 1995, Keith Mann was sentenced to an outrageous 14 years in prison, which was reduced to an also outrageous 11 years on appeal. JFKM continues to campaign on Keith's behalf on issues such as parole and other matters.

Justice & Rights Associates

PO Box 83, Bracknell, Berks RG12 7QH
(01344 411468)

J & R Associates are a group dedicated to ending the abuse of ostriches, emus and rheas. They have recently recorded a song, Ostrich, as a fund-raiser, which is available on cassette. The group formed part of the campaign which successfully stopped Andrew Lloyd Webber from taking part in ostrich farming.

Jewish Vegetarian Society

855 Finchley Road, London NW11

The JVS is an international movement and membership is open to everyone. They also produce an excellent magazine packed with information.

The Marine Connection

PO Box 2404, London W2 3WG
(Tel/Fax: 0171 706 9715)

The Marine Connection campaign against dolphins and other marine mammals being kept in captivity. Their current campaign is against Anheuser Busch, manufacturers of Budweiser beer, who own several amusement parks in America housing various dolphins and killer whales. They have held several demonstrations outside the headquarters of Anheuser Busch in London.

McLibel Support Campaign

5 Caledonian Road, London N1 9DX

(0171 713 1269)

This group was set up to provide support for the two London activists who were sued for libel by McDonald's. The trial has ended and a verdict may have been reached by the time you read this. For an up-to-date report see the article elsewhere in the magazine.

National Anti-Vivisection Society

Ravenside, 261 Goldhawk Road, London W12 9PE

(0181 846 9777)

NAVS produce the magazine 'Campaigner' which is issued to members. For details of their campaigns write to the above address.

National Canine Defence League

17 Wakley Street, London EC1V 7LT
(0171 837 0006)

NCDL exist to promote the welfare of dogs. They campaign against the Dangerous Dogs Act (DDA) 1991 and give help and advice, regularly putting dog owners in touch with solicitors. NCDL is committed to a non-destruction policy. They have rescue centres where they take in registered pit bull terriers and re-home others when they are able.

National Anti-Hunt Campaign (NAHC)

PO Box 66, Stevenage, Herts. SG1 2TR

Every year in Britain tens of thousands of wild animals are chased, terrified and brutally killed in the name of sport. The NAHC is campaigning for a national ban on hunting with hounds, and an end to all bloodsports. They produce a news magazine giving details of their campaign reports and merchandise products.

NOW Against Live Exports

St. Joseph's, Souldern, Bicester, Oxon OX6 9LA

NOW are continuing with the campaign against live exports. Leading from the front, NOW have supported demonstrations wherever animals have been shipped from. NOW produce a newsletter giving campaign news from around the country.

Nurses Anti-Vivisection Movement

PO Box 32, Matlock, Derby DE4 3JY

NAVVM seeks to bring together those members of the nursing profession who are committed to the abolition of experiments on live animals conducted during medical research, including the testing of drugs and in the field of behavioural sciences. Among their stated aims are the intention to publicly denounce vivisection, ensure the subject is discussed via the official nursing colleges and boards, to ensure the subject is published in journals and the media, to publicly debate the issues involved and to co-operate with other anti-vivisection organisations.

People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA)

PO Box 3169, London NW1 2JF

(0181 785 2707)

PETA were formed in America and have had an office in the UK for several years. They claim to be the world's largest animal rights organisation and campaign against all forms of animal abuse. They produce an informative magazine, Animal Times, four times a year.

Pet Stealing Alert

PO Box 94, Cheltenham, Gloucestershire

Cats and dogs are going missing nationwide. Please contact the above address if you are suspicious of an advert offering good homes, or if an animal has disappeared in unusual circumstances.

Plan 2000

234 Summergangs Rd, Hull HU8 8LL

(01482 786855, Fax: 01482 786195)

Plan 2000 aims to see all animal experiments banned by the end of the century. A video is available of a debate between Dr Vernon Coleman and the notorious Professor Wright (or wrong in his case!). Plan 2000 also produce a newsletter.

Prevent Unwanted Pets (PUP)

28 Rushworth Ave, West Bridgford,

Nottingham NG2 7LF

(0115 969 6018)

PUP provides help towards the cost of doctoring pets for people on a low income and thereby prevents the suffering of unwanted animals.

Pisces

PO Box 90, Bristol BS99 1ND
(0117 955 9814)

E-mail: pisces@pisces.demon.co.uk

Web site: <http://www.envirolink.org/arrs/pisces/index.html>

Pisces is the national campaign against sport fishing. Current campaigns include opposing the anglers' proposal for cormorants to be taken off the protected species list. Anglers have suggested shooting cormorants so that they don't interfere with their fishing. Every year they co-ordinate National Anti-Angling Week, which coincides with the traditional start of the coarse fishing season in June. They produce a quarterly magazine and can provide speakers for talks.

Reptile Protection Trust

College Gates, 2 Deansway, Worcs. WR1 2JD
(01483 417550)

RPT is seeking to ban the trade in pet turtles and terrapins. They lobby relevant authorities internationally and engage in public education. To receive a copy of the booklet 'Reptiles: Misunderstood, Mistreated and Mass-Marketed', please send them a cheque for £2.50.

Sea Sabs

PO Box 5, Dover, Kent
CT15 4GD

The Sea Sabs are a marine action group who confront animal abusers on the water as so much cruelty happens there. They all have animal rights and/or environmental backgrounds, and many have been involved in waterborne activities for many years. So far, much of their activity has been directed against the live exports trade at Dover and the Canadian and Norwegian embassies in London. They also offer assistance in the rescue of stranded cetacea and other forms of sea life.

Shark Protection League

BM LAPL, London WC1N 3XX
(0589 173033)

The SPL was set up to expose the horrific cruelty involved in shark angling and to campaign against this 'sport'. The group produces leaflets, factsheets, petitions and a very informative newsletter.

The Shellfish Network

Springside, Forest Rd, East Horsley, Leatherhead, Surrey KT24 5AZ
(Tel/Fax 01483 282995)

Please note the new address and telephone number. This group campaigns to increase public awareness of the cruelties involved in the production of shellfish for food. They recently spearheaded the campaign to stop supermarket giants Tesco and Waitrose from selling live lobsters.

Society for Neutering Islington's Pussies (SNIP)

228 Highbury Quadrant, London N5 2TZ

The aim of SNIP is to protect and assist the stray/feral cat population of Islington. For further information you should write to the above address. If you could take in a homeless cat or kitten, please telephone Tricia: 0171 609 8182, Kate: 0181 800 7758, Janine: 0181 800 4468 or Linda: 0171 837 0766.

South West Animal Rights (SWARC)

PO Box 1760, Yeovil, Somerset BA21 5YD

SWARC has been set up to try to keep the animal and environmental groups in the South West informed about current campaigns and events and to provide a format for individuals and groups to express their views.

Tail Ends

PO Box 1550, London SW4 6HP

This is a small vegan animal rescue network which needs homes for abused and abandoned animals, mainly dogs and cats. All of the money, which is desperately needed, goes towards food, vets' bills, neutering and spaying. They have a selection of cards for sale to raise funds.

Teachers for Animal Rights

c/o Lynwood Rd, London SW17 6HP

Please write for an information pack. A donation or SAE to help cover costs would be appreciated.

Uncaged

14 Ridgeway Rd, Sheffield S12 2SS
(0114 253 0020)

Uncaged is a national group campaigning against vivisection on scientific and ethical grounds. Their main campaign is against Procter and Gamble who test their household products on animals. They organise a 'Rage Against the Cage' march against vivisection in Sheffield each June.

Vegan Prisoners Support Group

PO Box 194, Enfield, Middlesex EN1 3HD

24hr Arrest Helpline: 0181 292 8325

VPSG is an impartial body that endeavours to ensure the human rights of vegan animal rights prisoners of conscience within prison walls, and where finance and time allows, to other vegan prisoners of conscience. They offer support for day-to-day problems prisoners may encounter, giving practical assistance and moral support where needed. They are always in need of new volunteers and any practical and financial assistance.

Vegans International

c/o 11 Guinea St, Bristol BS1 6SX

This very important group unites those who want to make the world a decent place to live - where veganism is the norm! They produce an excellent magazine. Membership is a well spent £7 per year.

The Vegan Society

Donald Watson House,
7 Battle Road,
St. Leonards-on-Sea,
East Sussex TN37 7AA
(01424 427393)

Animal liberation will never be achieved until everyone becomes vegan! It is essential that as many people as possible join the Vegan Society and turn this dream into reality. With increased membership, the Vegan Society can spread the vegan message far and wide, but they need your help.

The Vegetarian Society

Parkdale, Dunham Rd, Altrincham,
Cheshire WA14 4QG
(0161 928 0793)

An important organisation for those taking the first step towards veganism. They are currently campaigning against the exotic meat trade. They produce an informative magazine and also 'Greenscene', a magazine for younger readers.

Veggies

180 Mansfield Rd, Nottingham NG1 3HU

Veggies produce the monthly 'Veggies Calendar of Events' which lists all forthcoming events of interest to animal rights campaigners. They also publish the Animals Contacts Directory, which is a comprehensive list of all local and national animal rights and animal welfare organisations in the UK, along with sanctuaries, vegan businesses and a selection of international contacts. This is financed by their catering co-operative, which travels all round the country providing delicious cheap vegan food. They also provide a selection of posters and leaflets.

VIVA!

12 Queen Square, Brighton BN1 3FD

(01273 777688 / Fax: 01273 776755)

VIVA! (Vegetarians International Voice for Animals) are a very active organisation who have recently launched a nationwide campaign to stop the sale of ostrich meat. They produce a very informative magazine called 'VIVA' and a range of literature for vegetarians and vegans. A recent 'Vegetarian Mother and Baby' guide is also available. They have a BSE helpline which is open between 10am and 7pm.

For more information about their campaigns please ring the above number.

Welsh Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals

PO Box 6 Llandysul,
Dyfed, Wales SA44 5YR
(01559 371 354)

Please write for details about this group's important work.

World Society for the Protection of Animals (WSPA)

2, Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ
(0171 793 0540)

The WSPA is involved in many issues concerning the plight of animals across the world. They run campaigns against Spanish Fiestas and the plight of bears around the world through their 'Libearty' campaign. They also provide a Holiday Horrors package designed to give information to people appalled by the animal suffering they see abroad.

Local Group Update

Belfast Hunt Saboteurs Association:

c/o 3/5 Donegall Lane, Belfast BT1 21Z

Phone (daytime): 01232 244640

Phone (evening/weekend): 0802 840116

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

AUSTRIA

Five provinces have outlawed fur farming as being contrary to the nation-wide law against cruelty to animals - and the remaining 4 provinces are expected to follow suit. Only recently there were still more than 40 fur farms active in Austria. All but 8 have been closed due to prosecutions brought by animal protection groups, and it is expected that the remaining 8 will close too, because of the provincial laws. (ARC News, January '97)

BELGIUM

A ban has been imposed on the traditional 'pastime' of frog-racing. (Ceefax, 12/2/97)

BELIZE

When the Cockscomb Basin wildlife reserve opened in 1988 there were only 20 jaguars left in the region. Now there are 60 to 80. (Ceefax, 21/8/96)

BRAZIL

Fishermen who used to live off turtle eggs are now helping to save the endangered species from extinction. Some 400 fishermen are taking part in the Brazilian Marine Turtle Project. (Ceefax, 20/9/96)

According to the WWF a long-running campaign to save the Golden Lion Tamarin monkey from extinction has been successful. The WWF believes the number of Golden Lion Tamarins has increased from 100 to 800 since 1984 and the number should carry on increasing over the next 30 years. Local farmers have been protecting the monkey which lives in Brazil's Atlantic Forest, where much of its natural habitat has been destroyed. (Ceefax, 20/12/96)

CANADA

The owner of Polar Park, a dilapidated Edmonton, Alberta, zoo, announced its closure, attributing dwindling attendance to the success of animal rights groups that deterred visitors. (Vancouver Sun, 6/9/96, 23/10/96)

CHINA

9 Asiatic black bears, which were due to be killed so their bile could be extracted for 'medicine', were instead handed over to IFAW to be placed in a sanctuary. In total, nearly 300 of the estimated 10,000 bears in bile farms are to be released in this way. (Liberate!, January '97)

Three men who sold 2 panda skins were jailed for 15 years by a southern China court. (Times, 24/1/97)

Fresh measures have been announced to protect the panda, including the setting up of 14 new preservation zones. (Ceefax, 10/2/97)

COLOMBIA

Colombia has ended the practice of electrocuting stray dogs after the WSPA and other groups promised to work with government officials to implement more humane alternatives and spay/neuter programmes. In Bogota alone, 300-500 dogs were killed this way every week. (The Protector, Winter '96-'97)

EUROPE

European Community farm ministers have agreed to ban the use of cramped veal crates by the year 2006. (Teletext, 19/12/96)

GERMANY

An increasing number of universities in Germany no longer use animals to teach students in biology, veterinary and medical school courses. Medical schools in Hanover, Marburg, and Saarbrücken, among others, have stopped using animals in physiology and biology labs, while several other schools provide the option of using non-animal alternatives. (Civil Abolitionist, Winter '96-'97)

INDIA

One of the world's rarest animals, the Asiatic Lion, is making a come-back after being close to extinction. Indian conservation officers say they have counted nearly 40 new cubs this year in the Gir Forest national park in the state of Gujarat - the lions' only remaining refuge. (Ceefax, 29/9/96)

The Ahimsa Animal Protection Society successfully filed a court case against Gemini Circus who were illegally displaying wildlife in a Mini Zoo, which had to close down following the case. (Ahimsa, December '96)

IRELAND

The Irish Council Against Bloodsports (ICABS) has successfully challenged tourist boards in both Northern and Southern Ireland over their respective promotions of bloodsports. ICABS exposed Bord Failte (The Irish Tourist Board) for promoting fox and deer-hunting holidays, which were then dropped from all Bord Failte holiday brochures. Next, ICABS turned its attention to the Northern Irish Tourist Board office in Dublin, which had a window display featuring bloodsports and advertising a game and country fair in County Antrim. The Tourist Board promptly removed the offensive display after ICABS called on it to do so. (Wildlife Guardian, Autumn '96)

ISRAEL

The Israeli army now allows soldiers to wear vegan boots instead of leather if they so wish. (Animal Times, Autumn '96)

Rabbi David Golinkin, chair of the conservative movement's law committee in Israel, has urged Jews to boycott veal and foie gras, saying that the cruel way calves and geese are treated to produce these products violates Jewish law. (Animal Times, Xmas '96)

JAPAN

According to a British animal rights activist who visits Japan regularly, there are now about 200 animal protection groups in Japan, including an anti-whaling network of societies and individuals. They campaign by extensive media disclosure about animal abuse and hold exhibitions in many public places. Animals liberated from laboratories include 7 dogs from one and 200 mice from another. (Letter to Arkangel, 17/8/96)

NAMIBIA

A young white rhino born in a German zoo is to be released into Etosha National Park. He will be kept in an enclosure in the park until he becomes acclimatized. The project is being funded by a private German company. (Ceefax, 26/9/96)

NICARAGUA

The eating of green iguanas, the main ingredient in favourite Holy Week dishes, has been banned. (Teletext, 6/2/97)

NORWAY

50,000 Norwegians have signed a European petition against animal experiments in the cosmetics industry. The petition has about 6 million signatures altogether. (Arbeiderbladet, 14/9/96)

A court has determined that an egg carton displaying a picture of happy chickens roaming around a farmyard violated Norwegian marketing law because it misrepresented the way the hens really live - in tiny cages. (AP, 16/10/96)

PHILIPPINES

The Philippines has banned the export of Crocus Clams. (Traffic Bulletin, August '96)

RUSSIA

A recent survey has found about 450 Siberian tigers. The last survey, in 1985, identified about 250. (BBC Newsround, 22/11/96)

The Yakutia region has made a deal with the WWF to protect Arctic lakes and forests in a quarter of its territory. (Teletext, 17/2/97)

Wolves, which were culled every year during the Soviet period, are now enjoying a revival and are even returning to highly-populated areas. (Teletext, 17/2/97)

SOUTH AFRICA

National Park authorities are injecting female elephants with contraceptives in a bid to control the population without culling. Appeals from pressure groups ended the culling of hundreds of elephants each year, and the park is resisting calls to restore hunting to keep numbers down. (Ceefax, 13/11/96)

SOUTH EAST ASIA

Malaysia and the Philippines have signed an agreement that will establish the world's first marine turtle reserve to extend across two territories. (Traffic Bulletin, August '96)

SOUTH KOREA

The South Korean government has announced a ban on all trade in bear and bear-related items. (Ceefax, 8/10/96)

SPAIN

According to an opinion poll in Natura magazine, 96% of those questioned are opposed to bullfighting. (Veganismo, Autumn '96)

SWEDEN

All fur shops in Umea have closed following daily direct action against them. (Underground, Winter '96)

SWITZERLAND

The International League of Doctors for the Abolition of Vivisection has reported an end to the notorious cat neurophysiology experiments conducted at the Institute of Anatomy in Lausanne. ILDAV also succeeded in closing the lab down, although some of the cats were placed in other laboratories. (LIMAV-Newsletter, Sept '96)

USA

A Florida circuit court judge has ruled that 'hot dog rodeos', where several dogs are released to attack a single, confined boar, violate the state's anti-cruelty and public nuisance laws. (PETA, 9/8/96)

In Defense of Animals won its lawsuit against a Mississippi couple who kept exotic animals in deplorable conditions. The couple were convicted of 73 counts of animal cruelty and fined about £7,500, with one of them also receiving a 10-day jail sentence. IDA coordinated the rescue and relocation of the 80 lions, tigers, bears and cougars that had suffered from lack of food and water in cramped, overcrowded cages. (IDA, 21/8/96)

Chevron has agreed to cap all its exhaust stacks in the US so preventing birds and bats from burning alive in open stacks. (Animal Times, Autumn '96)

Toymaker Mattel has told furrier Yolanda to immediately cease selling fur-bedecked Barbie dolls. Mattel said, "We would never design a fashion for the Barbie doll using real fur." (Animal Times, Autumn '96)

The National Rifle Association has laid off 30 employees, halted production of its weekly cable television show, and plans to eliminate its hunter services division as a result of financial difficulties. (AP, 23/9/96)

The US Department of Health and Human Services has announced new criteria for determining substance carcinogenicity that emphasize cell cultures over animal testing. (Reuters, 26/9/96)

Susan Paris, president of the pro-vivisection Americans for Medical Progress (AMP), has admitted that the ALF has had a significant impact against vivisection. In a letter on AMP's website, she wrote, "Because of terrorist acts by animal activists ..., crucial research projects have been delayed or scrapped. More and more of the scarce dollars available to research are spent on heightened security and higher insurance rates. Promising young scientists are rejecting careers in research. Top-notch researchers are getting out of the field. (No Compromise, October '96)

The Public Broadcasting Service killed funding for the series 'Wild America' after The Denver Post reported allegations that a film-maker had staged wildlife scenes and mistreated animals during filming. (AP, 2/10/96)

A US District Court judge has ruled that the US Department of Agriculture's regulations for the care of animals held in roadside zoos and research labs violated the federal Animal Welfare Act by not being strict enough. It is now hoped that better standards will be developed. (Animal Legal Defense Fund, 31/10/96)

Massachusetts and Colorado voters approved bans on the use of leghold and body-gripping traps. The Massachusetts measure also bans hunting with hounds. Washington voters approved a measure to ban bear baiting and the hound hunting of bears, cougars and bobcats. (HSUS, 6/11/96)

Tony Silva, an internationally known expert on exotic birds, was sentenced to nearly 7 years in prison and fined £50,000 for organizing an international parrot-smuggling ring and a related income tax violation. The sentence was one of the most severe ever imposed for bird smuggling. (US Fish and Wildlife Service, 20/11/96)

The Hegins, Pennsylvania pigeon shoot, the world's largest and most notorious live bird shoot, seems to be losing support. There was a visible decrease in spectators at last year's event and only 170 shooters entered the contest, down from the 250 that usually take part. Also the local newspaper has turned against the shoot after years of defending it. (Animals' Agenda, Nov/Dec '96)

The Clarence Jordan Mink Ranch in Olympia, Washington state, has closed following a raid by the ALF. (Underground, Winter '96)

Gillette announced that it did not use animals to test its personal care and consumer products or ingredients during the 1996 reporting period, making it the third consecutive year that no animals were used to test its cosmetics line. The company assured PETA that it is not currently using animals to test non-prescription products/ingredients and has no plans to do so. PETA has now ended its campaign against Gillette. (PETA, 10/12/96)

Pepsi, responding to concerns about its advertisements at Latin American cockfighting arenas, announced that it would no longer be involved in cockfighting and stated that any support or sponsorship of cockfighting, bullfighting or any similar sport was against its policy. (Friends of Animals, 24/12/96)

PETA, and residents of Corpus Christi, Texas, working together, stopped a secret plan by Animal Damage Control to use leghold traps to catch and kill an unlimited number of coyotes over a two-week period. Now, Corpus Christi residents have formed a wildlife protection group and, working with the mayor's office, are teaching their community how to live with coyotes. (Animal Times, Xmas '96)

After a vegetarian bus driver risked (and lost) his job by refusing to distribute hamburger coupons to passengers, the US Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ruled that Bruce's employer discriminated against him for his "strongly held moral and ethical beliefs" - putting vegetarianism on a par with religious convictions for the first time. (Animal Times, Xmas '96)

Animal activists in Alameda, California learned that ducklings were drowning in an artificial lagoon because a 12-inch vertical drop made exit impossible once mother ducks led their babies into the water. After the board of directors of the building to which the lagoon belonged refused to help, the local media were alerted and a letter-writing campaign organized. Within weeks the entire area rallied with support, the officials who had refused to help resigned, and a new board and property management company installed escape ramps for the ducklings. (Animal Times, Xmas '96)

Animal abusers face tougher punishment in Michigan under a new law that allows judges to give stiffer sentences to those convicted of a second or subsequent offence of cruelty. (Michigan Humane Society, 30/12/96)

Basketball games where players stand on the backs of donkeys were cancelled at two colleges in Duluth, Minnesota, after protests from the local Animal Liberation League. (Animal Liberation League, 10/1/97)

A recent study of psychologists' attitudes toward animal research suggests that experiments on living animals are losing support within the profession. (Animals' Agenda, Jan/Feb '97)

According to a 1996 opinion poll, 74% of Americans believe leghold traps should be outlawed. (Animals' Agenda, Jan/Feb '97)

New regulations to protect northern Right Whales mean that ships, jet-skis, swimmers and even aircraft will have to divert their course to avoid disturbing the animals, and vessels must now give them a 500 yard berth. (Teletext, 24/2/97)

VIETNAM

A man who killed a domesticated elephant for its tusks has been jailed for 20 years. (Ceefax, 28/10/96)

WORLD

Oslo Fur auctions has reported that world mink production declined 5.5% from 1995 to 1996, including a 38% reduction in Russia. World mink supply has dropped from 41.7 million pelts in 1989 to a projected 24.1 million in 1997. (Animals' Agenda, Jan/Feb '97)

Vegan Camp

9th ~ 23rd August 1997

This year's annual Vegan Camp (the 17th consecutive) is to be held in the peak district from Saturday the 9th to the 23rd of August 1997. Further details can be obtained by sending a large SAE plus 3 LOOSE stamps to:

Box VCTM, The Rainbow Centre, 180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HW.

This year's Vegan Camp is to be held at the Pindale Outdoor Centre, Pindale Lane, Hope, Sheffield S30 2RN (O.S. Grid ref 163 825). The camp is open to all vegans and anyone else who is interested

(we merely ask that you be vegan for that period). Activities taking place include sports, indoor games, walks, discussions, guided tours.... See you there!

Sabbing News

Trinity Foot Beagles

Cambridge University harehunters, the Trinity Foot Beagles, have reported the theft of five 11-month old puppies from their kennels. It is suspected to be the work of ALF activists, but no claim of responsibility has been made. A local spokesperson for the British Field Sports Society (BFSS) said: "This is a very cruel act and one that could endanger the good welfare of the pups." Hunts are well-known for shooting hounds that don't have a suitable bloodlust or that are past their prime, often feeding their corpses back to the others.

Jackie Charlton

The former manager of Ireland's football team is a keen all-round bloodsports enthusiast. He was fined £30 last year after pleading guilty to fishing without a licence and was also ordered to pay £45 costs. He was trapped with 30 others following a crackdown on licence dodgers by Environment Agency inspectors and gave the lame excuse: "It was an oversight on my part and will not happen again." Well, that's not good enough. You know what they say, Jack: There's NO excuse for animal abuse!

Wildlife Network

Former director of the League Against Cruel Sports, Jim Barrington, has set up a new organisation which won't so much try to stop hunt scum abusing animals, more like politely ask them to be a bit nicer while they do it. It's called the Wildlife Network and you can contact them at PO Box 11061, London E17 5TZ.

BFSS Attempt Take-over of RSPCA

Last year saw the pro-bloodsports BFSS attempt a 'take-over' of the RSPCA, which is totally opposed to hunting with hounds. Over 3,000 blood junkies joined the RSPCA prior to their June AGM but fortunately a minimum of 3 months has to elapse before new members can vote. At a packed meeting it was unanimously decided to reaffirm the opposition to hunting and to kick out any hunt scum that might have joined. The BFSS is contesting this decision, saying that as a charity, the RSPCA shouldn't be allowed to refuse membership to animal abusers, as this is somehow 'political'.

Sab Van Driver

In a new twist on the criminal trespass laws, a person driving a van was convicted of 'aiding and abetting criminal trespass'. Sabs from the north-west came across a party of anglers and after disrupting their 'sport', went on their way. The driver was traced through the registration number of the van and pleaded guilty to avoid a threatened criminal damage charge. He was ordered to do 120 hours community service and pay £75 court costs.

Hunt Scum Bound Over

Three supporters of the Vale of Clettwr foxhounds have been bound over to keep the peace for 12 months following an incident where sabs were surrounded in their van and the driver dragged out and held upside down. Terrierman Emyr Davies and two other supporters, John Glanmore Jones and John Geraint Owens denied violent disorder and stealing hunting horns, whips and other sabbing equipment.

Terriermen Suspended

Two terriermen with the East Sussex and Romney Marsh Foxhounds have been suspended whilst an enquiry is carried out into an incident where a live fox was released in front of hounds, contrary to official guidelines. The Master of Fox Hounds Association Code of Good Fox Hunting Practice states as one of its three golden rules: "A fox which has had to be handled by a terrierman or his assistant must be either freed or humanely destroyed immediately; under no circumstances may it be hunted." Luckily for the fox, sabs were present and managed to distract the hounds enabling the fox to make good its escape.

BFSS Launch Fighting Fund

In November 1996 the British Field Sports Society launched an appeal for a £1million fighting fund to defend bloodsports from a possible parliamentary ban. Since so many hunt scum are filthy rich you'd think they'd get this no problem, but apparently it's going slowly.

National Beagling Day

Following the demise of the heavily-sabbed Beagling Festival that used to be held yearly in Newcastle, the BFSS were promoting 'National Beagling Day' on 23rd November to promote beagling to a wider audience. The normally publicity-shy harehunts were persuaded to advertise their meets, much to the delight of sabs who took the opportunity to have a 'National Beagling Sabbing Day'.

Vine & Craven Assault

Two sabs, from West London and Basingstoke, on the Vine & Craven foxhunt were assaulted by a landowner wielding a large stick last November. Strangely, the hunt distanced themselves from the attack to the extent of packing up and apologising to the sabs.

Hound Deaths

Several hunts have been losing hounds in road accidents recently. The Ledbury Hunt lost one and the police may prosecute the hunt for allowing the animal on to the road. At the East Sussex and Romney Marsh foxhunt three hounds were killed and five injured after being hit by a bus on a main road. The Cheshire Foxhounds got some bad press when they were secretly filmed shooting two of their hounds in the head and tossing their bodies into a bin. The League Against Cruel Sports estimates that every year 10,000 hounds are killed in this way by hunts to make way for younger ones. The Chiddingfold's huntsman went even further and reportedly butchered over half his pack following a poor showing whilst out hunting when a deer was ripped apart and two pet dogs were killed. It is rumoured that he was sacked by the hunt masters following this mass slaughter.

Garth Broken Bones

The huntsman of the Garth & South Berks foxhunt based near Reading was hospitalised early in the season with a multiple fracture of the pelvis. Unfortunately sabs can't claim the credit for this one - it was due to his horse turfing him out of the saddle in a somewhat ungainly fashion.

Scotland's CJA Case Collapses

The first case for aggravated trespass to be tried in Scotland under the new Criminal Justice Act was thrown out of court last year after someone was seen during the trial passing information to prosecution witnesses who had yet to take the stand.

Cheshire Pigs Sued

The Chief Constable of the Cheshire Constabulary has had to fork out £500 in damages to a sab arrested in 1991 following a demonstration. They were detained for ten hours following a demonstration at the house of Cheshire Beagler Alan Summersgill, who had earlier killed sab Mike Hill by running him over.

Albrighton Woodland Hunt Fined

Hunt staff with the Albrighton Woodland foxhunt were fined large sums of money in November 96 at Kidderminster

Magistrates Court. The offences were in connection with disposal of cattle corpses which hunts frequently collect from farmers to feed to their hounds. The remaining waste is taken to a renderers but bits that could contain BSE-causing organisms must be kept separate, and this was not done.

Shooters Rallies Post Dunblane

Shooters have demonstrated that it isn't just animals they care about (NOT!) by organising several demos against the proposed post-Dunblane massacre firearms controls. Having been used to letting hunting with hounds shield them from flak from animal rights activists, this bunch of inadequates is now getting worried that their own sick sport might be on its last legs.

Whipper-in Guilty

A whipper-in with the New Forest Foxhounds was found guilty of careless driving in October 96 after an incident where a sab was crushed between a van and a landrover. The Southampton sab suffered a badly sprained ankle amongst other injuries. The court imposed a fine of £180 with £150 costs and seven penalty points were put on his driving licence.

Hunt Balls

An essential long-term strategy against hunting is the constant barrage of demoralising abuse hunt scum receive which can eventually lead to them stopping hunting just for a bit of peace. An excellent way of really getting them down is by targeting their hunt balls. Virtually all hunts have some sort of a 'do', usually towards the end of the hunting season. These range from bog-standard dinners for the more plebby hunts to full-scale dinner jacket and bow tie affairs for the toffs. Traditionally, these have also been attended by various 'uninvited' guests intent on spoiling their big day.

A number of hunts have already had their Balls totally ruined so far this season. The Old Surrey and Burstow foxhunt held their hunt ball in Feb 96 at the tacky "High Rocks" in Tunbridge Wells. Such was the level of anger against the wildlife killers that they had to be protected by hundreds of police. Whilst all the hunt was at the ball, however, and the police occupied there too, the huntsman's house was left totally unguarded - numerous windows and vehicles parked outside were trashed.

The Chiddingfold received similar attention at their ball at Walberton, near Arundel in Sussex, except this time police were outnumbered by sabs and failed to prevent party-goers from getting a good pounding. Headlines from some of the national press give a flavour of what went on: "Police 'looked on' as mob stoned hunt ball", "The hunter hunted: Rampaging saboteurs turn ball into a battle" and "Hunters are hunted as saboteurs go to the ball." There were no arrests.

VEGANS INTERNATIONAL

VEGAN OUTREACH

Vegan Outreach is a national campaigning network of vegan activists across America who focus on "preaching to the convertible" on a massive scale. Every month they give away several thousand copies of their pamphlet "Why Vegan?", mainly on college campuses, which allows for easy leafleting and which offers an environment with open minds. The booklet has evolved over several years into something concise, inexpensive, yet powerful.

In the past Vegan Outreach have tried traditional "in your face" slogans, celebrity endorsement and campaigns against fur and vivisection, but found they had little impact on ordinary people. Instead they've discovered that detailed, compelling information on veganism, the key to all other issues, can cut through the wall of denial. Wherever they go, the following year they return to find thriving new vegan groups.

Anyone who'd like to do the same or donate to this group, write to Vegan Outreach, 10410 Forbes Road, Pittsburgh, PA 15235, USA. Tel +1-412-247 3527
Email: mba8+@andrew.cmu.edu
<http://envirolink.org/arrs/vo/index.html>

GERMANY

VI Country Coordinator Heidrun Leisenheimer reports:

We have a very good magazine called Vegetarisch fit that is available monthly (very similar to Vegetarian Living) with reports on Veganism. Many recipes are vegan and they are very open towards the vegan idea.

A booklet about "Animal ingredients and their alternatives" has been published by Lars Thomsen from the animal rights group "Face IT". He has also published the German version of the "Manual of Animal Rights" by David Cowles-Hamar and translated the book "Why Vegan" by Kath Clements.

I cooked "Tofu-stroganoff" on TV in a youth talk show called "KARACHO". The topic was meat. A butcher was there, an organic farmer, a vegetarian, a vegan and a vegetarian cook and myself.

The organisation "Vegetarische Initiative" in Hamburg published an advertising campaign in major newspapers: "I don't eat anything that has eyes". People who helped pay for the ad were mentioned by name.

VEGETARIAN OR VEGAN?

"Necessary remarks to an unnecessary debate"

Vegetarians don't lead easy lives. Up until a short time ago they were mocked by meat eaters, and now more trouble, this time from the other side - criticism from vegans. In immediate response to that here are two propositions to begin to illustrate the problems and explosive effect of the question "Vegetarian or Vegan?"

Criticism by vegans of vegetarians in terms of ethics and fact is completely right.

Criticism by vegans of vegetarians in terms of policy and strategy is completely wrong.

As always when it comes down to emotionally charged and many-sided discussions, it is advisable at first to look at the facts in a dispassionate way:

Every commercial "use" of animals stands for "exploitation". In addition, the likes of the dairy, egg and leather industries are so comprehensively and intrinsically connected to the meat industry that every consumption of such products supports the meat industry at the same time. On the other hand, it is completely out of place to lump vegetarians and meat eaters together, as is not uncommon, and imply that "eating cheese is equivalent to eating meat". Obviously carnivores cause more damage because they promote the meat industry directly as well as indirectly.

Another fact to take into account is that becoming a vegan is not done in one step. On the contrary, it is common to turn from meat eater to vegetarian before becoming vegan. So it could be said that it is foolish to damn vegetarians if it is the first stage of veganism. Also, for vegetarianism, persuasive, frank and public advertising is sensible and necessary. The ethical and practical reasons for abstention from meat can not only be justified, but made feasible in view of lifestyle. To abstain from "everything" in one step can ask for too much and provoke fear, anger and escape.

You can guide people to vegetarianism, but the step to veganism takes place in private. Nevertheless, in general this is only under one condition: if people are motivated to dispense with the exploitation of animals for ethical reasons. This sensitivity almost always comes from an ethically-founded vegetarianism, to which, therefore, it is so important to guide people.

Condemnation of vegetarians does not make vegans, but prevents vegetarians. Condemnation of vegetarianism is of no use, but is of immense damage. That is why those who have the honest intention to abstain from meat, as well as vegans, and those in between, need to pull together and avoid conflict. This conflict would be invented by the marketing men of the meat industry and be a brilliant idea, if we did not do their job for them, and harm the animals as a consequence!

*Dr. Helmut F. Kaplan, University of Salzburg
(First published in EVU News.)*

VEGANS IN RUSSIA

Toni Vernelli of PETA Europe recounts her first hand experience of life for vegans in Russia and America.

Space Monkeys

I arrived in the Russian capital in July for a demonstration in Red Square. PETA and Greenpeace Moscow had combined to expose the Russian Space Agency's vicious monkey experiments which are funded to the tune of $33 million by NASA as part of the Bion project. We gave out leaflets in Russian explaining how 14 electrodes are inserted in rhesus monkeys' arms and legs, with wires under the skin exiting through their back and screws in their skulls to keep them still. As if this weren't unbelievable enough, wire coils are also inserted into their eyes. The survivors are then sent into space for a mere 14 days to see how they respond to weightlessness. This information is already well documented from the astronauts who've spent up to 400 days up there.

Ordinary Russians were outraged when they heard about these job-for-the-boys antics, which are just an American subsidy to the scientists to keep them in jobs while the future of the space programme is uncertain. Unlike the USA, Russia has no freedom of information act and it's up to us to provide activists with the truth and get it into the media.

Secret Shelters

Soon afterwards I was taken to one of the secret animal shelters run by the Russian Society for the Protection of Animals. Animal sanctuaries are illegal while some people are still homeless, so this one was concealed in a private house. The Russian SPA has scored a spectacular success recently by getting the first anti-cruelty laws introduced. It's now illegal to abuse an animal for money or entertainment, specifically dog and cock fighting and shooting stray cats and dogs.

There is a huge cat and dog overpopulation problem. There were packs of dogs sleeping all day outside my hotel and howling at night, while cats wandered in and out. People just leave them alone to go about their business. There is no animal control programme at all and rabies does exist. The RSPA runs a free spay-neuter service but have been told by the government to charge. Given that it costs $10,000 to build a shelter, which the government will not permit while people are homeless, the illegal shelters are inevitable. I saw the two RSPA vets use desks as operating tables, using only local anaesthetic and a sedative as no general anaesthetic was available. RSPA Vice-President Vera Maksimova and her husband produce 10,000 copies of a bi-monthly newsletter.

There is an annual cruelty-free fashion show with Russian celebrities modelling real fur coats. Real fur? The women with shelters in their houses brush the animals every day, collect and weave the fur into wool, hand dye it and make beautifully patterned fur coats from animals that are still alive. All this in a country where -20C is a warm winter's day and gortex has yet to reach the high street. Is it vegan? Who knows, but it's a step away from the trapped and farmed fur and wool coats that everyone else wears.

VEG TV

One of my hosts was Karen Saakyan, the producer of Goloka TV, a weekly ten minute vegetarian programme that goes out nationally. The first half of each episode looks at issues; why you should be a vegetarian or vegan. The second part shows how easy it is with cooking classes.

RADIO VEG

As well as Veg TV, Russians also have a one hour vegetarian programme every day on Radio Krsnaloca. This is not some amateur station - they have two million listeners in Russia, Ukraine and Bulgaria, and no material is repeated. It's based in a house in Moscow, where I was taken to discuss animal rights, veganism, and, er, God.

VEGANS IN CHECHNYA

Karen took me to the Hare Krsna temple, the only place with a totally vegetarian canteen. There we bumped into someone from an animal rights group that he used to run before he introduced me to the Food for Life volunteers just returned from three months in Chechnya. They had risked rockets and gun fire three times a day to feed thousands of people in Grozny and other cities. Most Chechens shelter all day in basements, emerging only to seek food, but the Krsnas are up there all day. Some of his co-workers had been killed this year.

HOW YOU CAN HELP

As in other countries, there are many Russian animal rights groups working independently on different projects. The Food for Life volunteers, the workers in the underground animal shelters, the people who put out daily radio and weekly TV programs, and the many activists who demonstrated against the space monkeys are an inspiration and deserve our encouragement and material support.

To support Food for Life, contact:

Paul Turner, 10310 Oaklyn Dr, Potomac, MD 20854, USA. Tel +1-301-299 4797.

The Russian SPA desperately needs donations of old veterinary equipment and drugs, and money to produce more newsletters to educate people. Equipment is better than money. When PETA sent them money the government took $300 of it. They have a US$ bank account which is the best way to donate money directly.

RSPA, 2-nd Neopalimovsky pereulok 3, 119121 Moscow, Russia. Tel 095-2471704, Fax 095-2467556.

US$ account 0010702576 of Mosbusinessbank or 608205281 with Republic National Bank of New York, USA.

What the Papers Say

A Selection of Press Cuttings from the Past Few Months

Fire bomb attack hits poultry firm

□ Action 'in support' of prisoner

By PAUL WARNER

AN ANIMAL rights activist claimed an arson attack carried out at a Brackley poultry firm was in support of a hunger striker.

A spokesman for the Animal Liberation Front (ALF) told the Banbury Guardian the actions of the individuals were in support of Barry Horne who has been on hunger strike for four weeks.

Activists used incendiary devices to set fire to seven lorries parked on the premises of Buxted Poultry Sales Distribution on the Boundary Road industrial.

Police believe the activists, who said they were not from any particular animal rights group, struck between 10pm on Saturday and 1am on Sunday.

■ FIREBOMB TARGET: Lorries at Buxted Poultry Sales Distribution on the Boundary Road industrial estate in Brackley.

A security guard who spotted smoke from one of the lorries alerted the fire brigade and police.

Emergency crews arrived to find seven out of 10 lorries on fire.

One vehicle was destroyed in the blaze while another two lorries were badly damaged. The rest were damaged by the intensity of the heat.

The ALF spokesman,

Robin Webb, who distanced the organisation from the attack, said the individuals would have carried out the attacks with Barry Horne in mind.

He said: "Barry is on hunger strike, fighting to get the government to end its support for vivisection."

"This attack is part of an on-going campaign against the meat industry and is in support for Barry and the sacrifices he is making."

Horne, aged 44, was being held on remand at Bullingdon Prison, near Bicester, accused of conspiring to cause explosions in Bristol. He has since been moved to the hospital wing of a Bristol prison as his condition worsens.

A Northamptonshire police spokesman said the damage to Buxted would run into 'thousands of pounds'. Det Insp Bob Smart said: "Although this happened in the early hours, some people may have seen something suspicious."

The activists telephoned the Press Association in London claiming responsibility for the attack.

Police refused to comment on the nature of the devices. Buxted declined to comment.

Scientists create an adult sheep

A WORLD in which scientists can create identical clones of human beings has been brought closer by genetic experiments at a British research centre.

Scientists at the Roslin Institute near Edinburgh have grown an exact copy of an adult sheep using nothing more than a single cell taken from its udder.

By side-stepping the need for both sperm and egg from different animals, the scientists have opened the way to mass-production of creatures made "to order", identical in every way to the creature from which the original cell was taken.

Ethics experts last night expressed concern over the development which, they said, benefited only science and not society.

The results of the success-

by ROBERT MATTHEWS
Science Correspondent and JACQUI THORNTON

ful cloning are to appear in this week's issue of the science journal Nature, which describes them as "far-reaching."

But while scientists will hail the research as a breakthrough, the wider implications are likely to spark a furor over the direction of genetic research.

For by succeeding in making the first clone of a mammal, the scientists have also raised the spectre of a race of "perfect" humans by a process once dismissed as nothing more than science fiction.

The possibility of creating clones has always existed, however. Every cell in a living creature contains all the instructions needed to make a replica. Now the scientists have turned that possibility into reality simply by taking a cell from the udder of one sheep, and inserting it into an unfertilised egg stripped of its own genetic code. The cell successfully turned into an embryo, which was then implanted into a surrogate mother.

Weeks later, a lamb was born — identical in every way to the "parent" and is now seven months old.

"The lamb born after nuclear transfer from a mammary gland cell is, to our knowledge, the first mammal to develop from a cell derived from an adult tissue", the team, headed by Dr Ian Wilmut, reports.

While carrying out similar experiments on humans is prohibited in Britain, concern will focus on other, less tightly regulated countries.

Dr Richard Nicholson, editor of the Bulletin of Medical Ethics, said he was surprised that the Home Office Animal Procedures Committee had sanctioned the experiment.

He said: "It was a nice technical problem, but what is its value if it comes with the enormous risk of some nut trying to clone himself?"

Dr Patrick Dixon, author of The Genetic Revolution, said the advance had "horrendous" implications.

"We will probably be able to recover the dead from cells taken from their bodies before they die. In this way parents could 'reproduce' a carbon copy of a child who tragically died. This is something that needs to be regulated and outlawed."

BANBURY GUARDIAN 30/1/97

SUNDAY TELEGRAPH 23/2/97

Live lobster plan goes off the boil

WAITROSE, which found itself in hot water over plans to sell live lobsters at some London stores, has dropped the idea.

In the wake of an Evening Standard report two weeks ago, Waitrose received a number of complaints from animal rights activists, customers and company partners.

"We took these extremely seriously," said a Waitrose spokeswoman today.

"In fact we were never thinking of selling them live. We were considering cooking and preparing them in-store so we

by NICOLE SWENGLEY
Shopping Correspondent

could offer them to customers as freshly as possible. But when we looked at the logistics of handling them it made no financial sense."

Instead, Waitrose will continue to sell pre-cooked lobster and extend its raw fish and vegetarian sushi range which has proved popular since its introduction last autumn.

Dogs stolen and lorries burned in protests

Eight beagle dogs were stolen and one man arrested during a protest by animal rights activists at a Midland kennels.

Activists also claimed responsibility for a fire, which left seven meat lorries badly damaged in Northamptonshire.

Police are examining video footage of the demonstration at the Consort Kennels at Harewood End, near Ross-on-Wye.

The Animal Liberation Front has admitted it was behind the break-in.

Police in West Mercia said yesterday they were investigating the theft of eight beagles from the kennels on Saturday, and added: "The incident occurred during an organised demonstration by animal rights activists at the premises."

"One man was detained, and is now on police bail pending further inquiries."

The ALF said the demonstration was in support of hunger striker Barry Horne, who is on the 22nd day of a fast at Bullingdon jail, Oxfordshire, in protest at government vivisection policies.

The arrested man has not been named.

Meanwhile damage running into thousands of pounds was caused in an arson attack on lorries at Buxted Fresh Quality Poultry at Brackley, Northants, on Saturday night.

The Animal Liberation Front said incendiary devices were placed beneath the vehicles.

One was destroyed. Police said the lorries were loaded with frozen poultry.

Damage to farm 'costs thousands'

By DAVID HORNE

CAT breeder Chris Brown has hit back at animal rights protesters who stormed his farm and left a trail of damage.

"They are completely misguided and misinformed," he said. "They have pretty evil minds and seem to think that people doing medical research have no respect for their animals."

Mr Brown's Minster Lovell cattery was targeted on Saturday by about 20 campaigners in sympathy with hunger strike prisoner Barry Horne.

He is on remand at Bullingdon Prison, near Bicester, on charges of trying to plant bombs in Bristol city centre.

Doors and windows were smashed as they broke into the cattery at Hillgrove Farm, stealing 14 cats. All but five were recovered by police. They arrested eight people, including two 16-year-olds, who were interviewed and released on police bail.

Mr Brown said the damage would cost thousands. It was the first break-in at his cattery since the mid 1980s - though there have been demonstrations outside. He has been a cat breeder since 1970.

OXFORD MAIL 21/1/97

Animal terrorists target butchers

ANIMAL rights activists are thought to have gone on a £10,000 wrecking spree in a car park at a butchers' ball.

Seven cars had tyres slashed or paint stripper thrown over them at the charity event in Horwich, near Bolton, Lancs.

TABLOID 28/1/97

EVENING STANDARD
27/1/97

Arson at chicken factory

Animal rights activists claimed responsibility for a fire which left seven meat lorries badly damaged.

A spokesman for the Animal Liberation Front said incendiary devices had been placed beneath lorries at Buxted Fresh Quality Poultry at Brackley, Northants, on Saturday night.

Police confirmed they were treating it as arson.

The lorries - one of which was gutted - were loaded with frozen poultry. No-one was hurt, but the damage ran into thousands of pounds.

In another incident, the ALF said it was behind Saturday's break-in at Consort kennels at Harewood, near Ross-on-Wye.

Eight beagle dogs were stolen and one man was arrested during a demonstration in support of hunger striker Barry Horne.

EXPRESS AND STAR
27/1/97

'Memorial' sabotage arrests

MORE than 80 animal rights protesters were arrested during a weekend of attacks in the Cheshire countryside to mark the anniversary of the death of hunt saboteur Michael Hill who was trying to stop a hunt six years ago. In one incident at Rockly Hall, Tattenhall, six people attacked a 21-year-old man with a whip and clubs. In another two middle-aged men shooting pigeons were "terrorised" by convoy members, who stole their shotgun cartridges. Police said later that all but four of those detained had been freed. No one was charged, but some were released pending further inquiries.

Michael Hill, aged 18, died when he fell from the back of a pickup truck taking hounds to a meet in Little Budworth, near Crewe, Cheshire.

Hunters are hunted as sabs go to the ball

By Clare Garner

A MASS attack on 150 guests attending a hunt ball in rural Sussex saw anti-foxhunting saboteurs resort to unprecedented levels of "indiscriminate" violence, police said last night.

Members of the public who were "minding their own business" were attacked by the 120 protesters, said police, as were the guests who arrived by car for the Chiddingfold, Leconfield and Cowdray Hunt's end-of-season black-tie dinner-dance at a hotel in Walberton near Arundel.

"The hunt protesters were more violent than we have known them in the past... they threw stones and other missiles, not only at the people who were attending the hunt ball but also indiscriminately," said Superintendent Phil Clarke of Sussex police, who co-ordinated the 80-plus officers brought in to contain the violence.

Outnumbered by the demonstrators, the police were unable to make on-the-spot arrests. "The saboteurs had balacavas, helmets, whips, sticks and goodness knows what else, but police let them pass," said Mr Reed.

A spokesman for West Sussex Hunt Saboteurs, who refused to give his name, said yesterday: "Last night's hunt ball was a celebration of cruelty. Our demonstration represented public opinion slapping back."

THE TIMES 16/3/97

THE POST 27/1/97

GUARDIAN 10/2/97

LONDONER'S DIARY

Sir Andrew yields to ostrich terror

IF SIR Andrew Lloyd Webber is looking drawn, he's not just troubled over how to deal with the £7.5 million writ he faces in America. The popular composer has been the victim of an appalling — obviously unconnected — campaign of threats and intimidation, about which he has bravely

Lloyd Webber and friend:
fowl play

whispered not a word in public.

A year ago, Sir Andrew announced his intention to build an ostrich farm at his grand Sydmonton Court estate in Hampshire. The proposal — widely publicised in local newspapers — immediately attracted the criticism of animal rights activists.

Some censure was thankfully peaceful. John Rowes from Ascot denounced "a barbaric trade — these creatures can't be treated like poultry". Sadly, other detractors have resorted to unlawful activity in an attempt to intimidate Lloyd Webber.

A series of deeply threatening letters and — on one occasion — a razor blade have been posted to the maestro, who will soon take his seat as a Conservative peer. Lloyd Webber has abandoned his ostrich plans but, even so, "he wanted the threats kept as quiet as possible," reveals a member of his staff. "We've been sworn to absolute secrecy."

Even Sir Andrew's public relations adviser has been kept completely in the dark. "I have been told nothing about it," reveals a troubled Nicole Levene of Lowe Bell, "but it sounds awful."

EVENING STANDARD

3/2/97

Cover-up claim over BSE statistics

GOVERNMENT officials have been accused of deliberately trying to hide vital information about "mad cow" disease from independent researchers.

One scientist involved in BSE research at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food reportedly said the secrecy was "deplorable".

The claims were made in the scientific journal Nature which attacked Government agencies for compromising openness to protect their own and "client group" interests and highlighted MAFF's

Scientists 'find mad cow link'

By Aisling Irwin and George Jones

THE FIRST experimental evidence that mad cow disease has been passed to humans is published today.

Scientists have discovered a critical similarity between the new type of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease which has infected humans and bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle.

The finding adds powerful backing to claims that BSE has crossed the species barrier between cattle and humans.

The characteristic signature sets the new strain distinctly apart from other forms of CJD — but it is almost indistinguishable from the molecular hallmark of BSE.

Scientists see this as strong supportive evidence that the new CJD variant arose from BSE in beef.

The Government said last night that the findings did not require any additional measures to protect the public or restrict the consumption of British beef.

Roger Freeman, the minister co-ordinating the Government's response to the BSE epidemic, said present measures had been introduced after the new variant of CJD was first acknowledged earlier this year.

But Labour's health spokesman, Chris Smith, called for an immediate Government statement on the implications of the research, to be published in the magazine Nature.

Prof John Collinge, who made the discovery, called for his test to be used to find out whether scrapie, a similar disease in sheep, originated from BSE in cattle. "If BSE is in sheep it should be treated with the same respect as BSE in cattle," he said.

A team of scientists led by Prof Collinge at the Imperial College School of Medicine at St Mary's, London, examined the prion protein, the infectious agent that appears to cause BSE and CJD.

They developed a test that identifies the molecular differences between the strains of prion, and found that the prion present in patients with "new variant" CJD were almost identical to the prions found in BSE cattle.

OBSERVER 23/3/97

John Lewis attacked over pheasant shoots

The John Lewis Partnership, famed for its ethical approach to business, organises pheasant shoots on one of its country estates, the Observer can reveal. The revelation has sparked a nationwide campaign by animal rights activists to boycott the company's stores, writes Danny Penman.

The partnership, which owns the Waitrose supermarket chain, has already begun legal action against protesters for alleged libel.

Niel Hansen, a National Anti-Hunt Campaign organiser, claims about 8,000 birds per year are shot on JLP's Leckford Abbas Estate in Hampshire. He said: "The John Lewis Partnership is very careful at presenting itself as an ethical caring company and we feel their customers have a right to know what's being done on this estate."

Greg Williams, a JLP spokesman, said pheasant shooting was an important part of the estate's management and they rigorously followed all codes of conduct on the rearing and shooting of game birds.

Arts action

Damien Hirst's work has again hit the headlines, but this time because it's been putting folk off their supper. Seemingly, five people were charged with affray after an incident at Damien Hirst's Quo Vadis restaurant. The two skinned cows heads in formaldehyde on permanent display have made the venue a focus for protests since it opened in January.

ARTISTS NEWSLETTER

FEB - MARCH '97

EVENING STANDARD

10/10/96

Arkangel Comment

This is the section of the magazine where you get to have your say on any issue concerning animal liberation.

We try to print everything we receive - providing it is relevant and is not intended to further some other aim - political or otherwise. The articles do not necessarily represent the views of the editors.

Please remember, an article submitted on computer disk (any format) will save us a lot of typing, but of course we welcome your thoughts in any form!

ART CRIME

By Nel Brioan

Damien Hirst, artist, Turner Prize winner and butcherer of animals. Anyone who reads the popular press or watches TV will have heard of him. He became the darling of the pop art world which the pretentious and innovative inhabit. What fewer people are aware of is that Hirst doesn't actually create the 'sculptures' which involve dead animals, he only has the idea. He hires a third party to clean up the corpses and place them in tanks of formaldehyde which then sell for staggering amounts of money. The shark which was specially caught only to end up as a preserved corpse fetched £50,000 and is currently on display at the Saatchi gallery in London. Another piece of work entitled 'Away From the Flock', which features a gutted sheep standing in a glass tank, sold to a private collector for £25,000.

A campaign against Hirst was initiated by the Animal Rights Coalition (London) in June 1994 when Hirst was displaying 'Away From the Flock' at the Serpentine gallery in London. The sheep was placed in such a way that it was 'peering out' of the window at the grass outside. Truer words were never spoken when Hirst exclaimed at the Turner Prize ceremony that he had a "warped imagination". At the Serpentine gallery, about 10 protesters surrounded the poor dead sheep, linking arms and protecting the sheep's spirit from the gaze of the curious and the morbid. Some protesters held placards whilst being harangued by disgusted onlookers, not by the sight of the poor dead sheep but by the "sheer arrogance" of taking away the right of the visitors to the gallery to see the 'sculpture'. After being told that the police had been called the demonstrators, after about 20 minutes, made their way out of the gallery. There were no arrests.

Another protest was organised when Damien Hirst exhibited the grotesque 'Mother and Child Divided', which included a cow sawn through the middle with a chainsaw and placed in two tanks of formaldehyde allowing people to walk between the two halves of the animal, and a calf placed separately. Similar tactics were used as before and this time flowers were layed on the glass coffins as a mark of respect for the beautiful and the innocent whose lives were cruelly cut short. A Times photographer and a journalist attended the protest and a piece appeared in the Times the following day. A few days later about 50 people converged on the gallery after a demonstration against live exports which had taken place nearby in Parliament Square. This time the gallery closed due to the sheer numbers of protesters that arrived.

On the 11th December 1996, the Quo Vadis restaurant opened in London's Soho. The restaurant, partly owned by Hirst, became a focus of attention not just of the media but also of animal rights campaigners. The Quo Vadis boasts not only the most expensive starter in London at £250, but also some of the most wealthy and famous clientele. What also singles out the Quo Vadis is the fact that some of Hirst's 'animal art' is displayed in an upstairs bar, namely two flayed bulls' heads in glass cases of formaldehyde.

On 23rd January about 10 people stormed into the bar at the Quo Vadis, giving out leaflets and attempting to explain their abhorrence at the use of these beautiful animals whose lives were so cruelly taken away from them only to end up as so-called 'art'. The protesters were forcibly removed by staff before the police arrived. By this time the number of demonstrators had swollen to 24 (and 2 dogs!) and after some lengthy discussion with the police, the protesters were given permission to stand directly outside the restaurant. This resulted in a two-hour protest which involved the use of a megaphone to inform passers-by and customers alike not only of the warped art of Hirst but of the restaurant's being a party to it. At several times the noise outside the Quo Vadis was overwhelming, with a siren, hooters, shouting, whistles and 2 dogs barking all at the same time. The police made no objections. The following day, the protest was given extensive coverage in all three editions of the Evening Standard and also featured in the Independent and the Guardian.

On the 30th January, after a day of action around London in support of Barry Horne's hunger strike, about 20 people made their way to the Quo Vadis for another protest. This time the police pushed people from outside the restaurant across to the other side of the street with about half of those present being made to stand behind a large van. After a fairly brief protest lasting about half an hour, the campaigners dispersed. Later that evening several people were arrested outside the Quo Vadis restaurant and charged with serious offences including affray, criminal damage and common assault. They were held at a police station overnight and were remanded at court the following morning. After several applications for bail they were eventually released from prison having spent 14 days in custody. Their condition of bail is that they must not enter the W1 area. Their case is due to come up in the near future.

As animal rights campaigners know, the world is a cruel place for all animal species. Vivisection, the meat industry, the fur trade, animals circuses, angling, dog and cock fighting, hunting, trapping; the list goes on and on. Now we have a new dimension of animal abuse to contend with - 'Art'. The likes of Damien Hirst have opened up a new avenue where animals can be exploited for personal glory and financial gain. Damien Hirst (and 'artists' like him) stand alongside all the other animal abusers that this sad world has to offer and should be treated accordingly, with contempt and disgust.

The 'Artist'- in his own words...

(The excerpt is from the British Art Show web page 'Damien Hirst Biography - Working with Animals'.
Email
britishart@illuminate.co.uk)

Marcelo Spinelli: How far do you think you can push this idea of working with live things? Do you feel quite restricted now?

Damien Hirst: No, not yet. I never know what I'm going to do next; I've never known what I'm going to do next. But I don't feel restricted so far.

MS: What are you working on now, other than the video?

DH: Peeled cows fing with no formaldehyde, but so that you don't smell the rotting. They f, without any formaldehyde; they rot and fall apart, but you don't smell anything. I've got carbon filters and ammonia filters and god knows what to take away the smell.

MS: What happens with the conservation of these pieces, or does that not really bother you?

DH: That's not really my problem. There's a way to conserve anything. Show me something that can't be sold, and I'll show you a way to sell it.

MS: There's an interview somewhere where the conservation department were telling you that the fish are going to rot eventually - it doesn't bother you that the work's not going to stay?

DH: Well no. The work will stay; you can get a new case, you can get a new fish, new formaldehyde, the whole thing's constantly replaceable. It's back to that whole fing thing of what's more important, the artist's original idea or the original work.

A Question of Violence

By Rabbix

This is an open letter in response to the Editorial of the Lancaster Bomber magazine, January 1997. In its Editorial the LB was highly critical of the Animal Liberation Front on the grounds that a) the ALF put animals before humans, and b) the ALF hasn't killed any human (a rather contradictory argument).

To the first point, animal libbers oppose all suffering in all animals including the human animal. All inflicted suffering is wrong, regardless of the species. For the LB to try and say that human suffering is any worse than non-human suffering is just speciesist rubbish and it instantly creates a hierarchy of suffering. I would like to know whether LB considers this hierarchy of suffering as a two-tier structure or are there other levels? Is the suffering of a mouse less important than the suffering of a dog? Is the suffering of a mentally-handicapped human less important than the suffering of a non-mentally handicapped human? Once people start saying that the suffering of one is less important than the suffering of another you create a hierarchy and as a Green Anarchist publication the Lancaster Bomber is meant to be against ALL hierarchy.

The second point the LB made was that it is a weakness of the ALF that they have never killed anyone. What?! The fact the ALF has managed to do so much for so many and never injure or endanger life, either non-human animal or human animal is a strength not a weakness. The deliberate creation of pain and suffering is wrong. Plain and simple. We already live in a society governed by fear. As an Animal/Earth Liberation activist I want to help create a world free from human-generated suffering. A world where all species can live life as nature intended and where the individual human is free from coercion and free from the threat of violence (both external such as assault, rape, etc., and internal, such as self-mutilation, anorexia, etc.) I don't want to help perpetuate a system that controls by fear, or help create a new system that replicates the violence of the old.

Much to my shame, three years ago I wrote an article entitled 'Ethical Violence'. Although the article did not try to encourage violence it did say that people should not be critical of Animal/Earth activists whose actions are judged to be violent. The article argued that activists in groups such as the Justice Department were obviously well-intentioned, caring, compassionate people who reasoned that their violence would negate a greater amount of violence. Therefore, as they genuinely believed that their action would have an overall effect of reducing the overall level of violence, the JD etc. should be supported. Since I wrote that article I have rethought my views on violent direct action and I am now opposed to it. Violence is not the way forward. People that use violence are misguided and must change tactics. For example, take the anti-technology terrorist the 'Unabomber' who letter-bombed a number of companies, universities and airlines. Now what good did their actions do? Properly planned and carried out non-violent sabotage actions would have made them just as notorious and allowed them the reputation to publish their manifesto if that was their aim and if it wasn't, then what was the point of their violence? What good did it do? The big multinational industries targeted by the Unabomber didn't care about the victims of the Unabomber. They were easily replaced. All that the murders achieved was the creation of grief and suffering for the family and friends of the victims.

Recently I heard that a group of Hunt Retribution Squad activists clubbed and whipped a blood-junkie scum to commemorate the death of hunt sab Mike Hill. Why? What good did that do? Has the attack stopped people from terrorising and murdering wildlife? Will it prevent more good people like Mike Hill, Tom Worby, Jill Phipps, Fernando Pereira (the Greenpeace activist murdered by the French Secret Service when they used explosives to sink the Rainbow Warrior vessel) and William Sweet (an LACS activist shot dead on 6/1/76 after an altercation with a man shooting birds) from being killed? Trashing the Cheshire Beagles property would have been a much better tribute to Mike than deliberately trying to create pain and suffering in another. After all, Mike was a sab because he wanted to stop the creation of pain and suffering.

No doubt some people will say I've gone 'fluffy' because of this open letter. Others will say I am only writing it to gain favour with the courts in my forthcoming trial. Both are wrong. I am writing this open letter because I have matured over the last three years. I've grown up and I've come to realise that violence is the problem, not the answer. Animal/Earth Liberation is about creating a world free from suffering. You win people over by sound argument. You close down the animal/earth abusers through non-violent direct action and by educating the general public. You do not win people over by physically assaulting everyone who disagrees with you. Violence in the Animal/Earth liberation movement is wrong and it must be condemned.

Or will the people who now cheer if they hear of a blood-junkie being whipped also cheer if they ever hear of a female blood-junkie being kidnapped, raped and murdered by a sexual abuse pervert? Did they cheer when the IRA shot dead the Protestant butcher in Ulster just before they declared their long ceasefire? Violence is wrong.

For Animal/Earth liberation.
Rabbix, BM Heal, London WC1N 3XX.

Developed to Death

Taken from The Silent Ark by Juliet Gellatley (director of Viva!) with Tony Wardle. Published by Thorsons

*The Silent Ark is available from Viva!, 12 Queen Square, Brighton BN1 3FD for £6.99 + 70p p&p (payable to Viva!)
Ask your library to stock this most important book!*

It's amazing how easy it is to become blasé. My first visit to Majorca many years before was a magical mystery tour of foreign lands and foods, an unintelligible language and extraordinary blue seas and golden sands. It didn't take many years before all European countries melded into an homogenous blend of similar architecture, identical advertisements and international food. It wasn't until I went to Kenya that I again relived that feeling of being abroad.

The coach from the airport to my hotel went through Mombasa and I could almost feel my jaw sagging as, dazed with the time difference, I perspired in a baking winter sun, breathed in new aromas, some of them on the demanding side, and watched the throngs of people going about their day. This was abroad, this was developing world, this was chaos. The 1930's art deco shop fronts, rusting corrugated iron roofs, jostling black and Indian traders; the car horns, moped engines, bicycle bells and the clamour of human voices selling and buying and shouting; the awareness that this was normality and I was the visitor. I was the foreigner.

This was the continent that the British, Germans, Belgians, French, Italians, Dutch and Portuguese divided up between themselves in order to share out the rich pickings. Ruler lines drawn through thousands of miles of territory, through the middle of tribal lands and customs and languages - French to the left, British to the right. A wealth of culture and history, knowledge and understanding reduced to the level of commodity suppliers.

The colonists arrived and ruled, learning almost nothing from those they subjugated; integrating hardly at all. And here I was, still part of that ruling culture. The pith helmets and white knees of the infantry regiments which enforced order might have gone but our control is still absolute. It is now done through the United Africa Company or Lohnro or Unilever or Rio Tinto Zinc and other multinational corporations but the control is absolute.

Import tariffs are part of it. For the import of cheap, cash crops into Europe we charge little in the way of duties but if the African countries try to increase the value of their exports by processing them, turning them into products, raising their value, we impose heavy duties, pricing them out of the market. We preserve the right to add that value ourselves, enabling our industries to prosper. When we have done so, we export back to the same countries the products we originally obtained from them but at inflated prices.

We have encouraged the obnoxious elites who rule so many African and other ex-colonial countries, providing them with their ethos as well as the loans with which to buy their armies and their weaponry - usually from us - as insurance against revolution by their own people. And having established them in power and saddled them with debt, it is the poor of those countries who are pushed further and further into a subsistence existence by having to pay the interest on the debts. Despite the overpowering wealth of Western countries, the net transfer of money is from the developing world to the developed world.

It is disturbing but no other economic system is on offer anywhere in the world. From Borneo to Brazil, Somalia to Sumatra profit is now the global penicillin. The philosophy which has created a world of haves and have-nots claims to be the only one which can eliminate those divisions. It is tantamount to a 17th-century quack physician prescribing bleeding for a patient dying from a haemorrhage.

And of course it is a lie. Our leaders do not care how many children die from starvation or how impoverished are their parents. The world's problems are discussed by suited men whose vocabulary is lacking such words as vision and compassion, care and concern, honesty and trust. All the great concepts which have exercised philosophers through the ages have been reduced to profit and loss. We have set the greatest store by the things of least value and nothing can be considered unless accountants can define it in terms of cash flow and profit projections. We would stand a better chance with Frank Bruno as Minister for International Salvation.

Our supposed leaders think no further than the next election and the monumental challenges of the world are reduced to a debate about tax cuts. I doubt if they ever lie on their backs at night and look at the stars to gain a sense of the enormity of it all and our role in it. Instead, they continue to exploit all those things which might provide some short-term advantage - humans, other animals, the world's resources. They destroy without knowing or caring about the long-term effects of such actions and even when they do know they continue to destroy because today is much more important than tomorrow. It is by today's boasts, today's achievements, today's profit margins that they judge one another.

They have the resources and knowledge to end hunger throughout the world but reduce their aid budget. They ensure that the gulf between rich and poor widens at home, profess concern for the growing poverty abroad and do nothing about either. There is no longer any dialogue about development issues only excuses and clichés and cynicism has been elevated to an art form.

All these thoughts were no longer abstract in my mind as the coach headed beneath the metal, elephant-tusk arch over the only dual carriageway in Mombasa, out of the city and its bustle and along the bush-fringed road towards Malindi. The hotel was on the coast some 12 miles from the city, although it was in itself a mini conurbation. Small blocks were distributed throughout the most wonderfully colourful grounds, dripping with bougainvillea, shaded by coconut palms and tended by deferential hotel staff. It was, of course, fenced off from the rest of the world and patrolled by tall, black, silent, robed security men who looked like extras from the film King Solomon's Mines.

Outside the fence was a complete mini-shanty town from which the labourers to run the hotel were drawn. They lived two families to a two-room shack with mud walls, papered with the pictures cut from old newspapers. Worldly possessions amounted to part-share of a small cardboard suitcase beneath a settle bed.

These and the people like them, we are told, are the cause of the world's great problems with their non-stop production of children. These criticisms, of course, conveniently ignore reality. A child of the United States will, in its lifetime, consume 12 times as much of the world's resources as the children born to these Kikuyu tribes people, huddled beneath the perimeter fence of a posh hotel - 12 times as much oil, copper, zinc, water, steel and, most importantly, land.

In a world of profligacy, these people's struggle for survival is made worse by tourism. The demands of new hotels, which stretch along the coast from both sides of Mombasa, distort local food prices, driving them upwards and placing some produce out of the hands of the poorest.

You could, however, feel the sense of community and sharing. They cooked communally, food almost entirely free from meat and after their evening meal they sat together, talking, laughing and listening to the BBC World service. Crying babies were passed from hand to hand until soothed and satisfied. And they talked proudly of their beautiful, colourful country beneath the flaming, scarlet blossoms of a flamboya tree. My theory of third world impoverishment had become real. Inside the hotel, Europeans smeared themselves with sun tan oil, ate European food, drank European drinks and spoke infrequently to each other.

At lunch and dinner they were carved thick slices of meat from huge roast joints or helped themselves to pieces from enormous baked fish. The clash of cultures was so extreme that it could have been Martians and Venusians on an intergalactic weekend break.

While the carvery offered, presumably still offers, an inexhaustible supply of cooked dead animals to a select few, much of the world's population is starving. It is phenomenon which stretches across Africa, Asia and South America, all continents which have been invaded and colonised. Through the eyes of a visiting European, the problem looks exactly as we have been taught - too many poor people struggling against an inhospitable land and climate and producing too many children as a form of insurance. That is only partly true.

People with a history older than our own and with a rich and vibrant culture could not have spent that entire history struggling on the margins for survival. And, of course, they didn't. Many things have played a part in the impoverishment of great tracts of the world and high amongst them is the West's addiction to meat and animal protein. The little vignette of the carvery and its overloaded plates inside the hotel and the meagre dishes of maize and rice outside, lies at the root of many of the world's seemingly most intractable problems.

When the early explorers of the 16th and 17th centuries landed in Africa they didn't find starvation they found an abundance of food. Everyone lived from the land and it was common for people to have two or three harvests preserved or stored away. The whole concept of buying and selling food did not exist.

The needs of our industrial revolution were for plentiful and cheap raw materials and for those we scoured the world. When we found them, not only did we take away raw materials but sovereignty and independence, dispossessing unsophisticated people of their land and then charging them rent for what had once been theirs by right. In order to meet the demands of their landlords, these new tenants were obliged to grow the crops which their masters valued - cotton, hemp, cocoa - and it was the masters who determined the price they would pay for these crops.

You don't even need to go as far as Africa to witness the effects of colonisation, a simple trip across the Irish Sea will do. The expropriation of land from poor farmers and its gift to the landed gentry led to the depopulation of Ireland. When blight destroyed the potato crop in the 1840s and country people could not pay their rents, they were simply evicted from their homes and the homes destroyed. One million died and two million emigrated while England imported twice as much food from Ireland as would have been needed to feed the entire population of that country.

It was the same all over the world. The colonists took a system which worked well for Africa or Asia, destroyed it and substituted a system which worked for Europe. It set indigenous people on a cycle of debt and dependency which was enforced by the elites of their own kind, who were courted and flattered and shaped in the image of the colonists. It continued until well into this century but unfortunately the raising of new flags, the writing of new and independent constitutions did not alter the situation in the former colonies. They were and still are as indebted to the West as ever.

The first section of the road from Mombasa to Malindi is flanked on either side by woods and bush land, with occasional villages surrounded by small vegetable patches and coconut palms. This homogeneity ends dramatically, giving way to mile upon mile of sisal, neatly planted rows of vegetation which are not for local use but for export. How many villages were uprooted, how many people dispossessed, how many vegetable plots ploughed under to provide the land?

This kind of scheme is frequently enforced by the World Bank or International Monetary Fund as part of "debt restructuring" or to qualify for "development loans". But it is still the West calling the tune and the rest of the world dancing to it. Part of that control is to ensure that plentiful and cheap cattle fodder is available to satisfy our enormous appetite for meat.

A set of simple statistics provides a perspective. One-fifth of the world's population lives in extreme poverty and one-third of the world's entire population of children is malnourished. Over 12 million of them die every year from poverty and hunger-related diseases. Meanwhile, one quarter of the world's fish catch is fed to animals as is one-third of the grain production. In the US and EU the figures are more startling - almost three quarters of their grain is fed to livestock. It is now necessary to scour the world in search of feed for the swelling numbers of livestock - and with the human population expected to increase by almost 20 per cent in the next decade, the makings of a world-wide food crisis are in the offing.

In Britain, in 1946, approximately two million cattle, 7.4 million sheep, 2.2 million pigs and about 40 million chickens were slaughtered. In 1994 numbers had increased to 3.2 million cattle, 19 million sheep, 15 million pigs and 676 million chickens. This growth is reflected across the whole of the developed world, each country swelling its meat production in an orgy of consumption which, in many cases, has led to animal protein being consumed at virtually every meal. There have not been corresponding increases in the human population, in fact these have been extremely small in most countries.

There is not enough grass for the huge numbers involved and the speed at which animals grow on this natural diet is too slow for the profit-hungry producers. It is substituted by grain, oil seeds, soya, fish meal and often the ground-up remains of animals, including their own kind.

In fact, 60 per cent of EU animal feeds and 90 per cent of the protein concentrates used for animal feed in Britain are obtained from the developing world - the same countries whose children are dying for want of protein - and much of the animal fodder is ideal for human consumption. It has been estimated that the amount of food required to eliminate the most extreme cases of hunger around the world is about 40 million tonnes. The amount of grain which developed countries feed to animals is some 540 million tonnes.

The answer to all these problems, we are told, is the market philosophy, whereas it is, in fact, the cause. The same grains can be used to feed either animals or humans, but they are not distributed on the basis of need or the promptings of conscience but sold to the highest bidder. The highest bidder is invariably the wealthy, the livestock owners, the possessors of capital.

Most grain is produced in the West and some of it is exported to the developing world, but the trade gap in food is all in our favour. We import 40 per cent more high-quality protein from the developing world than we export to it. Two of these foods - peanuts and soya - are imported into Europe because it is cheaper than buying animal feed which is grown here. India alone, with some of the greatest health and malnutrition problems in the world, has increased its exports of soya beans five-fold between 1974 and 1982.

This phenomenon is exacerbated by the growing inequalities in wealth. The fewer people who can afford to buy the food grown in their home countries, the greater the incentive for their own governments and landowners to grow cash crops for export instead, particularly animal fodder as the demand seems inexhaustible.

Of all the Western appetites, the United States has the most voracious. It is responsible for 75 per cent of the entire global production of soya beans. Every vegetarian and vegan knows the extraordinary value of soya beans and the huge variety of high-protein, low-fat foods which can be made from them. Despite this, the US feeds almost its entire crop to animals in the most inefficient, wasteful and damaging addiction the world has ever seen.

According to Professor Colin Spedding of the University of Reading's Agriculture Department, a Western meat-based diet uses four and a half times more land than is necessary for a vegan diet and two and a quarter more than for a vegetarian diet. An analogy commonly quoted is this: imagine an area of land the size of five football pitches (10 hectares). It will grow enough meat to feed two people; or maize to feed 10; or grain to feed 24; or soya to feed 61. There is more than enough arable land to feed the present world human population on a vegan diet, but nowhere near enough for the animal produce centred American one.

For every ten kilograms of soya protein fed to America's cattle only one kilogram is converted into meat, the remainder being excreted. Almost the entire population of Indian and China, nearly two billion people, could be fed on the protein consumed and largely wasted by the United States' beef herd.

When you take a global perspective, the problem assumes such proportions that it is hard to comprehend. So much land in the poorer, developing countries has been turned over to growing feed for livestock that it now amounts to 14.6 million hectares - and that is solely to supply the EU. If that figure leaves you cold then try visualising the amount of productive land - not the mountains or swamps or deserts or jungles but crop land - that would make up the entire area of the United Kingdom. Add to that France, some four times our size, Italy and New Zealand and you have some idea of the area. That in itself is a big enough problem but compound it with the complete lack of independence of those who produce the fodder and you have the potential to turn disaster into catastrophe.

There are worrying portents for the future. After 40 years of steady expansion, the world's grain harvest began to fall in the late 1980's. From a position where stocks amounted to 459 million tonnes, enough to feed the entire world for a hundred and one days, stocks have reduced to 240 million tonnes, only enough to last 54 days.

Part of the problem is the reduction in soil fertility after so many years of monoculture supported by saturating the soil with chemical fertilisers, pesticides and herbicides. As grain stocks reduce, all the evidence shows that cattle will take precedence over people and the downward spiral of starvation and poverty will be given another vicious twist.

Not satisfied with imposing its greed and economic system on the world, the West is now increasing the demand for animal fodder by exporting the abhorrent factory farming systems which were responsible for the explosion of meat eating in the West. Throughout the Indian sub-continent, battery hen systems and broiler houses have become widespread. Employing almost no people and consuming valuable protein, these systems don't even begin to address the needs of the population, the majority of whom can't afford to buy the eggs and meat.

But that was never the intention. Apart from satisfying its own middle classes, much of the production is exported to the Gulf States, providing even more and cheaper animal protein to countries already saturated with choice.

People are not starving because of a shortage of food - there is more than enough for everyone. The problem is one of use and distribution. The incredible inefficiency of animals in converting vegetable protein into animal protein - a ratio which can be as high as 16:1 - is obviously one of the most significant factors at work. It is encouraged by the all-pervasive concept that West is best. Quite naturally, people who are impoverished look at our affluence and think they would like some of what we have. It is our habits, practices and tastes which we encourage the rest of the world to emulate and that includes eating meat. For them it is a totally unachievable aspiration.

The present population of the world is about 5,600 billion people. On a plant food diet every single person could receive the 2,360 Kcal (calories) daily necessary to live a healthy life. In fact, even with the amount of food currently grown, another 600 million people could be fed on a vegan diet. However, if 35 per cent of those calories are supplied by animal protein, the world can support only 2,500 billion people.

In simple, brutal terms, the world can feed less than half its present population using a typical US, meat-based diet. With the population expected to grow by 90 million a year for the next forty years, the prospects are dismal.

The problem of overconsumption is a problem of the West, the problem of overpopulation is a problem of the developing world - and the two are intimately linked. The cure for overpopulation is security, sufficient food, stability, access to health care and the possibility of fulfilling aspirations, all of which remove the need for 'insurance' births. Meantime, however, exploitation continues.

I visited Thailand in 1994 and its capital city, Bangkok, is a monument to the "thrusting", "dynamic", "successful" economies of the Pacific Rim. On the other hand you could call it a concrete jungle with the worst traffic problems in the world - a monument to capitalism unhindered by the costs of little things like health services, secondary education or even fundamental welfare.

One of the most shaming and highly-visible failures of this philosophy is the seemingly endless supply of teenage prostitutes of both sexes. They are on display in the bars and clubs of Pat Pong and Sukhumvit, at the tourist resorts of Patia and Phuket and almost every newspaper and magazine is filled with not-so-discreetly worded advertisements for their services. They arrive most days at the huge and crowded Hualumpung Station, nearly all on trains from the north.

Along the road beside the station are the offices of numerous agents who sign up young people with promises of wealth and then sell them into virtual slavery in backroom factories. The sex industry recruiters are more subtle, usually having struck deals with the children's parents before they even left home.

I spoke to some of these very young people, most of them high or slurring on drugs or drink, and their stories were all individual but had common threads running through them. They were all the sons and daughters of northern rural families who had become impoverished through loss of land, failing water supplies or low-prices. Typical was the great tapioca fiasco.

Over the ten years to 1985, thousands of square kilometres of rainforest were cleared in order to grow tapioca for the EU's livestock. When beef and pork production levelled off and mountains of unused meat began to grow, the EU simply stopped buying Thai tapioca. People who had impoverished themselves to buy farming equipment to help them meet the demand suddenly found themselves without an income. I was assured that some were so poor that they would scrape slime from the bottom of ponds and eat it because of the nutrients it contained.

Meantime in Haiti, officially designated as one of the world's poorest countries, much of the best agricultural land is used for growing alfalfa. In an act of complete obscenity, multinational beef concerns fly cattle from Texas to Haiti to graze and fatten on the alfalfa before flying them back to Texas as carcasses for US hamburgers.

Poor, dispossessed Haitians have been pushed on to the mountain slopes where they try to live by farming the poorest soil on the island. The result is overgrazing, soil depletion and a drop in soil fertility leading to environmental degradation. A disaster from whatever perspective it is viewed and one which is being repeated all over the world. Increasingly, the poorest two-thirds of the planet is sliding inexorably deeper into a life of starvation and poverty in order to support the wealthiest one-third.

So our much-vaunted lifestyle based around "choice" is not choice at all, because the true effects are hidden from us and choice without information is valueless. In reality it is the right of large companies and national governments to prosper on the backs of starving and increasingly impoverished people - and to threaten the existence of the planet in the process.

Prior to its Sandinista revolution, Nicaragua was the leading Latin American supplier of beef to the US but it also had huge social problems which remained largely ignored by its right-wing dictatorship. The condition on which the US extended aid to Nicaragua had nothing to do with helping the poor but an insistence that it increased its beef supplies. As a consequence, 1000 kilometres of rainforest was destroyed annually to provide grazing for cattle.

Similarly in Costa Rica, another big supplier of beef to the US, hamburgers took precedence over the preservation of vital forest. The World Bank, which holds the ultimate levers to world finance, would only advance loans in the 1970s on condition that rainforest was cleared, again to supply beef to a section of the world which is drowning in a surfeit of the stuff.

Between 1971 and 1977, over $3.5 billion in loans and technical assistance poured into Latin America for cattle farming. This is a systematic effort by multinational corporations to control the world's industries for the benefit of developed nations at the expense of the poor. These loans have been responsible for dispossessing the powerless and catastrophic environmental damage. Countries like Mexico are hardest hit by this newest form of neocolonial exploitation, as more and more land is converted to grassland for cattle. Mexico ships much of its cattle to the USA, where it is killed for meat.

In Brazil, 23 per cent of agricultural land is currently used to grow soya beans, of which half are for export. This has resulted in less food for the native people as staple foods become increasingly expensive, as farmers switch to growing soya for the more lucrative international animal feed market.

The latest batch of statistics from the World Health Organisation, in its report entitled "Bridging the Gaps" (1995), reveals that the shaming problem of impoverishment is getting worse:

"Poverty wields its destructive influence at every stage of human life, from the moment of conception to the grave. It conspires with the most deadly and painful diseases to bring a wretched existence to all who suffer from it."

The report shows a gulf developing between rich and poor, north and south, men and women, employed and unemployed, young and old. It even identifies the same problem in the wealthy, developed nations where the poorest, most disadvantaged groups are falling further and further behind:

"The unemployed are a potent reminder of the dangers of assuming that the general prosperity of a country will trickle down to all its members."

And:

"There has been a disproportionate flow of resources from the developing to the developed world - poor countries paying money to rich ones - because of debt servicing and repayment and as a consequence of prices for raw materials that favour the latter at the expense of the former. Structural adjustment policies (that is, IMF and World Bank loan conditions) aimed at improving the economic performance of poor countries have, in many cases, made the situation worse."

What the report is describing is a global catastrophe. A similar damning report was produced in the late 1970's by the Brandt Commission, headed by the ex-German Chancellor Willie Brandt. Ex-British Prime Minister Edward Heath was also on the commission. The conclusions were utterly forthright, almost imploring. They said that unless there was a dramatic change in the attitude of the wealthy countries of the world to the poorer, and a major shift of resources, there would be famine, bloodshed and catastrophe on a scale never before seen in history.

It was ignored, just as this report will be ignored. We are witnessing the abject failure of the only economic system on offer to the entire world. Governments will not change their policies because to do so would threaten the control and resources which maintain them in power. Fortunately, we, as individuals, can do something.

Meat consumption is obviously not the only reason for world hunger but it is high up there in the major league. It is also something which we don't need permission to do something about. We can wield an immediate influence today, simply by changing our diet. By not eating meat or fish, vegetarians reduce the need to import food from poor countries, but a vegetarian diet does more than that. It throws down a challenge to the established order and breaks the cycle where people go hungry while ever-increasing numbers of appallingly-treated animals are fed huge amounts of food in a hopelessly inefficient system.

Vegetarians, and even more so vegans, use far less of the world's resources of food, land and energy and offer the only feasible example for the future. Unless there is a positive global move towards this way of living, the expanding world population will be condemned to disease and suffering on an unimaginable scale. In a desperate search for protein, all the living creatures on the globe will be hunted and killed. The wonderful diversity of living things, the last of a species, the most beautiful of creations will mean nothing more than a mouthful of food to get a family through another day. And we will wring our hands and ask how on Earth it happened.

Genetically Engineered Food...

...a Serious Health Risk

Genetically engineered foods containing genes derived from animals, fish, insects and bacteria are now starting to appear in the shops. The genetic changes now being made in our food are completely different to those resulting from traditional methods of breeding. Yet, the sale of these foods is being permitted without proper assessment of the risks and without adequately informing the public, even though many scientists say that genetically modified foods could cause serious damage to health and the environment.

What is genetic engineering?

Genes are the blueprints for every part of an organism. Genetic engineering is the process of modifying this information, particularly artificially transferring the genes specific to one type of organism into another.

Why do it?

Scientists want to transfer desirable qualities from one organism to another, for example, to make a crop resistant to a herbicide or to enhance food value.

Is it necessary?

At first sight it may seem appealing. However, closer examination of the issues gives a different picture. We should by now be alert to the dangers of interfering with nature. We already have the ability to feed the world's population economically without the risks posed by genetic engineering. Commercial and political motives are taking precedence with little regard to the possible dangers.

What are the dangers?

Those identified so far include:

- new toxins and allergens in foods.
- other damaging effects on health caused by unnatural foods.
- Increased use of chemicals on crops resulting in increased contamination of our water supply and food.
- the creation of herbicide-resistant weeds.
- the spread of diseases across species barriers.
- loss of bio-diversity in crops.
- the disturbance of ecological balance.
- the artificially induced characteristics and inevitable imperfections will be passed on to all subsequent generations and to other related and unrelated organisms.

They can never be recalled or contained. The consequences of this are incalculable.

What is the position now?

Genetically modified foods available, or about to appear, in UK shops include tomatoes, yeast, corn and soya. Genetically modified organisms are also used to produce cheeses and rape seed oil. But this is just the beginning. In a few years it may be almost impossible to find natural food.

The food industry and government appear to be complacent. They assume that these new foods are not substantially different to existing foods and pose no special risks, but this assumption is wrong and dangerous. The radical changes being made by biotechnologists could not happen in nature and have already caused toxic side-effects. Currently a minimal degree of safety testing is required for some foods, and none at all for others. In no case is testing required on the long term impact on health.

Most genetically modified foods will not be labelled, since labelling is required only for some unprocessed foods. Under present regulations manufacturers are already introducing genetically modified ingredients into many processed foods, without informing consumers. The government is ignoring the wishes of the public. A survey by the Consumers Association found that 93% of consumers want clear labelling of all such foods.

Despite their advantages many technologies produce disastrous side effects

There is now a serious debate on the acceptability of some of these unpredicted side-effects, such as nuclear pollution, global warming, and the toxic effects of pesticides and herbicides. Medicines are often withdrawn because the side-effects turn out to be too poisonous. In every case, it takes time for the effects to come to light and be evaluated before action can be taken.

Genetic engineering poses the greatest danger of any technology yet introduced. Safety testing will never be adequate, because organisms once introduced can never be recalled from the environment and their effects will spread without limit. If action is not taken now, virtually everyone in the world will soon be eating genetically engineered foods and will be at risk.

Dangers of genetically engineered foods. The scientific facts demonstrating the need for an immediate worldwide ban

Given the huge complexity of genetic coding, even in very simple organisms such as bacteria, no one can possibly predict the effects of introducing new genes into any organism or plant. This is because: the transposed gene may act differently when working within its new host. The original genetic intelligence of the host will be disrupted. The new combination of the host genes and the transposed gene will have unpredictable effects; and therefore there is no way of knowing the overall, long-term effect of these foods on the health of those who eat them. The following are some of the facts:

Unnatural gene transfers from one species to another are dangerous

Biotechnology companies erroneously claim that their manipulations are similar to natural genetic changes or traditional breeding techniques. However, the cross-species transfers being made, such as between fish and tomatoes, or between other unrelated species, would not happen in nature and may create new toxins, diseases, and weaknesses. In this experiment the public are at risk from unknown effects.

Biotechnology companies also claim their methods are precise and sophisticated. In fact there is a random element in gene insertion methods. Genetic research shows that many weaknesses in plants, animals and humans have their origin in tiny imperfections in the genetic code. Therefore, side effects and accidents are inevitable, and scientists have assessed the risks to be unlimited.

Unpredictable health damaging effects

When genetic engineers insert a new gene into any organism there is a 'position effect' which entails an unpredictable pattern of gene expression and genetic function. The protein product of the transposed gene may carry out unexpected reactions and produce potentially toxic products. There is also serious concern about the dangers of using genetically engineered viruses as delivery vehicles (vectors) in the generation of transgenic plants and animals. This could de-stabilise the genome and also lead to horizontal gene transfers to other species, including mammals. This could cause dangerous new diseases, resistance to antibiotics and severe immune reactions.

Genetically engineered products carry more risks than traditional foods

The process of genetic engineering can thus introduce dangerous new allergens and fatal toxins into foods that were previously naturally safe. Already, one genetically engineered soya bean was found to cause severe allergic reactions, and bacteria genetically engineered to produce large amounts of the food supplement, tryptophan, have produced toxic contaminants that killed 37 people and permanently disabled 1,500 more in the USA.

Increased pollution of food and water supply

It is estimated that about 57% of research by biotechnology companies is on the development of herbicide-resistant plants and that this will lead to a three-fold increase in the use of herbicides, resulting in even higher concentrations of chemicals in food and in the water run off from the land.

Health-damaging effects caused by genetic engineering will continue forever

Unlike chemical contamination, gene pollution can never be cleaned up; effects of genetic mistakes will be passed on to all future generations of a species.

Inadequate government regulation

Biotech companies claim that government regulatory bodies will protect consumers. However DDT, Thalidomide, L-Tryptophan, etc. were approved by British and US regulators with tragic results. Recently, US tests found that 80% of supermarket milk contained traces of either medicines, illegal antibiotics used on farms, or hormones, including genetically engineered Bovine Growth Hormone. The facts show that regulators are not protecting the public adequately.

Ethical concerns

Transferring animal genes into plants raises important ethical issues for vegans, vegetarians and religious groups. It may also involve animal experiments which are unacceptable to many people.

Genetic transfer across species and competition from new species damaging the environment

When new genetic information is introduced into plants, bacteria, insects or other animals, it can easily cross into related organisms, through processes such as cross-pollination. This process has already created 'super weeds'. Existing species can also be displaced from the eco-system with disastrous effects, as happened with genetically modified Klebsiella soil bacteria.

Crops are now being engineered to produce their own pesticides. This will promote the more rapid appearance of resistant insects and lead to excessive destruction of useful insects and soil organisms thus seriously perturbing the eco-system. In addition, the pesticide produced by the plant may be harmful to the health of consumers.

Inadequate safety at research facilities

UK research institutions have little protection to ensure that experimental genetically engineered organisms are not escaping. For example, seeds can be blown by the wind over low fences or carried great distances by birds very quickly. It is not possible for anyone, any farm, or any country to isolate itself from the potentially disastrous effects of genetic manipulation.

Global threat to humanity's food supply

The introduction of genetically engineered foods amounts to a dangerous global experiment by giant transnational biotechnology companies who control large segments of the world's food supply, including food patents, seed companies and other aspects of the food chain. Short term commercial gain is being placed before the health and safety of the whole population. This could result in many unanticipated, irreversible problems leading to food shortages and large-scale health threats. There is no logical scientific justification to change suddenly almost all foods through irreversible genetic engineering. The genetic structure of plants has been nourishing people and animals for millennia. Tampering with the genetic code of food is reckless and poses a serious threat to life. It could easily upset the delicate balance between our physiology and the foods we eat. There is already ample scientific justification for an immediate ban on the release of all genetically modified organisms in order to safeguard our health.

We must act before it is too late!

What is needed:

It is quite clear even from existing research that a ban on genetically engineered foods, and a moratorium on the release of all genetically modified organisms is essential to protect health.

In the meantime, labelling should be required for all foods which contain any modified ingredient, even if it is only one, or where genetically modified organisms have been used in the production of the food.

Full disclosure labelling will allow consumers to choose what they eat. It will also help scientists trace the source of health problems arising from these foods.

What you can do

Write to your MP and MEP, supermarkets, the press and consumer groups, expressing your concern and enclosing a copy of this information. Make copies of this information or send off for leaflets and distribute freely.

Further information:

To support the 'Campaign to Ban Genetically Engineered Food' and/or for leaflets containing the above information contact:

The Natural Law Party, Mentmore, Buckinghamshire
LU7 0QH (Fax 01296 662486) or: Beacon House, Willow Walk, Skelmersdale, Lancs. WN8 6UR (Fax 01695 50306)

Further reading: 'Genetic Engineering: The Hazards, Vedic Engineering: the Solutions', by John Fagan PhD - an award winning geneticist who returned his government grants and began new research in Maharishi's Vedic Science.
To order, telephone 01695 51015.

Donations...

We are extremely grateful to the following people who have made a donation of £4 or more to help us produce and distribute this magazine: JP Alessandra, Marie Anderson, S Barton, Bob Brierley, Peter Beck, SP Bax, Madeline Carrit, S & BA Clifton, Malcolm Door, Raymond Dobson, AW Duffell, Edward Edwards, Ethical Wares, Gabrielle Eyni, PR Fenn, Digby Gordon, Jane Hearne, Lee Hall, London Animal Action, Christina Maier, Magor, Jill Russell, S Smith, & Uncaged.

Extra thanks go to: Bob Brierley, S & BA Clifton, AW Duffell, Raymond Dobson, PR Fenn & Christina Maier for their invaluable help, and to Anne Bartlett, M Cooper, Sandra Francis, Monica Harvey, A Hogan, C Humphries, Michael Maas, Mary McShane, Pat Murgatroyd, Mark Organ, Anne Page, Montserrat Thompson, Diane Westwood, Dave Wetton and especially to P & J Zehler, who are all donating on a monthly basis by standing order.

ENDING VIVISECTION - we won't give up!

by Uncaged Campaigns

Uncaged Campaigns is one of the most active, dynamic and radical anti-vivisection pressure groups in the UK. In the face of initial political apathy and media disinterest Uncaged Campaigns have worked incredibly hard to keep anti-vivisection in the public consciousness. Such efforts account for the renewed interest in and opposition to animal experiments. And Uncaged Campaigns will not cease campaigning until vivisection is dead and buried.

Uncaged Campaigns' outlook is positive and democratic. We are committed to achieving the abolition of vivisection through working with a wide range of sympathetic individuals and organisations. We have a holistic view of campaigning and we attack vivisection from many different angles and on all levels, from having vegan ethics both as individuals and as an organisation, to using scientific facts to OUT the flawed arguments of the pro-vivisectionists. But most importantly, Uncaged Campaigns believes that social change has to be democratic in order to be successful, long-lasting and morally compelling. Therefore Uncaged Campaigns puts a huge effort into campaigning directly in the public arena. At the same time we are developing the skills needed to attract the media to our cause and to affect change on a political level.

Our literature is well researched and accessible to the general public. Campaign resources are available to all - and many local animal rights groups are participating in our campaigns all over the UK as well as using our information leaflets to address any questions the general public may have about vivisection. (please contact us if you would like a copy of the resources catalogue)

PIGS MIGHT FLY

Our campaign against the use of pigs as spare parts for humans is one we can win; the tide is turning in our favour as the dangers and cruelty of xenotransplantation become widely known. It is vital to disseminate information and give people the facts.

GLOBAL BOYCOTT OF P&G

Our boycott of Proctor & Gamble has grown into a worldwide campaign, with groups all around the world taking part. The pressure on P&G to stop experimenting on animals is growing. P&G have been quoted as saying "We're very concerned about the boycott and would like it to go away." Deborah White, P&G public dept.

YOUR VOTE IS OUR VOICE

Don't underestimate how much people care about animals. Thousands of people sign petitions against all areas of animal abuse; thousands are motivated to attend marches and rallies. Many people are prepared to change shopping and eating habits in order to be cruelty-free (an estimated 2,000 people become vegetarian each week in the UK). We are determined to turn this concern for animals into effective political action.

ANIMALS UNCAGED

In response to the wholesale slaughter of millions of animals in laboratories as 'surplus to requirements', Uncaged Campaigns with Sir Andrew Bowden MP have tabled an all party Early Day Motion. The EDM (no.101) has received considerable support from many MPs and is calling for an amendment to the current law, which could save an estimated 5,000,000 animals every year.

RAGE AGAINST THE CAGE

Every year we organise a national march against vivisection; each year it has grown in size and has developed into an exciting carnival style event with music, food, fun and a really positive atmosphere.

We are working very hard to achieve our goal of ending vivisection. In our relatively brief history we have reached many thousands of people with our positive campaign against animal experiments, giving information and encouragement about a cruelty-free way forward.

For more information:

14 Ridgeway Road, Sheffield, S12 2SS.

Tel/Fax (0114) 253 0020

E-mail: uncaged.anti-viv@dial.pipex.com

Website: www.uncaged.co.uk

ethical
WARES

cruelty-free footwear and clothing

a stunning range of outdoor and leisureware combining the finest synthetic materials with quality craftsmanship and design. Suitable for vegans, vegetarians and all those who care about the environment

For a FREE full colour catalogue call or fax 01929 480360 or write to:
Ethical Wares, Dept EL
17 Townsend Road, Corfe Castle,
Wareham, Dorset BH20 5ET

Justice for Keith Mann!

It is just over two years since Keith Mann was jailed at the Old Bailey. The outrageous sentence of 14 years, meted out to him on December 19th 1994 for actions of animal liberation, was political. It had more to do with revenge and spite than any sort of justice.

Keith's original judge was hunting, shooting, sheep farming Judge Alliot, who had said in October 1994: "The Animal Liberation Front needs a good deal of attention. That is my next major trial." Alliot was eventually replaced, but a 14 year sentence (bearing in mind that Keith pleaded guilty) confirmed many people's suspicions that Judge Alliot still had a firm hold of the strings. If they thought such a sentence would be a deterrent to Keith or others, they have not learnt from history. People like Keith, who carry out actions out of compassion for others, do not stop caring just because someone tells them to. In fact, it is generally human nature for them to do the opposite of what they are told, and with individuals like Keith, who seem to have an innate responsibility to help those unable to help themselves, it just strengthens their resolve to resist and fight even harder.

The Justice For Keith Mann Campaign (JFKMC) happened almost simultaneously with news of Keith's incarceration and has gone from strength to strength. Its first victory was at the Appeal Courts where, on November 13th 1995, Keith's sentence was reduced to 11 years after an extensive campaign of what can only be called 'People Power'. The success was not just in the reduction, but in the act itself. It signified a tacit acknowledgement by the judiciary that it had acted harshly towards Keith, and by accepting Keith's undertaking not to pursue the cause of Animal Liberation illegally in future, deemed him no longer a danger to the public. This admission by the authorities augured well for the Campaign's next target - the removal of Keith's Category 'A' status.

Category 'A' - 'terrorist' - status is reserved for prisoners said to be the most dangerous in the country. They are kept in maximum security prisons, such as HMP Full Sutton and subjected to harsh security measures. Keith was made a Category 'A' prisoner before sentencing when he was on remand, despite the fact that he had not harmed anyone, and not even tried or intended to harm anyone. There was not much time between Keith's Appeal Hearing and his category status review but everything went according to plan and the aim was achieved. Keith was decategorised from 'A' to 'B' on November 30th 1995.

The Campaign's positive progression was inevitably offset by the prison's petty-minded bureaucracy and nebulous policies, which were sometimes interpreted differently by different staff and applied on an ad-hoc basis depending on what type of mood they were in. This made life very difficult for Keith when trying to obtain proper vegan toiletries, food, clothes, etc. Keith also had, and continues to have, problems with his property and mail, and has been discriminated against, subjected to degrading treatment, and assaulted on a number of occasions.

In April 1996, Keith and JFKMC learnt that London Weekend Television Productions (LWTP), under the auspices of the police, had made a documentary entitled 'The Bomb Maker', designed to discredit Keith and the animal liberation movement. It set out on the pretext of promoting the forensic expertise of the police which, according to them and them only, brought about Keith's capture and conviction. In reality, it was tantamount to character assassination in cold blood. LWTP refused to consult with Keith, his solicitor, his mother Doreen, or the Campaign, which could have gone some way in ensuring truth, fairness and impartiality. JFKMC orchestrated an unrelenting opposition to the showing of this programme, which delayed the scheduled broadcast, followed by a Court Injunction to stop it being shown altogether. The injunction failed. Despite having seen numerous write ups of the programme in newspapers and TV listings, and then seeing the trailers for it, the judge stated that we could not deem the programme prejudicial against Keith if we had not seen it. The fact that LWT would not allow us to see it did not enter into the judge's equation. Keith is now suing LWTP.

In April 1996 again, Keith found out, purely by chance, that when he was decategorised to category 'B', five months earlier he should have been informed of a condition that was attached. The condition was that Keith was to remain at Full Sutton (or another dispersal prison) for 24 months instead of the usual 12 months. This was a major problem as it meant that there was no way of keeping Keith moving through the system. It also meant that he would not be eligible for his first parole hearing in February 1998. JFKMC, knowing that this condition had to be removed, pursued the issue relentlessly taking advantage of every little game and success along the way. It paid off. In November 1996, half way through the 24 months, the condition was dropped. This now allows Keith (in theory at least) to be downgraded to category 'C', to move to a lower security prison, and to be considered for release on parole early next year.

Another chapter arose in the spring of 1996 when the campaign suddenly discovered that Keith's father was terminally ill. With a letter from Mr Mann's doctor, Keith applied for Temporary Release on Compassionate Licence so that he could have an escorted (or un-escorted) visit to see his dad. However this is one issue that has not seen progress. Ten months of persistent campaigning, further letters from Mr Mann's doctor and the involvement and support of Keith's MP, amongst other things, have been to no avail. The prison and Prison Service have refused to allow Keith a last visit with his father, saying they would need to know when his demise will take place, with the caveat that should his condition suddenly worsen to the extent that Mr Mann is rushed to hospital, they will review their decision. They are all heart.

Keith is currently in the process of applying for category 'C' status, and is also waiting to see if HMP Full Sutton are going to implement the Prison Ombudsman's recommendation that Keith be provided with free vegan toiletries (instead of having to pay for them out of his weekly spending allowance). JFKMC is applying pressure in support of Keith's application for 'C' status and will then be preparing for the next, and hopefully final, stage of the Campaign - to get Keith released on Parole in February 1998.

JFKMC is run by volunteers and survives financially via donations. There is no membership or subscription, simply a mailing list. If you would like to receive the latest information with a view to getting involved in the next phase of the Campaign, tentatively scheduled to begin in August 1997, send an A5 SAE to:

JFKMC, c/o ICA, PO Box 1135, Downs View Road, Hassocks, West Sussex BN6 8AA.

If you would like to write to Keith his current address is:

Keith Mann EE3588, HMP Full Sutton, Near Stamford Bridge, York YO4 1PS.

Please bear in mind that Keith's mail is opened and read by prison staff.

The Justice For Keith Mann Campaign is one example of how an unyielding, persistent and well run campaign can have the desired effect (often in a very short time) and that 'People Power', in its varying forms, is the establishment's most feared weapon.

Boycott Proctor & Gamble

Tens of thousands of animals die at the hands of Proctor & Gamble around the world every year. Vivisection carried out on fully conscious animals has included force feeding dogs with toxic chemicals, burning rabbits' eyes with chemicals, and skin irritancy tests on rabbits and guinea pigs (chemicals are put onto shaved, raw skin).

Research reveals that in the UK, animal testing on behalf of Proctor & Gamble is conducted in contracted laboratories - eg. Hazelton laboratories in Harrogate. Proctor & Gamble uses profits made from the sales of their products to pay for animal abuse. Proctor & Gamble UK is a member of BIBRA (British Industrial Biological Research Association), an animal research laboratory which carries out contract testing for many different companies.

Proctor & Gamble is a profit seeking multinational company which relies on your money to prosper. Public pressure and boycotting products can force such companies to stop animal testing.

Boycotts have worked in the past. Make Proctor & Gamble stop now! Boycott their products today.

When challenged about their animal testing policies, Proctor & Gamble claim that they are "committed to eliminating the use of animals for safety testing as soon as good science permits." What this really means is that Proctor & Gamble are insisting on carrying out animal experiments.

Proctor & Gamble state that they use animals in experiments to ensure product safety. But sound research tells us animal experiments are misleading. Reactions to different chemicals and substances can vary widely from one species to another; hence these tests can do nothing to predict the possible dangerous side effects on humans.

From decades of use we know which chemicals and products are for example toxic when consumed by humans or are damaging to human skin. Many companies produce similar products to Proctor & Gamble without resorting to animal experiments. In time, given sufficient public pressure, Proctor & Gamble will have no choice but to join them.

Proctor & Gamble products to boycott:

Always, Ariel, Attends, Bold, Boss, Bounce, Camay, Clearasil, Crest, Daz, Delph, Denclen, Dreft, Fairy Liquid, Fairy Snow, Flash, Head & Shoulders, Insignia, Lenor, Mandate, Max Factor, Milton, Nappisan, Oil of Ulay, Old Spice, Pampers, Pantene-pro-V, Rapport, Sinex, Tide, Vapourub, Vidal Sassoon, Vicks, Vortex, Zest.

For further information on companies which fund animal experiments write to:

Uncaged Campaigns, 14 Ridgeway Road, Sheffield S12 2SS
enclosing £1.50 to cover costs.

SUPPORT THE GANDALF DEFENDANTS

PO BOX 66, STEVENAGE SG1 2TR

Last 16th January 1996, four editors of Green Anarchist, the ALF Supporters Group Newsletter's editor and Robin Webb, the Animal Liberation Front's press officer were arrested by Special Branch, Britain's secret police, for conspiracy to incite criminal damage. The Gandalf ('GA-aND-ALF') Six's only 'crime' was writing the uncensored truth about animal liberation or knowing others that did. Their punishment could be up to ten years imprisonment.

According to StateWatch, "Britain has the most repressive conspiracy laws in Europe". For the Thought Police to prove their case, no damage need be done nor anyone incited to it; the 'conspirators' need know no-one doing damage and may know each other only tenuously (in this case, having attended the same rally - along with thousands of others); it's all down to their intent, which in practice means the defendants have to prove a negative in court, that they didn't intend anything. Conspiracy / incitement is a 'catch all' law, it's heavy penalties making it a useful tool in suppressing direct action after the Criminal Justice Act's failure.

The Gandalf prosecution is not just about animal rights. It's about fundamental freedoms--your freedom of speech, association and conscience--being taken away. The defendants are in the front line for you - defending them is only defending yourself, stopping a potent new instrument of State repression before it reaches you.

WHAT YOU CAN DO

The State won't use the conspiracy / incitement laws in future if they lose more than they gain now. The cops want to silence their critics and make the movement smaller and less effective. Do not be intimidated! Use this case to expose the Thought Police and to make the movement larger, louder and angrier.

- ◆ Affiliate your group to the defence campaign.
- ◆ Donate to the defence campaign and buy its mail order goods.
- ◆ Invite defence campaign speakers in your town or at your event.
- ◆ Organise your own defence campaign group, holding local talks and demonstrations in support of the defendants and selling mail order goods.
- ◆ Support national demonstrations, such as at the start of the Gandalf defendants' trial at Portsmouth Crown Court, 26th August 1997.
- ◆ Take exactly the action the defendants are accused of inciting if they're convicted -- that way the jury will have incited you, not this!

WE WISH TO AFFILIATE TO THE GANDALF DEFENDANTS CAMPAIGN

Please add our name to all future campaign material and to your mailing list. We enclose £10 affiliation fee.

GROUP:

ADDRESS:

.....

GANDALF DEFENDANTS CAMPAIGN MAIL ORDER

	COST / ITEM	NO. OF ITEMS	TOTAL COST
THE GANDALF VIDEO: An important inspirational tool to help you support the defendants and to stop State repression in its tracks (VHS, 15 minutes)	£10
WE CONTROL THE ZIG-ZAG CASSETTE: squat rock compilation featuring Poison Girls, Flux, Annie Anxiety, Apostles, Conflict, the Mob, Crass etc	£2.50
DON'T GET CAUGHT CASSETTE: 1984 Crass benefit gig for striking Welsh miners at Aberdare. Steve Ignorant solo.	£2.50
BURN THE CAGES & OTHER POEMS: Davey Garland's 42-page long collection of poems for animal liberation and eco-resistance. Cover collages by Freddie Baer.	£1.50
SUPPORT THE GANDALF DEFENDANTS BADGE (1" round, black on green)	30p
LEAFLETS (per 100)	£3
		TOTAL

Cash or blank postal orders preferred. Cheques payable to 'Gandalf Defendants Campaign'. Please add 10% postage and packing or 30% if overseas. Remind us if no order has been recieved within two months. We reserve the right to substitute items of equivalent value.

WHEN COMPLETED, PLEASE RETURN TO:

GANDALF DEFENDANTS CAMPAIGN,
PO BOX 66, STEVENAGE SG1 2TR

ANIMAL LIBERATION - THE PRESS OFFICE . . .

"Animal lib loonies", "terrorists", "people-haters"... all these terms and worse have been used by power-hungry, profit-motivated animal abusers and the mass media to describe Animal Liberation Front (ALF) activists and similarly compassionate campaigners.

The truth could not be more different. People from all walks of life and social backgrounds, of all ages, of all political persuasions and of none. Such are those who make up the ALF and like-minded but more radical groups.

Driven by an abhorrence of all abuse and cruelty, the activists break unjust laws and risk their freedom in pursuit of a rightful cause - animal liberation - in the same way that crusaders in past struggles fought for the abolition of slavery and emancipation of women. Who now would argue that extra-parliamentary actions in support of such worthy causes were wrong?

The Press Office fulfils a vital role in the animal liberation movement by highlighting the horror and extent of animal abuse to television, radio and newspaperswhen the censor permits! Providing a news agency service to ALF activists it has been used also by other groups including the Animal Rights Militia, Hunt Retribution Squad, Justice Department and Poultry Liberation Organisation. Advice and help in dealing with the media is also given to sympathetic organisations and local animal rights groups. Speakers are available for public meetings, rallies and debates to promote the ethics of animal liberation and dispel the lies and distortions that have been aimed at the ultimate freedom movement.

Since its reconstitution in 1991, as an independent unit to safeguard the ALF Supporters Group, the success of the Press Office may be judged by the State's efforts to silence the truth. A campaign of harassment, Draconian travel restrictions, gagging orders, imprisonment without trial (Police quote: "Bail conditions have failed so we're going to lock you up to shut you up" ... just four days after the vile trucks were first turned back at Shoreham), seemingly endless house raids ... all have failed. The truth of animal liberation will not be silenced.

Lawful campaigning during the past 180 years has unhappily seen an increase in animal abuse that the early reformers could not have imagined in their worst nightmares. Until unjust laws are changed caring people will disregard them in the search for justice. The Press Office exists to explain why that is so.

Animal liberation activities are increasing rapidly; Barry Horne's courageous hunger strike (media publicity willingly handled by this press office) inspired compassionate commandos throughout the world. Cats, dogs, rabbits and many other individuals are being liberated across the country together with an outpouring of anger and frustration against any property associated with legalised murder and torture.

If you are outraged at animal abuse, believe the laws to protect our brothers and sisters of other species to be woefully inadequate and support those who risk their freedom to alleviate - and eventually end - such abuse and cruelty then please help the Press Office continue its work by sending a donation or completing the standing order form over leaf. Thank you so much.

IF NOT YOU - WHO? ANIMAL LIBERATION IF NOT NOW - WHEN?

Please accept my donation of £5 ☐ £10 ☐ £15 ☐ £25 ☐ Other £ and keep up the struggle for animal liberation.

Please make cheques/Postal Orders payable to 'ALF Press Office' and crossed 'A/C payee only'.

Your Name:

Address:

Post Code:

(Please complete for acknowledgement of donations or standing orders)

OR... you can donate regularly by Standing Order

Your support can be even more effective by making a monthly gift to our work of highlighting and fighting all animal abuse. With your regular help we can do so much more. Just complete and return the Standing Order Form below - thank you.

STANDING ORDER FORM

YES, you can count on my regular support for your work and debit my donation from my account monthly (£2 minimum).

I pledge a monthly gift of: £2 ☐ £3 ☐ £5 ☐ Other £

To the Manager (Bank / Building Society)

Your Branch Address

Post Code

Instruction to your bank: Please pay the above amount to be credited on the 1st of each month to ALF Press Office, Account No. 1234594, Sort Code 30-91-56, Lloyds Bank PLC, 3 Sidney Street, Cambridge, CB2 3HQ

Account Number

--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--

Sort Code

--	--	--	--	--	--

Name of Account Holder(s)

Signature(s)

Date

(This must be the signature(s) required on your cheques).

You may cancel this Standing Order whenever you like by informing the ALF Press Office and your bank. Please complete this form and return it to the ALF Press Office (NOT YOUR BANK). Thank you for your support.

ALF Press Office, BM4400, London WC1N 3XX

Tel: 01954 230 542

ARE YOU HOMELESS?

HE IS, BUT YOU CAN HELP!

YOUR DONATION WILL HELP US TO PROVIDE THE CARE HE NEEDS UNTIL HIS NEW HOME IS FOUND.

MAXICARE

DEATH ROW DOGS

THE DOGS IN OUR CARE HAVE ALL BEEN TAKEN FROM "DEATH ROW" AND SAVED FROM DESTRUCTION. THEY NOW NEED PERMANENT, LOVING HOMES.

VACCINATIONS WILL COST APPROXIMATELY £28.00

NEUTERING WILL COST APPROXIMATELY £50 (DOG) £65 (BITCH)

FOOD AND TEMPORARY ACCOMMODATION WILL COST APPROXIMATELY £30 PER WEEK

ADDITIONAL VETERINARY ATTENTION MAY ALSO BE REQUIRED.

WILL YOU HELP US TO HELP THEM? THEY DESERVE A FUTURE WITH PEOPLE WHO WILL CARE FOR THEM AND, TOGETHER, WE CAN MAKE IT HAPPEN.

DONATION FORM

I ENCLOSE CHEQUE/POSTAL ORDER PAYABLE TO "MAXICARE" FOR:

£50 £25 £10 £5

(RECEIPTS WILL NOT BE ISSUED UNLESS REQUESTED)

NAME:

ADDRESS:

.....

..... POST CODE:

TELEPHONE:

PLEASE SEND ME FURTHER INFORMATION

YES/NO (PLEASE SEND SAE)

PLEASE CONTACT ME FOR VOLUNTARY WORK

YES/NO

PLEASE RETURN TO: MAXICARE PO BOX 145, NORTHAMPTON NN1 3AQ

A NATION OF ANIMAL LOVERS?

DON'T BREED OR BUY...
WHILE STRAY DOGS DIE.

MAXICARE

DEATH ROW DOGS

P.O. BOX 145
NORTHAMPTON NN1 3AQ

Tel: 01604 231075

Fax: 01604 604343

IT'S GOT THE LOT FOR VEGGIES

- ✓ 124 vegetarian restaurants across the capital.
- ✓ Over 30 vegetarian restaurants just in the West End.
- ✓ 163 more omnivorous places with big veggie menus.
- ✓ Every single health food or wholefood store and Body Shop.
- ✓ All the major tourist attractions, many of them free.
- ✓ Maps and cartoons.
- ✓ Increased coverage of vegetarian and bargain accommodation.
- ✓ Expanded ethnic eating out section.
- ✓ Comprehensive directory of national and local vegetarian groups.
- ✓ Where to get non-leather clothes.
- ✓ Full details of what's on the menu for vegans.
- ✓ Mint guides to Brighton, Cambridge, Oxford, Windsor, Bath and Bristol.
- ✓ Find your fave eateries in seconds with the detailed contents, postcodes on pige corners, and four detailed indexes.
- ✓ Extensive reviews of new vegetarian restaurants.
- ✓ Best of Veg awards highlighting the top 40 places to eat out.
- ✓ 16 bargain all-you-can-eat vegetarian buffets.
- ✓ Gay section by Britain's top food journalist Colin Spencer.
- ✓ Wholefood doonestop delivery services.
- ✓ Who does and doesn't test on animals.
- ✓ Football fan's guide to eating out near London clubs.
- ✓ Organic dining and shopping guide.
- ✓ "Free London" cheapskate's directory, ideal for students, tightwads and skintflint scroungers. Or when you're low on loot.
- ✓ Vegetarian self-defence kit with Reasons to be Veggie (1. BSE....), Reasons to be Vegan and food nutrient chart showing plant sources of protein, iron, calcium and B12. Just show it to whoever hassles you and they'll go green with guilt and give up meat on the spot.
- ✓ "No Shirt" guide to growing your own. (cf. vegetables).
- ✓ World wide web vegetarian sites.
- ✓ Vegan chocolate neh neh neh.

"For people living in or visiting the capital, this book is more important than the A-Z." - Steve Connor, Campaigns Director, The Vegetarian Society.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Tony Banks MP is London's most popular and outspoken vegetarian MP. Co-editor Alex Bourke is a vegetarian writer and campaigner and a director of the Vegan Society. He was born in Wembley but has had his hooter honed. Carol Charlton is founder and manager of the Organic Cafés. Liz Cooke has a Catering degree specialising in nutrition plus 20 years research experience. Ken Fern is a partner in Plants for a Future. Co-editor Paul Gavnor used to work at PETA and organises group visits to London vegetarian restaurants. He is one of the few people to have successfully pieced Ronald McDonald. Vivak Juliet Gellatley is the author of The Silent Ark and The LiveWire Guide to Going, Being and Staying Veggie. Mark Halunga is a top freelance designer and illustrator. Peter Mason is the author of Caribbean Cookery for Vegans. Susie Miller is founder and coordinator of the FRESH network. Julie Rosenfeld is an Executive Committee Member of the Jewish Vegetarian Society. Colin Spencer of The Guardian is president of the Guild of Food Writers. TV star and poet Benjamin Zephaniah presents the Vegan Society's campaigning video Truth or Dairy?

"By the time I've tried every food in every place in this book, I'll be 196 years old. Eating vegetarian gives you up to three chances a day to vote with your fork for a better world. You'll have no trouble finding nosh with this remarkably thorough guide to everything vegetarian in London. So join me, get out there and get scoffing!" - Tony Banks MP.

"A thorough run-down of health and food shops, restaurants serving vegetarian food, green shops and places to buy cruelty-free cosmetics and clothes." - Time Out

"From Wood Green to Wimbledon, the book is a comprehensive catalogue of the best restaurants, shops and tourist attractions in the capital." - The Big Issue.

Vegetarian London by Alex Bourke & Paul Gavnor. ISBN 1-898967-01-6. Available for £4.99 + 70p p&P from CFL, 18 Jarvis House, Goldsmith Road, London SE15 5SY. (Bookshops order from Central Books, London)

VEGETARIAN LONDON

The perfect present for vegetarians

Recommended by Time Out,
The Big Issue, The Vegan Society,
The Vegetarian Society, Viva!, and completely re-written for 1997.

By Alex Bourke & Paul Gaynor with a foreword by Tony Banks, the most outspoken vegetarian MP.

The most comprehensive vegetarian guidebook ever written, with:
320 packed pages in a handy pocket size format, 124 totally vegetarian restaurants and caf  s, 163 more with extensive veggie menus, all kinds of vegetarian and organic food stockists, where to get cruelty-free clothing, good vegetarian holiday guides, new section on Organic London, mini-veggie guides for weekends in Bath, Brighton, Bristol, Cambridge, Oxford and Windsor.
Available for  4.99 + 70p p&p from CFL (R2), 18 Jarvis House, Goldsmith Road, London SE15 5SY. Order your copy today.

Groups and individuals can order 4+ copies at 20% discount or 7+ copies at 35% (post free) from JCP Sales, 2 Home Farm Cottages, Sandy Lane, St Paul's Cray, Kent BR5 3HZ. Contact Cruelty-Free Living for a free display stand for your stalls.
Bookshops and wholefood/health food shops order from Central Books, 99 Wallis Rd, London E9 5LN. Tel 0181-986 4854, Fax 533 5821.
ISBN 1-898967-01-6. 35% discount. (Sale or return) Contact Cruelty-Free Living for a free display stand.

Please send me copies of Vegetarian London at  5.69 (inc P&P).
I enclose a UK cheque made payable to CFL for  .....
30-day money back guarantee if not delighted (as if!) - ok Bernard ?

NAME:

ADDRESS:

.....

Return to CFL (R2), 18 Jarvis House, Goldsmith Road, London SE15 5SY.

HELP ARKANGEL HELP THE MOVEMENT HELP THE ANIMALS

How Arkangel Helps

The aim of Arkangel is to help the animal liberation movement. In furtherance of this aim Arkangel produces an informative magazine and has set up various projects to help local groups and animal rights campaigners both in this country and abroad. These projects include the supplying of information about animal abuse and animal abusers, publishing material useful to animal rights campaigners and helping to set up networks of groups in foreign countries.

How You Can Help Arkangel

All Arkangel workers are unpaid, but all these projects need money in order to function effectively. Therefore, one way in which you can help is to donate money or, better still, by doing regular fundraising for Arkangel. You can also become a local Arkangel contact, so that as well as organizing fundraising, you could help distribute the magazine, report on local group activities, or assist the Arkangel Information Project.

If you are able to help in any way, please complete the relevant part(s) of this form and return it to Arkangel, BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX. Thanks.

- ☐ 1. I enclose a donation of £
- ☐ 2. I wish to donate to Arkangel by Standing Order

Banker's Standing Order

Name of your Bank:

Address of your Bank:

Your Account Number:

Please pay to the Co-op Bank PLC, City Office, 1/80 Cornhill, London EC3V 3NJ, (sort code 08-2-28T) on behalf of Arkangel, Account No. 506 13 51 the sum of £..... on the day of 19..... and a like amount on the same date in each succeeding month/year* until further notice.
(delete whichever not applicable)

Name: Signature:

Address:

Post Code:

Please return to Arkangel, BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX)

- ☐ 3. I would like to become a Local Contact for Arkangel

Name:

Address:

Phone:

- ☐ 4. I would like to leave a legacy to Arkangel:

In order to do this, you should include the following paragraph in your will:

"I bequeath to Arkangel, presently at BCM 9240, London WC1N 3XX, the sum of £..... and declare that the receipt of the Treasurer or other authorized officer of Arkangel shall be good and sufficient discharge of such legacy."

If you wish to leave land, property or other valuable items to Arkangel please write to us.

All individuals and groups who make a donation to Arkangel will receive a mention in the next magazine. Those who donate £10 or more, or make out a standing order for £1 or more per month will receive a special mention!

WOULD YOU CONDEMN THESE TO DEATH?

4000 cats and dogs are destroyed everyday in the U.K. because no-one wants them
There are not enough homes to go around.

Don't add to the problem - have your pet neutered.

If you find good homes for your litter of puppies or kittens you are using up homes that the animal charities and shelters desperately need.

NEUTERING SAVES LIVES.

If you need help neutering your cat / dog and are on benefit or low income, please contact us:

CELIA HAMMOND ANIMAL TRUST
HIGH STREET, WADHURST, EAST SUSSEX, TN5 6AG.
Tel: 01892 783820

or

CELIA HAMMOND ANIMAL TRUST
NEUTER CLINIC, 233-235 LEWISHAM WAY,
LONDON, SE4 1UY. Tel: 0181 691 2100

Turtles

By Diane Westwood

Turtles may not immediately spring to mind when you ask people to think of endangered animals. Yet, they are in big trouble. More than 155,000 sea turtles drown every year in shrimp nets. So people who eat shrimps are not only supporting their deaths but inadvertently the slaughter of turtles. Other turtles are killed by pollution and coastal developments. Some dead turtles are found having suffocated after swallowing rubbish such as plastic.

The battle to save the world's turtles is on, and some victories have already been won. A notorious turtle slaughterhouse in Mexico has been closed, and Japan has stopped importing the Hawksbill sea turtle, used in jewellery.

The American based Sea Turtle Restoration Project has two campaigns at present. The first is to stop coastal development of the world's largest sea turtle nesting beach - the Bhitarkanika Wildlife Sanctuary in India. The Indian government wants to build an industrial port that will bring large scale commercial fishing and shrimp trawling. The Sanctuary is home to crocodiles and sea eagles, turtles and mangrove forests full of fish and birds. Already thousands of turtles are being drowned in nets outside the sanctuary.

The second campaign is to stop the turtles being drowned in shrimp nets. The Sea Turtle Project suggest fitting turtle excluder devices to shrimp nets. Personally I would like to urge a boycott of shrimp (for their sakes as well as the turtles') and hope to get funding to produce a leaflet.

Turtle facts:

Sea turtles have been around for 150 million years and have seen the dinosaur age come and go. Some turtles can live over 100 years. It can take up to 50 years before they are sexually mature. The gender of a sea turtle is determined by environmental temperature, not genetically as occurs in mammals. All of the seven species of sea turtle are endangered.

How you can help:

Write to the Indian government officials, asking them to protect the Bhitarkanika Sanctuary.

Write to Prime Minister PV Narashimha Rao, Rashtrapati Bhavan, New Delhi 110011, India. Say that the construction of a fishing port will destroy the Bhitarkanika Sanctuary. It is one of only 4 sites on Earth where turtles nest simultaneously. We would like to see the area made into a National Park and World Heritage Site.

Send a copy of your letter to Chief Minister of Orissa, Government of Orissa, Bhubaneswar, Orissa, India (he has called for stronger protection for Bhitarkanika). Urge your friends and family to boycott shrimp and tell the shrimp producing companies why.

Send the IAWA a donation, which we will use to produce an informative turtle leaflet:

PO Box 43, Dudley, DY3 3DG.

Fur Goes Underground

On the face of it, the Japan (UK) Property Company in Wimbledon, South London, looks like a typically respectable business, but lurking in its basement is a fur department. The subterranean shop is well stocked with expensive fur coats, including fox and mink.

Protesters visited the shop after a tip-off and discovered the furs in the basement even though the manager, when confronted, denied that they were selling furs.

The shop is situated at 92, High Street, Wimbledon, London SW19 5EG and the telephone number is 0181 944 7611.

VIVISECTOR

by David Carr

Science's pornographer.

Hell's geographer.

Inflicter of loneliness, cold and hunger.

Misery monger.

Vivisector!

Gutless-gut infector.

Brainless brain-inspector.

Fact faker. Myth maker.

Masturbator of monkeys.

Valiant slayer of donkeys.

Scream collector. Love ejector.

Vivisector!

Cowardice and arrogance your credentials.

Force and violence your essentials.

Bully supreme. Sadist's dream.
Knife-wielding ambusher.

Drug pusher.

Truth's deprecator.

Beauty's violator.

Vivisector!

God will deal with you later.

Let's Change the World!

by Alex Bourke

What is your life about?

"Search for the hero inside yourself, and then you'll find the key to your life," sings vegan Heather Small of M-People, who also appears in the video "Truth or Dairy." We can all be heroes.

The American psychologist Abraham Maslow proposed that we have a hierarchy of needs. Once we've managed to take care of basic survival and shelter, we'll seek to belong to a group and to improve self-esteem. If we get this far then we can go for the pinnacle of 'self-actualisation', integrating all parts of ourselves and doing something for humanity. In so doing we achieve our highest potential. Along the way we have 'peak experiences', experiencing the ecstasy and serenity of inner fulfilment.

Can animal rights be a path to spiritual peace and transpersonal success? We believe so.

In their teens, everyone gets into some kind of "opium of the people" whether it's sport, organised religion, sex, drugs, music, computer games, work or something else. It gets us into a group, and we enjoy the pleasure of mastering the knowledge or skills that go with group membership. All of us are chasing the delicious surge of endorphins in the brain when we belong and succeed, or simply the absence of stress. This is fine as long as you don't surrender control of your entire life to group leaders and give up making your own decisions. Instead of turning you into a zombie, becoming a vegan requires a healthy dose of thinking for yourself. It teaches you to stand up to coercion from people who think they have the right to tell you what to do in your own space, whether relatives, friends, priests, teachers or co-workers.

People today feel helpless in the face of corrupt governments and giant businesses. The fact is that it just ain't so - we are as powerful as we choose to be. We must exercise our personal power to change those around us, and we must take political power or it will go by default to those who will abuse it.

Jacques Cousteau once recommended people to infiltrate the establishment and rise as high as they could, then use their power for good. Imagine what you might do if you woke up tomorrow and found that you were Minister for Agriculture, or Director of the Meat and Livestock Commission, or Chair of the Health Education Council, or Editor of the British Medical Journal. All these jobs and many others will be up for grabs in the future. And one day they will be filled by people who will do the right thing with their power and influence - people like you.

Edward Lear once asked "If it takes a cat ten minutes to kill a rat, how long does it take to kill 1,000 rats? Methinks the rats would kill the cat." It's time for us all across the world to take power and change things for the better. It may take our lifetimes, but we are the last generation before it's too late who still have the chance to wake everyone else up. Will you join us?

Blueprint for world revolution...

We have personal power to change ourselves, and by our example and provision of knowledge, those around us. When we are in the majority, as we now are for not wearing fur, not hunting for fun, and not testing cosmetics on animals, business then follows, and eventually we can force changes in the law to mop up the last pockets of brutality. The giant cosmetics company Gillette announced at the end of 1996 the end of animal testing - as a direct result of PETA's global campaign to wake people up, taken up by thousands of activists and millions of sympathisers. (Proctor & Gamble next!) Soon hunting foxes will be banned in Britain, as a direct result of campaigns by animal rights activists. We can change anything we want. It's just a case of picking off the easiest targets first and moving on, building momentum for the harder targets ahead. The bad guys can't resist truth, justice, compassion and love forever.

In the United Kingdom the National Alliance for Animals (NAFA) was formed in 1995 to unite the vegan animal rights movement for the general election. It will "out" all the candidates who won't make a stand for integrity and compassion towards animals. The vegetarian vote is enough to swing any election, and we will give everyone an informed choice of candidates. We want Tony Banks to be just the first of many to speak out for animals without compromise. After all, a vegan world will have huge economic benefits. Instead of speaking for less than a million meat workers, encourage MP's to speak up for six million vegetarians, sixteen million almost vegetarians, 26 million who've cut their meat consumption, 36 million whose children have been exposed to BSE by a government bribed by the meat barons, and 600 million feeling beings doomed each year by our collective insanity and inaction.

Here's a checklist of twelve things we can do to change ourselves, those who ask our help, and eventually the world, person by person and country by country. The first six are the essential stages for getting your "degree" or "black belt instructor" in veganism and animal rights, ready to deal with any situation. The other six steps are ways to use your new-found knowledge and skills to create permanent, life-saving change in others and turn all vegetarians into vegan activists.

If every vegetarian in the United Kingdom creates one more each year, the whole country will be safe for animals in just seven years. Why not? Nothing is impossible unless you believe it is.

Desk top publishing on home computers plus the Internet have for the first time in history ended the rich's monopoly on information. There is nothing whatsoever to prevent us using our new-found power to put things right in one generation.

The animal rights movement jointly contains all the knowledge you need to be part of the greatest social revolution in history, so that when you look back on your life you'll be able to think "We did something really fine. Together."

12 Steps to Change the World...

1. Get the facts and go vegetarian

Send a cheque or postal order for £4.80 to Viva!, PO Box 212, Crewe CW1 4SD. Ask for a full set of Viva! guides, the giant Reasons to be Veggie leaflet, and the book list. At the very least, send 50p for The Good Veg Guide to get you started. Do it today. If you're not already, use this information to become vegetarian. The guides will tell you how to deal with your family and friends. Or buy the book The Livewire Guide to Going, Staying and Being Veggie by Juliet Gellatley of Viva! which is chock full of bullet-proof facts and techniques for verbal self-defence against meatheads.

2. Find out about veganism

Send some stamps to The Vegan Society for a full set of leaflets and a catalogue. Invest in a copy of their Animal Free Shopper, containing everything you always wanted to know about veganism but didn't know where to ask. Unless you're moving towards 100% vegan, few people in the animal rights movement will take you seriously. The next two steps will take care of any fears you may have about "coming out" as a vegan.

3. Become a masterchef

Get a vegan cookbook. Visit local wholefood shops and buy a new food every week. People don't generally choose food because it's healthy or kind but because it looks good and tastes nice. Become a master of cuisine so that people are always queuing up to come to dinner.

4. Learn about nutrition

Be ready for questions about calcium, protein, iron and vitamins. Know the facts about why vegans are the healthiest folk on the planet. Invest in superb reference books like Peter Cox's Guide to Vegetarian Living, Vegan Nutrition - Pure and Simple by Dr Michael Klaper and Vegan Nutrition by Dr Gill Langley. If funds are limited, make sure they're in your library and share books with vegetarian friends.

5. Learn about vegan babies

Often you hear people say that veganism is all very well for adults, but children need milk or meat. All complete and utter bollocks of course, but if they got it from their doctor then you'd better be ready with the truth from the real experts. Learn about vegetarian and vegan babies by sending £1.75 to Viva! for their Mother and Baby Guide parts 1 and 2. Learn even more about vegan children from the book Pregnancy, Children and the Vegan Diet by Dr Michael Klaper and Vegan Nutrition by Dr Gill Langley. If your doctor tells you veganism is unhealthy for babies, give him or her these leaflets and books to read, and if that fails then change to a doctor who bothers to keep up to date. If we get all the doctors in the country to go vegan, they might just do the rest for us.

6. Learn about animal rights and ecology

Be ready to explain to pre-vegetarians the truth about animals and what we're doing to the planet. Read up on animal rights literature regularly to refresh your memory. Get extra leaflets to give out at bulk rates from the nationals. Invest in a copy of The New Why You Don't Need Meat by Peter Cox and The Silent Ark by Juliet Gellatley.

7. Become a campaigner!

Get stuck into the ideas above. Learn to use a word processor, write letters, give school talks, talk to the media. If you have any difficulty getting along with certain campaigners or with the public, try some of the "people" books we recommend, especially the brilliant How to Win Friends and Influence People by Dale Carnegie.

8. Help your local group financially

If you're working, then give money to buy leaflets to your local groups which they can take into schools for maximum impact. Invest in the videos Truth or Dairy (Vegan Society),

Their Future In Your Hands (Animal Aid), Food Without Fear (Vegetarian Society) and others from the nationals, or give them to your local school library.

9. Read campaigning magazines

Keep up to date by joining a campaigning national organisation or ten, or exchanging magazines with friends. Each of "the nationals" produces thoroughly researched materials written by the leading experts, as well as doing undercover investigations and getting the truth into the media at national level. When you've read their magazines, pass them on. If you want to help campaigning vegans abroad, join Vegans International.

10. Tithe

If you're working and don't have much free time, you can still make things happen big time and create loads of new vegetarians by using your wages to "contract out" your campaigning. How? Consider "tithing" your income to animal rights organisations. This is the old system where people gave 10% of their income to the church. Why not start with 1% and see if you miss it? If you're single with no dependents, will you really miss £5 or £20 a month paid by standing order to Viva! or Animal Aid? We suggest these two first because virtually all their "clients" are children who can't afford to buy leaflets. £10 pays for 10 packs of info that create 10 new young vegetarians. Every month for as long as you care to give. Or support the Vegan Society who are inundated with requests for information by people of all ages and are also very cost-effective. And there are plenty of other groups that will put your contribution to good use. Regular payments can be covenanted to get tax rebates, and gifts of £250 or more also get the tax back if you fill out a Gift Aid form. And don't forget to add a clause to your will.

11. Get skilled

If you're an ambitious campaigner, get toolled up for action! Contact the nationals and offer your services as a volunteer. You can go further and take a course in journalism. Remember that the pen is mightier than the sword, but with a computer you can really kick Ronald McDonald's butt. Furthermore the Internet gives us all access to millions of people with money and information technology skills who can become campaigners, if we help them along.

12. Take and use power for truth

Get as much power as you can or influence with the powerful (teachers, doctors, caterers, film makers, writers, politicians and the children and students who will one day be leaders) and use it to create a better world. Teach them that being a hero is about saving life.

Zen

and the Art of Campaigning

by Jonathon Livingston Vegan

Everything that ever was, started with a dream. Take a walk, sit or lie quietly, reflect and dream.

When you've formulated your dream, it's time to act. Success depends on action. Doing nothing is itself an action, and the most harmful one of all. It's called neglect.

Once you have taken your first steps, the path will reveal itself to you, and others will keep you company on it.

The only difference between success and failure is that success kept on going till she got there. Whatever obstacles you encounter, there are others already on the path waiting to help you in every way we can. Just ask.

You have the power to co-create a vegan world. Help others to join us on the path of truth, respect and love for all life.

We'll see you at the celebration when the last slaughterhouse closes.

INTERBEING May '97 no. 14 magazine

For All Beings

..... Everywhere
Special Issue

Me and My ENVIRONMENT

Thich Nhat Hanh ~
Peeing in the Woods

HH Dalai Lama ~ Too Many

Precious Human Beings Stories, cartoons, serial, poems, pictures, reviews.

Sample copy (UK) £1.80 or £6 (hardship £4.50)
for one year (3 issues).
Europe/ World Surface: £8
World Air: £10

Sterling cheques / UK stamps, please, to LNEB

LEEDS NETWORK of ENGAGED BUDDHISTS

c/o Alex 91 Clarendon Road Leeds LS2 9LY
tel/fax 0113 - 2444 289
email INTERBEING@compuserve.com

Ostrich Farming- Protests Continue

Campaigns across the country to oppose applications for ostrich farms (which continue to appear at an alarming rate) are proving effective. Several councils have listened to local objections and decided to reject farm applications.

Gosport & Fareham Animal Aid and Winchester Animal Concern rushed into action when their local paper reported that an application for an ostrich farm near Petersfield was about to be discussed by the Council. They explained the proposals to local residents, distributed leaflets and collected signatures for a petition. Helen Nelson, who co-ordinates GFAA, said that "local people were absolutely horrified about the proposals". Regrettably such short notice meant that residents were unable to register their objections in writing and the application was passed. Residents and campaigners planned to fight on.

In East Sussex, during protests against a proposed ostrich farm near Crowborough, campaigners occupied the entrance lobby of Wealden District Council for three hours and quizzed the Council's Senior Planning Officer. The local paper, the East Sussex Courier, quoted the would-be farmer as saying that ostriches were "less dangerous than rams" and were "probably the best looked after animals in the UK"!

Action: Watch out for planning applications in your area. Object to any plans in writing to the local council. Pollution, environmental health and other local concerns are the most useful as well as animal cruelty. Encourage local residents to do the same. Animal Aid can give advice and information. Their address is: The Old Chapel, Bradford Street, Tonbridge, Kent TN9 1AW (01732 364 546).

A tape featuring a song about the exploitation of ostriches, by Rowena Red and John Rowe, is now available and for further details about ostrich campaigning or the song, contact: J & R Associates, PO Box 83, Bracknell, Berkshire RG12 7Q11.

Wolves

These highly intelligent and beautiful creatures have been hunted to extinction in most parts of the world. In other countries wolves are an endangered species and all because of man's ignorance and intolerance of the wild.

In man's brief history few animals have gripped the imagination in quite the same way as the wolf. Feared, hated and reviled they have been systematically hunted to near extinction. Now in an age of science and ecological awareness, some people have come to defend the wolf's role in nature. We have to appreciate the wolf for the natural animal it is.

We have yet to distinguish between the real wolf that is one of nature's noblest animals, and the wolf of fable and folklore that is one of man's oldest creations.

How you can help:

Adopt a wolf. Both the Born Free Foundation's Wolf Project and the Wolf Society of Great Britain (see below) run adoption schemes for wolves at the Iberian Wolf Recovery Centre in Portugal. Wolf adoption costs £15 per year, for which you will receive a certificate, photo of your wolf and regular updates on their welfare and general antics! To adopt a wolf through Operation Wolf write (with cheque for £15 payable to Born Free Foundation) to - Operation Wolf, The BFF, Coldharbour, Dorking, Surrey RH5 6HA.

Join the Wolf Society of Great Britain. Although there are no longer any wild wolves in Britain (as yet! See below), the WSGB are thriving wolf conservationists, involved in campaigns and projects worldwide. Their quarterly magazine, The Howler, reports on current wolf issues around the world and is included in the annual membership price of £9.50. For details send SAE; WSGB, Prospect House, Charlton, Kilmersdon Bath BA3 5TN.

Support the Highland Wolf Proposal. Would you like to see wolves reintroduced to the British Isles? Or would you like to find out more about the feasibility study? If so, please send a SAE to Roger Panaman, Highland Wolf Fund, 35 Church Street, Kidlington, Oxford.

NEVER MIND THE BALLOTS...

by Armitage Shanks

The general election has been announced for 1st May 1997 and the people are about to be given their five-yearly dose of democracy - an 'X' on a piece of paper. Across the country people will file obediently into polling booths to choose who will rule and tell them what to do for another five years. This charade passes for what is called 'free elections' and we are supposed to be grateful we can take part in it.

Every time there is an election there are calls for those who care about animals to use their vote accordingly. We should support whichever party has the best policies on animal welfare and is most likely to be elected. Usually this has meant the Labour Party, though just before the 1992 election the International Fund for Animal Welfare donated £60,000 to the Conservative Party to 'influence' it in the right direction. It has given money to the other major parties as well, including £1 million to Labour under the guise of the Political Animal Lobby. This is a particularly extreme example of the lengths some groups go to to win political favour, despite over 100 years of betrayal by politicians.

The National Anti-Vivisection Society was formed in 1875 during the drawing up of a bill to regulate animal experiments, which then numbered only a couple of hundred per year. Despite this and the fact that Queen Victoria was personally opposed to vivisection, the resulting Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876, gave the green light and since then over 180 million experiments using animals have been carried out in Britain.

110 years later the government announced it was updating the 1876 Act and the main anti-vivisection societies joined forces in the Mobilisation for Laboratory Animals. Instead of taking an abolitionist stance, they set out 'minimum demands' such as prohibition of cosmetics and warfare experiments. They believed that asking for complete abolition would be dismissed as extremism, whereas by appearing to be moderate politicians would listen to them. As history shows, asking for a little from government means getting nothing at all and the resulting Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act, 1986, was in some respects even worse than the legislation it replaced.

Efforts to ban hunting also go back to the last century. The first such attempt failed in 1894. The League Against Cruel Sports was founded in 1924 by people frustrated at the RSPCA's lack of opposition, but it wasn't until the landslide election of a Labour Government in 1945 that there seemed a chance of success. The hunting fraternity launched a massive propaganda campaign. Earl Winterton called abolitionists 'Bloomsbury Boys', who loathed the sport because of its demands on courage, fitness and endurance: 'Their patron saint is Oscar Wilde' (sic). He needn't have worried. The government appointed a committee but its report in 1951 was a complete whitewash - hardly surprising since eight of its members had hunting connections. Labour, despite having some anti-bloodsports MPs, had no wish to lose the rural vote.

In 1975 another Labour administration did introduce a bill to outlaw hare coursing. It was passed in the House of Commons but thrown out by the Lords. The government could have used the Parliament Act to overrule the Lords, but saving hares was low on its list of priorities.

Can the Labour Party of today be trusted any more than in the past? It has produced a leaflet, 'A New Life for Animals', and has a spokesperson for animal welfare, Elliot Morley, but in fact now promises far less than it used to. In the 1970s and 80s Labour pledged to ban live exports and hunting with hounds completely, whereas now it says it will only make the export of animals more expensive. Apparently the party does not want to risk being sued by farmers if it tried to outlaw the trade. And on bloodsports it will only allow a free vote in the Commons on a private member's bill, it would not itself introduce an abolitionist bill. Private member's bills have far less chance of becoming law than ones introduced by the government.

The omens do not look good. Labour has already reneged on one promise before it even comes to power. A 1994 policy statement said it would 'forbid the use of animals in the testing and development of weapons', but last year Elliot Morley wrote to the director of Animal Aid, Andrew Tyler, stating that Labour accepts animals need to be used in testing antidotes 'for the time being'. In its leaflet the party says it will ban the LD50 test (one of the most notorious experiments), but when questioned admits it will be replaced with another test using animals.

Clearly Labour can no more be trusted to do anything for animals than it could in the past. What about the Liberal Democrats or the Green Party? One could point out that neither stands any chance of being elected - the latter will field less than 100 candidates in the forthcoming election - but more pertinent would be to ask what they could do even if they were 'in power'. The idea that a party can win power and pass whatever laws it likes is a common but profoundly mistaken belief. Any government would have to work within the prevailing economic system, that of capitalism; multinational corporations whose investments can be shifted around the globe, financial institutions such as the City, World Bank and International Monetary Fund, and of course the European Union. Animal exploitation is a truly international phenomenon which can be moved to wherever there is most profit to be made. For example, when the EEC banned the import of seal pelts in 1983, the commercial sealers sought out new markets such as seal meat for fur farms. Now more seals are being killed on the ice each year than before the ban.

Parliament and the other institutions of our so-called 'democracy' do not exist to represent the views of ordinary people but instead to protect the interests of the ruling class. As the book 'Against all Odds: Animal Liberation 1972-1986' explains:

'The parliamentary campaign is doomed to failure because, despite our democratic traditions, we live in a political system where MPs have a greater allegiance to their social class than to the wishes of the electorate they have to face every four years. If vivisection was against the interests of the ruling class they could abolish it very quickly, either by the use of their legislative powers or more simply by decisions made at board meetings. Commercial forms of animal abuse such as vivisection and factory farming are in the financial interests of the ruling class, and bloodsports are an essential part of their social fabric. The parliamentary campaign is in fact asking us to petition the ruling class to act against their own best interest.'

The issue of animal rights will be of peripheral concern in the coming election. The major parties will attempt to win the votes of 'Middle England' by bribing the electorate with promises of less taxation and a clamp-down on crime. If you intend voting on May 1st (and as an anarchist I certainly won't), then vote for whichever party you think will lower taxes and get scroungers off benefits and into work, etc.

But do not be deluded into thinking your choice will make any difference to animals in laboratories, factory farms or on the hunting fields.

John Lewis - Wildlife Killers

John Lewis Partnership, owners of the food chain Waitrose and a large number of department stores, owns several country estates where the massacre of tens of thousands of birds each year takes place to entertain John Lewis partners.

At one such estate - Leckford Abbas in Stockbridge, Hants. - parties of drunken John Lewis employees blast away at pheasants, ducks, grouse, pigeons, squirrels and anything else that moves. The shoots are staged three times a week, from September through to February. Many of the pheasants, said by a whistleblower at the site to be "so young they can barely fly", are merely injured and left to die agonising and prolonged deaths.

John Lewis have been approached but they have refused to discuss the matter. It is said they are determined to keep the shoots as they allegedly add 75% to the value of the estate. The only way to end the killing is to organise a boycott and generate public awareness on such a scale that they lose more in lost trade than they gain from the shoots.

On Friday 24th January 1997, 35 activists marked the start of a nationwide NAHC campaign against John Lewis by physically preventing their shooting party from killing - saving the lives of an estimated 200 birds. The shooters' convoy of vehicles was intercepted on its way to the killing field and surrounded by activists, preventing it from moving for some two hours until assurances were given to activists and the waiting media that the shoot would not proceed.

We must now capitalise on the considerable embarrassment this event caused John Lewis. To this end, the NAHC will be organising a series of publicity stunts over the coming months, but they also need your help. A leaflet and poster have been produced which all groups can distribute as widely as possible. In addition groups can take their own actions against John Lewis.

Here are a few suggestions:

- * Pickets and protests outside (or inside or on top of) John Lewis stores, including Waitrose, Peter Jones, Jessop & Son (Nottingham), Bainbridge (Newcastle upon Tyne), Bonds (Norwich), Caley's (Windsor), Cole Bros (Sheffield), Heelas (Reading), Knight & Lee (Southsea), George Henry Lee (Liverpool), Robert Sale (Cambridge), Tewis Bros (Watford), and Tyrell & Green (Southampton).
- * Feature the campaign in your newsletter, distribute leaflets and campaign postcards at your group meetings.
- * Hold an anti-John Lewis street stall or publicity stunt, distributing leaflets and postcards. The postcards are particularly important as they will let John Lewis know the scale of the boycott.

Whatever you do tell your local media what you are doing and why. With your active help, this should be a winnable campaign saving tens of thousands of lives.

For more information about the campaign contact the National Anti-Hunt Campaign (NAHC), PO Box 66, Stevenage, Hertfordshire SG1 2TR (01442 240 246).

Two Movements - One Struggle

by Anon

In the last few years we have seen an amazing crossover in the radical Green and Animal liberation movements. We have started to realise we are not two struggles but one, and that victory for one movement is victory for both. But realising we have common goals still does not alter the fact that there still exists a wide gulf to be bridged.

Also 'Greens' must accept the case for veganism if we are to build a sustainable, self-sufficient Green society. These questions, plus many more, need to be explored if we really want a liberated society. One worth living in where humans live in harmony with nature, where animals are not abused and where we can live with honour and respect for each other. We need a new outlook, a new way of doing things and a seriousness to achieve all that is obtainable.

No radical change comes easily and to achieve the society we want there is no doubt that we will have to fight for it. The State has a different agenda to our own and it will not give up its power without a fight to the death. In this ongoing struggle, many will be injured, many more will be imprisoned and no doubt many more of us are going to die.

This may sound very pessimistic, but given the choice is it not better to fight this disgusting system and the terrible society it has created than to live like slaves in this sick industrial prison. Industrial society is like a vast prison and we are like animals in a zoo. This is why some of us have come to understand that animal liberation is our own liberation.

We live in a sick society where abuse of the weak has become the norm. Where mental sickness is everywhere, where depravity, apathy, misery, hopelessness, confusion and loneliness have become facets of everyday existence. It would not be much of an exaggeration to say that modern society has become a crime against life itself. The position we are in may seem dire, but we must take heart when a society has reached this level of disintegration as ours has and it cannot continue for much longer. Therefore we must be ready to push forward with our own views of how we are to live. We must make ourselves known now, not wait for future collapse, so the first thing to take into account is just how a liberated society would be. Ideas are powerful and the more certain we are about our objectives the more likely we are to achieve our goals.

Liberated society has three main objectives:

1) Animal Liberation: The end of all animal farming and the complete destruction of the meat and dairy industries.

The end of all vivisection, the end of zoos and circuses with performing animals. The end of all hunting and fishing and the end of the pet trade. We must leave areas free from agriculture and building so that wild animals have plenty of habitat. Most of all we must build a society where it becomes our culture to leave animals alone and free from our interference.

2) Post Industrialism: This must mean the end of all large scale industry that is not directly necessary in order to live, ie., food, clothing and shelter. We must do away with the private car and build a decentralised public transport system. We must bring about the end of nuclear power, motorways, giant shopping centres, office blocks, cities and giant towns that are a blot on the landscape. We must build village style communities, use alternative energy and technology and create a self sufficient co-operative Green society.

3) Human Liberation: Human liberation will be achieved by taking control over own lives and realising we do not need leaders, bosses, or experts to tell us how to think, feel and act. In small communities we will be able to work together and feel a sense of participation and belonging. Also by living close to nature, we will start to realise what industrialised society has taken from us for so long. Our liberation will come about not by some weird spiritual quest as some people would have us believe but by removing ourselves from artificial concrete jungles where we obviously do not belong.

By removing the idea that we are individuals whose lives should consist of not caring for others we can go on to build communities where we are truly social beings. To achieve this we must break the chains that bind us by fighting for change and take the first step out of our prisons as free liberated people. Then we shall have achieved liberation for animals, the planet Earth and all who live upon it.

Seal Skins ~ The Missed Outlets

by Dave Callender

Angling kills fish, lots of them. That is abundantly self-evident. It is generally agreed that it leads to the unintentional deaths of many water birds too; swans, wildfowl, and more than likely a small number of reed nesting birds like bunting and warblers. It's a messy business. The richer, allegedly more refined end of rod fishing - the slab of humans with more dosh than sense in other words - specialise in fly-fishing for the cream of fish: salmon, trout and sea trout. It's expensive, it's snobby, it's meant to be skilled, it's meant to be a select craft, it's indulged in by many thousands and it requires the most ludicrous abuse of mammals and birds that I have yet come across. I'm talking about the making, selling and using of game fish-flies of which there are thousands of different types, selling for paltry sums of between 16 pence and 40 pence but a hideous proportion of which rely on a dead creature as their base.

Where do you think is the only place you could expect to buy bits of seal pelt in any town in England? Most of you would shake your head in disbelief. You simply cannot lay your grubby hands on seal skins any more. Crap. It's one of the prized materials of any fly-tying fisher fool. You will find it in such flies as the Clan Chief, the Goat's Toe, the Kildonian Killer, the Red Hopper; the list is endless. I can only quote this foolish fisher Edwin Oxlade in 'Fly-Fishing', July 1995. He says that if seal skins are not used it, "...gives the fly a dreadfully solid and lifeless silhouette, like a cigar stub with a hook in it. A body like this is more likely to result if wool is used in place of seal's fur. It is hard to get life and sparkle into wool."

Let's be clear about this, the Fly Dressers Guild boasts more than 3000 members and has 60 branches specialising in the teaching of methods and materials. It is based at 8 Tidworth Road, Porton, Salisbury. I reckon there are hundreds of outlets that flog fly-tying materials - the majority will include seals' fur. The probability is that there will be an outlet in most towns, usually as part of a larger tackle shop.

The most disgusting aspect of it all must be that most people sell the fur chunks for such pitiful amounts. You will get a bag of tiny squares of pelt in up to 10-15 colours for £1.10. That's about the average. To throw in a couple of examples, Mullarkey & Sons at 184 Waterloo Street, Burton-on-Trent sells 12 packs of seal fur for £7.50, John Norris at 21 Victoria Road, Penrith has 12 packets of seal skin for £4.50. If Penrith and Burton can openly boast of bits of dead seals for sale I refuse to except that almost every town has not got them somewhere. An advert in 'Fly-Fishing' from Qual-

Tye, 26 Cutlers Hall Road, Shotley Bridge, Consett, Durham, boasts 'beautiful baby seals fur in 32 colours'. Brochures from Fulling Mill, Unit 5, 46 Croydon, Reigate, and Rutland Water Tackle Shop, Oakham, both flaunt their trade in bits of seal bodies. A full survey I have no doubt would astound the movement in the frequency and availability of these seal products.

The first big question that springs to mind is, where are these pelts coming from? - Which nations' seals are being killed for this market? - Who is importing the pelts? - Could any of them be coming from grey seals being shot on licence on the west coast of Scotland? - Do these cheap bags of little squares represent a usage of the off-cuts from the fur trade abroad? - And just how do we tackle such a widespread use of seal skin still in our towns?

A company called Sport Fish, Winforton, Hereford, clearly boasts that all their hairs, fur and feathers are imported from the USA - the 'number one specialist', Rocky Mountain Dubbing, and that includes seal pelts. I have of course deliberately isolated the use of seals. Their emotional appeal dictates that, and I think we all tend to pride ourselves on the obliteration of public displays and outlets for purchase. That needs to be slightly reconsidered. These people, these companies, these outlets also flaunt the sale of dead bits of elk, deer, moose, arctic fox, goat, hare, rabbit, mole, squirrel and mink that I can trace. 'Sport Fish' sell an entire hair mask (the sliced-off face including ears of the noble brown hare) for £1.80. Grahams, of 494 Chorley Old Road, Bolton, sells four dyed masks for £7.50, or a simple pair of hare ears for 60 pence. Fancy being killed so some plasma of higher intelligence can chop off your ears, stick them in a sealed bag with a pretty label in order that other plasma can have his goon faced picture taken next to a fat old pregnant salmon dangling from his hand. The things some people do and the logic they live by!

And birds - well, I've counted over 40 species that fall prey to the mortuary men that package up bits of our wildlife in the name of conservation, and I'm not just talking pigeon and pheasant here. All these species have appeared on one brochure of another: crow, coot, partridge, goose, guinea-fowl, jackdaw, magpie, mallard, maribu, moorhen, jay, ostrich, emu, peacock, snipe, starling, teal, woodcock and more; companies sell the entire skin of a partridge for £18.50; a pair of woodcock wings for £1.15; a pair of grouse wings for £1.35; the entire head of a Lady Amherst pheasant for £7.00, and Rutland Fishing Lodge is the only company to sell bags of 20 hand-selected emu feathers in six colours.

What about the bizarre actions of the Midlands company Ellis Slater, 47 Bridge Cross Road, Gease Terrace, Walsall (01453 - 671 377), the sole British importer of the whole skins of giant water shrews from South America, which they sell at £3.50 each! These people are serious. They are serious users and abusers of the most varied of species. Whilst pike and shark fisher fools happily employ tie-baiting to attract their victims, salmon and trout fisher fools have no scruples in scouring the world for the pelts and feathers of beings - all in the name of man the hunter. The advertising blurb praising the future use of giant water shrews: - 'the guard hairs are fine and possess a lively silky sheen which reflect a range of colours from brown to blue - dun to silver, depending on how the light hits it; the under fur is of an excellent dun hue'.

There is too, a preponderance for those fly-tying outfits to hold lessons or evening classes in our publicly-run educational establishments. I wonder how school governors or regional authorities would react to the presence of dead seals and bits of foxes on their desks. I think not somehow. Few of them would tolerate a fur fashion show or a skin auction. Why should they have those creatures grubbing around with their dyed skins and animal hairs?

Dave Callender HV 3314,
HMP Birmingham, Winson Green Road, Birmingham B18 4AS.

Hill Grove Family Cats

Hill Grove Family Cats at Hill Grove Farm, Minster Lovell, near Crawley, Oxon OX8 5NA (01993 703120) is a business set up by Mr Christopher Brown in 1970 to provide the vivisection industry in this country and abroad with SPF (specified pathogen free) cats.

Mr. Brown has admitted having "hundreds of cats" but the exact number is not known. He has a staff of at least 12 who come in daily. Mr Brown has said he "likes to keep a low profile".

Mr. Brown claims his cats are used for veterinary research only. In 1994, a Sunday Express investigation revealed that he had sold 9 week old kittens for £300 each to laboratories in Australia where they were used for vaccine research before being killed and incinerated. This trade was condemned by MPs, the RSPCA and the Cats' Protection League.

An undercover investigation (1994-1996) by a major British anti-vivisection society revealed that Mr Brown has also sold cats to the Institute of Neurology and Charing Cross and Westminster Medical School in London. The cats are kept in bare rooms with no bedding and at the Institute of Neurology in at least one instance a cat killed and consumed her entire litter of kittens.

Experiments at the Sobell Department of Neurophysiology include cutting or crushing the spinal nerves in old cats (up to 15 years old), studies of nerve connections between adjacent parts of the spinal cord and damaging various nerves with diphtheria toxin. The investigator noted: "The cats are desperate for attention and affection, which makes this job easier said than done". Mr Brown's profits from this terrible trade were £80,000 in 1992.

Mr and Mrs Brown also run a B&B business from Hill Grove Farm. Guests have no idea what is in the locked sheds behind the main house unless they arrive on protest days. Many have said they would not have stayed at Hill Grove Farm had they known of the cat-breeding business.

Hill Grove Farm is advertised by:

West Oxfordshire District Council,
Woodgreen, Witney, Oxfordshire (01993 702941) :
John Carter.

English Tourist Board, Thames Tower, Black's Road, Hammersmith, London W6 9EL (0181 846 9000) :
Sarah Whaley.

The Caravan Club, East Grinstead House, East
Grinstead, West Sussex RH19 1VA (01342 326944) : David Hunter.

Please take the time to write to these people who advertise the Brown's B&B pointing out what hides behind the Brown's business and ask them to withdraw Hill Grove Farm from their accommodation guides. You could also write to your MP. Your support is much appreciated and essential for this campaign to succeed. Please send any replies to the address below.

For more information on Hill Grove Family Cats / petition forms / protest dates, please send a sae to:

ACT-AV, 22 Church Meadow, Milton-under-Whychwood, Oxon OX7 6JG (01993 831338).

All donations to help this campaign will be gratefully accepted.

Why I am in Favour of Free Abortion

by Les Cahiers antispécistes, adapted and translated by Vincent Berraud

I do not respect the life of plants, for example. Not because I despise them but because I do not think that they are sentient, i.e. that they feel what is happening to them.¹ As they don't feel any pleasure to live, nor sufferance to be cut or pulled up, nor regret to have to die, I don't see any reason not to use them as I like it and, especially, not to eat them.

I take this example of plants to show the difference between respecting life as such (unconscious phenomenon of development and reproduction), and respecting sentient life, i.e. taking into account the interests of the beings which have interests to respect.

Now it is practically sure that the human embryo² is not sentient at least for the first 18 weeks of pregnancy (out of 38), because of the absence, and then of the immaturity, of its nervous system (the neurons don't conduct stimuli yet). The new born is sentient; sensitivity thus appears sometimes during the second half of pregnancy. Before that, this being, not feeling pleasure nor sufferance, no fears nor hopes, does not seem morally more significant than a blade of grass, a stone or a brain-dead human.³ The woman has a great number of interests, which must be taken into consideration - including of course the one not to suffer from the intervention. During the first 18 weeks, an abortion is morally no more than a simple late contraception.

One can of course argue that it is a future sentient being, that its potential life should be respected; and ask me, for instance: "What about you, would you have liked your mother to abort?"

Now the idea that I could not exist can be unpleasant to me, but it is not more unpleasant if I imagine this non-existence as the result of an abortion than of contraception, or of abstinence from my parents, or of their non-meeting each other. The only thing which is fixed after the conception of a being, and not before, is its genetic stock; but I do not see in what this non-sentient being without history nor projects which possessed this particular genetic code was me, no more would I consider as being myself an embryo which would be cloned from my body, or an identical twin.

Still, the decision to abort or not isn't insignificant, as it determines the existence or the non-existence of a future sentient being; but it is the same thing with any contraception or absence of fertile sexual relation. I think that besides the envy one has or not to have a child, other elements should be taken into consideration, and in particular on the one hand the happiness the child may expect, and on the other hand the world overpopulation. But this is another discussion; anyway, one doesn't normally force anyone to have a child.

Thus, if a woman wishes to abort, I think that she should be able to do so without restrictions, at least until 18 weeks after fecundation; and considering social realities, that everything should be done to make it easier, and free at least as long as the cost remains an obstacle.⁴

The basic argument of woman's freedom is often opposed by opponents of abortion. It cannot be sufficient if one doesn't add, as I did, that the embryo itself does not have any interests. Without this point, it is a mere principle devoid of substance, just like the 'freedom to eat meat' that is opposed to us when we put the interests of the animals forward. It poses a problem in the case of a late abortion, during the second half of pregnancy when the foetus has already acquired sensitivity, and therefore at least the interest not to suffer.

The ideal in this case would be the guarantee of an equal consideration of the interests of the mother and of those of the foetus. I cannot in this case have a theoretical position as clear-cut as for the first half of pregnancy, when the embryo is not sentient; without going into particulars, and given the rather primary nature of the foetus' interests, I think however that in practice the best is still to leave the decision to the concerned woman.⁵

What could be done in any case for the interests of the 'aged' foetus is to make sure it will not suffer if there is an abortion. The speciesist blinkers worn by the ones and the others lead to disputes over the absurd matter whether the embryo is or is not a human being. Depending on the given answer, its life will be declared sacred, or on the contrary it will be denied any moral significance. The ones and the others forget to take into account what, in my opinion, is the only significant matter, that is to say the actual interests of the beings which have some, and in particular the embryo's eventual interest not to suffer. I understand well that it could be a preoccupation of animal liberation that the interests of these animals (late aborted human foetus) should also be weighed up. And the newly developing interests of the embryo remain so... embryonic, compared to those of the woman that the latter should be considered as a priority.

An easy access to an early abortion also permits to reduce the number of late abortions, which are also more painful for the woman.

Abortion and Animal Liberation

The anti-abortion position is the more often based on the attribution to the human embryo of a great significance, an inviolability, a sacred character, simply because of its belonging to our species. What the opponents of abortion want to protect is human life, independently from its sentient character. This is exactly the contrary of the animal liberation's position.

As Carol Adams says : "Some opponents to abortion define life as morally pertinent in such a large way that it includes the ovule which has just been fertilised, but at the same time in such a narrow way that adult animals, with a well developed nervous system and social sensitivities, are excluded."

It is this 'logic', giving to the label 'human' a religious respect, which makes a problem of abortion - which is then used by reactionary forces (such as fundamentalists or fascists) in order to attack women's freedom of their bodies and of their lives and to re-impose on them a role of wife-mother. It is no coincidence if they never questioned the male domination, or if they never admitted any other contraception than 'natural' ones like... sexual abstinence before marriage! Yet, this is what anyone would do who cares for the real interests of the concrete individuals ; and what the feminists, not the anti-abortions, do.

It is also the same 'logics' of sacralisation (sic) of humanity which legitimates the total despise for the interests of non-human sentient beings, and their exploitation without mercy (or with mercy) for meat, experiments, etc.

Thus, this is an absurd and horrible situation, where the same ideology declares that the life of a living form which cannot feel anything, but which is classified as human, is sacred, whereas any sentient being, because it is not human, is treated with no consideration for its interests, and is, for example, killed for the sole pleasure of eating it!

The concrete, real interests of sentient beings should matter, not their belonging to categories more or less well established such as race, sex, age or species...

¹ One will find arguments about the plants being non-sentient in Peter SINGER's Animal Liberation, and in French in les Cahiers Antispécistes no5

² The animal is called embryo between its conception and its birth, and more specifically at the beginning of the gestation (the 3 first months for humans) and foetus when it started to show a recognizable general morphology (head, legs, etc.)

³ The embryo's health only matters if one does not abort. Then it matters regarding the interests, not of the embryo as it doesn't have any, but of the child who will be born.

⁴ The French law only authorizes abortion during the first twelve weeks. The 'protection' given after this time limit to a being which does not feel anything and who has never felt anything is totally absurd. Other countries allow later abortions.

⁵ One can defend the idea that the being which is not conscious of its existence in time can have an interest not to suffer, but not to be killed. It is Peter SINGER's position in Animal Liberation and in a more developed way in Practical Ethics (2nd edition, Cambridge Univ. Press, 1993).

Animal Liberation and the Pro-life Movement - Natural Allies?

by Leslie Dove

As a vegan for over 12 years, I was horrified to discover a few years ago that many vegans/animal liberationists do not oppose abortion. I find this very inconsistent. I used to think that going as far as respecting the lives of animals meant that we had already learnt respect for human life.

The issues of animal rights and the rights of the unborn involve similar principles. In both cases there is a sentient being totally at the mercy of another. In both cases a conflict between the life of one and the liberty of the other. As vegans we have put animals' lives above our own liberty to eat them, because however important liberty is, life is the first principal of rights, as all other rights are dependent on life. We should apply the same principle in the case of abortion - that life comes before liberty.

So why do some animal liberationists deny compassion and respect for life to the unborn? I think there are several possible reasons for this to do with fear and panic associated with unplanned pregnancy, disruption of lifestyle and the invisibility of the foetus. Because it can't be seen, many people can deny that it is really a sentient life in order to justify abortion. There have been so many films on television about what happens to animals in recent years, but so little about the true facts of abortion and foetal sentience. Unless we educate ourselves about the development of the unborn, the pro-abortion lies will still be believed.

It is relatively easy to be vegan, but much harder to accept responsibility for a baby. Supportive friends and family are so essential in preventing the fear and panic that leads to abortion. Many pregnancy advisors are part of private abortion agencies, making money out of abortion. They rarely mention adoption as an option. But as animal liberationists we would prefer to rehome an animal we can't keep, rather than have it destroyed.

I have friends who now suffer the grief and regret following their abortions. They weren't told the facts or counselled or told about the pro-life crisis pregnancy help that was available. Fear and desperation led to abortion. There was a lack of partner and family support. It was not a liberating experience for these women. Now many do pro-life work to prevent abortion and heal other abortion sufferers. We must be there for friends facing crisis pregnancy.

Supportive friends can prevent a hasty decision, regretted later. They can mean the difference between life and death and prevent a lot of grief. We are all interdependent.

I plead for a greater sense of community among animal rights activists/vegans and for men to take their responsibilities seriously. Too many men run away from the situation. We should all think carefully before we act. We all know how to avoid pregnancy. The only sure way is celibacy. Various types of contraception are available, not many are vegan, some are dangerous to health and all have failure rates. Natural family planning used properly is vegan, very reliable and safe but even this method can have a failure rate. This method relies on women understanding their fertility and abstention during fertile times. We need to go beyond veganism and take responsibility for other aspects of our behaviour and the effect on ourselves and other sentient beings. If we have sex, we must accept the risks and consequences. A sentient life may be created and killed for the sake of our pleasure and this has definite parallels with the use of animal products.

Meat eaters who are against abortion are simply inconsistent the other way round, but are more likely to listen to the animal rights argument if we accept how right they are about innocent human life having a right to protection.

A vegan/animal rights and feminist pro-life movement I heard of recently is called Hardline and they are based at PO Box 5, Sheffield S3 9YH. I don't personally agree with all their philosophy, as they deal with so many other issues, but many Arkangel readers may want to look into this movement.

For anyone interested in the issues raised in this article or for more information on pro-life groups/counselling etc. contact Lesley Dove on 0181 861 1233.

Statement from the editors regarding articles about abortion:

The subject of abortion was covered in the 5th issue of this magazine. The two articles above were submitted and have been reproduced accordingly.

However, it is not the intention of the editors of Arkangel magazine to print further articles about this issue in the future.

Nightmare at NASA - Tortured monkeys to orbit the Earth

NASA and the Russian Space Agency have joined forces in cruel experiments which force monkeys to suffer agonising, invasive procedures. These multi-million dollar weightlessness experiments known as the Bion 11 and 12 projects are taking place in Russian Space Agency laboratories and are funded by the US National Aeronautics & Space Administration (NASA).

The monkeys endure six prolonged, invasive operations to implant electrodes in their brains, muscles and abdomens. The wires are threaded under the skin and exit through a hole in their backs. Wire coils are sown to their eyeballs, their tails are hacked off to accommodate the Bion chair and they are strapped down by the arms and legs to render them immobile for the two week orbit.

Bion 12 is scheduled for September 1998 in the US. A total cost to US taxpayers of $33.2m. - to conduct experiments that many in the scientific community call unnecessary and wasteful and which they categorise as 'welfare' for the Russians.

Although NASA has now asked RSA to stop the wire coil and brain electrode implant experiments, they refused. An American veterinarian saw dandelions being picked for the monkeys at the Russian laboratories when the facility ran out of food for the animals. The same veterinarian called conditions for the animals in these laboratories 'draconian'.

At NASA's Ames Research Centre, Bion monkeys have already died of hypothermia and dehydration, as well as from having bolts screwed into their brains. The head veterinarian at Ames has resigned in protest over the sloppy animal care and incompetence.

RSA and NASA say Bion will help study the effects of weightlessness on humans, loss of calcium in bones and loss of muscle tone. Yet astronauts have spent more than 400 days in space at one time and scientists have 35 years of data from studying them. Published papers on weightlessness make it clear that, even between the sexes, there are differences in reactions to micro-gravity. The enormous physiological differences between astronauts and monkeys make Bion indefensible.

Please write to the American Embassy, 24 Grosvenor Square, London W1AE and the Russian Embassy, 18 Kensington Palace Gardens, London W8 4QP and demand that Bion 12 be cancelled now.

The Myth of the Compassionate Vegetarian

by Enid Daval

I can well understand why someone might decide to become a lacto-vegetarian solely for reasons of health. Numerous studies and a great wealth of statistical evidence exists to support such a position. I can also sympathise with someone who, by degrees, becomes vegetarian for reasons of compassion. People who take this position regard their abstention from eating flesh as a step in the right direction, and by implication as something less than completely freeing themselves from being a direct cause of animal suffering. What I cannot accept though, is that someone who claims to be a lacto-vegetarian for compassionate reasons, should be content to remain so.

I do not see that it is possible to have knowledge about the dairy and egg industries, to think about the issues involved, then to come to the conclusion that to support either is consistent with a compassionate lifestyle. But I will not rely on rhetoric to make my case. Using only the basic facts and simple logic I will show that compassionate lacto-vegetarianism is a contradiction in terms!

First some of the facts about dairy farming. It is a constant source of amazement to me how many people believe that a cow naturally produces an endless stream of milk, and that it is actually a kindness to relieve her of it - otherwise her udder would explode! And of course it would be such a shame to waste this almost miraculously nourishing food! But it is for someone else to discuss the value of milk as a food, I want to deal with the process of producing it...

A dairy cow has a natural life expectancy of about twenty years. Female cattle who are not used for veal and who make it to the dairy herd are killed at between four and six years, when poor health or declining yield make her no longer profitable as a food production unit. In order that she produces milk during her short life, she will be inseminated several times and produce probably four or five calves. She will be pregnant for most of her life. It is a myth that cows have one calf then continue to produce milk indefinitely. I remember this claim being made by woman who, having had children, really ought to have known better!

Time for some logic. One cow produces say, four calves. Males are largely unnecessary, and in any case only one calf is required to be kept to maintain a dairy herd's size. Three of the four calves are killed at a few weeks for veal, or after several months for beef. There is no escape. No pushing the unpleasant facts aside. If you want to drink milk, then someone else will eat cattle.

Let's take the compassionate lacto-vegetarian's aim to its logical conclusion - a Britain where no-one eats meat, but where dairy foods are still in big demand. We have to export all our unwanted calves to countries where....? Silly, isn't it? And I haven't even mentioned selective breeding and drug treatment which produces cows with udders so huge they can barely walk. Compassion? I don't think so. And it's no good talking about the solution being humane slaughter, banning live exports, or generally trying to get people to be nicer to cows! The compassionate lacto-vegetarian has already rejected killing animals in order to satisfy their dietary desires.

Now let's look at eggs. Not surprisingly the situation is pretty much the same as for the dairy industry. The birds live only as long as they are productive, whether battery or free-range. When they are past their best, they are killed and used for foods which the lacto-vegetarian wouldn't dream of eating, like chicken soup or chicken pie. I suppose he or she might be willing to pay more for their eggs so that the hens could be sent to rest homes in the country when their working days are done; would that ease the conscience?

And what about the male chicks? Everyone seems to forget them. No matter how marvellous the free-range existence planned for the girl chicks, if you're a boy chick you won't even get to day two, unless you're headed for the broiler sheds! Can a system which kills half the population for being the wrong sex, and kills the other half when productivity (ie. profitability) falls, be compatible with a compassionate lifestyle? And I haven't even mentioned battery farming. So there you have it; if you want eggs, birds will be bred to die.

Perhaps the 'compassionate' lacto-vegetarian might like to compare him or herself to the 'considerate' neighbour, who keeps their garden neat and tidy by tipping all their rubbish over the fence! Please, if you want to see a world in which animals are not used and abused for human ends, don't stop at vegetarianism, keep moving along...

For information regarding a vegan way of life you should contact: The Vegan Society, Donald Watson House, 7 Battle Road, St. Leonards-on-Sea, East Sussex TN37 7AA (01424 427393).

They produce an excellent magazine entitled The Vegan which is a must for vegans and those seeking a truly compassionate lifestyle.

News from the ALF Press Office

by Robin Webb

The hunger strike: Fire, worms and liberation

Since the last Arkangel much has happened, surely most notable being the actions in support of Barry Horne's demands during his hunger strike. Refusing all food and liquids except water from Monday 6 January he called on the Government to end its support for vivisection within 5 years and asked all areas of the animal protection movement to use his action in whatever way they could. This wasn't an Animal Liberation Front-inspired event nor was it under any other banner; Barry was calling on the grassroots of the movement to unite in the struggle for our brothers and sisters who couldn't fight for themselves.

War in Oxfordshire...

The first major demonstration of support for Barry's demands began at 12 noon on Saturday 18 January outside Bullingdon prison. More than 150 people attended from all over the country at just 3 days' notice to express their solidarity. Not wishing to give the prison authorities any excuse to penalise other prisoners - which could also have reflected on Barry - the rally ended after an hour or so, thus avoiding any conflict with the afternoon visits.

First stop after leaving the prison was Harlan-Olac in nearby Blackthorn, breeders of many animals for vivisection including rats and mice. The police presence failed utterly in its attempt to control the anger. The perimeter fencing was torn down, windows smashed, doors ripped off their hinges... thousands of pounds worth of damage. When some panicky police heard the first bricks hitting the reinforced windows round the back they thought it was gunfire... maybe they judge everybody by their own very low standards?

Protesters then continued to Hillgrove Farm, Minster Lovell (at least, those who didn't get lost!), where cats are bred for use in the animal Belsens both here and abroad. Again, many thousands of pounds' worth of damage was caused together with a special bonus of cats and kittens liberated. Exact numbers vary but consensus suggests fifteen rescued with 5 being later recovered and returned to Hillgrove by unfeeling, uncaring upholders of laws that no-one respects. That's 10 individuals free to live their lives in peace and free from abuse. That's animal liberation.

At this point the Oxfordshire police implemented an emergency security alert across the whole county with every possible vivisection-related target on condition red, road-blocks on all main routes, helicopters in the air and reinforcements drafted in from the surrounding counties. What a lot of bother a few angry people can cause!

No arrests resulted from the Harlan-Olac incident but 26 were arrested in the wake of Hillgrove Farm of whom eight were held overnight and released late Sunday afternoon on unconditional police bail. At the time of writing no charges have been brought.

Candles and Questions

Tuesday 21st January was to see a candlelit vigil outside Bullingdon prison so that Barry's campaign was kept in the eyes and minds of the local media. Due to begin at 7 o'clock that evening this totally peaceful event gave the police an excuse to disrupt the entire area. Invoking Section 60 of the Criminal Justice Act, the barmy Old Bill designated the area around the prison, the whole of the nearby village of Blackthorn and the A421 trunk road a 'stop and search' area under special powers. In case you're wondering, this section was introduced under the pretext that it would be used to prevent terrorists smuggling explosives, etc. into the country. It has not been revealed exactly how many candles on the vigil were actually sticks of dynamite. Details are awaited with an air of expectancy.

No less than fifty campaigners attended the peaceful vigil/armed insurrection with many more turned away by police harassment and intimidation - not to mention those who didn't go, thinking a candlelit vigil was too fluffy! Those who were there found themselves followed home by the police. To aid community relations (well, I can't think of any other reason...) police even waited outside pubs while people were dropped off or refreshments taken. This concern extended as far as other counties; hopefully no nice police officers were too late home...

Earlier in the day Tony Banks, MP for Newham North West, put down four written questions and an Early Day Motion relating to Barry, his demands, and the hunger strike.

Beagles do a bunk

Consort Kennels at Harewood End, near Ross-on-Wye, Herefordshire was next on the list. Supplying beagles to any hellhole that will pay, a demonstration was called for Saturday 25th January during which the protesters embarked upon a series of meeting points which left the Old Bill in a daze.

When everyone finally arrived at Consort many demonstrators went to the main entrance while a group of intrepid ramblers approached the rear of the kennels along a bridle path only to find that the police responsible for the area seemed to have gone for a tea-break. Ignoring several private security guards the ramblers made their way through a gap in the fence to the kennels compound from which - lo and behold! - ten beagle puppies disappeared into thin air (or maybe back along the bridle path, I don't know) and were never seen again ...at least, not by anyone from Consort Kennels.

That happened despite a heavy police presence including the now-obligatory helicopter so it was hardly surprising that the Old Bill wanted revenge. Remaining behind to take photographs of the kennels and compound, for circulation to local newspapers, I was arrested on suspicion of burglary, held for several hours while my home was searched (now there's a novelty...) before being given police bail. Well, of course, on my release they couldn't possibly return incriminating items such as my New Scotland Yard-registered press card and NUJ membership card any more than they could resist taking subversive paperwork from my home ...including copies of my CV! West Mercia police have since written to tell me I won't be charged but have I got my property back? Answers on a postcard to ARNI, Freepost, c/o New Scotland Yard.

Flaming angry? You bet they'll have no truck with abuse!

Later that same night, 25th January, a group of animal liberationists launched an attack against Buxted Poultry processing plant (killing camp) at Brackley, Northamptonshire. This action was claimed as being in support of Barry although a different area of animal abuse from his demands. Intended to show that, although vivisection was high on the agenda, no target area of abuse was safe from retribution.

This raid left one refrigerated truck completely destroyed and six others severely damaged from a fleet of ten. Damage was reported to be tens of thousands of pounds prompting Detective Inspector McCully of the Northamptonshire police to warn, "We do not want to cause anyone undue alarm but... want to... urge people who work in the food industry to be extra vigilant". The ALF press office said that the warning was not thought to be aimed at Veggies Catering or similar vegan companies.

A malicious move...

Becoming alarmed at the increasing support for Barry not just in this country but around the world, from New Zealand to New York, and seeing his determination to continue on nothing but water and willpower the authorities had to exact some petty revenge. On Tuesday 28th January, into the fourth week of his hunger strike, Barry was taken from Bullingdon prison back to Bristol jail from where he'd been moved the previous Xmas Eve. Shackled in handcuffs, made to carry his own belongings, forced to walk unaided to the prison van under the gaze of the Governor and a line of prison officers. This callous, vindictive act is just one small example of the levels to which the State and the Establishment will sink when trying to protect its rotten interests in exploiting the weak and innocent.

Three-in-one

The following day, Wednesday 29th January, saw Tony Banks raising the method of Barry's move in the House of Commons. Speaking to the 'Bicester Advertiser' Mr Banks said, "It is abominable the way Barry Horne has been treated," and continued "as I understand it, he was taken to Bristol by prison van in handcuffs (but) has been on hunger strike for about 25 days ...so ...is hardly in a position to escape".

Meanwhile, earlier that morning, a cell of the ALF raided the University of Central Lancashire in Preston and liberated several hundred earthworms, wrecked thousands of pounds' worth of computer equipment and daubed ALF and anti-vivisection slogans. Yet again, this attack was claimed as being in support of Barry's demands.

As things are supposed to happen in threes the Animal Rights Militia leapt to the defence of the campaign so far by issuing a statement that they had a list of five vivisectioners who would be killed should Barry Horne die. The vivisectioners were not identified in the statement but, with Barry's return to Bristol the previous day, the whole of Bristol University was put on amber alert.

The London Marathon

A day of action in London was called for on Thursday 30th January in support of Barry's demands, beginning outside the Home Office which is responsible for both prisoners and vivisection. A noisy and spirited demonstration was covered by regional radio and television despite the usual overkill policing from the Met.

Protesters then went on to the headquarters of the Research Defence Society which they so very nearly occupied but, due to the massive police presence, ended up placing it under siege. Several fur shops were also singled out for attention with the official day of action ending at Quo Vadis restaurant. Part-owned by so called 'artist' Damien Hirst, this haven for sicko psychos also features skinned animal heads in preservative and other artistic creations from Dippy Damien, but, as charges of affray, assault and criminal damage are pending, the less said about that at the moment the better!

Jill and Barry and Dover

Saturday 1st February was the second anniversary of the death of Jill Phipps under the wheels of a lorry from hell. Demonstrations had already been planned for Dover but the anger was fuelled even more by Barry's actions. The determination began with a sit-down in the road at the entrance of the Eastern Docks which lasted some two hours with 19 arrests. Protesters then marched further down the road which was again blocked. An impromptu march through the town centre - while Dover allows live exports then the whole of Dover is guilty - was relatively unimpeded by police and McDonald's lost some glass. Out to a farm where the owner, Peter Ziolkowski, had been filmed beating calves with a rubber hose... more window glass disappeared then, finally, on to Homestead Farm at Wingham where yet more windows evaporated, an unspecified number (but thought to be around 9) rabbits liberated and the owner ended up with a broken leg when he fell over whilst chasing someone. The ambulance crew didn't seem to attend to his needs very quickly...

Oh, yes, nearly forgot. That same morning the Animal Rights Militia claimed that four powerful timed incendiary devices had been placed in the BP filling station at the entrance to the Eastern Docks with a further six in public service buildings around Dover. This was dedicated to both Barry and Jill but, as Dover and the demonstrators still exist, the claim is thought to have been one of the ARM's few hoaxes. As nothing actually happened I suppose you could say there's no ARM in it?

The American Connection

Angry animal rights activists in San Francisco, California, decided to lend a hand on Monday 3rd February when they blockaded the British Consulate and burned the Union Flag in solidarity with Barry's demands. Just a few days later the British Tourist Authority building in New York City was blockaded followed later that day by New York's British Consulate. Meanwhile, across the Atlantic Ocean, the British Consulate in Amsterdam, Holland, was receiving similar attention!

Back home, at Plaistow in East London, a butcher's shop window was taken out by an explosive device that had been taped across the front. A similar attack had been carried out a couple of months earlier against a butcher's in Collier Row.

Can't hang around too long

Friday 7th February saw Austrian mountaineer and physicist Martin Balluch abseil down the tower of Cambridge University's church, Great St Mary's, to hang a giant banner 'Barry Horne 33rd Day Hunger Strike Against Vivisection' while other protesters on the ground handed out leaflets about Barry's demands, claiming that animal experiments "Are often barbaric, and always unnecessary and unreliable".

Up and down the country and across the world nightly actions were being carried out; from windows being smashed to locks being glued; from graffiti being sprayed to vehicles being paint-stripped. The floodgates had been opened; animal rights activists and prisoners in America and other countries, as well as at home in England, began hunger strikes and food refusal of varying duration. Although the national media were deliberately ignoring what was happening the animal abusers knew what was going on. Oh yes, those who needed to know surely knew and wondered what would happen next!

Barry's triumph

On the same afternoon that Martin Balluch abseiled down the church tower Barry announced that the following Sunday at midnight, 9th February, he would end his hunger strike, having gained more than he thought possible. Vivisection firmly back on the agenda, actions taking place not just in Britain but across the world, a mood of determined anger within the grassroots movement, questions asked in Parliament and many animals free who would have had no future but torture and final, welcome, death as a release.

The two-day notice of ending his hunger strike was a positive decision by Barry, one which had been taken a few days earlier. Fearing that an announcement at the very time of ending the protest might be seen as 'giving up' the tactic of saying when he would stop, with time left to go, avoided any such accusation. So, 35 long days and nights from beginning his ordeal, five full weeks with a determination to carry on to the end if necessary, finally came to an end.

The media - a deafening silence

As I wrote at the beginning of this article, Barry's hunger strike wasn't under the ALF banner or any other umbrella name. It was done for the animals themselves and to help the animal protection movement as a whole to do whatever each section thought best in its own way. Just the common goal: Animal Liberation.

This action and all the support was newsworthy. The reasons were newsworthy, the earthworm liberation was newsworthy, the demonstrations and acts of economic sabotage were newsworthy, the international hunger strikes were newsworthy, blockading British Consulates and burning the British flag was newsworthy. Taking everything together there was no way the media could ignore what was happening. Or was there...?

Much local and regional coverage was achieved but nationally... nothing. The national radio, television and newspapers were bombarded with telephone calls, faxed press releases and lured by promises of 'exclusives' ...all to no avail. When Barry was cruelly ghosted away from Bullingdon to Bristol prison I was in regular contact with John Curtin of the ALF SG. I decided to telephone media contacts rather than just fax a press release with the outrageous news. John offered to cover the national newspapers while I did the rest; he called me back later that afternoon, a very angry man, to say he'd had no positive response at all. Two newspapers - the Daily Mirror and the Guardian had even slammed the phone down on him.

The reason for all this is simple. There are reporters, journalists and feature-writers who sympathise with animal rights views but getting them to write "something about Barry" isn't the end of the matter. Each publication has just one person, the editor, who decides what goes in or stays out. With no more than twenty national daily and Sunday newspapers that's just twenty people the State have to control, be it by funny handshakes, dirty tricks or promises of power. Add on the editors for national radio and television and you've still hardly got enough people for a decent party. Do you begin to see?

There is no doubt whatever that a conspiracy was at work to prevent animal liberation activity receiving the prominence it deserves. Certainly, road protests get coverage but that's still a novelty. The animal liberation movement was there 20 years ago. The actions are being blacked out because of their very success!

Politically, Tony Banks did more than any other MP to spotlight Barry's demands and treatment. Tony Benn and Sir Andrew Bowden gave moral support. Only the Green Party, through its animal rights group, gave its full support. I also understand that the animal rights section of the Green Party's manifesto was sharpened up quite considerably at its recent conference. Sadly, the Socialist Party manifesto doesn't even mention animal welfare in passing. Having witnessed the corruption and deceit of our (their?) parliamentary system for too many years my opinion remains unchanged: Guy Fawkes made two mistakes, (1) he failed and (2) he got caught. Is that incitement? Never mind, it's quite safe. We're talking politics here, not the end of animal abuse!

As for support from the national societies, the two largest anti-vivisection societies were not approached for support, with good reason. Even when they were aware of Barry's actions they made no attempt to contact him. Most other national organisations with an anti-vivisection interest were contacted, some of which expressed initial interest but, unhappily, this did not generally translate into positive support. Barry himself says that only two national groups actually contacted him. One, Uncaged, said basically that they did not support him but the other, BAVA did.

The overwhelming majority of animal liberation activists and campaigners supported Barry's hunger strike and all the other activities that went on around it. Everything that happened was from the grassroots, by the grassroots and carried through by the grassroots with total disregard of national society policies, media blackouts, police overkill and all the other negative factors which just got swept aside. You are the grassroots. You can be proud. You are the ones who must continue the fight.

New direct action group

Once again a new direct action group has appeared which, so far, has carried out quite low-key attacks. Low-key, that is, when compared to the Animal Rights Militia and Justice Department. Not to mention the Hunt Retribution Squad, so we won't mention them! One liberation raid already carried out was of a 12-week-old puppy who was permanently tied up outside with no shelter at a house in Dartford, Kent. The 'owner' had previous convictions for cruelty. The puppy is now happy in a good new home. Another action was at a hunt ball held at the High Rocks Inn, Royal Tunbridge Wells in Kent. The daring group used Anti-mate and citronella in the lavatories to spray doors, washbasins, taps, hand driers, toilet seats and toilet paper. Having exhausted things to spray in the loo they carried on around the hotel taking in handrails, coats in the cloakrooms, seats, glasses, tables and ...well, the smell got too much for them so they left. On the way back to base they phoned a warning that a small incendiary device had been planted in the High Rocks Inn. It was a very small device but they didn't actually describe it fully ...most would recognise it as a match.

What's that? Sorry, I didn't really mean to miss out the name of this new, dastardly group ...it's the Provisional RSPCA!

Activists in Auckland

Although animal liberation news from New Zealand is covered extremely well in the magazine 'Liberate!' (available from Auckland Animal Action, PO Box 34641, Birkenhead, Aotearoa/New Zealand) the press office has just received a cutting from 'New Zealand News UK' which deserves a mention. Reporting a spate of attacks, including the windows of twelve animal abuse businesses in one night which the ALF estimated at $10000, the report says that all butchers in Auckland were warned to stop trading by 1st October last year or face having their property vandalised. Attacks have been aimed at butchers, seafood stores, 'sports' stores and a beekeeping business.

Police said that they "hoped to clamp down on such activities before they became as serious as they had in places like Britain".

What's happening to the Press Officer?

Well, the shotgun trial which I'm involved in was due to begin on 10th March, having been ditched after several days last July. However, the Shoreham conspiracy trial under Judge Brown which was due to last around six weeks is still going after about as many months. So, it's been put back to a date to be advised, possibly late June but I'll believe it when it happens!

The conspiracy and incitement nonsense from the Hampshire Loonies (remember them?) reached the committal stage last December. That's where the magistrate either sends the case to trial at Crown Court or throws it out as a waste of time. The hearing took just over a week and ended with my five co-defendants being committed for trial but my charges being thrown out on the grounds that to proceed would be "oppressive, vexatious and an abuse of the process of the courts". In plain English, they'd tried to recycle the 'evidence' from my December 1995 trial to bring new charges having failed the first time. As my barrister said, "They are not allowed a second bite at the cherry".

Not to be deterred, the police (Hampshire Loonies) and CPS (Crown Prosecution Service) are to seek a judicial review hoping to overturn the magistrate's decision and get me back in the trial. Just in case that fails the charges against my former co-d's have been amended to read "conspired together and with Robin Webb". So, I'm still there in name and still can't get any of my property back. The Hampshire Loonies have so far arrested me four times, raided my home three times, taken me through two committals and a Crown Court trial under a High Court judge, locked me up for around seven months and tried virtual house arrest. Success so far? Nil!

CD's and shoes - "Do what?"

Some of you out there who are past your sell-by date (like me) may remember an LP entitled 'This is the ALF' which featured groups such as Conflict, Potential Threat and Lost Cherees with tracks that included "This is the ALF", "The Voiceless Now Have a Voice", "The Saboteurs' Revenge" and "Meat Means Murder".

Following a lot of enquiries over a period of time the album is going to be remastered and issued on CD with a 16-page (at least) booklet to which the ALF Press Office has been asked to contribute. If you'd like information on this CD or any others from the same company send an SAE to Mortarhate Records, PO Box 448, Eltham, London SE9.

While I'm mentioning companies may I just say that a number of people have recently approached me making a mistake that's been happening for years. The Robin Webb who owns Vegetarian Shoes in Brighton is a completely different person to me. If I was that Robin Webb I wouldn't have to keep appealing for funds to keep the press office going! Although I was around first I can't even claim royalties for the name...

Onward, ever onward

I guess that's enough for now or the editors will never let me write another article (thanks, I can hear the cheering already!). Just don't forget how the year started; full of hope, of liberation, of channelled anger, of determination, of a sense of victory ...of a feeling that here we were, the grassroots, working together, pulling together for each other and, more importantly, for our brothers and sisters of other species who cry, who scream, who die alone, who have none but us to offer hope.

It is our duty to help them, we want to help them, we must help them and we will help them. Do not falter, do not wonder "Is it right?", do not feel fear - you're not alone. Now is the time to go onward, onward, ever onward. To work in our own ways but to work together for the common goal. To achieve our dream and their freedom ...to finally be a part of the reality of animal liberation.

Whitbread & Gilders

At a demonstration at Gordon Gilders (live export transporters) on 9th February, a Gilder lorry was seen leaving the premises covered with a tarpaulin bearing the Whitbread beer company name and logo.

After contacting Whitbread, a reply was received on 27th February. Whitbread stated that: "The vehicle that you observed at Gordon Gilder's Transport would have been a Whitbread vehicle which was in transit between our sites and would have been carrying Whitbread products. The reason for this is that Gilder's Transport have worked as a contract haulier for Whitbread for some 20 years and none of the activities associated with the movement of our products are linked to other arrangements that Gilder's Transport have in operation."

Although Whitbread are not directly involved in the live export trade, by dealing with Gilder's they are indirectly involved.

Action: Write to Whitbread asking them not to deal with Gilder and tell them you will boycott their pubs and products until they stop their association with Gilder's.

Managing Director, Whitbread Beer Company, Porter Tun House, 500 Capability Green, Luton, Bedfordshire LU1 3LS.

VERDICT APPROACHES FOR McLIBEL

"It will go down in history as the most expensive and disastrous public relations exercise ever mounted by a multinational company" according to Channel 4 News. This is the 'McLibel' Trial which (after two years of testimony and eight weeks of closing speeches) is finally drawing to a close. Submissions were completed in December 1996, so now all that remains of the trial is for Mr Justice Bell, having denied the Defendants a jury, to give his personal verdict (expected in May, or possibly later).

In their Closing Speeches, Helen Steel & Dave Morris (the 'McLibel Two') had the enormous task of analysing 40,000 pages of documentary evidence, and around 18,000 pages of testimony, as well as dealing with many complex legal submissions to the judge. Since there is no Legal Aid for libel cases, Helen & Dave represented themselves against McDonald's team of top libel lawyers.

The fast-food giant is suing them over a factsheet entitled "What's Wrong With McDonald's? Everything they don't want you to know" which was produced in 1986 by London Greenpeace. The factsheet looked at the effect of huge multinationals on our society, and brought together criticisms frequently made by various groups about the promotion of junk food diets, exploitation of workers and animals, advertising to children, and damage to the environment. McDonald's had hoped to use the UK's oppressive libel laws to silence their critics, but the tables were turned and the Corporation effectively found itself on trial.

'VICTORY DAY' PLANNED - THE PUBLIC INVITED TO JUDGE FOR THEMSELVES

The McLibel Support Campaign is calling an international Victory Day of Action on the Saturday after the verdict to demonstrate McDonald's failure to censor alternative views and information. Thousands of people around the world have pledged to leaflet outside their local stores on that day and beyond, whatever the verdict in the trial. It is expected that a large majority of McDonald's 750 UK stores will be leafleted (384 have already been 'adopted' by local campaigners) in a display of solidarity with Helen & Dave and show of conviction that all the criticisms in the "What's Wrong With McDonald's?" leaflets are true and have been proved to be so in the trial (often by McDonald's own witnesses and documents). Also to be handed out will be the special leaflet for kids: "What's Wrong With Ronald McDonald?" to help build up the growing "Kids Against McDonald's" Network.

In the UK, you can assist in the coordinated leafleting on the day of action by adopting your local store. Contact the McLibel Campaign for an "Adopt-a-Store" form to complete. If you live outside the UK, please leaflet and protest outside your local store (or in some other way) on the day of action.

The factsheet (subject of the libel action) and later versions have now possibly become the most widely known and distributed protest leaflet in history. Over 2 million leaflets have already been handed out to the public in the UK alone since writs were served on the Defendants, and it is distributed in dozens of other countries. Every phrase in the current A5 "What's Wrong With McDonald's?" leaflet has now been fully referenced to documentary evidence and oral testimony in the McLibel Trial, mostly from McDonald's own sources. (The Referenced Leaflet is available from the McLibel Campaign.)

Helen & Dave recently stated: "Having been denied a jury trial, we believe that the world's public are in effect the wider jury. Campaigners are providing a valuable public service in ensuring that people everywhere continue to hear an alternative point of view to that put out by McDonald's, and therefore are able to judge for themselves. The Corporation spends $2 billion each year on advertising and promotions - our trial has shown the huge contrast between their glossy image and the reality. Whatever the verdict, the need to scrutinise and challenge multinationals has never before been greater and so the campaign is certain to continue to grow."

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF!
<http://www.McSpotlight.org/>
OFFICIAL COURT TRANSCRIPTS NOW AVAILABLE ON-LINE

Since its launch on the 16th Feb 1996, the 'McSpotlight' Internet site has been the focus of international media attention (including front page of USA Today). It has been accessed nearly 9 million times, and recently quadrupled in size with the addition of all 313 days of the official court transcripts, a historically unprecedented move. Now accessible are an estimated 19,000 pages (around 50 megabytes of data) of often riveting testimony (including the grilling of top Corporate executives) and controversial legal arguments. Whatever the judge's personal verdict, the public will have access to full information to enable them to judge for themselves - exactly the reason why McSpotlight was created. There is nothing McDonald's can do to prevent the public's right of access to this material - McSpotlight is here to stay as a public resource, uncensored and unstoppable, the final nail in the coffin of McDonald's global censorship strategy.

MULTINATIONALS SHOULD HAVE NO RIGHT TO SUE CRITICS FOR LIBEL - DEFENDANTS PREPARED TO APPEAL AND TO GO TO EUROPEAN COURT

As part of their final legal arguments, Helen & Dave submitted that UK libel laws in general - and in this case in particular - are oppressive and unfair. They argued that multinational corporations, which wield huge power and influence over the lives of ordinary people, should not be able to use libel laws against their critics, as it is of vital public importance that matters which affect peoples lives and health are areas of free, uninhibited public debate. They cited a House of Lords judgment in 1993 which admitted that the threat of a libel writ has a "chilling effect on freedom of speech" and therefore ruled that it is in the public interest that governmental bodies no longer be allowed to sue for libel. So why should multinational corporations? They are often more powerful than local or national governments, and even less accountable.

Helen & Dave also cited recent developments in European laws and existing US laws which would in general debar a similar libel case. They submitted that the McLibel case was an abuse of procedure and of public rights, particularly the denial of Legal Aid and a jury trial, that it was beyond all precedent, and that there was "an overriding imperative for decisions to be made to protect the public interest". If the verdict goes against them, Helen & Dave intend to appeal, and then if necessary take the British Government to the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg over oppressive UK libel laws.

DAMAGES AND COSTS

Outrageously, the $30 billion a year McDonald's Corporation has asked the Judge to order Helen & Dave (total joint income less than £7,500 p.a.) to pay £80-120,000 damages to the company for the criticisms made in the London Greenpeace factsheet (if McDonald's wins the case). This is despite repeated claims by the company to the media, members of Parliament and the public during the course of the trial that "it has never been [McDonald's] intention to seek damages.... from the Defendants". McDonald's obviously have no compunction about lying to the public when it suits their purposes. Indeed, their UK President admitted as much during cross examination by the Defendants on day 246 of the trial. Paul Preston said he was 'concerned' that the company's press releases about the McLibel Trial contained 'errors', he was then asked "But you are not concerned enough to actually do something to stop the dissemination of false information by McDonald's?", to which he replied "Not at present, no". To this day the company continues to distribute the same inaccurate press releases to the media. (Proof of McDonald's lies on the damages issue is available on request.)

Helen & Dave are seeking damages in their counterclaim against McDonald's UK for libel in the Press Releases and 300,000 defamatory leaflets produced by the company. Both sides are claiming costs for the claim and counterclaim (McDonald's costs have been estimated to total £5 - 10 million).

DEFENDANTS COMPLAIN TO LORD
CHANCELLOR OVER APPEAL COURT BIAS

The McLibel Support Campaign has no illusions about British 'justice'. It is clear that libel laws are in place to protect the interests of the rich and powerful and preserve the status quo. During their trial, Helen & Dave went to the Court of Appeal a number of times to challenge, unsuccessfully, legal judgments made against them by Mr Justice Bell, the trial judge. Following an Appeal hearing on 2nd April 1996, Helen & Dave wrote to the Lord Chancellor to express their concern that their appeal had been pre-judged - a copy of the Appeal Courts' draft 'ruling' (prepared before the hearing had taken place) had mistakenly been handed to Helen & Dave.

The Lord Chancellor replied on 26th July 1996. He confirmed that the documents "were Lord Justice Hirst's note" and continued "Judges often have notes to refer to, which they prepare to help them when giving their judgment". How can it be fair for a Judge to make any kind of note on what the judgment will be when they have not heard any argument from the appellants? Lord Justice Hirst's 'notes' were read out virtually word for word when he gave his judgment.

In the face of oppressive libel laws, the denial of Legal Aid and a jury, and as a result of this and other judgments, Helen & Dave believe that their battle to defend themselves and the right to criticise multinationals must be taken directly to the public.

Even if McDonald's 'win' in the courts, they will in any event lose the battle on the streets.

DEFENDANTS INTEND TO SUE McDONALD'S SPIES

During the trial, McDonald's admitted that at least seven private investigators were hired to infiltrate London Greenpeace, and that one or more were present at nearly all weekly meetings between October 1989 to March 1991. Five of these spies gave evidence in the trial, one of them as a witness for the Defence. Three admitted they had distributed the London Greenpeace Factsheet which is the subject of the libel action. In the light of this, Helen & Dave intend (if they lose the case and have damages awarded against them) to sue those three investigators for damages.

UNDERPAID FORMER EMPLOYEES URGED TO SUE

During the trial there was controversy over McDonald's non-payment of UK minimum statutory overtime rates (applicable up to 1992). McDonald's finally admitted in their closing submissions that it was "likely...that for some workers, at some times, their overall pay...was less than their statutory entitlement". The judge calculated that one Defence witness, former worker Siamak Alimi, had been underpaid and was owed £175, allowing for 'compound interest'. As a result, Mr Alimi has written to McDonald's this week to demand the money he's owed. Contrary to what many had been told by the company at the time, all employees on the basic starting wage were entitled to additional overtime minimum rates up to 1986, and those over 21 were entitled up till 1992. Helen & Dave are urging all former UK employees who worked overtime before 1992 to seek advice, to write to the company demanding payment, or to sue the company.

EMPLOYEES, FRANCHISEES & LOCAL RESIDENTS UP IN ARMS

Already facing the humiliation of declining sales in the US (despite spending $200m promoting new products), McDonald's this month found itself being attacked from all sides in disputes which have great potential to spread. At a store in St-Hubert (Quebec, Canada), 82% of the workers (fed up with the poor pay and conditions) have joined the Teamsters union. Although there have been a number of attempts to unionise in the past, this is the first time that unionisation looks likely to succeed and it could spread to other stores.

Meanwhile, local residents in the beautiful Blue Mountains (NSW, Australia) have successfully resisted McDonald's plans to open a store at Katoomba. After receiving 5,000 letters of objection to the proposal and only 15 in support, the local council rejected the plans and McDonald's have decided not to appeal against the decision.

Also, McDonald's attempts to halt its declining US sales are generating opposition from many of its franchisees (over 80% of US stores are franchises). The company is trying to force the franchisees to reduce the price of a Big Mac from $1.90 to a loss-making 55 cents, and to give free sandwich vouchers to any customers not served within 55 seconds.

Elsewhere, the Bermudan premier, Dr David Saul, announced his resignation on March 19th following uproar in the country at his unpopular decision to allow former Premier Sir John Swan to operate a number of McDonald's franchises on the island. Strong opposition by rebel members of Dr Saul's own party (the UBP) pushed a bill through the 'House of Assembly' called the 'Prohibited Restaurant Bill' banning McDonald's and other fast food stores in Bermuda. The bill has yet to be ratified by the Senate - a decision is expected in late June.

BOOK & DOCUMENTARIES

Before Mr Justice Bell makes his ruling, Macmillan will publish the book McLibel: Burger Culture on Trial (cost: £15.99) by John Vidal (a Guardian journalist). It was originally written with Helen & Dave as joint authors, but rewritten after Macmillan (and their libel lawyers) demanded substantial changes and the sidelining of the Defendants, fearing a writ from McDonald's despite the book's accuracy. A reconstruction drama is being filmed for UK Channel 4 and is expected to be shown after the verdict. A definitive TV documentary is also currently in production.

SOCIETY WITHOUT EXPLOITATION AND OPPRESSION

Helen & Dave see the McLibel case as part of a wider battle to create a society without exploitation and oppression, based around sharing of resources. "We want people to have control of their own lives rather than having them dictated by Government or big business," says Helen. "It's vital that people have access to alternative information about companies so they can make their own decisions."

"I think this is particularly important in an age where kids are being 'taught' about business at an increasingly young age". McDonald's UK 1994 Annual Review stated "McDonald's involvement with schools in the past has been primarily through our local restaurants. However our support for education took a major step forward in 1993 with the creation of McDonald's Education Service". The Review went on to talk about links between schools and businesses and gave an example of a project with an Infant School in Scunthorpe: "The school then based its autumn term work on McDonald's. This included maths, history, music, dance and language classes. Three McDonald's 'restaurants' were set up and children as young as four started to develop an understanding of business". Helen views this as "really sick, it's basically indoctrinating young children into the corporate way of thinking."

Please send donations and/or requests for information to:

McLibel Support Campaign,
5 Caledonian Road,
London N1 9DX, UK.
Tel/Fax 0171 713 1269.

E-mail & Listserver: dbriars@world.std.com

Internet info on McLibel, McDonald's and multinationals at:

<http://www.McSpotlight.org/>

Some Recommended Reading...

ALF Supporters Group Newsletter: BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX. £1.50. Contains information concerning A/R prisoners and defence funds, articles and news. Quarterly.

ARC News: PO Box 339, Wolverhampton WV10 7BZ (01902 711935). Free with SAE. Contains reports of local group activities as well as an up-to-date list of events.

Animals Contact List: Veggies, 180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HW. £4 (£3 unwaged). The booklet provides a coordinated means by which groups can contact one another with details of their work, news of campaigns and requests for support.

Eco-Vegan: BM Heal, London WC1N 3XX. Free with SAE. Contains information concerning A/R and Earth liberation activities.

Frontline Magazine: Victoria Road, Yarmouth, Isle of Wight PO41 0QW. £6.66 for 4 issues. Contains information for travellers, about music and festivals, spirituality, art and culture and politics.

Green Anarchist: BCM 1715, WC1N 3XX. £1.00. Contains news, views and an ALF hit-list amongst other things.

London Animal Rights News: BM 2248, London WC1N 3XX. £5 (£3 unwaged) for 12 issues. Highly recommended with news of London events as well as those in other parts of the country/world.

Liberate: Auckland Animal Action, PO Box 100109, North Shore Mail Centre, Aotearoa, New Zealand. 'Liberate' is a highly informative magazine which promotes veganism and animal liberation. Those interested in subscribing should write to AAA for details.

No Compromise: PO Box 240655, Apple Valley, MN 55124, USA. $20 outside of US. An excellent paper that is packed with news regarding the animal liberation movement.

Squall: PO Box 8959, London N19 5HW. £1.50 + 80p p&p. A year's sub (4 issues costs £10). Covers issues such as Earth/Animal liberation, road protests and more.

Slaughter of the Innocent: Available from BAVA, PO Box 82, Kingswood, Bristol BS15 1YF. £5.50 (inc p&p). A book by Hans Ruesch which is invaluable for those wishing to know about the medical fraudulence of vivisection.

Underground: NA-ALFSG, Box 69597, 5845 Yonge Street, Willowdale, Ontario, Canada M2M 4K3. $20 outside of US. A highly recommended paper which contains Animal Liberation news from all over the world including a comprehensive ALF/direct action hit-list.

Vegan Views: 6, Hayes Avenue, Bournemouth BH7 7AD. £3.00 for 4 issues. The magazine acts as an exchange between its readers.

The Vegan: Donald Watson House, 7 Battle Road, St Leonards-on-Sea, East Sussex TN37 7AA (01424 427393). £1.75 quarterly. A must for those already vegan or those seeking a vegan lifestyle.

THE ROAD TO VICTORY!

The orthodox approach to cancer almost invariably leads to failure. (The Lancet, undated).

The number of barn owls, having decreased 70% since the 1930's to 4,500 pairs, is increasing. (Independent 19.8.1996)

A 32 year-old Leicestershire man died yesterday after being hit by lightning while fishing. (Independent 25.8.1996)

A record haul of illegally-held rhinoceros horn was seized in London. 105 white and black rhino horns worth £2.8m were seized by police and RSPCA in a joint undercover operation. (Independent 4.9.1996)

A chief constable has justified in spending £2,600 on looking after a dog while the owner was in prison as 'the cost of caring policing'. (Daily Telegraph 11.9.1996)

A couple have spent more than £2,500 bringing home an abused and neglected dog they saw on two separate holidays to their villa in Italy. (Times 17.9.1996)

A giant crocodile that had been regularly jabbed by a keeper to make it snap its jaws and lash its tail for tourists finally bit off the arm of its tormentor. Now, the owners of the reptile park in Harare, Zimbabwe face prosecution for cruelty to animals. (Times 18.9.1996)

An injured housemartin is to be flown by an airline to its winter home in North Africa. Air Algerie has offered to carry the bird which is unable to migrate after a cat tore out its wing feathers. (Times 25.9.1996)

Seven years after the Exxon Valdez ran aground in Alaska's Prince William Sound, a jury's verdict that Exxon should pay £3.2 billion in punitive damages has been formally delivered in federal court. Every year the process drags on the corporation must show it can pay interest at 5.9% in addition to the £3.3billion lump sum. (Times 26.9.1996)

Anti-fur demonstrators were arrested in Moscow after they stripped, wrapped themselves in sheets covered with slogans, and marched into Red Square chanting 'We'd rather go naked than wear fur'. They were protesting against a fur exhibition in the Russian capital. (Times 26.9.1996)

Environment Secretary John Gummer launched a new clamp-down on crimes against wildlife including organised badger baiting. The subject will be discussed at a conference and will also focus on the illegal trade in endangered species. (Evening Standard 3.10.1996)

Animal welfare campaigners yesterday attacked the RSPB for supporting a cull of ruddy ducks. Around 30 Animal Aid supporters demonstrated outside the RSPB's annual meeting in central London. (Independent on Sunday 6.10.1996)

Up to a million people turned vegetarian after the Government's disclosure of a possible link between BSE and CJD. The Vegetarian Society's membership had increased by 5% to 20,000. The Society was taking several thousand enquiries a week. (Times 7.10.1996)

An Ipswich man who strangled his dog after it bit him is starting an 18 month jail sentence today. Shaun Norman, 28, was committed to the crown court for sentence for offences of causing an animal unnecessary suffering (his sentence included unrelated offences). (Evening Star 8.10.1996)

Germans, one of the carnivores of Europe, are turning into vegetarians, according to the German Vegan Society, which calculates that one fifth of the nation now eats no or little meat. People under 39 bought a third less meat last year than the year before. An well known meat manufacturer is adding soy sausages and soy nuggets to its range. (Times 9.10.1996)

A New York teenager was crushed to death by his pet python after he had failed to keep the snake properly fed, police reported. (Times 11.10.1996)

Stephen Rees, 31, needed eight stitches after being bitten by a pike as he swam in a river. Mr. Rees is an amateur angler. (Daily Mail 11.10.1996)

Midlands Electricity is to spend £30,000 on a road diversion to a power station so as not to disturb a badger family. (Guardian 16.10.1996)

Beef consumption in Britain is never likely to recover to levels prior to the BSE crisis, Douglas Hogg, the Minister of Agriculture said yesterday. (Independent 16.10.1996)

An Oslo court ruled that an egg carton's depiction of happy wandering hens in a farmyard was illegal because it was far from the reality of industrial egg production. (Independent 17.10.1996)

Dairy farmers across East Anglia are facing five figure losses following the collapse of Lord Rayleigh's Dairies. (East Anglian Daily Times 18.10.1996)

A Felixstowe man has had a painting displayed at a major exhibition to highlight cruelty to animals. Olaf Castle attends the Felixstowe resource unit for help with learning difficulties. Anglia Railways provided him with a complimentary ticket to travel to the south coast, where he met Carla Lane, a campaigner against animal cruelty. (Ipswich Evening Star 19.10.1996)

Pipeline workers are mounting daily patrols to stop rare natterjack toads straying into their trench at Millom, Cumbria. Any errant toads are carefully returned to their natural habitat in a bucket. (Daily Mail 21.10.1996)

Following new animal cruelty laws in Spain, the festival in Manganeses de la Polvorosa no longer drops a live goat (to its death) from its church steeple; the goat is now lowered on ropes. (Independent 23.10.1996)

The RSPB yesterday announced a rescue strategy for 24 endangered European species. It also includes plans to improve the UK habitat of rare corncrakes and aquatic warblers. (Daily Telegraph 24.10.1996)

Around 50 animal rights protesters staged a 24 hour vigil and fast at Dover docks against continuing live exports, as police escorted lorries taking sheep through the port. (Independent 26.10.1996)

More species of birds are breeding in Britain than at any time since 1800, with around 230 species - as against 194 in 1800. 100 of Britain's breeding bird species have declined, 130 species have increased or held their own, 20 species are in steep decline, 18 are increasing rapidly. ((Independent on Sunday 27.10.1996)

Eight naked models sought shelter behind a banner supporting the new anti-fur campaign being launched in chilly central London yesterday by the animal rights group People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals. The demonstration staged by the Boss model agency, which has pledged to refuse all fur bookings, was mirrored by a protest in Times Square, New York, starring Calvin Klein's Marcus Schenkenberg and Joel West together with Versace, GAP, Mossimo and L'Oréal models. (Independent 31.10.1996)

The Labour Party will suspend hunting on all government owned land, forestry commission land and any other land. (BBC South Today 1.11.1996)

Two whales charged a shark net and ripped it apart after their calf became entangled in it by its tail. (Independent 4.11.1996)

Birds living on Britain's waterways are thriving as never before, with 18 out of 20 regularly monitored species showing increases in population last year. (Times 6.11.1996)

A collie dog missing for 5 days was recovered unhurt by a cliff rescue team yesterday after it was seen stranded on a one-foot ledge halfway down a 500 foot cliff at Combe Martin, Devon. It is thought to have lived on rainwater. (Times 12.11.1996)

Women can ease menopausal symptoms by adding soya bean protein to their diet, scientists in America have found. Fewer hot flushes and night sweats were suffered by women who sprinkled powered soya protein on cereals or mixed it into drinks. The British Menopause Society said it could lead to development of a natural remedy for women unable or unwilling to take hormone replacement therapy. (Times 12.11.1996)

A farmer who left animals to starve to death has been fined £1,200. Alfred Grant of Top Farm, Grandborough, pleaded guilty to six charges of causing unnecessary distress to animals and failing to dispose of their carcasses. (Rugby Observer 14.11.1996)

Burning and heating the BSE agent to white hot ash does not kill the infective agent. Lethal radiation won't kill it, neither will disinfectant. (BBC Horizon 17.11.1996)

A vet was banned from practising yesterday for causing unnecessary suffering to Alsatian dogs in her care. Helen Hein, 69, of Amberwell Kennels near Guildford, Surrey was told by the RCVS that her name would be removed from its register. (Times 21.11.1996)

A Durham ambulance crew revived a tawny owl with oxygen after it hit their windscreen and was knocked unconscious. The bird was kept under observation and set free the next day. (Times 21.11.1996)

A farm manager, Robert Jasper of Cardingham, Cornwall, was fined £500 for cruelty after he allowed 400 deer to starve to death and then buried their bodies in pits. (Times 22.11.1996)

Schools and universities have been told to stop using sheep eyes in laboratory experiments. Existing stocks can be exhausted, but the Dept. of Education and Employment said they must be incinerated after use. Cattle eyes have been banned from experiments since July. (Times 23.11.1996)

Labour plans to boost organic farming and treble the amount of money given to farmers to protect the environment in a 'new deal' for the countryside to be announced this week. The policy includes the setting up of areas where farmers would receive grants for fulfilling conservation plans. (Independent on Sunday 24.11.1996)

Twenty five people aged from 2 to 90 years old have been admitted to hospital after an outbreak of food poisoning in Scotland linked to an award winning butcher, John Barr & Son in Wishaw, awarded the title of Scottish butcher of the year in September. E.Coli 0157 has been linked to Mr Barr's butchers. (Independent 25.11.1996)

The Government has announced the tightening up of food safety with a £500,000 campaign after Britain's worst E.Coli outbreak continued to rise. More than 180 people have shown signs of the food poisoning, with five pensioners dead. Lanarkshire is the worst hit area, with 155 suspected cases; more than 200 people have been screened for the E.Coli 0157 bacterium with 73 confirmed cases in Lanarkshire. (Independent 30.11.1996)

The American actor Robin Williams has twice turned down merchandising deals with McDonald's. (Unknown source December 1996)

Animal rights activists protesting at pig races held by Somerset farmers were mollified to find the pigs were battery powered models. (Independent on Sunday 1.12.1996)

An anti-fur protester identifying herself only as 'Auntie Langerfield' and wearing only a towel - waved to motorists passing on Phillips highway in Florida. With about 100 others, the woman was protesting about the sale of furs by the Gayfer stores at the Avenues Mall. Her sign read: 'I'd rather go naked than wear fur'. She turned down a passer-by's offer to buy the towel. (Independent on Sunday 1.12.1996)

Hunt protester Neal Buckoke had his appeal against conviction for aggravated trespass upheld yesterday after a key witness failed to turn up at Dorchester crown court. Mr Buckoke, 29, was convicted by Dorchester magistrates in September for disrupting a winter meeting of the Cattistock hunt in the grounds of Ilchester estate at Melbury Osmond. (Dorset Evening Echo 3.12.1996)

Labour has called on the government to take immediate steps to stop genetically altered American corn being allowed to enter the British food chain, after ministers had been warned it was on its way and it posed a risk to health. (Independent 5.12.1996)

A farmer trying to put down a sick cow died when his humane killer went off and hit him in the chest. Michael Spencer, 51, was trying to escape from a pen at Wiston, Pembrokeshire, after the cow became aggressive. (Times 7.12.1996)

Seven staff at the Scottish butcher, John Barr & Son, are infected by the potentially fatal E.Coli bacterium, the authorities disclosed. (Independent on Sunday 8.12.1996)

The father of two young children whose mother died of CJD is to sue the government over the death. His ex-wife died aged 35 and he intends proving the government was negligent in failing to warn the public of the dangers of eating beef. (Independent 9.12.1996)

Fresh fruit and vegetables can help protect against cancer, it is to be revealed today. The Institute of Food Research believes they have found the mechanism by which beta-carotene, present in carrots, apricots, broccoli and other green vegetables, protects against cancer. There is increasing interest in using a healthy diet to boost the immune system. A fibre-rich diet can help prevent bowel cancer and soya has been suggested as a help against breast cancer. (Guardian 10.12.1996)

Bad day for Antonio Iglesias, a hunter of wild boar in a remote region of Spain, who was shot in his backside when his dog stepped on the trigger of his gun. (Independent 11.12.1996)

A farmer has died in what appears to have been a tragic shooting accident in the middle of the night. Land owner James Hall, 52, is thought to have been killed by a blast from his own 12-bore when he stumbled and fell into a ditch as he hunted a fox. (Ipswich Evening Star 13.12.1996)

Prof. Richard Lacey, the Leeds University microbiologist, has told the Government's Food Advisory Board that it was impossible to cook several varieties of meat to a safe level. He did 6 months of experiments using bacteria and temperature probes and found that he couldn't cook some of burgers thoroughly without burning them, which means there is a danger of E.Coli bacteria surviving. (Observer 15.12.1996)

Paul and Linda McCartney received an award from the animal rights group PETA for their work in fighting and publicising animal cruelty, especially the fur trade. (Times 16.12.1996)

Four slaughterhouses have been fined sums of less than £10,000 for failing to apply safety rules introduced to curb the spread of CJD. A report by MAFF confirmed that rules are still being broken in spite of efforts to eradicate the disease, which claimed its 13th victim with the death of a 19 year old woman. (Independent 19.12.1996)

No external contaminants have been found in genetically engineered American soya after bio-saboteurs broke into the processing plant in Bootle where it was being stored and painted X's on storage tanks containing the soya. (Independent 21.12.1996)

The DOH has come under fire after using a large chunk of text supplied by a drug company representative in a letter to a concerned member of the public. The letter concerned the alleged link between organophosphates (OP) and BSE. Three quarters of the 500 word letter is virtually identical to the drug company letter. The match was spotted by Mark Purdey, a Somerset dairy farmer, who first suggested the OP/BSE link. (Independent 21.12.1996)

John Gummer MP and Ken Collins MEP attacked moves by the EU to lift a ban on fur trade with North America and Russia. (Guardian 24.12.1996)

A baby seal, separated from its mother and washed ashore by strong tides in Guernsey was given an all expenses paid flight to a Norfolk seal sanctuary by Air UK Channel Islands. (East Anglian Daily Times 27.12.1996)

The number of fox hunts has fallen to its lowest level for 30 years according to LACS. 43 hunts have disbanded since the 1960's leaving 187 fox hunts across Britain, whereas drag hunt numbers had almost tripled. Almost all the 280 Boxing Day hunts were called off because of freezing weather. More than 1000 demonstrators turned up at meets. (Guardian 27.12.1996)

A North Wales farmer was fined £3,000 yesterday after vicious illegal traps were used to kill crows. Hugh Griffith Jones, 58, claimed his sons were responsible for setting the cruel gin traps on his 400 acre farm at Rhosfawr, near Pwllheli. (Daily Post, Wales 28.12.1996)

The Scotmid supermarket chain was accused of scare-mongering after advising customers to return food in the wake of the E.Coli epidemic. The Scottish Office said there had been no new confirmed cases of E.Coli since the 20th December. 409 people had shown symptoms, 258 had been confirmed cases. (Independent 31.12.1996)

The American ALF has raided 22 mink farms in the past year, causing millions of dollars of damage, liberating thousands and destroying irreplaceable genetic data cards. In Utah, where mink ranching is a $30m a year industry, legislators are preparing a bill that would make the crime of releasing fur-bearing animals from farms a felony. (Guardian 31.12.1996)

Mike Bugara, a conservationist in Kenya, has discovered a way to make paper from elephant dung. One Kenyan welfare society has decided to use elephant dung paper for its official invitation cards. (Independent 10.1.1997)

John Barr, of Wishaw, Lanarkshire appeared on petition at Hamilton sheriff court to face culpable and reckless conduct charges arising from him allegedly supplying cooked meat which left 16 pensioners dead. (Independent 11.1.1996)

American celebrities are queuing up to criticise Anna Wintour, British born editor-in-chief of US Vogue, for unashamed championing of fur-wearing. A woman threw a racoon carcass at her while she ate in a restaurant. (Independent on Sunday 12.1.1997)

Rita Cassesi, 53, from Bracknell, Berkshire, appeared in court yesterday charged with causing unnecessary suffering to a duck she was supposed to be looking after in the school holidays. (Guardian 15.1.1997)

Britain has been accused of packing EU veterinary committees with officials to push their side of the BSE case and putting pressure on the commission not to inspect slaughterhouses. A report questions the impartiality of British officials and of biased reading of the advice and warnings of the scientists. (Independent 15.1.1997)

Video footage of appalling conditions in which dogs are bred on puppy farms was used by the RSPCA to launch a private member's bill to end their suffering. The Bill would require independent vet inspections of all breeding establishments, ease local authority action against unlicensed breeders, and prevent retailers buying or selling animals from unlicensed breeders. (Guardian 15.1.1997)

Scientific forecasts suggest the new variant for CJD (v-CJD) will kill between 1,000 and 10,000 and may be spread over the next 30 years, but it could take 4 years to get a clear picture. There have been 14 cases of v-CJD in the UK so far, with incubation periods of 10-25 years. (Independent 16.1.1997)

"Manifestly there are physiological and anatomical differences between man and other animals and no medical scientist of any standing would automatically translate findings from one mammalian species directly to another". Dean of Medicine, University of Southampton. (People 16.1.1997)

A Europe-wide study is investigating whether proteins in cows' milk could trigger diabetes, which used to be very rare in under-fives. The rise was said to be 'very dramatic'. Scientists think a protein in the cows' milk may prompt the immune system to attack insulin-producing cells. (Sunday Times 19.1.1997)

Stuart Hobden, a former gamekeeper, was convicted of causing unnecessary suffering to 373 birds. He was banned from keeping birds and fined £1,000 with £3,000 costs. (Unknown Source 21.1.1997)

Peking: Three people who sold two panda skins were jailed for 15 years by a southern China court. The maximum penalty for killing or selling the fur of the threatened species is death. (Times 24.1.1997)

A MORI poll conducted around Europe has concluded that an average of only 22% think that genetically modified food should be developed, whereas only 17% said they would eat GM food. (Independent 25.1.1997)

New variant CJD, which has claimed the lives of 12 Britons, claimed the life of a 41 year-old German woman. Scientists disclosed last March that the research suggests the new form will kill up to 80,000 Britons over the next 20-30 years. (Observer 26.1.1997)

Animal rights activists claimed responsibility for a fire attack on seven lorries loaded with frozen Buxted fresh quality poultry at Brackley, Northamptonshire last Saturday night which caused thousands of pounds worth of damage. (Independent 27.1.1997)

The World Wide Fund for Nature has set up a telephone line for British travellers abroad for information about the unlawful sale of exotic animals and plants. The initiative also hopes to encourage the public to report suspicious advertisement for pets and the sales of unusual species in shops. The 24 hour hot-line is 01483 426 111. (Times 28.1.1997)

The supermarket chain Waitrose yesterday abandoned 'for the foreseeable future' a scheme to sell live lobsters at its supermarket fish counters. (Times 28.1.1997)

Tesco announced help to its major vegetable suppliers to switch to organic farming because of rapidly growing demand. (Independent 29.1.1997)

The humpback whale is re-colonising British waters more than 60 years after Scottish whalers harpooned their last one in 1928 it was announced yesterday. Scientists have discovered a steady increase in the number of the animals off Cornwall, Devon and Dorset, the Northern Irish Sea and Shetland. (Times 29.1.1997)

The Chief Constable of Sussex's limit on police protection for live exports to two days a week was not unreasonable, the court of appeal ruled, against an appeal by International Traders Ferry Ltd, that it was unreasonable and unjustified. (Independent 31.1.1997)

Police made several arrests yesterday as about 250 animal rights activists blocked roads into Dover's Eastern Docks. The demonstration marked the second anniversary of the death of Jill Phipps who died during live export protests. (Independent on Sunday 2.2.1997)

Nineteen people were arrested when 300 people blockaded the entrance to Dover docks yesterday in a protest at animal exports. (Sunday Times 2.2.1997)

Sir Andrew Lloyd-Webber has been the victim of a campaign of threats and intimidation since he announced a year ago his intention to build an ostrich farm at his grand Sydmonton Court estate in Hampshire. Lloyd-Webber has now abandoned his ostrich plans. (Evening Standard 3.2.1997)

Animal research scientists at Oxford and Bristol universities are on security alert after death threats against five vivisectioners. The Animal Rights Militia threatened reprisals if Barry Horne, who has been on hunger strike for 4 weeks while awaiting trial, should die in a Bristol prison. (Times 5.2.1997)

The manufacturers of Milumil baby powder, linked with a salmonella outbreak, have admitted tests showed an 'association' between the product and the food poisoning the Dept. of Health said. (Times 5.2.1997)

A daily helping of brazil nuts helps protect against heart diseases, cancer and low fertility, as the nuts contain selenium. (Independent 7.2.1997)

About 60 animal rights supporters and hunt saboteurs were arrested after a series of violent incidents targeted at farming and bloodsports. The trouble started on Sunday morning after some 100 protesters streamed into rural Cheshire in convoy. (Independent 10.2.1997)

More than 80 animal rights protesters were arrested in Cheshire on the anniversary of the death of hunt saboteur Mike Hill, 18, who was killed trying to stop the hunt six years ago. Six people attacked a man with a whip and clubs. In another incident, two men shooting pigeons were terrorised by convoy members who stole their shotgun cartridges. (Guardian 10.2.1997)

Russia's diamond producing Yakutia region signed a deal with the WWFN to protect arctic lakes and forests in a quarter of its territory. The Swiss based fund will allocate $350,000 (£218,000) to pay for conservation projects. (Independent 12.2.1997)

Anne Finch has saved 60 Spanish greyhounds from being hanged after they had run their last race. About 1,000 greyhounds a year are sent to Spain from Ireland and the UK. They are used for racing, hunting rabbits or coursing. The greyhound owners and trainers showed a blase attitude. Anne has spent £40,000 on saving the dogs and is producing a video with a Spanish soundtrack which is aimed at dog owners, and is writing a book on her experiences. (Independent on Sunday 16.2.1997)

Athens: Police in the northern Greek town of Beria arrested 16 people on charges of organising a dog fight in which two deliberately starved pitbulls were set against each other. (Times 18.2.1997)

The European Parliament will endorse a call for the repayment of £500m compensation paid to British farmers for the slaughter of BSE cattle, claiming the crisis was caused by a greedy farm industry turning cows into cannibals. The Government has spent £60m on research since 1986. (Times 19.2.1997)

Britons face an increased risk of cancer by eating foods, such as milk, contaminated by the Chernobyl accident. Monitoring of food following the accident was 'half-hearted and fairly ridiculous'. (Independent 20.2.1997)

Millions of Belgians, including the Prime Minister, shunned meat yesterday to mark the anniversary of the murder of a meat inspector by an international 'hormone mafia'. At a press conference last week, one journalist wanted to know why it took his death to bring effective measures to stop the trade in illegal hormones, which stimulate artificial growth. Hormone fraud is giving beef such a bad name that sales have fallen by 23% during the last decade in Belgium. (Guardian 21.2.1997)

Ecologists are preparing to reintroduce the pine martin to England, where it was common less than 200 years ago. They were killed off by hunters for their fur coats, or by game keepers who saw them as a threat to game birds. A study funded by English Nature has identified four sites in England suitable for colonies to be re-established. Pine martins were re-introduced to Scotland during 1980-81. (Independent 24.2.1997)

The backlog of cattle carcasses waiting to be incinerated will take 13 years to clear, the Labour Party has claimed. BSE has cost £3.5 billion in lost exports, compensation to farmers, administration, storage and incineration. (Independent 25.2.1997)

Grouse shooters are to be banned from one of Britain's most famous beauty spots, Ilkley Moor. Bradford City Council, which owns six square miles of upland heath, decided yesterday that there would be no 'Glorious Twelfth' this August or on any future one. Jack Wormersley, chairman of the sub-committee of the Labour controlled council which took the decision said: 'We'd rather everyone had the chance to look at all of the wildlife, including the grouse at that time of year, instead of just the shooters killing them'. (Independent 26.2.1997)

The Big Mac hamburger appears to be in trouble amid reports of an unexpected slump in US sales, and the McDonald's corporation of Oak Brook, Illinois, has begged distributors to slash prices to defend its future. (Times 27.2.1997)

Otters roam central Glasgow and have returned to almost all of Scotland, a survey has found. The mammal's population north of the border may now be more than 10,000. The survey which took four years and was financed by Vincent Wildlife Trust, found only 2% of Scotland's area was now uncolonised. Otters were almost wiped out throughout Britain by pesticides and other water pollution. (Independent 4.3.1997)

A butcher was fined £18,000 after a court saw a film of rats scaling a fence into the shop. Environmental health officers also found evidence of dead pigeons, rat infestation and dirt when they inspected JR Quality Halal Meats at 163, Upper Tooting Road, South London. (Streatham Mercury 6.3.1997)

The sacrifice of a sheep at an art fair in Moscow has caused outrage. Kazakhs slaughtered the sheep, smeared its entrails over their bodies, and drank the blood from sacrificial cups, part of legitimate performance art. Germans protesting started a fight and the Kazakhs have been banned from the exhibition. (Independent 6.3.1997)

Naomi Campbell was sacked yesterday as the figurehead of an international animal charity for wearing a full-length fur coat in a fashion show. PETA accused the 26 year old model of being a hypocrite after seeing her in animal skins at a show in Milan for Fendi, Italy's leading furrier. (Times 12.3.1997)

Two men who developed rashes on their faces and upper bodies after eating tuna fell victim to a rare form of poisoning, doctors report. Both also developed swollen throats, flushing and diarrhoea. (Times 12.3.1997)

Ponies and donkeys roaming wild in the New Forest, Hampshire, are to be fitted with reflective collars in an attempt to reduce the number of night-time accidents involving heavy traffic in the area. (Times 13.3.1997)

A Jack Russell called Chance was rescued from the Mersey by Eamonn McGlacken and Scott Ward. They were repairing the sea wall at New Brighton when they heard screams from the dogs owner and the two workmen managed to rescue the dog with the aid of a digger bucket. (Times 13.3.1997)

Just when people thought it was safe to eat meat, comes antibiotic residues in pork and turkey. Over use of antibiotics could lead to no effective treatment for human infections. (Independent 6.3.1997)

The Ivory Coast's government has banned trade in elephant tusks, saying it wanted to save its national symbol. (Guardian 10.3.1997)

The London restaurant Quo Vadis was recently picketed by animal rights activists after displaying two skinned cow's heads pickled in formaldehyde. The restaurant is jointly owned by Marco Pierre White and Damien Hirst. (Guardian 12.3.1997)

EU laws coming into use in June will allow the prosecution of importers and sellers of banned animal parts to go ahead. This will help to stem the use of endangered animal parts. (BBC South Today 13.3.1997)

A Golden Eagle with a wing span of 8ft is learning to fly again after being shot by a Bosnian hunter who had planned to sell it to a zoo or have it stuffed. The eagle was rescued by British soldiers serving in Bosnia who will release it back into the wild in Scotland later this year. (Times 18.3.1997)

Arkangel Magazine
BCM 9240
London
WC1N 3XX

TRK ANGEL

£1.80

ISSUE NO. 18

The Hunting Bill

by Nottingham ARC

With regard to the Hunting Bill being introduced by Michael Foster, MP for Worcester:

Some MPs have apparently not received any anti-hunting letters. Therefore they may not intend being in the House when the Bill comes up for its second reading in November. It is vital that all sympathetic MPs are present and they all vote to ban hunting. We may not get such a good chance again. The hunting fraternity will be lobbying their MPs to make their opinions felt (and they have wealth on their side). Let's hope we at least have numbers on ours.

Please write to your MP at the House of Commons, Westminster, London SW1 urging them to support the Bill, and to Tony Blair (who has stated his personal support for the Bill) sharing your solidarity with him. He is going to be faced with untold pressure from the pro-hunt lobby over the coming months. The Bill is due to be heard on Friday 28th November and as some MPs like to have a 3-day weekend, it is important that they are urged to attend the House to vote.

When writing to your own MP ask her/him:

- Will you be in the House on Friday 28th November for the Anti-Hunting Bill? Stress that you expect them to be there on your behalf.
- Will you please vote for hunting to be banned. Ask for a reply.

The more letters they get, the more they will realise how important it is to the ordinary people of this country. Pass this message on to as many people as you can. We know that many activists don't value letter writing but how else can you get the message across to your MP? If the MP thinks people are not bothered about this issue, then why should he/she be, especially if they would prefer to go home for the weekend or do a spot of Christmas shopping.

PLEASE DON'T LET THIS IMPORTANT OPPORTUNITY SLIP THROUGH OUR FINGERS.

Local Groups Update

Animal Rights Cambridge

74 Sturton Street, Cambridge CB1 2QA

01223 311828, Fax 01223 300318

There are two campaigning groups in Cambridge - Animal Rights Cambridge and Animal Aid Cambridge. The two groups, although having separate identities, work very closely together as well as with local hunt sabs. Recently they have been campaigning against circuses on private land (they are banned on City land) with the support of the Captive Animals Protection Society.

They have also been campaigning against Huntingdon Life Sciences and travel around the country in support of both national and local demonstrations.

One of the group's members recently spent the day at Pilgrims Slaughterhouse following an expose on Channel 4 and gave an account of the conditions to a MAFF Investigating Officer. The groups provide financial assistance to the local Wildlife Hospital (CARES) at Haddenham and supported their protest at Ely Cathedral on July 19th where the clergy are 'culling' the pigeons.

Animal Rights Campaigns

c/o 3, Winmarleigh Street, Warrington WA1 1NB

The group (formerly Animal Rights Warrington) are involved in a campaign against Proctor & Gamble and are calling for a public boycott of all their products, which include: Ariel, Bold, Daz, Fairy Liquid, Head & Shoulders, Max Factor, Oil of Ulay, Pampers, Vicks and Zest. For an information pack please send four loose 2nd class stamps to cover costs. Donations are very welcome. The group campaigns against animal abuse at all levels in a peaceful and nonviolent way.

Escape

PO Box 2801, Brighton, Sussex BN1 3NH
0956 831613

Escape was founded in 1996 as a non-profit educational network dedicated to the liberation of non-human species by the promotion of the vegan diet. They campaign for an ethical society, an environmentally sustainable society and a healthy society via the rejection of animal products and abuse. As Escape is run by volunteers, all money goes towards helping animals. Escape are currently involved in many peaceful campaigns including SmithKline Beecham, genetic engineering, pate de foie gras, premarin, etc. For information regarding membership; campaigns etc., please contact the address above.

Freedom

c/o 46, Valley Drive, Branton, Doncaster,
South Yorkshire DN3 3PH

The group was set up in 1996 and are currently small in numbers but would like to branch out and gain more members. If you are interested in joining Freedom they would be pleased to hear from you!

Kent ACTION! Against Live Exports
PO Box 363, Folkestone, Kent CT20 3GJ
01303 253775

In July 1995 over a million live sheep and lambs were exported through Dover. Between July and November 1996 more than half a million were also shipped abroad. Some have gone as far as Spain, Greece and Italy on journeys lasting up to 57 hours without food, rest or water. KALE campaigns peacefully for an end to all live exports, monitors the trade and reports breaches of the regulations. Of grave concern is the doubtful role played by a few members of the veterinary profession. KALE welcomes all new members (fee £2) for which you will also receive an information pack.

London Vegans

c/o 7 Deansbrook Rd, Edgware, Middlesex HA8 9BE
General enquiries: Paul 01206 861846,
Kevin 0171 603 4325, Douglas 0973 491199,
Zena 0171 354 8256
e-mail: 100121.1166@compuserve.com
Web site: <http://members.aol.com/veganuk>

London Vegans organise various social events, catering at fairs/meetings and information stalls throughout the London area. Regular meetings are held on the last Wednesday of every month (except December) at the Millman Street Community Rooms, 50 Millman Street, London WC1. London Vegans produce an excellent mailout list on the activities taking place both in London and country-wide.

Midlands Animal Rights Coalition (MARC)

PO Box 43, Dudley DY3 3DG (01384 456682)

MARC work with other A/R and hunt sab groups in the West Midlands area and they have launched a new campaign against its local laboratories, and have produced a leaflet and factsheet on vivisection. They carry out regular leafletting sessions and protest against all types of animal abuse. MARC is very active and effective - contact them for further details.

South London Animal Action (SLAA)

PO Box 594, London SW9 6YA

SLAA are an active group who have recently affiliated to the larger London Animal Action so that campaigns can be more effectively fought and numbers can be greater. SLAA, on a local level, have been campaigning against the sale of ostrich flesh at Tesco's, urging people to write to MAFF Minister Jack Cunningham regarding the suffering of animals at livestock markets and exposing the cruelty of a Lewisham pet suppliers. If you wish to find out more about SLAA/LAA, please write for details.

Stevenage Animal Rights

Box 6, Bowes Lyon House, St. George's Way,
Stevenage, Herts. SG1 1XY

SAR have been campaigning against the Glaxo-Wellcome laboratories for several years - exposing the cruel experiments which take place there on dogs, rodents, marmosets, cats and other animals. The group produces a very informative newsletter which covers not only the group's activities but also contains articles, news etc. Membership of the group costs £4.50 (concessions for low paid/unwaged). Help is needed for street stalls. If you are able to help please call Ann Bunting on 01438 359424.

Vegan Information Network

PO Box 2801, Brighton BN1 3NH

Are you a vegetarian and want info/support on turning vegan? Are you vegan but don't know which products are really vegan? Do you know which vegan alcohols are cruelty-free? Are you up-to-date on animal tested / non-animal tested products? Do you need to know which charities fund animal research? The Vegan Information Network can help you with these enquires as well as questions regarding all aspects of veganism.

The VIN has a 16 page pocket-sized booklet available entitled 'Animal Tested Products & Cruelty-free Products' which clearly states which products are and are not animal tested. It's FREE! Just send a 20p stamp. The VIN is a group run by volunteers and would appreciate donations however small so they can remain a free information service. Please make cheques/PO's payable to 'Escape'. Thanks.

NATIONAL GROUPS UPDATE

Animal Liberation Front (Supporters Group)

BCM 1160, London WC1N 3XX
01203 632873

e-mail: 100302.1616@compuserve.com

Although the ALFSG has had continuing hassle with the police they are still going strong and in need of support as much as ever. They produce an excellent quarterly magazine which contains letters from prisoners, articles etc. Membership is £2 a month or £24 a year. A wide range of merchandise is available with a discount to any SG member.

Animal Rights Coalition (ARC)

PO Box 339, Wolverhampton WV10 7BZ
01902 711935

e-mail: james@arcnews.demon.co.uk

web: <http://www.envirolink.org/arrs/arc/>

ARC encourages the coming together of all animal rights groups. ARC sends out lists detailing addresses of current animal abuse establishments. They urge all local animal rights groups to get in touch.

Animal Liberation Front (Press Office)

BM 4400, London WC1N 3XX
01954 230542

The purpose of the ALF Press Office is to explain to the media the reasons why activists are prepared to break the law to help animals. Speakers are available for meetings. All donations are gratefully received.

Campaign Against Leather & Fur (CALF)

BM 8889, London WC1N 3XX

The group's aim is to draw people's attention to the fact that leather and fur are basically the same thing - the skin of murdered animals. Leaflets are available on the fur, leather, wool and silk trades. CALF also sends out information on where to buy non-leather products and generally promotes veganism. Please send an A4 SAE to help cover costs.

The Fox Project

The Old Chapel, Bradford Street, Tonbridge,
Kent TN9 1AW

This group has saved the lives of many foxes. They take into care orphaned foxes and set them free when they are fit and well. They also produce an informative newsletter.

Hunt Saboteurs Association (HSA)

PO Box 2786, Brighton BN2 2AX
01273 622827

e-mail: hsa@gn.apc.org

The HSA are an invaluable organisation sabotaging hunts on a nationwide level. The head office provides legal and tactical support for local hunt sab groups and can provide speakers for talks. They produce the highly informative magazine Howl four times a year. Recommended.

Justice for Keith Mann Campaign (JFKM)

c/o ICA, PO Box 1135, Downs View Road,
Hassocks, West Sussex BN6 8AA

In November 1995, Keith was sentenced to an outrageous 14 years in prison, which was reduced to an equally outrageous 11 years on appeal. JFKM continues to campaign on Keith's behalf.

McLibel Support Campaign

5 Caledonian Road, London N1 9DX
0171 713 1269

This group was set up to provide support for the two London activists who were sued for libel by McDonald's. For an up-to-date report see article elsewhere in this magazine.

National Anti-Hunt Campaign (NAHC)

PO Box 66, Stevenage, Herts., SG1 2TR
0378 307575

On the 10th July, the NAHC delivered petitions containing 1.5 million signatures to 10 Downing Street as a protest against hunting. The group needs all the help it can get so that we finally see an end to this barbaric sport. Write for details, stickers, leaflets etc.

People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA)

*PO Box 3169, London NW1 2JF
0181 785 2707*

PETA are a very active organisation with a high media profile. They recently succeeded in deterring a Japanese drugs company from carrying out cruel experiments on beagle dogs. However, shortly afterwards, an injunction was served on PETA by Huntingdon Life Science stopping them from any form of protest against the company. PETA produce a magazine called Animal Times. Write for more details.

Shark Protection League

*BM LAPL, London WC1N 3XX
0589 173033*

The SPL was set up to expose the horrific cruelty involved in shark angling and to campaign against this sport. The group produces leaflets, factsheets, petitions and a very informative magazine.

Tail Ends

PO Box 1550, London SW4 6HP

This is a small vegan animal rescue network which needs homes for abused and abandoned animals, mainly cats and dogs. All of the money, which is desperately needed, goes towards food, vet's bills, neutering and spaying.

Vegan Prisoners Support Group

*PO Box 194, Enfield, Middlesex EN1 3HD
24hr Arrest Helpline: 0181 292 8325*

VPSG is a very important organisation where vegan animal rights prisoners are concerned. They offer support for day-to-day problems, giving practical assistance and moral support where needed. They are always in need of new volunteers and any practical and financial assistance.

Vegans International

c/o 11 Guinea Street, Bristol BS1 6SX

VI produce a very informative magazine letting people know about the progress being made regarding veganism on a worldwide level.

The Vegan Society

*Donald Watson House, 7 Battle Road,
St. Leonards-on-Sea, East Sussex TN37 7AA
01424 427393*

With increased membership the Vegan Society can spread the vegan message far and wide, but they need your help. The Society produces a quarterly magazine and a wide range of merchandise.

Veggies

180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HU

Veggies run a catering co-operative which travels all around the country providing tasty vegan food at demos, festivals other events. They also produce a selection of posters and leaflets as well as the Animals Contact Directory (see Recommended Reading for details).

VIVA!

*12 Queen Square, Brighton BN1 3FD
01273 777688 Fax: 01273 776755*

This group are very active and have run a series of highly successful campaigns. They produce an informative magazine and run a BSE helpline which is open between 10am and 7pm.

World Society for the Protection of Animals (WSPA)

*2 Langley Lane, London SW8 1TJ
0171 793 0540*

The WSPA is involved in many issues concerning the plight of animals across the world. They run campaigns against Spanish Fiestas and the plight of bears through their Liberty campaign. They also produce a Holiday Horrors package designed to give information to people appalled by the animal suffering they see abroad.

...and finally, we are grateful to a friend at the RDS for the last contribution. We aim to be even-handed!

Research Defence Society

*58 Great Marlborough Street, London W1
0171 287 2818*

The Research Defence Society (RDS), situated in London's West End, is the body which promotes the use of animals in often cruel and horrific experiments. The RDS act as the mouthpiece for vivisectionists and the vivisection industry in general.

Should you wish to contact Dr. Mark Matfield, Director of the RDS, in person his address is:
92 Peperharrow Road, Godalming, Surrey
Tel: 01483 421575.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

AUSTRALIA

Three men have been sentenced to between 6 and 21 months imprisonment for the illegal export of cockatoos and another man received an 18 month sentence for attempting to export 53 parrot eggs. (Traffic Bulletin, March '97)

CASPIAN SEA

Fishing industry leaders of Azerbaijan, Iran, Kazakstan, Russia and Turkmenistan have signed an agreement to ban open-sea fishing for sturgeon in the Caspian Sea during 1997. The five countries have also agreed to carry out regular raids to catch poachers. (Traffic Bulletin, March '97)

CUBA

A new national fishing law forbids the capture of certain endangered species, such as Caribbean Manatees and Hawksbill Turtles and requires permission of the authorities for all fishing, except that done on the shore. (Traffic Bulletin, March '97)

EUROPE

Autoclub Europe cancelled a French foie gras farm visit after learning about the suffering of geese involved in the production of the pate. (Animal Times, Spring '97)

Full protection for wolves has paid dividends in Italy where numbers have increased from around 100 to 400. Wolves have crossed into France from Italy and have also spread from Poland into Germany and from Slovenia to Austria. (Wildlife Guardian, Spring '97)

FIJI

The Fiji Islands have banned commercial fishing of sea turtles for 3 years. This follows a one-year ban to mark international year of turtles. The government is also looking at ways of controlling the number of turtles killed for traditional ceremonies. (Ceefax, 8/4/97)

HOLLAND

A Dutch court has declared fishing using live worms to be cruel, in a case brought against two Belgian fishermen. (La Voce dei Senza Voce, Spring '97)

HONG KONG

A Hong Kong resident and 3 Chinese seamen have been sentenced to between 2 and 5 months imprisonment after being caught smuggling ivory by customs officials. (Traffic Bulletin, March '97)

ISRAEL

The Israeli High Court has rejected an appeal by the Mazor Monkey Breeding Farm (which supplies monkeys for vivisection) in a case brought against them by the Israeli Society for the Abolition of Vivisection and the Israeli Ministry of Agriculture. This means that the farm will not be allowed any income tax privileges and will not be entitled to any funding from the Ministry. (Pro Animal, Feb. '97)

Of 13 fur stores once operating in Tel-Aviv, only 7 remain, following pickets by a/r activists. (Anonymous Newsletter, Feb. '97)

Many places are no longer willing to accommodate private animal circuses, after a campaign of protests and letter-writing by members of the "Anonymous" a/r organization. (Anonymous Newsletter, Feb. '97)

ITALY

The use of animals for the purposes of begging has been banned in Florence. (La Voce dei Senza Voce, Spring '97)

The Italian government is to contribute 500 million lire (about £170,000) towards protection of the wolf. (La Voce dei Senza Voce, Spring '97)

NEW ZEALAND

Six men have been sentenced to between 6 and 22 months imprisonment for the smuggling of cockatoos from Australia. (Traffic Bulletin, March '97)

A local primary school reversed its decision to bring an emu from an emu farm to the school fair after Auckland Animal Action faxed a complaint and threatened to stage a protest. (Liberate!, May/June '97)

PERU

A law has been passed which provides for a sentence of between 2 and 4 years imprisonment for anyone who kills a dolphin. (La Voce dei Senza Voce, Spring '97)

SOUTHEAST ASIA

Vietnam and Laos have made an agreement to work together to protect the mountain range which separates the two countries. The area contains a high diversity of plants and animals, including many endangered species. Vietnamese scientists have also recommended the expansion of the country's Phong Nha Nature Reserve. (Traffic Bulletin, March '97)

USA

Despite increased coverage in fashion mags and a barrage of press releases designed to convince the world that fur is back, fur sales in the US were down in December. Evans Furs, the largest retail furrier in the nation, reported that in the 3 months ending Nov. 30th, revenues were down 12.5%. (ARC News March '97)

A man has been sentenced to 46 months imprisonment for conspiring to smuggle rare and endangered reptiles into the USA and Canada. The charges related to 61 Tree Boas and 4 Spider Tortoises that had been transported in a suitcase from Madagascar to Orlando airport. Another man was sentenced to 2 years jail for smuggling 144 snakes from Peru. (Traffic Bulletin, March '97)

Amoco has become the latest oil company to cap its open exhaust stacks, so saving countless migratory birds and bats from a fiery death. (Animal Times, Spring '97)

Following pressure from a/r activists, Mary Kay Cosmetics has ended its policy of awarding fur coats to top sales people. (Animal Times, Spring '97)

After requests from two customers, the WalMart store in Douglas, Georgia agreed to free a 15 pound lobster which had been languishing in a small tank there. The lobster was turned over to PETA and subsequently released in the Atlantic Ocean, with coverage in more than 50 newspapers. (Animal Times, Spring '97)

A bid to start the hunting of foxes on public land in Tampa, Florida, failed after local residents signed hundreds of petitions against it. (Wildlife Guardian, Spring '97)

The states of Illinois and Oklahoma have banned rodeos using horses, because of the violence to the animals involved. (La Voce dei Senza Voce, Spring '97)

NASA has said it will not join in research using monkeys on next year's Bion 12 space mission as risks to the animals involved are "unacceptable". (Teletext, 23/4/97)

PISCES NEWS

Keith Higgingbottom, editor of Angling Times until May 8th has been charged with incitement to kill wild birds following an article supporting the illegal killing of cormorants. Higginbottom has been charged with two offences under the Wildlife and Countryside Act.

Last December, Angling Times featured a front page photo of a masked gunperson with four dead cormorants at his feet. Underneath it said: "This is the picture every angler wants to see - the man, the gun and the cormorants".

Fish feel pain - official!

Details of a study funded by the British Field Sports Society and National Federation of Anglers and carried out by Pottinger (1995) are now available. A few extracts of a draft which fell into Pisces' hands follow:

'Capture by angling is always accompanied by physiological disturbances typical of activation of the hypothalamic-pituitary-interrenal axis. Capture by angling may therefore be considered to cause physiological stress. "The stress associated with capture may be considered acute." There is a measurable level of mortality associated with hooking of fish. Most studies have not monitored survival beyond 72 hours following capture'.

This study was kept under wraps for 2 years, until it was leaked to Pisces. The BFSS and the NFA now have the agony of trying to work out whether the infiltrator works for them or not. Studies are not needed to tell us that fish feel pain but they can be useful in persuading some people. The full draft is available in return for 2 second class stamps.

For more information concerning the campaign against fishing please contact:

PISCES, PO BOX 90, BRISTOL BS99 1ND
(0117 9559814)

E-Mail: pisces@demon.co.uk

World Wide Web: <http://www.envirolink.org/arrs/pisces/index.html>

Sabbing News

Hunt scum rally in London in desperate attempt to save their 'sport'

On Thursday 12 July, hunt scum from all over the UK staged a rally in Hyde Park, London, as a protest against the planned bill to ban hunting with hounds. The event was billed as a "Countryside Rally," in a pathetic attempt to pretend it wasn't really about hunting at all. Coaches were paid for to bus people in from all over the country, and many country employers gave their workers paid leave in order to attend. So much for hunt sabs being a rent-a-mob! Estimates of numbers ranged from 50,000 to 100,000.

Anglers stand with fox-hunters

The rally attracted enthusiasts of every type of bloodsport imaginable: anglers, falconers, fox-hunters, shooters, hare coursers... There was almost certainly a large contingent of badger baiters, although it's unlikely these were very vocal in defence of their bloodsport! It's true what they say about shit sticking together, and interesting to note that all the angling shops in London were advertising the rally, despite their claims that they're 'different' from fox-hunters.

Celebrity support

The rally attracted several high-profile blood junkies, keen to make known their support for ripping animals to shreds with a pack of hounds. Top scum present included: author Frederick Forsyth, actor Jeremy Irons, botanist David Bellamy, jockey Willie Carson and DJ Simon Bates. There also were top Conservative politicians including the new Tory leader William Hague and Michael Heseltine.

Injunction

Several demonstrators gathered in the morning at the offices of the British Field Sports Society who were behind the march. They were greeted by loads of police and injunctions posted up around the area forbidding any animal rights activists to come within 250 yards of the building. The injunction was the first issued under the new Anti-Stalking Act, which was designed to protect women from being pestered by persistent stalkers. A High Court judge granted the injunction, which cost the BFSS around £5,000. Police present were unimpressed and didn't seem willing to enforce it.

Petitions handed in Over half-a-million signatures on anti-hunt petitions were presented at 10 Downing St. to show the level of support for a ban on hunting. Bloodsports fanatics arrived shortly afterwards on an open-top bus to be greeted by a barrage of abuse. They handed in an unspecified number of pro-hunt signatures, but it can safely be assumed that it was considerably less than those against hunting.

Hunt Saboteurs

Several intrepid groups of hunt sabs and others ventured into the belly of the beast (ie. Hyde Park) to tell the scum to their faces what they thought of them. There were several scuffles and a few arrests were made. Later in the evening there was more serious fighting with casualties on both sides. One saboteur was attacked by a large group of Welsh bumpkins and suffered a broken jaw and collarbone.

National Trust bans staghunting

After many years of arsing around and dragging their feet, the National Trust has finally bowed to the wishes of its members and the general public and banned the hunting of stags on its land. This follows a report from Patrick Bateson, Professor of Ethology (Animal Behaviour), which concluded, surprise, surprise, that deer got extremely stressed by being hunted with hounds.

The report was commissioned by the National Trust and took two years. It found that the hunting of deer forced them to endure conditions far exceeding that which they would normally experience. It was comparable with taking an ordinary person off the street and making them run a 100 mile marathon.

However, this battle may be won, but the National Trust still allows fox-hunting on their land and issues licences to 145 hunts covering 145,600 hectares of land.

Staghunting under attack in Ireland

Hunting stags has become a very high profile issue in Northern Ireland recently. Over 70,000 signatures against it have been collected by the group Save Our Stags (SOS). Staghunting is very popular in Ireland, and the laws are slightly different to those in mainland Britain. This means that stags can be raised in captivity, taken to the hunt meet and released in front of the hounds for them to chase for up to four hours. The idea is that the stags can be recaptured alive, taken back into captivity ready to be chased all over again. This disgusting practice, known as using 'carted' stags, is carried out by the Ward Union Stag Hounds from the Republic of Ireland and the County Down Stag Hounds from the North.

For more information on the campaign against this obscenity, contact Save Our Stags at:

S.O.S., PO Box 287, Belfast, BT6 9QS, Northern Ireland.

86 arrested at Mike Hill memorial demo

February 1997 was the sixth anniversary of the death of hunt saboteur Mike Hill, who was run over by Alan Summersgill of the Cheshire Beagles. There was a weekend of action in the county culminating in 86 arrests. The Saturday was spent at the Cheshire Foxhounds where about 60 sabs were arrested '...to prevent a breach of the peace'.

Several shoots were also disrupted and vast numbers of hunt scum had their vehicles damaged in a mass window-smashing session.

On the Sunday, there were demonstrations at the houses of the Masters of the Cheshire Foxhounds and the Cheshire Beagles. Again, around 20 people were arrested on ludicrous charges. Virtually everyone arrested was released without charge and civil action for damages against the police is expected to be forthcoming.

Melvyn Bragg

Melvyn Bragg, whilst not an angler, shooter or fox-hunter himself, is a vocal supporter of those inadequates who are. Known for presenting arty TV programmes like the South Bank Show, being a champagne socialist and supporting the Labour Party, Bragg has stated that foxes do not feel fear when being chased by a pack of hounds, but excitement. He is a member of the Labour Party pro-hunt lobbying group 'Leave Country Sports Alone', which is supported by no Labour MP's at all.

Melvyn has a large house in Hampstead, London, where he lives with his family. If you would like to write to him letting him know what you think of bloodsports and those who support them, he can be contacted at:

12 Hampstead Hill Gardens, London NW3

World Shore Angling Championships

In 1997 this will take place in Dover from October 11th to October 19th. This is the first time the event has been held in the UK, and hopefully the reception they will receive from us will make it the last. The sponsor is P&O, the ferry company which still carries out live exports of animals via its Irish subsidiary.

If you want to register your disgust at the people who torture marine life for fun, you can contact David Rowe of the National Federation of Sea Anglers on 01626 331330.

SANCTUARIES

Celia Hammond Animal Trust

High Street, Wadhurst, East Sussex TN5 6AG
01892 783367 / 783820

Pigeon Recovery

8, Vermont Road, Sutton,
Surrey SM1 3EQ. 0181 644 7349

The sanctuary is in need of voluntary help to care for the animals in their care. Literature is available from the above address and over 100 permanent residents can be adopted either individually or in groups. Help is also desperately needed by Celia at her Lewisham Way clinic - caring for the stray cats and kittens, the odd rabbit and dog that stay permanently at the clinic until homed. Good A/R people are needed to generally tidy, clean, mop and Hoover up and feed, water, clean out and befriend / fuss over the patients and strays. The address of the clinic is:

Cat and Dog Neuter Clinic, 233 - 235, Lewisham Way,
London SE4 1UY (0181 691 2100)

Freshfields Animal Rescue Centre

East Lodge Farm, East Lane, Ince Blundell,
Liverpool L29 3EA
0151 931 1604 / Mobile: 0421 535237

The shelter welcomes voluntary live-in workers for short or long term and also needs help with essential fund-raising. They would be most grateful for offers to home rescued animals but run a strict vetting service.

Hillside Animal Sanctuary

Hall Lane, Frettenham, Norwich NR12 7LT
(01603 891237)
/ Bridge Farm, Downham Market,
Norfolk PE38 0AU

Hillside was founded to help all animals in need, particularly those who suffer in the intensive factory farming industry. They will do anything possible to make sure that the animals in their care live out their natural life spans unaffected by human greed or neglect. If you would like to adopt one of the rescued animals (only £6 minimum a year) please write for details! Hillside also have an extensive range of merchandise available.

Hounslow Animal Welfare Society

PO Box 234, Hounslow, Middlesex TW3 2QG
0181 560 5443

Last year, a total of 459 creatures were taken into the society's care for re-homing, including cats, dogs, rabbits, chinchillas, guinea pigs, terrapins, rats and a hamster. The society also aided another 182 animals, mostly with routine and veterinary treatment but also by the provision of transport, occasional temporary accommodation and assistance in helping people with their animals in times of need. If possible, please donate animal food which will leave other money for essentials such as medical bills. Just £2 a month will help pay for the treatment of sick or injured animals.

There are numerous other animal sanctuaries in the British Isles (far too many to list) and if you would like to find out about these, write to:

Veggies, 180 Mansfield Road, Nottingham NG1 3HW (0115 958 5666) for a copy of the Animals Contacts Directory (97/98 Edition), price £4 (£3 unwaged).

McLIBEL VICTORY !!!!

- McLibel verdict - McDonalds' core business practices slammed by judge
- McDonald's Corporation abandons its legal attempts to halt the public dissemination of What's Wrong With McDonald's? leaflets, and fails to get any award of costs (despite spending an estimated £10m)
- Campaign unstoppable
- Defendants plan further legal action

McLIBEL JUDGE CONDEMNS McDONALD'S CORE BUSINESS PRACTICES

On June 19th 1997, Mr Justice Bell, in his personal verdict in the McLibel Trial, ruled that substantial and significant parts of the London Greenpeace Factsheet criticising McDonald's have been proved to be true by the evidence brought by the McLibel Defendants, Helen Steel & Dave Morris. Of the other parts of the Judgment, McDonald's won on the basis of controversial legal and semantic interpretations of the meaning of the What's Wrong With McDonald's? factsheet. These mainly regarded McDonald's claim that the factsheet meant that the company itself directly caused rainforest destruction and hunger in the third world (ignoring the factsheet's criticisms of multinationals and the food industry in general), and that people had a very real risk of cancer, heart disease and food poisoning from eating the company's food, even though the factsheet did not say this. The judge astonishingly also ruled that all the comment (bar one phrase) in the Factsheet would be treated as statements of fact which had to be proven by primary sources of evidence.

However, the company must be devastated that, despite all the disparity and unfairness, the Judge still found as a fact that McDonald's "exploit children" through their advertising, that they are "culpably responsible" for cruelty to animals, and that the company is anti-union and pays such low wages that it helps to depress the already low wages in the catering industry even further. The Judge also found that McDonald's food was "high in fat and saturated fat and animal products and sodium" and that "advertisements, promotions and booklets have pretended to a positive nutritional benefit which McDonald's food did not match" (ie. that the food is not nutritious and that they are therefore deceiving the public when they promote it as such). (See Verdict & Evidence briefing below.)

FINAL DEADLINE PASSES - McDonald's Abandon Legal Efforts

Thursday July 17th, the four week deadline set by Mr Justice Bell for any final legal applications by the parties in the action, passed without McDonald's making any application for an injunction or costs. The Corporation has thereby conceded a huge victory to campaigners by effectively abandoning its legal attempts to halt the public dissemination of 'What's Wrong With McDonald's?' leaflets, and has failed to get any award of costs (despite spending an estimated £10m).

JUDGE FINDS McDONALD'S ISSUED DEFAMATORY AND 'UNJUSTIFIED' STATEMENTS TO DISCREDIT THE DEFENDANTS - but rules the company had the right to self-defence!

Pre-trial publication by McDonald's of 300,000 leaflets and press releases attacking criticisms of the Corporation as 'lies' had sparked a counterclaim by the Defendants for libel. The company was unable to bring a single piece of evidence to substantiate its defamatory assertions that the Defendants had deliberately circulated false information. In fact, the judge found that McDonald's leaflets were 'defamatory', 'unjustified', contained allegations which McDonald's knew to be untrue and that 'part of the motive....was to discredit the defendants'. But, astonishingly, he ruled that this was legally permissible as McDonald's had a right of self-defence to protect itself since the company was under 'attack' from Helen and Dave! He ignored Defence submissions that if any legal right to self-defence existed, it should not apply to such a huge company but instead to members of the public raising valid concerns about Corporate domination of people's lives, communities and the environment.

McDONALD'S SLAMMED IN PARLIAMENT

Jeremy Corbyn MP has sponsored two Early Day Motions which were put before Parliament on Friday 18th July. They refer to Mr Justice Bell's findings in the McLibel Trial and slam the McDonald's Corporation over its 'deceptive and exploitative business practices', calling for 'effective sanctions' and 'appropriate compensation' to be paid by the company. They further condemn 'unfair and oppressive libel laws' and call for 'urgent reform to safeguard public rights'.

SANCTIONS

The McLibel Support Campaign believes in the public's right of self-defence, and is now calling for sanctions to be implemented against the McDonald's Corporation for its exploitation and oppression of children, customers, workers and animals. In the light of the verdict, many other public bodies are demanding action. For example:

- The National Food Alliance called, on July 17th, for a ban on food advertising targeting children (NFA - Jeanette 0171 628 2442).
- The Farm Animal Welfare Network is demanding immediate legislative action to end the cruel practices identified by the trial judge (FAWN - Clare 01484 688650).
- Trade Unions and labour activists are stepping up their recruitment drive in the catering industry and their campaign for a guaranteed minimum wage (TGWU - Oliver 0181 809 4977).
- Local residents' associations are broadening their objections to new McDonald's stores to include concerns regarding the targeting of local children and the lowering of local wage levels (eg. NOMAC, North London - David 0181 347 9857).

DAMAGES

The Judge awarded £60,000 damages to be paid by the Defendants, only half of what McDonald's had asked for, due to the number of important points the Corporation had lost. In fact, the sum has generally been considered a derisory award. Nonetheless, the Defendants cannot afford to pay and, more importantly, believe that McDonald's doesn't deserve a penny and that it is McDonald's who must be forced to pay compensation to those they have exploited.

McDonald's have repeatedly stated that they do not intend to pursue the damages.

CAMPAIGN CONTINUES TO GROW

On the day of the verdict, supporters of the McLibel Defendants held a picket outside the court. On leaving the court, the Defendants joined in distributing What's Wrong With McDonald's? leaflets. They then took part in a triumphant and packed-out press conference, chaired by Michael Mansfield QC (who believes McLibel was the 'trial of the century') and attended by Defence witnesses including Charles Secrett (Executive Director of Friends of the Earth) and Fran Tiller (former private investigator hired by McDonald's to infiltrate London Greenpeace).

On Saturday 21st June, campaigners held an International VICTORY DAY OF ACTION and leafleted outside McDonald's stores around the world (including Australia, Poland, USA, Canada, Malta, Belgium, Switzerland, Ireland, Sweden, New Zealand) to demonstrate McDonald's failure to silence its critics. Over 500 of the company's 750 UK stores were leafleted in a display of solidarity with the McLibel Defendants and show of conviction that all the criticisms in the 'What's Wrong With McDonald's?' leaflets have been shown to be true. Two million of these leaflets had already been handed out in the UK since the case was brought. It has become probably the most famous and widely distributed protest leaflet in history. [Note: the original 1986 factsheet was out of print before McDonald's served writs on the Defendants in 1990]. As the Defendants were denied a jury trial, the public are in effect the wider jury and campaigners are committed to continuing to provide the public with the facts they need to judge for themselves. (The Corporation, after all, spends $2 billion every year on its global advertising and propaganda.) The McLibel Support Campaign is calling for a Global Week of Action against the company between Oct 11-18th, around Oct 16th UN World Food Day / World Anti-McDonald's Day.

PR DISASTER - CORPORATION BURIES ITS HEAD

The case has been described by the media as the biggest Corporate PR disaster in history. The McDonald's Corporation (based in Oak Brook, Illinois) is refusing to comment on the verdict, falsely claiming that it is a "UK issue". This is despite the fact that they were the first and leading Plaintiff in the McLibel action! They called top US executives into the witness box to give evidence and twice flew over other executives during the trial for secret settlement meetings with Helen and Dave. The Corporation obviously knows the damaging nature of the findings made against them and in the evidence as a whole throughout the trial. Their refusal to comment is clearly an admission of a humiliating defeat. It is a damage limitation exercise.

DEFENDANTS ELATED - The Defendants responded to the end of the trial:

"We're elated at what we and campaigners have been able to achieve. This case was a clear attempt by McDonald's to use the English libel laws to silence their critics. By standing up to the company's bullying, we turned the tables on McDonald's and the company found that all its dirty laundry was aired in public during the trial, exposing the truth behind its glossy image. The hearings were transformed into what may have been the first ever public tribunal on the business practices and effects of a multinational Corporation."

"All the legal cards were stacked against us - oppressive, complex and unfair libel laws favouring Plaintiffs, no Legal Aid, huge imbalance of resources (a $30 billion-a-year corporation against our combined annual income of less than £7,500), and the outrageous denial of a jury trial. Despite all of this, we won significant and substantial parts of the Judgment relating to McDonald's core business practices. And leaflets continue to be handed out in ever greater numbers. As far as we're concerned, it's a complete victory for campaigners and the public's right to criticise rich and powerful multinational corporations which dominate our lives and communities."

LEGAL AND OTHER CONTROVERSIES SET TO CONTINUE

The Defendants will be lodging an appeal in the British courts against the parts of the Judge's verdict which went against them and over some of the disturbing legal aspects of the case. Following the appeal, the Defendants intend to take the British government to the European Court of Human Rights to overturn the UK's unfair and oppressive libel laws - challenging the denial of Legal Aid and the right to a jury trial, and laws stacked in favour of Plaintiffs. They will argue that multinational corporations should no longer be allowed to sue for libel.

Current workers encouraged to get organised:

During the Victory Day of Action on June 21st, hundreds of McDonald's workers were handed Do You Work For McDonald's? leaflets urging them to stand up for their rights. In the light of the judge's findings about low pay and the anti-union attitude of the company, staff are being encouraged to contact the McLibel Support Campaign, join Trade Unions (currently recruiting in the industry), organise themselves and speak out. There is now a well used 'Workers Debating Room' on the McSpotlight Internet site. October 12th will again see a global day of action and pickets in solidarity with McDonald's workers.

Kids Against McDonald's Network:

Thousands of special What's Wrong With Ronald McDonald? leaflets were handed out to kids on June 21st. Following the judge's finding that McDonald's 'exploits children' it is vital that children receive alternative information to counter that put out by the company. We support children getting together and distributing leaflets to their friends and others to resist McDonald's influence. They are invited to join the Kids Against McDonald's Network.

Books and Documentaries:

The book McLibel: Burger Culture On Trial by John Vidal (part written by the Defendants) is to be updated to include the verdict and post-trial issues, and to be republished in paperback by Macmillan in the Autumn. The exclusive documentary McLibel: Two World's Collide is now being completed and will be available soon for broadcast worldwide. It will also be available on video. Full details from One Off Productions (0171 681 0832 or oops@spanner.org).

Reclaiming our World:

Multinationals and governments dominate our lives and our planet, resulting everywhere in the exploitation and oppression of people, animals and the environment. And on top of this we are expected to put up with their propaganda! We call on people to get together, talk about these important issues and to fight back. Together ordinary people can reclaim our world, currently based on the greed and power of a minority, and create a society based on strong and free communities, the sharing of precious resources and respect for all life.

.....

Please send donations and/or requests for information to:

McLibel Support Campaign,
5 Caledonian Road,
London N1 9DX, UK.
Tel/Fax 0171 713 1269

E-mail & Listserver: dbriars@world.std.com

Internet info on McLibel, McDonald's and
multinationals at:

<http://www.McSpotlight.org/>

More McLibel...

McLIBEL VERDICT and the EVIDENCE

An analysis of the Outcome and the Judgment of the McLibel Trial

On 19th June 1997, Mr Justice Bell gave his personal verdict in the UK's longest ever libel trial, brought by McDonald's against two supporters of London Greenpeace, Helen Steel and Dave Morris, over a factsheet entitled What's wrong with McDonald's? Everything they don't want you to know. Publicity surrounding the award of £60,000 damages to McDonald's conveyed to some that McDonald's had won the case all bar a few minor points. In fact, most of the Judge's findings of fact back up the criticisms made in the factsheet, which is not surprising since the evidence was overwhelmingly in the Defendants' favour.

The day after the McLibel verdict, the Jonathon Aitken libel case fell apart after the former Government minister was exposed as a bare faced liar. Commentators asked how he expected to get away with lying in court, and answered by saying that when it came down to the word of a former Tory minister against that of a journalist he could safely assume, having successfully applied for trial by Judge alone, that the courts would believe his word, particularly since as a Plaintiff legally he didn't have to prove anything under UK libel laws.

The situation in McLibel is much the same. Having been denied a jury, who might not be so ready to accept the word of Corporate Executives as true, the Judge has in the main chosen to prefer the evidence of those representing the establishment or status quo. However, the Defendants thought this was likely to happen, and so from the start adopted a strategy of gaining admissions from McDonald's witnesses, so that, as the Defendants said, "it wouldn't come down to 'their word against ours' but instead to 'their word against their own' ". Helen & Dave succeeded on this in almost every area of the case, which is why the majority of findings of fact were in the Defendants' favour.

One of the things to be decided in a libel case is the meaning which a notional 'ordinary, reasonable, reader' would take from reading the leaflet. The areas in which the Defendants lost the verdict were largely because the Judge accepted McDonald's ludicrous and extreme meanings on most of the issues, which the Defendants had argued the factsheet just didn't say. For example, the Factsheet repeatedly criticised the business practices of the food industry and multinationals in general (ie. about peoples' diets, cash crops and hunger, damage to the environment etc) but the Judge insisted that the Defendants would have to prove that McDonald's itself was responsible.

This demonstrates just one of the disadvantages the Defendants faced having been denied a jury. A jury would be very unlikely to adopt the extreme meanings put forward by the Plaintiffs, and in fact would more than likely have thrown the whole case out early on, viewing it as oppressive and contrary to the public interest.

The Judge also bizarrely and unfairly refused the Defendants' right to rely on any of the statements in the factsheet (bar one) as 'comment' or 'opinion', ruling instead that every statement was a 'fact' that would have to be proven from primary sources of evidence by the Defence. This made the task ten times as hard, at a stroke.

Although the Judge decided that McDonald's had been libelled by some of the statements in the factsheet, he also ruled that several of the most biting allegations had been proved to be true. These are particularly significant since the burden of proof was on the Defendants to legally justify the allegations by bringing extensive first-hand evidence to show that they were true. McDonald's didn't have to prove that they were false, so where the judge ruled in McDonald's favour, it doesn't necessarily mean that he thought the allegations were untrue, rather that the pair, with their limited resources and up against a wall of propaganda from McDonald's well briefed representatives in the witness box, had been unable to prove them to the satisfaction of the law.

.....

What follows are some major pieces of evidence of McDonald's business practices in the US and UK, in the main from their witnesses' own mouths and from their own documents, and the judge's

FINDINGS OF FACT, which clearly back up all the statements in London Greenpeace leaflets (Transcript references appear in brackets):

DIET AND ILL HEALTH

.....
• People, the Judge concluded, 'who eat
• McDonald's food several times a week
• will take the very real risk of heart • disease...'
.....

Early on in the trial, McDonald's expert witness on cancer had been asked for his view of the statement contained in the London Greenpeace factsheet: "A diet high in fat, sugar, animal products and salt and low in fibre, vitamins and minerals is linked with cancer of the breast and bowel and heart disease". He replied: "If it is being directed to the public then I would say it is a very reasonable thing to say." (Day 22, p32, line 19). McDonald's expert witness Professor Verner Wheelock admitted that a typical McDonald's meal was high in fat, saturated fat and sodium content (Day 21, pp29-31). Paul Preston (McDonald's UK President) admitted that McDonald's products were low in fibre (Day 5, p22, line 7). This left almost the entire nutrition section of the factsheet admitted by McDonald's own witnesses. To escape this obvious own goal, McDonald's then proceeded to move the goalposts by changing their claim against the Defendants and arguing that the Defendants had to prove a more severe meaning than the one they had originally claimed over.

This enabled the Judge to find in McDonald's favour by interpreting the meaning of the leaflet in an extreme and controversial way. Despite the fact that during closing speeches the judge had agreed that the text of the leaflet in relation to nutrition was OK, he ruled that satirical cartoons and graphics which appeared on the factsheet (not in current leaflets) made the overall message stronger.

Nonetheless his verdict included the following findings of fact which confirm all the criticisms made: "At the material time of publication of the leaflet between September 1987, and September 1990, McDonald's food was high in fat (including saturated fat) and salt (sodium) and animal products and it has continued to be so. It was low in fibre at the material time of publication of the leaflet." [N.B. It is still low in fibre, but current fibre content wasn't gone into.]

"I find that various of [McDonald's] advertisements, promotions and booklets have pretended to a positive nutritional benefit which McDonald's food, high in fat and saturated fat and animal products and sodium, and at one time low in fibre, did not match."

People, the Judge concluded, 'who eat McDonald's food several times a week will take the very real risk of heart disease if they continue to do so throughout their lives, encouraged by the Plaintiffs' advertising.' He also ruled, 'it is possible it increases the risk to some extent' of breast cancer and 'strongly possible that it increases the risk to some extent' of bowel cancer. [NB. The Corporation's Head Of Marketing had given evidence that approx 75% of all visits to their US stores were from 'heavy users' who ate there on average 3 times a week, and also that these people were likely to eat similar fast food during the rest of the week as well (Day 45 pp42-3).]

The Defendants had effectively proved even the extreme meaning decided on by the Judge, but the company had, in his view, been unjustly defamed because many of the people the factsheet was addressed to didn't eat there often enough to suffer the ill effects!

UNETHICAL ADVERTISING

.....
• McDonald's advertising and marketing
• makes considerable use of susceptible
• young children...
.....

The Defendants won this section of the case outright, with the Judge ruling as a fact that "[The criticism in] the leaflet to the effect that [McDonald's] exploit children by using them, as more susceptible subjects of advertising, to pressurise their parents into going to McDonald's is justified. It is true". He also ruled "In my judgment McDonald's advertising and marketing makes considerable use of susceptible young children to bring in custom, both their own and that of their parents who must accompany them, by pestering their parents."

The Judgement was not surprising in the light of damaging revelations of company strategy in court, such as when the corporation's official and confidential 'Operations Manual' was read out: "Ronald loves McDonald's and McDonald's food. And so do children, because they love Ronald. Remember, children exert a phenomenal influence when it comes to restaurant selection. This means you should do everything you can to appeal to children's love for Ronald and McDonald's." (Day 42, p62, line 32).

The Corporation's Head Of Marketing considered that children were 'virgin ground as far as marketing is concerned' (Day 45, p56, ln 11). Furthermore, their UK Marketing chief stated that, without advertising 'you might see that the company declines completely' (Day 41, p7, ln 25). McDonald's spend over $2 billion per year worldwide on advertising and promotions.

FOOD SAFETY

...salmonella was found on 25% of deboned chicken meat for McNuggets.
...the risk of (undercooking) is endemic in the fast food system...

The Defendants would have won this section of the case if it wasn't for the Judge's extreme and controversial interpretation of the words complained of in the Factsheet, based on the supposed 'context'. He ruled that this 'context' meant that the paragraph about general safety concerns associated with modern factory farming methods and mass meat production put the burden on the Defendants to prove that McDonald's sell products which 'expose their customers... to a serious risk of food poisoning and poisoning by the residues of antibiotic drugs, growth-promoting hormone drugs and pesticides', something which the factsheet had not said. In fact the judge agreed that the text of this section of the factsheet, taken literally, could be viewed as 'inoffensive'.

The judgment noted evidence that McDonald's own witnesses had said that 'antibiotic compounds which acted as growth promoters' were fed to chickens 'from their arrival at Sun Valley [McDonald's suppliers] until 5 days before slaughter'. That hormonal growth promoters such as clenbuterol 'were used in the pig industry as fairly standard practice', including at GD Bowes [McDonald's pig meat suppliers], until the E.C. banned their use in Europe in about 1990. (ie. they were in use at the time the factsheet was in circulation). That antibiotics were routinely given to cattle in U.S. feedlots as growth promoters and that pesticide residues were found in meat in the U.S. McDonald's International Meat Purchasing Manager had also given evidence that hormonal growth promoters are widely used in cattle rearing in the USA (Day 92 p17 line 1-17). However, the Judge decided that the Defendants had not brought sufficient evidence to prove that any of this posed a risk to consumers. This is despite widespread concern in many countries over these unnatural practices, and the fact that the EC had banned the use of hormone growth promoters in Europe because of fears over their safety.

The Judgment notes that 'the principal food poisoning organisms carried by chickens are salmonella and campylobacter'. A representative of McDonald's chicken meat supplier accepted during his evidence that campylobacter was found on 70% of raw poultry, (Day 91 p55 line51), and that salmonella was found on 25% of deboned chicken meat for McNuggets (Day 89 p64 line 59).

The defence against the presence of food poisoning organisms on meat is dependent on adequate cooking to kill the organisms. According to the Judge, "the risk of [undercooking] is endemic in the fast food system whatever protective measures the Plaintiffs put in place". The Judge referred to several instances where McDonald's were prosecuted for selling undercooked burgers, and stated "I have no doubt that there must be many more incidents of undercooking than prosecutions or convictions reveal". McDonald's admitted that in 1994 they were convicted for serving undercooked chicken McNuggets in Shrewsbury McDonald's which contained salmonella, and that the McNuggets, which had been served to a 3 year old girl, were declared by Local Health Officials to be 'unfit for human consumption'.

McDonald's also admitted that they were responsible for two very serious outbreaks of E.Coli 0157 food poisoning, in the USA in 1982 affecting at least 47 people, and in Preston (UK) in 1991, in which people suffered serious kidney failure. (Day 294 p17, Day 125 p10, & Day 66 p20). Although the company has raised cooking temperatures since the Preston outbreak, evidence from McDonald's own witnesses and documents revealed that the company still only instructs UK stores to cook standard beef patties for 40-44 seconds to reach an internal temperature of 70 degrees centigrade (Day 85 p52 line 31).

In deciding that the Defendants had not proved there was a serious risk of food poisoning, the Judge ignored UK Government advice contained in the Food Safety Advisory Committee report on E.Coli, 1995; "Regardless of the technique used it is critical that the operation can consistently achieve 70 degrees centigrade for 2 minutes or equivalent in all parts of every burger", in order to ensure that pathogenic bacteria are killed.

LOW PAY AND HOSTILITY TO TRADE UNIONS

(McDonald's UK) does pay its workers low wages...
(...and) are strongly antipathetic to any idea of unionisation

Most of the findings of fact on the employment issue were in the Defendants' favour, but the Judge then decided that he found certain forms of exploitation acceptable and therefore in his view the company had been libelled. On conditions of employment, he ruled that "Despite the hard and sometimes noisy and hectic nature of the work, occasional long, extended shifts including late closes, inadequate and unreliable breaks during busy shifts, instances of autocratic management, lack of third party representation in cases of grievance and occasional requests to go home early without pay for the balance of the shift if business is slack, I do not judge the Plaintiffs' conditions of work, other than pay, to be generally 'bad', for its restaurant workforce."

He did, however, judge that the practice of pressurising staff to go home if a store was quiet, without being paid for the balance of the shift "should not happen at all, and in my judgement it shows where the ultimate balance lies between saving a few pounds and interest of the individual". The evidence, he ruled, 'has disclosed unsatisfactory aspects of McDonald's working conditions'.

On pay, the Judge clearly found for the Defendants, ruling that "[McDonald's UK] does pay its workers low wages thereby helping to depress wages for workers in the catering trade in Britain". This was probably inevitable after the company was forced to produce copies of surveys they had conducted comparing their wage rates very unfavourably with other retail outlets. It was accepted by a 'Human Resources Manager' for McDonald's, that "the basic McDonald's starting rate is below the general averages for that kind of work in the country" (Day 133, p37).

Moving on to Unions, the Judge found as a fact that "[McDonald's] are strongly antipathetic to any idea of unionisation of crew in their restaurants". However, he then bizarrely ruled that the Defendants had libelled McDonald's because they had failed to prove that "McDonald's have a policy of preventing unionisation by getting rid of pro-Union workers". This is despite the evidence of McDonald's UK Vice President and former Head of Personnel Sid Nicholson that employees "would not be allowed to carry out any overt union activity on McDonald's premises" (Day 120, p5, line 27). Mr Nicholson had also said that 'to inform the Union about conditions inside the stores' would be a breach of the employee's contract (Crew Handbook), 'gross misconduct' and as such a 'summary sackable offence' (Day 120, p4). If that's not a 'policy' then we don't know what is.

RAINFORESTS & THIRD WORLD STARVATION

.....
• (The Judge) disregarded as irrelevant ...
• all the evidence of McDonald's
• responsibility for damage to tropical • forests.
•
.....

The judgment on this section of the case hinged entirely on the extreme meaning the Judge attributed to the words in the factsheet. It is widely accepted that the increasing consumption of hamburgers in the West has been the main cause of the huge increase in cattle raising in tropical forest countries, which is in turn a major cause of deforestation. (McDonald's is of course the world's single largest user and promoter of beef products.) The Factsheet had identified McDonald's as just 'one of many US Corporations' involved in and responsible for this process.

But the Judge ruled the Defendants had to prove that McDonald's itself had bought vast tracts of land for cattle ranching, and itself used lethal poisons to destroy vast areas of rainforest (which he defined so narrowly as to exclude most of the tropical forest which had been deforested to make way for beef) and that any evidence less than this was irrelevant.

He therefore disregarded as irrelevant to his judgment all the evidence of McDonald's responsibility for damage to tropical forests. This included the admission by McDonald's in their opening speech that they had used beef in Costa Rica from cattle reared on former rainforest land, some of which 'had been rainforest up to the 1960's' (Day 1, p50). The company also admitted importing Brazilian beef into the UK in the 1980's (Day 78, p21). Some of their current declared supplies to their 250 Brazilian stores emanate from areas of Goias State defined by Defence experts as former rainforest areas destroyed in the 1970's and '80s to make way for cattle ranches (Day 251, pp18-23). Charles Secrett, Executive Director of Friends of the Earth, explained that "McDonald's Corporation, as a global supplier of beef products to mass markets, must accept some responsibility for encouraging development and land use pressures that result in the clearance of tropical forests" (Day 240 p34).

On the subject of the eviction of small farmers and indigenous people from land, and hunger in the Third World, the factsheet clearly talked of the role of multinationals in general in the cash crop economy which forces people off their land, or forces them to grow cash crops instead of staple foods. But again the Judge ruled that the Defendants must show that McDonald's itself had carried out the acts. Direct evidence was given in court of land conflicts in areas which McDonald's identify as their current sources of beef in Brazil such as in Goias State (S Branford, Day 251 pp24 -26) and in Mato Grosso do Sul (F Watson, Day 238 pp12-20).

Fiona Watson of Survival International stated there were "many cases of conflict and land theft caused by the cattle ranching industry as a whole in Mato Grosso do Sul. The industry has undoubtedly played a significant role in the reduction in size of Indian lands, the climate of intimidation and violence that prevails in many areas and the consequent social and cultural disintegration of these peoples in Mato Grosso do Sul."

PACKAGING, RECYCLING AND LITTER

"...there is no problem with dumping lots of McDonald's waste in the ground,"

(Ed Oakley, VP McDonald's UK)

An average McDonald's store produces at least 140 pounds of waste packaging a day, excluding take-away packaging which represents around 50% of custom (Day 9, pp24-5). Including take-away packaging, this works out worldwide (x 21,000 stores) at around 1 million tons of waste packaging each year, a phenomenal amount - and generally thrown away after less than 5 minutes use. Much evidence was heard about how both the production and disposal of packaging inevitably causes damage to the environment. Paper products lead to destruction of trees, and natural forests being replaced by monoculture plantations, dangerous chlorine compounds are used to bleach the paper. Plastic based packaging is non-biodegradable and often consists of polystyrene made using blowing agents which contribute to ozone depletion or the 'greenhouse effect'. All the witnesses extolled the virtues of recycling.

In the UK, all McDonald's packaging ends up as litter or in landfill sites (Day 61, p 33, line 47). The picture is much the same in the US (Day 9, p18, line 30). McDonald's Local Store Marketing news-sheet for May 1990 admitted "When one considers that McDonald's each day is serving food and drink to approximately three-quarters of a million people in the UK, it does not take a genius to conclude that our packaging will be prevalent on the streets whilst littering continues." (Day 6 p53). Ed Oakley, Vice President of McDonald's UK, admitted that the polystyrene packaging collected during a nationally-publicised UK scheme "for recycling into such things as plant pots" was in fact "dumped" (Day 59, p64). He also considered that "as long as there is room in the dumps, there is no problem with dumping lots of McDonald's waste in the ground," and even asserted it could be "an environmental benefit to dump waste in landfill sites" (Day 61 p29).

With a record like this, you might think it would be hard to be accused of libelling McDonald's over the issue of packaging, but due to the Judge's extremely narrow interpretation of the 'environment' section of the Factsheet, he ruled that all the evidence relating to packaging was irrelevant except for an allegation that in the late 1980's McDonald's used only a 'tiny' amount of recycled paper. Ludicrously he ruled it was a 'small but nevertheless significant proportion' and therefore the company had been libelled!

ANIMAL SUFFERING

McDonald's 'are culpably responsible for cruel practices...'

The Defendants won this section of the case outright, with the Judge ruling it was a fact that McDonald's "are culpably responsible for cruel practices in the rearing and slaughter of some of the animals which are used to produce their food". These 'cruel practices' included: 'the severe restriction of movement' of US and UK battery hens crammed into cages all their lives, and hens suffering 'osteopaenia'; the 'severe restriction of movement' for US and UK broiler chickens for some of their lives and endemic 'leg problems' caused by 'breeding for weight; 'rough handling' and 'pre-stun electric shocks suffered by broilers on the way to slaughter' and 'a proportion of chickens [used for McDonald's food] are still fully conscious when they have their throats cut'. He also found as a fact that a 'not insignificant proportion of the sows which produce pigs [for McDonald's UK] spend virtually their whole lives in dry sow stalls' where they suffer 'severe restriction of movement'.

During the case, David Walker of McKey Foods (sole hamburger supplier to McDonald's UK) had admitted that "as a result of the meat industry, the suffering of animals is inevitable" (Day 78 p63 line 48).

Overall the one thing the Trial and the Judgment has shown is how inappropriate it is for the legal system to be deciding what subjects are valid areas for debate. There are many different political viewpoints on each of the issues, inevitable conflicts between those who hold the power in society and those who seek to end the exploitation of people, animals and the environment in order to create a new society where people have control over their own lives and communities.

It is vital for the future of this planet and its population that these subjects are areas of free uninhibited debate and ordinary people can express their views, so the self-interested propaganda of greedy multinationals is challenged.

What the Papers Say

A Selection of Press Cuttings from the Past Few Months

Activists strike butchers' shops

THERE has been a spate of animal rights activist attacks in Auckland. Butcheries have been the main target, but it has even extended to a beekeeping concern.

In one night's attack, the windows of 12 businesses were smashed, causing damage the Animal Liberation Front estimates at $10,000.

The front, which has admitted responsibility, describes itself as an underground group which carries out non-violent action against animal "abusers" and their property, most often butchers' shops.

Its members remain anonymous to avoid prosecution.

The group sent a letter to the New Zealand Herald saying it had committed more than 20 vandalism attacks on businesses throughout Auckland.

The attacks follow a letter to Auckland butchers last July in which the front warned firms to stop trading by October 1 or face having their property vandalised.

Economic sabotage

The attacks have been aimed at butcheries, seafood outlets, a sports store and even a shop stocking beekeeping equipment and related products.

The front calls its tactic "economic sabotage" and says it has had success around the world "in putting animal abusers out of business".

John Calvert, the owner of Calvert Butchery in Swanson, West Auckland, said lead sinkers had been slung through his window twice in 10 days, causing $650 damage each time.

He was insured, but he had to pay a $250 excess.

Detective Sergeant Dave Potaka said police had been monitoring the front and were concerned by an increase in its vandalism in the past couple of years.

Police hoped to clamp down on such activities before they became as serious as they had in places like Britain.

Because the ALF acted covertly, police relied on information from the public to arrest those responsible.

NEW ZEALAND NEWS, U.K. 12-3-97 A

Animal rights terrorists threaten blitz after attack on transport firm

By JONATHAN WALKER

The Birmingham Post

Animal rights activists have threatened to launch a firebomb blitz across the country following an attack on a Midlands livestock transport firm which caused more than £20,000 damage.

An Animal Liberation Front activist warned of a "new wave of anger" leading to increased violence, and police have issued an urgent warning to potential targets of terrorist violence.

The blast at a transport depot near Warwick followed a massive anti-vivisection demonstration on Saturday at the home of an Oxford scientist, in which nine people were arrested.

And police in North Yorkshire said yesterday that Conservative election candidate Miss Anne McIntosh, standing in the new Vale of York constituency, had been sent razor blades in an envelope "apparently from animal rights activists".

A second envelope stuffed with razor blades was received by another Tory candidate in the North of England.

No organisation has so far admitted responsibility for the firebomb attack at Spiers Haulage, a small family firm in Claverdon, which destroyed an HGV tractor unit.

A device attached to another vehicle went off, while fire crews were at the scene trying to put out the first blaze, causing a small explosion. No-one was hurt.

Army bomb disposal experts yesterday defused two further devices attached to vehicles at the site.

The firm's owners said yesterday their customers were mainly UK farmers and they did not transport live animals overseas.

Mrs Gillian Spiers, who helps run Spiers Haulage with her husband, brother-in-law, son and nephew, vowed yesterday that they would carry on as normal.

She said: "We have never had any problems like this before."

"It was a great shock and very upsetting," Mrs Spiers added.

A spokesman for the Animal Liberation Front said yesterday: "There is a new mood of anger

Six in court over illegal cockfight

Five youths and a 21-year-old man arrested at a cockfight spotted by an MP were conditionally discharged by Tenby magistrates yesterday after they admitted being at the illegal fight.

Nick Ainger, Labour MP for the town, told police after seeing the group huddled around two fighting birds at Pembroke Dock. Cockfighting was banned in 1835.

DAILY TELEGRAPH A
29-7-97

and determination about the way animals are treated and it will continue.

"When people see that reason is ignored, yet they see that attacks like letter bombs do have the desired effect, they are going to wonder whether it is worth going out on peaceful protests and taking the chance of being sprayed with CS gas or hit with batons or arrested — or whether it is better to sit in their front room making explosive devices and putting them in parcels."

THE POST 28-4-97 A

LAWYERS AND civil liberties campaigners have warned that a major animal rights trial which begins next month may place a gagging order on the entire UK protest movement.

Five animal rights campaigners are to be tried for conspiring to incite "persons unknown" to commit criminal damage by disseminating animal rights and Animal Liberation Front literature over a five-year period ending in January 1996. They are not charged with committing the criminal damage themselves.

It is about a decade since a case of this nature has come to court, and if Hampshire Police — who are bringing the action — are successful, it could bode ill for other activists across the political spectrum.

Tim Green, the solicitor for the defendants, said: "This is the sort of case which used to happen quite a lot in the Seventies and Eighties, but which is fairly unusual now. If these men are convicted it would be a retrograde step and would send out all the wrong signals."

They are believed to be submitting thousands of pieces of printed material from a wide range of publications as evidence. The force declined to comment on the trial but confirmed that it was going ahead on August 26 at Portsmouth Crown Court.

BIG ISSUE 14/20 JULY

WASHINGTON: Cio Ekum — The underground group Animal Liberation Front took responsibility for the release of 4,000 mink from a nearby fur ranch Saturday.

USA TODAY 11.7.97

Animal rights mob hits hospital

MOUNTED police prevented 150 animal rights activists from storming a hospital yesterday as violent demonstrators rampaged around Oxford.

Other police in riot gear cordoned off a road as masked protesters screamed abuse outside the home of

By Fiona Barton
neuro-scientist Professor Colin Blakemore.

Elsewhere in the city 50 demonstrators charged through the covered market, targeting Boots, Sainsbury's, McDonald's and butchers' shops. Twenty miles away, near Banbury, others attempted to break into an animal breeding centre.

Police, who made two arrests, said 400 people had been involved, divided into groups like that which attacked the Radcliffe Infirmary. Officers had expected that protesters would target the home of Professor Blakemore, who has previously received death threats. Anti-vivisection campaigners claim he uses kittens, monkeys and hamsters for his eye research.

The neuro-scientist — who protesters may have wrongly believed worked at the Radcliffe — was attending a conference in America, but his wife was at home.

Firm firebombed as animal libbers turn up the hate

RAZOR blades were posted to a Euro MP and a haulage firm was firebombed during two days of protest by animal rights activists.

It was the second successive weekend of demonstrations — and one campaigner warned they could become increasingly violent.

Daily Mail Reporter

The blades and a hate letter using such phrases as 'animal murderer' were in an envelope sent to Anne McIntosh, Tory MEP for Essex

North and Suffolk South, which includes the port of Brightlingsea, a focus for protests against live animal exports.

Miss McIntosh, who is also Conservative Parliamentary candidate for the Vale of York, thought she had been targeted, however, because she is a supporter of field sports. Police said the letter was posted in York on Friday. It was believed to have reached her campaign office on Saturday.

'No one was hurt opening it,' Miss McIntosh said.

Another envelope stuffed with razor blades was received by a second, unnamed Tory candidate in the North of England.

Police were also investigating a firebomb attack at Splers' haulage depot in Claverdon, Warwickshire, early yesterday.

A lorry tractor unit was destroyed by flames and bomb disposal experts defused a number of other devices. There were no injuries.

No one yesterday had claimed responsibility for either razor blades or firebombs.

Nine people were arrested during a series of anti-vivisection protests.

About 400 demonstrators gathered outside the Oxford home of neuroscientist Colin Blakemore, but he was said to be abroad.

Protesters also collected outside a research plant in Banbury, where minor damage was caused, and at Oxford University's science department.

One animal liberation campaigner warned that protests could become increasingly violent if industry and the authorities failed to take note of a 'new mood of anger and determination about the way animals are treated'.

DAILY MAIL 28.4.97 ▲

Hollywood star wins battle to save lab test puppies

The actress Kim Basinger (pictured) yesterday won a battle to save 36 beagle puppies from having bones in their legs broken to test a drug for osteoporosis in humans.

Yamanouchi, the Japanese pharmaceutical company which commissioned the experiments to be carried out in a British-owned laboratory, said last night that it had decided to halt the experiments because of "public confusion and disquiet" about the tests. Now it is going to examine if there are other ways of testing the drug.

The tests were due to be carried out in an American laboratory owned by Huntingdon Life Sciences, based in Cambridge.

Ms Basinger had offered to adopt the puppies to save them from undergoing the tests after being told about the tests by the animal rights group People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (Peta) which she has supported in past animal rights campaigns.

THE TIMES 28.4.97

Protest warning

Animal rights protests may become more violent, a spokesman for the Animal Liberation Front said after a weekend of confrontation. A firebomb attack caused damage at a livestock haulier in Warwickshire and nine people were arrested at demonstrations in Oxfordshire. The spokesman said there was a new mood of anger about the way animals were treated.

THE INDEPENDENT
21.6.97

MAIL ON SUNDAY 27.4.97

Violence rising, say animal protesters

By Brian Farmer
Daily Post Correspondent

AN animal liberation campaigner yesterday warned that protests could become increasingly violent if industry and the authorities failed to take note of a rising tide of concern.

The campaigner, a spokesman for the Animal Liberation Front, said that some activists may well decide that letter bombs and fire bombs got better and faster results than peaceful protests.

He was speaking after a firebomb attack on a livestock haulage firm in Claverdon, Warwickshire, and a massive demonstration against vivisection in and around Oxford.

In recent weeks there have been a series of animal rights protests in various parts of England.

Last weekend 250 demonstrators clashed with police at a beagle breeding kennels in Hereford. Protesters also attacked the home of the kennels' manager. More than 20 people were arrested.

On Saturday, nine people were arrested after a day of protests in Oxfordshire, where hundreds of demonstrators targeted the home of an Oxford University neuro scientist and a laboratory.

The overnight fire bomb attack at Spiers Haulage depot in Claverdon followed a similar attack at a poultry plant in Brackley, Northamptonshire earlier this year.

"There is a new mood of anger and determination about the way animals are treated and it will continue," said the campaigner, who asked to remain anonymous.

"I am not saying everyone will think like that, I am just saying that that is the risk."

DAILY POST 28.4.97

▲

Razor blades sent to country sports fan

Tory brushes off hate-mail in election fight

David Garner

A PRO-HUNTING Tory election candidate is to continue to back field sports in spite of receiving "deranged" hate mail.

She will brush off the hate-mail, believed to have been sent by animal rights extremists, and continue her campaign for a Yorkshire seat in Parliament today.

A letter containing razor blades and an abusive message was sent to the campaign headquarters of Tory candidate Anne McIntosh in the new Vale of York constituency.

Miss McIntosh, 42, was called "a murdering bastard" and an "animal murderer" in the message which was posted in York on Friday.

The attack came as animal rights activists appeared to be stepping up their campaign in the run-up to the General Election with a weekend firebomb attack on a livestock haulage firm in Claverdon, Warwickshire, and a big demonstration against vivisection in and around Oxford.

The white envelope, addressed to block capitals, was opened by Miss McIntosh's election agent Diane Clarke when it arrived at the candidate's Easingwold offices.

Miss McIntosh is also the MEP for the Essex North East Euro-seat, which includes the port of Brightlingsea - focus for animal rights campaigners protesting about the live export of animals.

Miss McIntosh said last night: "I think whoever sent this must be deranged. He or she is either a nutcase or a very determined extremist."

She did not think the hate-mail was sent because of her Brightlingsea connection. "There was never any trouble or abuse at Brightlingsea. It is more likely to be because I am in favour of field sports."

"The fox, in particular, is a pest, it is vermin and does tremendous damage to farm animals. It provides enjoyment for people to follow a hunt."

Miss McIntosh said she was concerned that any Labour move to ban hunting would have a "devastating" effect on the countryside.

"There are a lot of people in this constituency who are involved with field sports and they could lose their jobs, that would have a devastating effect on the Vale of York," she said.

Graham Robb, Conservative spokesman for Yorkshire and the North-East, said two envelopes stuffed with razor blades had been received by candidates, one in North Yorkshire and another elsewhere in the North.

North Yorkshire Police warned potential targets of animal rights extremists to exercise care when opening post.

A spokesman for the Animal Liberation Front yesterday warned that protests could become increasingly violent if industry and the authorities failed to take note of a rising tide of concern.

He predicted that some activists could abandon peaceful protests in favour of letter bombs and fire bombs.

Last weekend 250 demonstrators clashed with police at a beagle breeding kennels in Hereford and more than 20 people were arrested.

Police arrested nine people on Saturday after a day of protests in Oxfordshire, where hundreds of demonstrators targeted the home of an Oxford University neuro-scientist and a laboratory.

The spokesman claimed a new wave of concern about animal welfare had been inspired by the BSE scare, concern over live animal exports and animal liberation campaigner Barry Horne, who went on hunger strike Bullington jail, Oxfordshire, in protest at Government vivisection policies.

He compared the continuing animal liberation campaign to the campaign for women's suffrage.

No group has yet claimed responsibility for the attack in Claverdon.

Defiant butcher vows not to quit

DEFIANT butcher Dennis Spurr says he will be sleeping in his Dorchester shop to deter vandals from smashing up his premises again.

Mr Spurr was counting the cost this week after a window in his Hardy's Arcade shop worth over £1,300 was smashed.

The Dorset Meat Company store opened to the public for the first time on Tuesday - minus a window.

Mr Spurr had arrived on Sunday morning to put the finishing touches to the shop and found the main window completely smashed in - and a boulder on the floor.

"At first I was going to pack it all in when I saw the damage," said Mr Spurr from Weymouth.

"I've done all the shopfitting myself and it has taken me three months. I've spent £30,000. I was just about to put the shutters on when this happened - it's incredible."

"I'll board up the window but I will stay here overnight for the time being."

He added: "I moved down from London four years ago to get away from all that vandalism - now look what happens."

Mr Spurr says he has not ruled out the possibility the attack was carried out by animal rights activists.

He said: "It's possible - but it could be just mindless vandals." Police are appealing for witnesses.

THE YORKSHIRE POST 21.4.97 ▲

Terrorist organisations and top criminals are starting to use the Internet to send secret messages and carry out fraud and counterfeiting, according to a new police study.

The 10-month study by the National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS) uncovered evidence of growing involvement of environmental extremists, and European terrorists - particularly Fascist groups - who were using the system to send messages and information about potential targets. Police are to recommend setting up Britain's first national Internet squad and a review of laws to allow detectives to intercept electronic messages.

Dr Neil Barrett, an expert on computer hacking and "information warfare", speaking yesterday at a conference into Internet crime, predicted that organisations such as the IRA and the Animal Liberation Front would soon take advantage of the technology. "It's such an obvious and logical next step, it's something we anticipate," he said. He added that terrorists of the future might use computer viruses to cripple emergency and public service rather than bombs.

Jason Bennetto

▲
THE GUARDIAN 22.5.97

RIOT police clashed yesterday with hundreds of animal rights demonstrators who stormed a kennels compound which breeds beagles for laboratory experiments.

Police used batons, riot shields and CS gas to force back the protesters who converged on the Consort Kennel at Harewood End, near Ross-on-Wye, Herefordshire.

▲ THE INDEPENDENT 29.5.97

MAIL ON SUNDAY 20.4.97

Arkangel 18

Freak show back as high art in animal passions

Dan Gjalster on video shock in Venice

THE outrage aroused by pickled animals faded into insignificance yesterday with the unveiling of a video installation featuring an artist engaging in acts of bestiality with animals. The piece by Russian performance artist Oleg Kulik is being shown at the Venice Biennale in a group show with three other artists.

But any attempt to bring the video installation to Britain could face problems. An RSPCA spokesperson said: "It does sound extremely obscene. Any attempt to bring it into this country would probably fall foul of the Video Recordings Act and the Sexual Offences Act."

Philip Dodd, director of the Institute of Contemporary Arts, which recently exhibited a video of two pigs copulating by the Chinese artist Xu Bing, said: "A lot of what is around now has a very close proximity to the funfair, to the pleasures and freakshows of the funfair. At one time this took place in the illicit places of public pleasure. As they've been closed down it's interesting how they've returned as high art."

As to whether it qualified as art, David Lee, editor of the magazine Art Review, said: "Who can say if it's any good. The criteria are arbitrary. Which is better: Gilbert & George's technicolor turds or an artist with his head up a cow watching himself having sex with a pig?"

Oleg Kulik is no stranger to controversy. His first attempt at this work, still photographs of himself engaged in acts of bestiality with farm animals, was unveiled in Moscow last year. He claimed it was an attempt to exorcise the feral, brutal spirit motivating contemporary Russia through the vehicle of the self. The audience thought otherwise.

His most recent work was a two-week stint as a dog in New York. The show, I Bite America And America Bites Me, involved Kulik assuming the character of a dog from the moment his plane landed in New York. He spent his visit in a cage in an art gallery, dressed only in a dog collar. The audience was encouraged to enter the cage to play with him, but were warned to wear protective clothing in case he bit them.

Kulik was arrested in three countries for biting members of the audience.

At a New York press conference, his wife, Mila Bredikhina, who filmed the bestiality, had to speak on behalf of the artist, who was too busy barking to answer questions.

"He wants to explore in his mind what it means to be an animal. He searches for basic feelings... He was also a bird and a fish. I like him as a human and as an animal."

Kulik began his artistic life making large sculptures of animals and photographing them. He spent long periods suspended in the air impersonating a bird. But his artistic highlight was his candidacy for president of Russia. He ran dressed as a bull.

New Forest deer hunt calls it a day after 1,000 years

By Charles Clover, Environment Editor

THE last hunt in Britain to pursue fallow deer announced yesterday that it is to cease hunting, ending a New Forest tradition which has lasted almost 1,000 years.

The decision by the New Forest Buckhounds comes amid rumours that ministers are about to revoke — or refuse — licences for deer hunting on Forestry Commission land. The hunt operates exclusively on the commission's ground.

The chairman, masters and committee of the Buckhounds issued a statement saying that they had decided with regret not to hunt fallow bucks in the forest this season and added that "it is unlikely that they will hunt again in the future".

The decision was the result, they said, of the increasing demands upon the forest made by the urbanisation of its fringes and millions of visitors each year.

"The New Forest is now no longer the provider of an environment suitable to hunt the wild fallow buck, thus it seems that the buckhounds will become part of the rich history of the New Forest," the statement added. "It is hoped by all their supporters that the deer will not also be resigned to history but will still flourish." The chairman and former master, Peter Barfoot, said: "Time has caught up with us. Our committee met on Sunday and decided the hunt had come to the end of its natural life."

"We felt we should end with some dignity while we still had some. The New Forest has changed beyond recognition and there is no future hunting deer here."

Mr Barfoot said the Buckhounds were different from the three hunts which pursue red deer in the West Country. Those were based in agricultural areas where they were the only form of culling deer.

"The New Forest is not an agricultural area any more but a tourist destination. Now, even in the middle of winter and in the middle of the forest, you can be chasing a buck and come across a family on mountain bikes."

"In the minutes of the committee 20 years ago it was decided that our hunt should only have another two or three years. So we have done well to last this long. The fact is that the New Forest is now too small to support our hunt."

He denied that the hunt had had talks with the Forestry Commission or that a current commission review might have prompted the decision.

The Buckhounds were formed in 1885 but hunting fallow deer has been a part of the New Forest since William the Conqueror designated the forest a royal hunting ground in 1079.

The Buckhounds have been a thorn in the side of the hunting fraternity because of the younger fallow buck's habit of not standing at bay but lying down when cornered by the hounds. Anti-hunting campaigners have filmed hounds escaping their huntsmen and attacking the deer before it could be put down with a gun.

The commission announced soon after the election that it would not issue licences for hunting on its land until a full review of hunting had taken place.

A spokesman said: "We have prepared advice for ministers and that is being discussed at the moment."

Anti-hunting campaigners, believe the commission may be influenced by research carried out for the National Trust which said deer hunting with hounds was cruel.

Kevin Saunders, of the League Against Cruel Sports, said he was "very pleased" by the New Forest Buckhounds' decision. "The whole thing is academic anyway as we've heard they are not going to get a licence."

△ DAILY TELEGRAPH 29-7-97

FIREBOMB CAMPAIGN THREAT TO LIBRARIES

EXCLUSIVE
By GARY JONES

THE Animal Liberation Front has threatened to bomb libraries unless they stop stocking field sports magazines.

Scotland Yard believes animal rights activists are planning a nationwide campaign of firebombing.

Alert

The extremists want to see magazines like Country Life banned.

Library staff have been told to watch out for suspicious packages sent through the mail. One police to monitor movements of known activists.

One officer said: "You have to take these people seriously. They are skilled at making incendiary bombs."

Attack

"They haven't hesitated to use them in the past."

He added: "They pick on easy targets like libraries, although high street shops have been attacked."

△ DAILY MIRROR 27-12-96

THE GUARDIAN 14-6-97 △

△ SUNDAY MAIL 3-8-97

FORMER model Celia Hammond cheered 3,500 anti-hunt marchers with a speech at a controversial rally yesterday.

The RSPCA and other groups had asked animal lovers to stay away yesterday in case it caused confrontation.

And there were roars of approval as sitcom writer and animal rights campaigner Carla Lane told the crowds that Sir Paul McCartney and his wife, Linda, had sent messages of strong support.

The rally in Trafalgar Square followed a march through central London.

It aimed to encourage the Government to ban bloodsports after a massive turnout at the recent pro-hunt lobby in Hyde Park.

West animal rights raids

A SERIES of nationwide raids against animal rights extremists is being co-ordinated by West Mercia police using intelligence gathered at recent violent demonstrations in Herefordshire.

So far police have arrested 44 people and say the figure will double in the next two weeks as a series of multi-force operations are carried out.

Evidence is being gathered from video footage taken at recent demonstrations in the county - five weeks ago 250 animal rights extremists fought police outside the Consort beagle-breeding kennels, near Ross-on-Wye.

The same day a young mother and her two small children were terrorised in their home by so-called protestors who pelted the house with rocks and smashed windows and doors.

Yesterday Superintendent Tony Judge, head of operations in Hereford, said: "We will not tolerate protests and people involving terrorist activity."

By Adam Powell

"There are thousands of well-meaning, genuinely concerned people who are perfectly within their rights to protest, but there is a group of people, which is no bigger than 100, forcing their Fascist views on people."

"They do not have sufficient support to change the law as they want it so they resort to terrorism."

Superintendent Judge said raids would take place all over the country in the next two weeks to arrest hard-core animal rights extremists organised by the shadowy Animal Liberation Front.

Last night Robin Webb, spokesman for the Animal Liberation Front, said: "The police are trying to crackdown and silence people who are trying to reveal what is going on behind closed doors in these animal establishments."

"There is a concerted attempt to stifle animal rights protests - the law fails the animals and people who are going outside the law to end lawful animal abuse see that as the ultimate liberation movement."

WESTERN DAILY PRESS 28.5.97

Landowners threaten Blair

by David Harrison
Environment Editor

THE LEADER of Britain's landowners will warn Environment Minister Michael Meacher tomorrow that the Government faces a massive campaign of 'passive resistance' if it attempts to control the countryside through legislation such as the Bill to ban foxhunting.

Four days after 100,000 country-dwellers protested in Hyde Park against the ban and other threats to rural life, Ewen Cameron, the president of the Country Landowners' Association, will tell Mr Meacher that the Government cannot run the countryside without the co-operation of people who live there. "The consequences will be extremely damaging," said Nick Way, the association's chief political adviser, who will also attend the meeting in London. The 'sullen resistance' could take many forms, he said. Landowners could make minimal efforts to implement new laws and farmers could refuse permission for their land to be used for military training.

Landowners are concerned about planned legislation to give greater public access to the countryside. Mr Cameron will tell Mr Meacher that legislation should be dropped in favour of 'co-operation and partnership'. Mr Way said: "We don't think the Government understands how the countryside works."

The landowners will also demand reform of the Common Agricultural Policy and more government investment in rural housing, education and health care. The association believes that the Blair Government would face huge problems enforcing a foxhunting ban. Militant pro-hunters say that they will burn forests and use tractors and horse boxes to block railways and roads. Otis Welsh, hunter, Richard Williams, described Thursday's Hyde Park rally as 'the last peaceful protest'.

Anti-hunting groups say the hunters have become more aggressive and are preparing for more violence in the run-up to the foxhunting Bill's second reading in November.

Michael Foster, the MP behind the private member's Bill, has received death threats from pro-hunters. The League Against Cruel Sports, a non-violent group that monitors hunts, has hired security guards and is training members in self-defence in preparation for a wave of violence.

"They will resort to violence because they have lost the argument," said a spokesman. "The closer we get to the Bill becoming law, the more desperate the hunters will get."

Charity shops in bomb alert

GOSPORT: Part of High Street was sealed off today as police examined two suspect packages sent to cancer research charity shops.

The eastern end of the High Street was evacuated for about an hour, but was opened again when police established the contents of the two brown jiffy bags were harmless.

Police acted after a woman claiming to be from the Animal Liberation Front telephoned the Gosport office of The News and said one cancer research shop in the High Street had had its lock superglued and a jiffy bag had been delivered to it.

She did not specify what the bag contained but Inspector Steve Doel said: "We have to be on the safe side - especially in the light of the current campaign."

THE NEWS 7.4.97

CRUEL FARMER STARVED PIGS

A FARMER was banned from keeping animals for a year yesterday after 400 of his pigs were found dead and dying.

The pigs were desperate for food and drink, Canterbury magistrates in Kent heard. Richard Marshall, 43, admitted cruelty.

DAILY MIRROR 24.7.97

LAWYERS acting for protesters injured when police cleared an animal-rights rally have made formal complaints over the action, including the alleged indiscriminate use of the controversial CS spray.

The incident at Ross-on-Wye, near Hereford, three weeks ago, is believed to have been the first at which police have used the spray - introduced for personal protection - in a public-order situation. The police deny it was used indiscriminately and say it was for their officers' personal protection and safety.

Two demonstrators say they will sue Hereford and Worcester police for alleged assault. Others are believed to have consulted lawyers and the civil-liberties group Liberty. At least 12 demonstrators, mainly women, were affected by the spray and others claim they were hit by riot police wielding batons during the trouble at Consort Kennels which breeds beagles for vivisection.

Eyewitnesses claim officers fired the spray without warning above the heads of a crowd trying to stop a van carrying people who had been arrested.

THE OBSERVER 13.7.97

Animal rights activists step up campaign of violence

Candidates sent razor blades and company firebombed as cruelty protests escalate

RICHARD SPENCER

RAZOR blades were posted to a prospective MP and a haulage firm was firebombed during a weekend of violence by animal rights activists.

The attacks came after about 400 protesters gathered outside the home of an Oxford University scientist said to be a supporter of vivisection.

Anne McIntosh, Conservative parliamentary candidate in the Vale of York, was sent an envelope containing razor blades and hate mail. Police said it was posted in York on Friday and it is believed to have reached her campaign office on Saturday. A second envelope stuffed with razor blades was received by another unnamed Tory candidate in the North of England, said Graham Robb, Conservative spokesman for Yorkshire and the North-east.

Miss McIntosh is an MEP for North Essex, which includes the port of Brightlingsea, a focus for protests against live animal exports. But she thought she had been targeted because she was a supporter of field sports. "I think whoever did this must be deranged... No-one was hurt opening it but police are treating it very seriously."

She said she would not be frightened off by the hate mail and that she remained in favour of field sports. "On a free vote I would vote for them to continue. The fox in particular is a pest, it is vermin and does damage to farm animals. It provides enjoyment for people to follow a hunt. There are a lot of people in this constituency who are involved with field sports and they could lose their jobs."

News of the hate mail was released yesterday as detectives were investigating a firebomb attack at Spiers Haulage depot in Claverdon, Warwickshire.

A lorry tractor unit was destroyed by fire early yesterday and bomb disposal experts defused a number of other devices. No-one was hurt and no-one has claimed responsibility for either attack. Earlier this year, a poultry plant at Brackley, Northamptonshire, suffered a similar firebomb attack which was said to be the work of "animal activists".

Nine people were arrested during a series of anti-vivisection protests in and around Oxford on Saturday. About 400 demonstrators had gathered outside the Oxford home of neuroscientist Colin Blakemore and said he was a supporter of animal experiments. Prof Blakemore, who is based at Oxford University and is an expert on BSE, was not available for comment. He was said to be abroad.

Protesters also gathered outside a research plant in Banbury, where minor damage was caused, and at Oxford University's science department.

In recent weeks animal rights demonstrators have staged a series of protests in various parts of England.

Last weekend, 250 demonstrators clashed with police at a beagle breeding kennels in Hereford. There have also been protests in Huntingdon, Cambridgeshire, and Norfolk.

An animal liberation campaigner warned that protests could become increasingly violent if industry and the authorities failed to take note of a rising tide of concern. The campaigner, a spokesman for the Animal Liberation Front, said some activists may well decide that letter bombs and firebombs got better and faster results than peaceful protests.

"There is a new mood of anger and determination about the way animals are treated and it will continue," said the campaigner.

△ THE SCOTSMAN 28-4-97

Detectives probe animal rights graffiti attack on pet shop

AN ANIMAL rights group has launched a sinister attack on a pet shop in Isleworth.

The Animal Liberation Front daubed the front of Spreo Pets in South Street with its name accompanied by a threatening letter.

Detectives have taken the letter, a copy of which was sent to the Times, for finger-printing.

They have also warned Spreo Pets owner Pam Heather, 50, to be on her guard against chemical attacks.

Bizarrely, the targeting of the shop, which has been in Isleworth 20 years, was prompted "because residents on the Ivybridge council estate buy pets there".

Mrs Heather said she was told in a threatening call, that she must stop selling pets to council tenants.

The letter, was delivered early last Friday. It says: "Our actions are a foretaste of what you can expect should you fail to heed this warning."

"We insist that you phase out the live animal side of your business, by not vetting people it is obvious that you don't give a damn as to where animals end up."

A defiant Mrs Heather immediately vowed not to be intimidated by the threats, calling them cowardly.

She said: "I think they are cowards if they have not got the guts to come out and show themselves."

"I am expecting more trouble and I have been warned they might put chemicals on the graffiti to hurt people who rub it off but I will carry on my shop as usual."

"I think it is disgraceful they should tell me how I should run my shop and judge people just because they live on a council estate."

"A lot of people who live on the Ivybridge are very caring people and love animals."

"Some of them don't have a lot of possessions or companions and they pour affections on to their animals as a result."

"And, as far as I know, none of my customers have ever treated their pets badly and I certainly don't ill-treat animals."

Sgt Doug McLeod of Chiswick Police said: "We take this threat seriously and would appeal for anyone who can help us catch these people to get in touch with Chiswick CID."

THE TIMES 20-5-97

Pigeon reprieve

Plans to revoke the licence of Trafalgar Square's only authorised bird-seed seller have been abandoned. Westminster City Council failed to persuade the National Heritage Department to sanction removal of the birds' main food supply as a way of reducing the square's pigeon population.

NORTHERN ECHO 16-6-97 △

△ THE HAVERHILL
ECHO 19-7-97

△ THE HOUNSLOW, FELTHAM AND HANWORTH TIMES
9-5-97

Arkangel 18

Drug-test animal lab faces closure after TV exposé

By Philip Johnston, Home Affairs Editor

ONE OF Britain's largest animal testing companies, with 1,600 employees, faces possible closure after a Home Office investigation into allegations of maltreatment.

Huntingdon Life Sciences has been given until the end of November to meet 16 stringent conditions if it is to be allowed to continue experiments for drug companies.

Two individuals working at the Cambridgeshire laboratory have been charged with offences under the Protection of Animals Act and the personal licence of a third technician is to be withdrawn.

Letters of admonition are to be sent to two other staff members.

The inquiry began after a Channel 4 team for a documentary broadcast in March secretly filmed Huntingdon employees kicking and hurling a beagle against a wall.

Staff were shown punching, shaking and laughing at the dogs and were unable to take blood samples properly.

Despite two visits from the Home Office Inspectorate while the programme, It's a Dog's Life, was being made, none of the cruelty was uncovered.

In a parliamentary answer last night, George Howarth, Home Office minister, said a detailed investigation had been conducted by the department's animals inspectorate, which viewed more than 20 hours of unbroadcast material, studied company records and interviewed past and present staff.

"Shortcomings relating to the care, treatment and handling of animals and delegation of health checking to new staff demonstrate that the establishment was not appropriately staffed and that animals were not at all times provided with adequate care," Mr Howarth said.

It was therefore proposed to revoke the company's certificate from Nov 30.

Immediate closure would result in the destruction of thousands of animals including 1,000 dogs, 10 baboons, 200 marmosets, 450 macaques, 13,000 mice, 35,000 rats, 2,000 guinea pigs, 3,000 birds and 4,000 fish.

Animal rights groups estimated that the company had 100,000 animals on its premises, including 1,000 beagles and 700 monkeys.

Mr Howarth said revocation would shut down the company with the loss of jobs but this could be avoided.

"While the failures and admissions are extremely serious, this outcome would not necessarily be warranted," he added.

"An application for a replacement certificate could be considered if we can be assured that measures have been put in place to prevent any recurrence of the events shown in the television programme.

"Sixteen stringent conditions have been set which must be met before any new application can be considered."

Mr Howarth acknowledged that the inspectors were criticised for failing to spot the alleged maltreatment during visits to the establishment and said there would be a review of policy.

The Inspectorate has been asked to audit all commercial dog facilities to advise on the best practice for keeping and caring for animals.

Christopher Cliffe, chief executive of Huntingdon Life Sciences, said the revocation would not necessarily close the company as only one third of the staff was involved in animal studies.

He was also confident that the company could meet the conditions set by the Home Office. "It is a very important matter which we are taking terribly seriously," he added.

The controversy has hit Huntingdon's business, with the share price falling from £1.21 in 1996 to less than 60p.

In 1993 the share price peaked at 243p.

Glaxo Wellcome and Zeneca last month stopped awarding new drug testing contracts to Huntingdon pending the outcome of the Home Office investigation.

Astra, the giant Swedish pharmaceuticals group, has already said it would no longer use Huntingdon to test drugs.

Mike Baker, chief executive of the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection, welcomed the Home Office action. But he added: "It raises as many questions as it answers, particularly about how they intend to make sure such scenes will never be witnessed again in a British laboratory."

"Huntingdon does not deserve to have its licence renewed."

STEVENAGE MERCURY 18.7.97 A

A SECURITY review is under way at pharmaceutical giant GlaxoWellcome, in Stevenage, after animal rights activists walked through the main gates, entered an office and accessed computer files before being found two hours later.

The campaigners barricaded themselves in an unused portable cabin while they logged in to one of the company's computers to try to obtain "evidence of animal testing".

The security breach at the Gunnels Wood Road research facility happened at around 4pm on Monday.

Police were called immediately and a helicopter using heat-seeking equipment circled the 100-acre (40.5ha) site from the air.

The two activists — Niel Hansen, a former resident of Constantine Close, Pin Green, Stevenage, and Laura Nichol — were discovered around two hours later.

Sledgehammers were used to break down the office door, as the pair had piled furniture against it, refusing to come out.

They were interviewed at Stevenage police station and bailed without charge to return on August 19.

Mr Hansen, who lives in Hemel Hempstead, vowed to continue targeting GlaxoWellcome, which he claims is the "biggest vivisection company in the world".

He recently served 18 months of a three-year prison sentence for terrorising one of its pregnant employees.

Mr Hansen told the Mercury: "GlaxoWellcome got quite a shock to find that their allegedly fool-proof, hi-tech security system failed. We also came up with some useful information."

A company spokeswoman said the computer Mr Hansen and 21-year-old Miss Nichol, who lives in Tyne and Wear, tapped into was not networked and did not contain any confidential research files.

She added: "Obviously, we try to be a secure site, but we do not want it to be like Fort Knox, we have a lot of visitors every day. It's a difficult situation — there will be a review."

A police spokeswoman said four animal rights activists had entered the site, but two were found and evicted.

"The remaining two were arrested shortly before 6pm on suspicion of criminal damage," she added.

Front freed beagles

The Animal Liberation Front says it freed 15 beagles during an attack on a kennels.

The dogs were taken from Consort Kennels, Ross-on-Wye, near Hereford, on Tuesday. In a call to the Press Association, an ALF spokesman said the group carried out the attack because dogs at the kennels were used for research.

The caller also said that a man in prison on the Isle of Wight, jailed for possession of incendiary devices, was on hunger strike in protest at vivisection.

EXPRESS AND STAR 17.5.97

Beef shutdown

Two meat plants suspected of being part of an international smuggling ring shipping British beef to the Continent despite a worldwide export ban have been closed

Ban on fishing ruled out

THE new Labour Government has struck a massive blow for the future of fishing.

In an historic meeting with Angling Times, the Rt Hon Dr Jack Cunningham, new Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries, and Food, pledged security for the sport.

Nothing to fear

And he said angling had nothing to fear from extremists calling for the sport to be banned.

Dr Cunningham, the politician ultimately responsible for shaping Government policy on animal welfare and the environment, delivered his promise in an exclusive interview at Whitehall.

EXCLUSIVE By RICHARD LEE

He said: "There are no proposals to ban any aspect of fishing, and there is no hidden agenda."

"I see it growing in popularity and in very safe hands." And he also announced the setting up of an independent group to completely review the laws governing fishing.

"Every aspect of angling is set for a comprehensive review over the next 18 months," he said. "I see a bright future for the sport as we head towards the millennium."

△ ANGLING TIMES 16.7.97

△ THE TIMES 15.7.97

Country anger at Forestry hunt ban

by TIM REID and GREG NEALE

THE FORESTRY Commission angered hunting enthusiasts and farmers yesterday by enforcing a ban on using its property while it conducts a "major policy review".

On the first day of the fox hunting season, the Commission refused to renew licences on its land while it decides whether to allow the practice to continue.

The Commission's decision brought an angry response from those who fear the review may result in a permanent ban on the 84 hunts that ride Commission land, which covers two and half-million acres of England, Scotland and Wales. The move follows the National Trust's ban on deer hunting on its land.

A Forestry Commission spokesman confirmed: "In effect, it is a temporary ban. We have been asked by ministers to review our position in relation to hunting."

Janet George, of the British Field Sports Society, said the move was causing considerable ill feeling with farmers whose land neighbours Commission property.

"The decision is ridiculous," she said. "The Forestry Commission don't even know which areas of their land they can or cannot legally ban hunting on."

The Farmers' Union of Wales condemned the move as "a bid to ban hunting by the back door".

Protesters from both sides of the debate gathered throughout Britain for the opening day of the fox hunting season. About 2,000 anti-hunt protesters met in Hyde Park in preparation for a march to Trafalgar Square.

The protest, organised by a fringe group of the National Anti Hunt Campaign, is to press the Government to allow time for Michael Foster's anti-hunting Bill.

SUNDAY TELEGRAPH
△ 3-8-97

Shark campaign in contest demo

By Geoff Davis

ANTI-SHARK fishing protesters shouted and waved banners on Poole Quay on Saturday as anglers sailed out for an annual competition.

The event, organised by Improve Your Sea Angling magazine, aimed to catch tope before setting them free again.

Shark Protection League members from all over the country gathered on the Quayside at 8am to make their opposition known.

Tope are a member of the shark family and grow up to around six feet long, weighing up to 70 pounds.

Protesters were drawing attention to the cruelty of taking sharks out of water and the possibility that the fish will die of internal injuries such as a ruptured stomach after they are set free.

They also say that many sharks will never recover and die of shock or are too weak to swim and slowly sink to the sea bed and die.

The magazine's Technical Editor, Neil MacElow, admitted that there was a possibility of the sharks dying from injuries caused by hooks.

He said that if a fish was obviously in distress after it had been hooked then it would be killed.

He said: "Fish are not made to be taken out of water and there is a chance that they will die. That's life - I could be run over by a bus tomorrow."

A protester retorted: "I suppose Mr MacElow could be run over by a bus if he was dragged in front of it on a fishing hook."

Each tope caught on Saturday was measured before being set free, prizes were to be given out for the biggest catch.

Shark Protection League campaigns organiser, Chris Martin, said: "People are coming from all over the country for the protest."

"Shark fishing is a blood sport and sharks can die. If the event happens again next year then we will be out in boats."

DAILY ECHO 16-6-97 △

CIRCUSES with performing animals will remain outlawed from council parks and land in Ipswich.

The decision was made after claims the 21-year-old ban was illegal.

And it will come as a clear response to the Association of Circus Proprietors of Great Britain - which had been demanding a rethink on the ruling.

Sheila Baguley, chairwoman of the leisure services committee, said animal circuses were simply not in the public interest.

She said: "In view of the overwhelming public response, we are going to exercise our statutory discretion and continue the ban on animal circuses."

△ IPSWICH EVENING STAR 31-5-97

MORE than 3,500 protesters gathered in London for an anti-hunting rally yesterday amid anger over a call by the three top animal welfare groups for people to stay away, writes Rory O'Carroll.

The rally in Hyde Park failed to attract a tenth of the support of last month's country sports pro-hunting rally. The protest, timed to coincide with the start of the deer-hunting season, aimed to put pressure on the Government to allow time for an anti-hunting Bill going through the Commons. But march organisers, a fringe group of the National Anti Hunt Campaign, were criticised by the RSPCA, League Against Cruel Sports and the International Fund for Animal Welfare, which said the protest was unnecessary.

INDEPENDENT
ON SUNDAY 3-8-97

ANIMAL rights terrorists today threatened a new wave of bombings against firms and scientists accused of cruelty.

And campaigners have warned that the Lothian lab where Dolly the sheep was cloned would be a prime target.

Mounting concern was fuelled by Robin Webb, spokesman for the hardline Animal Liberation Front, who said new bombings could not be ruled out.

He denies ALF involvement but claimed militant terrorists, such as the Justice Department, were ready to strike.

"There is mounting anger and a determination to take action against those abusing animals," he said.

Violence

Police, who today warned any firms linked to alleged animal cruelty to take care, confirmed hardline animal rights activists could be ready to unleash a campaign of violence and are not underestimating the threat.

One source said: "Given their past record, these people can be completely

GUARDIAN WEEKLY
△ 4-6-97

△ EVENING NEWS 9-5-97

The Hunt

by David Lane

Ray, a young hunt-sab, is making his way back to his friends when he comes across a somewhat dishevelled hunter sitting in a hedge brushing himself off...

Major: "Damned horse threw me! Help me up lad. Burke's the name. Major Burke. You can call me Major."

Ray: "Hi, I'm Ray. Here, give me your hand. By the way, I'm sabbing your hunt."

Major: "Thought you might be - the orange mohican is a bit of a clue, what!"

Ray: "Anyway, your lot should be back this way later - they're following the false trail I laid! Still, when the Anti-Hunting Bill goes through all this will be a thing of the past."

Major: "Anti-Hunting Bill - Ha! Listen lad, we'll stop it - we're organised, just look how many ordinary working folk turned out for that rally in London. Tens of thousands of them!"

Ray: "And on a weekday too! My mates and I wish we could have got there - but we had to go to work."

Major: "Think yourself lucky to have a job to go to. Thousands of decent, hard-working folk will be out of work if that damnable bill becomes law."

Ray: "Are you saying that's why fox-hunting should continue - to keep people in work?"

Major: "Yes, of course. You can't just throw people on the dole; these are skilled men and women. The hunts have provided work for generations of country folk."

Ray: "So I suppose you supported the miners in their fight to keep their jobs did you? I bet you're against World Peace too - if it means that the thousands of 'ordinary, decent folk' who make and sell missiles, poison gas, guns and bombs might lose their jobs?"

Major: "Fair point lad, times change and so must the work people do. But have you thought about this? You're an animal lover. What about the thousands of hounds that will have to be put down if you get your way? Ironical, don't you think, with your lot claiming to love animals?"

Ray: "Don't kid me that you're concerned about the hounds. Where are all the dogs that are too old to hunt, or that didn't make the grade? In rest-homes for retired foxhounds, fed and cared for by kindly country-folk? Or are they killed and sometimes even fed to the pack?"

Major: "Country ways may seem harsh to some, but it's not economic to keep hounds that are past their prime. It's Nature's way - survival of the fittest."

Ray: "Right, that's what I said - you kill them anyway! So have you considered drag-hunting? You'd need your hounds for that."

Major: "Drag-hunting! Poppycock! Hunting's not about charging across the countryside on horseback. The pleasure is in pitting my wits against a real animal. The fox is a cunning creature - a worthy adversary, and he often gets away you know!"

Ray: "Let me see if I've got this right. You take dozens of men and women on horseback and many more on foot. You combine the sum total of their wit and intelligence to pit against a small furry mammal, ...and the fox still gets away?"

Major: "No need for sarcasm my lad. The point is that the fox is unpredictable. You never know where it's going to go..."

Ray: "Right, you mean like across railway lines or through people's gardens? I heard that your hounds killed a young girl's pet rabbit last month."

Major: "Very regrettable. We wrote a letter of apology and offered to buy her a new one. But don't forget foxes kill rabbits too. And have you ever seen what a fox can do to hens if it gets into a hen-house?"

Ray: "I'm a vegan so I don't accept the need to keep hens. But perhaps those who do should protect them better."

Major: "Aha, a vegan, I thought you looked undernourished!"

Ray: "No, I'm the correct weight for my height. Are you?"

Major: "Don't be impertinent my lad!"

Ray: "Okay, so you claim that hunting is necessary because farmers find it impossible to protect their animals from foxes. Don't you think that bringing in the cavalry is a bit over the top?"

Major: "It might seem that way to a townie but..."

Ray: "Actually I live in the country!"

Major: "...as I was saying, it's traditional. Men have hunted animals for thousands of years."

Ray: "And where there were no suitable animals to hunt they were introduced weren't they?"

Major: "That is beside the point. Hunting is part of the culture of the countryside. It's our heritage! And let me tell you, the hunting fraternity preserves and protects the countryside so that you, sorry - townies, can enjoy the woods and hedgerows."

Ray: "Quite a few points there! First, a democratically elected government should protect the woods and hedgerows, they're too important to entrust to farmers and hunters. And while we're on about democracy, can I remind you that the great majority of the British people want hunting banned?"

Major: "Stuff and nonsense I say! What right do the majority have to impose their will on the minority?"

Ray: "(That's what I used to wonder when people kept voting in the Tories.) So you're not a democrat then? But anyway, you talked about tradition... I saw in the paper that some men were convicted recently for organising illegal dog-fights..."

Major: "We agree there! Disgusting so-called sport. Absolutely right to ban it I say."

Ray: "...but they argued that dog-fighting dates back to before Roman times - they said it was 'traditional'. Of course lots of 'traditional' bloodsports have been banned: cock-fighting, bull-baiting, badger-baiting... just because something is traditional doesn't mean it must never end. And I've thought of something else. You don't need much money to get involved in dog-fighting and the rest - unlike foxhunting!"

Major: "Ah, I knew class would come into this sooner or later. All you antis really want to do is have a go at the 'upper classes'. That's why you attack fur shops but not leather shops. That's why we don't hear much about angling! Let me tell you, my young envious friend, our hunt includes people from all walks of life - you don't have to be rich to ride with the hounds!"

Ray: "Really? And I thought horses were quite expensive to buy and look after, but yes, you could be right about leather and fishing - at least with some people I know. Anyway, we're getting off the point. I just wondered whether people who support foxhunting tend to have a bit more power and influence than your average citizen. Have you got friends in high places Major?"

Major: "One or two perhaps. But let me remind you, it's you and the rest of the great unwashed who kill far more foxes than we do - roaring up and down the roads in your clapped-out Escorts!"

Ray: "At least I haven't got bits of bush sticking out of my hair. But let's not get personal shall we? You're absolutely right. Far more foxes are killed on the roads than are killed by hunts. So can we explore the logic of your argument a moment? Let's see, it's okay to deliberately kill a fox because so many are killed by accident or negligence anyway..."

Major: "You've got it..."

Ray: "...so logically, I could deliberately kill a person on the grounds that many more people are killed on the road than are murdered. I imagine the Justice Department might be interested in your reasoning!"

Major: "Steady on lad! I can't imagine any department of justice condoning murder..."

Ray: "Sorry Major, just a joke!"

Major: "Yes, well, I will agree that perhaps it wasn't the best argument I could have used."

Ray: "Come on then Major, be honest, admit it - you go hunting because you like to see animals torn to pieces. You love being in at the kill."

Major: "No! Absolutely not. I resent your suggestion that I am a cruel and heartless person. I love animals; I've got two dogs and a cat of my own and I treat them just like part of the family. No, the reason I ride with the hunt is just that - I love to ride. I enjoy the thrill of galloping across the countryside, trotting through woodland, and jumping hedges..."

Ray: "So I see - is that your horse coming back now?"

Major: "...Oh yes, thanks, but as I was saying, I really only go hunting for the ride."

Ray: "Now we're going round in circles. Didn't you say before that the pleasure of hunting isn't about charging across the countryside on a horse?"

Major: "Well I try to be present at the end, but I can assure you I take no pleasure at all in seeing the quarry dispatched."

Ray: "Dispatched? You mean like sent by post?"

Major: "No, I mean 'killed'. I'm sorry my boy, I must remember to use simple words."

Ray: "Please don't patronise me. I merely have an antipathy to a euphemism masquerading as the actuality of the deed. Or to put it simply - why don't you just call a spade a spade. Oh yes, shall we discuss spades?..."

Major: "Oh no, we have none of that digging-out business on our hunt - most improper. If Reynard goes to earth we leave him be. We're sportsmen, not 'blood-junkies' as you like to call us."

Ray: "Actually I prefer 'hunt scum'. So you're saying that there are no 'terrier men' associated with your hunt?"

Major: "Well, if you mean those scruffy fellows with the little dogs..."

Ray: "Yes, and spades."

Major: "Well, I don't really have anything to do with their sort. They're not gentlemen, if you get my meaning. I'll admit I've heard what they get up to - not my cup of tea at all you know. If you lot want to ban something, why don't you start with that!"

Ray: "Another working class pastime bites the dust! Just a minute, I can hear the hounds. It sounds as if the hunt (scum) have been out-witted again and are heading for home. I'd better not hang around - I value my skull too much! But before I go let's see if I can now understand why fox-hunting is so important to you..."

...It's not to provide employment - you agree that jobs must change with the times.

...It's not to avoid killing off the hounds - you admit they're expendable.

...It's not just about charging across the countryside on a horse - you want to pit your wits against the cunning fox.

...But because the fox is unpredictable, sometimes you end up killing some other animal - and you find that most regrettable.

...You agree that hunting is an inefficient method of killing foxes - so that's not it either.

...It can't be because hunting is traditional - since you abhor bloodsports which were once traditional but are now illegal.

...You don't really believe you're the self-appointed guardians of the countryside or that the British people would let you tear up woodland and hedgerows in an act of spite.

...You accept the flaw in your argument when you say it's okay to kill foxes because lots are being killed on the roads.

...You even have contempt for some of your followers - the parasitic terrier men for instance - although you claim hunting is not a class issue.

It really only leaves ONE thing doesn't it?

The one thing that is never, ever said. To admit it would allow others to see the real you - the base, contemptible you. But come on, it's just you and me - I won't tell a soul. Tell me Major, why DO you enjoy hunting so much?"

Major: "I like killing things."

Pagan Animal Rights

Pagan Animal Rights (PAR), a national organisation set up in 1983, supports any nonviolent campaign to:

- a) end all forms of animal abuse;
- b) conserve the earth's wildlife and natural habitats; and
- c) promote a non-harming lifestyle and ethical diet.

PAR believes that the support of the above objectives is synonymous with the sincere and active worship of the Goddess and the God of Beautiful Compassion, by whatever Names they are known; the Lady and Lord of Planet Earth and all her creatures, believing that the earth is the body of the Goddess and the God we honour.

PAR's objectives are, firstly, to raise the issue of animal rights within the so-called 'new age' pagan community, as there are still many pagans who see no connection between animal rights and their faith.

Secondly, PAR seeks to promote the idea of what might be called an 'animal rights spirituality'. This entails:

- 1) The development of positive thinking towards the problems of animal abuse and habitat destruction, believing that such an attitude, expressed either ritually or in guided meditation, helps people campaign for animals and environment more effectively and nonviolently; and also that Thought itself can affect the consciousness of others, especially decision-makers; and

2) The promotion of the idea that personal and collective moral action follows from the adoption of certain religious assumptions and a certain world-view; that religion is not a weekend pastime or mind-game but involves the encouragement of the adoption of an ethos which will pervade one's everyday attitudes and actions, eventually changing society's values and thus affecting the culture in which one lives.

In support of these objectives, PAR produces a newsletter: £5 for 4 issues a year (£5 overseas - Sterling bank notes only please); £1 sample. PAR also has a network of active supporters.

PAGAN ANIMAL RIGHTS
Mr. Dominic Hodson (Editor)
Flat 5, 56 Park Road, Swanage,
Dorset BH19 2AE

Vegan Society News

Vegan Eco-Village

Thanks to the generosity of 'Vegan' readers, Plants For a Future's proposed Vegan Eco-Village (the first of its kind in the UK) is about to become a reality! An 83-acre site in North Devon has been found and the initial purchase price raised. Contracts have been exchanged and it is anticipated that the first wave of inhabitants will move on to the land in the early autumn. With the assistance of a team of permaculture architects, and the welcome support of the local Chief Planning Officer, it looks as though the villagers will be able to erect a range of structures - including cob, straw bale and underground houses.

PFF's Ken Fern adds:

"Whilst there are probably enough people now for the initial move on to the new site, we will probably be looking for more people committed to the vegan cause from next year. We are also looking for people who can help us along the way, either financially or by making working visits to the site when there will be tree planting, home building and other activities."

For more information on the project, write to:

Ken Fern, Eco-Village Project, Plants For a Future,
The Field, Penpol, Lostwithiel, Cornwall PL22 0NG.

Vegan Babies Wanted!

Breast-feeding vegan mums and parents feeding their infants soya-based infant formula are needed by researchers investigating the role of plant oestrogens in infants' diets. The Vegan Society is encouraging parents to participate; it is believed plant oestrogens (high in soya) may offer protection against certain diseases - eg breast cancer - later in life. However, more evidence is required! If you have an infant between 0-18 months contact: Colette Kelly, Hugh Sinclair Unit of Human Nutrition, Food Science & Technology Dept., University of Reading, PO Box 226, RG6 6AP (0118 9875123 x 7771).

New Web Site

The Vegan Society now has its very own World Wide Web site; <http://www.vegansociety.co>. Although still in its early stages, the plan is to provide site visitors with: information on joining the Society and ordering merchandise, a complete list of Trade Mark users, the full range of information sheets, and Local Contacts' details.

Vegecat and Vegekit

A supplement which is added to recipes (supplied) to provide complete meals for vegan cats is available and also one for kittens up to 12 months and lactating queens. Both come in 6 week supply tubs and cost £8.25 each.

Leaflets

A selection of leaflets are available including; Leather, The Dairy Industry, Health and the Environment. They cost £1.75 - 100, £5.95 - 500, £10.50 - 1000, £19.25 - 2,000. (Prices include p&p).

Membership

Individual £17; Unwaged Individual £11; Under 18 years of age £9; Family/joint (must reside at the same address) £23; Unwaged Family/joint (same as above) £15; Life £275. Eire & overseas should add £5.00.

(see Groups section for address & phone number)

The Vegan Prisoners Supporters Group (VPSG)

VPSG was set up in April 1994 initially to aid two vegan animal rights prisoners to obtain their rights to be recognised as ethical vegans whilst being detained in prison. The aim was to help them obtain suitable vegan food and toiletries. The two prisoners were Angie Hamp and Keith Mann who at that time were both having considerable difficulties. They were both trying to sort out their problems through the normal channels but it was soon recognised that help was required from outside and that an organisation needed to be established to help specifically with their health and welfare.

It wasn't long before we were being approached by other vegan animal rights prisoners and it was then decided that the work could only naturally expand as the number of prisoners of conscience kept rising. We then faced the reality that such an organisation was needed indefinitely and not just for the short term that was originally intended and so it was decided not to disband!

At that time VPSG had little knowledge of how the prison system actually worked but while the prisoners did their best internally we struggled to find our way through the reams of manuals on prison care to try to find the relevant guidelines on the care of vegans. Eventually we found a few lines at the back of one of the manuals and in another just one line and that was all there was!! We then decided to submit our own guidelines on the care of vegans and so got to work on trying to compile proper guidelines and to campaign to get them accepted by the Home Office. They were accepted in May 1996 and finally put in place in July 1996. This had taken almost 18 months of hard work.

The prisoners now have access to our VPSG Helpline seven days a week which most take advantage of at one time or another when urgent help is needed. Some prisons remain harder to deal with than others but the experience we gain in tackling difficult authorities only enables us to be more effective with future requests and obviously the guidelines are now there for our reference.

In our experience, prisoners only get so far when pursuing the ordinary internal complaint route, and it is usually when the Governor of a prison is contacted directly by us with either a call, fax or letter that the complaint is taken seriously enough to warrant action.

VPSG are also working on the vegan principal as a whole by regularly contacting the Home Office to discuss various issues on equality implementations and we are, at the moment, campaigning to have a policy introduced regarding direct access to vegan toiletries which would then be taken up by all prisons and ultimately benefit all vegan prisoners.

This would hopefully mean that a supply of suitable toiletries would be kept available at a central source so that they could be drawn upon whenever the need arose by different establishments.

At the moment we are also campaigning for free vegan toiletries to be made available to all vegan prisoners. At the present time ordinary prisoners are being supplied theirs free of charge, whilst vegan prisoners are having to pay for theirs out of their own private cash. We believe this to be a clear discrimination of ethics.

VPSG still exists entirely upon donations for its running costs - all the work is done by volunteers so no salaries are paid. It goes without saying that the amount of work we can do for each prisoner is limited to the funds we have available.

For further information or a copy of our Autumn newsletter please send a stamped addressed A5 envelope to:

VPSG
PO BOX 194, ENFIELD, MIDDLESEX EN1 3HD
(with a small donation to cover costs if at all possible)

Animal Rescue Directory

This is an invaluable little book to have, particularly when on holiday. It is compiled by Tracy L'Epine and the profits are donated to British animal charities. It lists over 800 animal rescue centres for wildlife, domestic and farm animals in the UK, besides over 50 National and International animal welfare and conservation organisations, plus hints on keeping pets and helping animals worldwide.

The rescue centres are listed alphabetically by county, so if on holiday you see an injured animal, locate the nearest town which helps the right animals (every centre gives its phone number) and ask for advice and address.

All this information is obtainable at the modest price of £2.95 (96/97 price) from:

Hand to Paw,
North Cottage, Great Hayes,
Headley Common Rd.,
Headley, Surrey KT18 6NE
(Fax: 01372 375302 Tel: 01831 619847)

The Shark Protection League: a Brief History

by Chris Martin

The Shark Protection League was formed mainly in response to the lack of direct action being carried out to protect marine life and the marine environment. The background of all those originally involved in the SPL was one of animal rights, hunt sabbing and direct action campaigning and this influenced the way we decided to proceed.

For almost 10 years I had been aware that shark fishing was carried out in Looe, Cornwall and early in 1994 a group of us visited Looe and spoke to shark anglers, concealing our real purpose. What we discovered was horrific, every year sharks were caught, clubbed to death and hung up outside the Shark Angling Club of Great Britain. Often pregnant animals were caught and killed since their heavier weight ensured a higher chance of obtaining a record weight for the fisherman.

September 1994 saw the formation of the Shark Protection League and our first action against the International Shark Angling Festival. We held a land-based demo as well as a water-borne action. We received excellent press coverage. A BBC documentary film was made about our protest. The following year, 1995, saw us there again but by then the 'festival' had lost some of its former spark as the sponsors had pulled out. We talked to the shark club and they decided to meet all the original demands that we had laid down including the banning of live-baiting, no tagging of sharks and judging the competition by the length of the shark measured whilst still in the water not by its weight. The organisers of the event also made a rule that no shark would be killed during the festival. The campaign against the International Shark Angling Festival has been halted but we would like to make it clear that all those involved with the SPL oppose any form of shark angling.

At the outset the SPL had decided on a course of direct action against those who abused the marine environment. We became aware of the trade in shark's fins for the Chinese delicacy Shark's Fin Soup; therefore 1995 saw us hold the first ever protest in China Town. Sadly, despite the fact that none of the larger marine environmental groups, who were notified of the event in plenty of time, saw fit to attend, a large number of our supporters marched through China Town ensuring that our anger at the shark's fin trade was brought to the attention of all. A similar event was held in December 1995 but as yet no conclusion to this campaign is in sight.

As and when we hear of abuse we act. Holland and Barrett were intent on selling the cartilage of sharks (unproven cancer preventative) but we launched a campaign and they withdrew the product from their shelves. Smaller distributors of shark cartilage and shark liver oil are being contacted as and when we hear about them (we encourage our membership to be vigilant and to let us know as soon as anything untoward catches their eye).

Our Action Reports feature all our victories and include information about campaigns as well as including articles from like-minded groups and individuals. Every Action Report contains the 'Proud to be Shark Killers' page where we feature those involved in the killing of marine life. We feel that it is important not to shy away from those responsible for the slaughter. Our reports are available (1-5) free for a 55p SAE. We decided from the outset that these Action Reports should look professional and yet be entertaining and informative.

Other campaign victories include: Tammy Girl (teenage girl clothes shop) who were threatened with a boycott campaign for selling shark tooth pendants; and Playhouse video stores (owned by WH Smith) who were selling shark angling videos. Waitrose plc and ASDA supermarkets were found to be selling shark steaks. These companies are still being contacted. After meeting with the Sea Life Centres it was decided to launch a campaign against them because all that they are interested in is profit. Although the centres talk of conservation and education they pander to the general public's preconceptions. They also admitted to us that they buy sharks caught by local anglers.

Our latest demonstration in June this year was against a Tope angling day organised by Improve Your Sea Angling magazine. We had no support on the sea but local groups and also 'Pisces' helped to make our feelings known to those involved in the sport. The anglers themselves admitted to the press that the sharks caught would likely die from injuries sustained. Contact us for a report - our latest Action Update tells all about the event.

Despite our successes, the future of the Shark Protection League is in doubt. The reasons are numerous. From what I have seen, the battle to save marine life is in many cases lost. The national marine conservation groups and animal welfare/environmental organisations are raking in their profits on the back of this slaughter. We know that in some cases the money raised never reaches those it was intended for and when it does, it is used in political campaigning rather than in direct action.

We also feel that the SPL has achieved its original aim which was to campaign against and expose the horrific sport of shark angling. To stage successful direct action campaigns with any hope of having an effect on the shark's fin trade would take millions of pounds. This we do not have and those individuals who have that kind of money don't give a damn about the marine environment. In the end I believe the SPL has shown a way forward and that we have learnt many lessons along the way. However sadly, despite our high aims and hopes for our organisation, the human race seems intent on a path of greed, destruction and the slaughter of all marine creatures until there is nothing left to kill.

A final decision on the future of the Shark Protection League will be taken in the Spring of 1998.

The BFSS Injunction

On the 10th of July, the day when tens of thousands of pro-hunt supporters assembled in Hyde Park for a rally, a number of anti-hunt protesters made their way to the headquarters of the British Fields Sports Society situated at 367, Kennington Road, London SE11. Upon their arrival they were made aware of an injunction which the BFSS had taken out against one named individual and several groups regarding the proposed demonstration. A copy of this injunction, which was fixed to trees and lamp posts in a 250 yard radius of the BFSS headquarters, has been passed on to Arkangel magazine and is reproduced below:

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE QUEENS DIVISION

THE BRITISH FIELD SPORTS SOCIETY (Plaintiff)
and

- 1) John Curtin
- 2) League Against Cruel Sports
- 3) Hunt Saboteurs Association
- 4) Animal Liberation Front
- 5) Animal Defence League
- 6) People for Animal Liberation (Defendants)

- d) From coming or remaining within 250 yards of the Plaintiff's offices which are situated at The Old Town Hall, 367 Kennington Road, London SE11 4PT until after the trial of this action or further Order.

3. At the trial herein, the Plaintiffs will seek an Order that any person who is acting in concert with any of the organisations referred to in Schedule 3 to the Order dated 9th July or who is holding himself out to be an animal rights activist shall be bound by the term of the said Order. (Section 3. Protection from Harassment Act 1997)

NOTICE TO THE DEFENDANTS:

1. This order prohibits you from doing the acts set out in this Order.
2. If you disobey this Order you may be found guilty of Contempt of Court and may be sent to prison or fined or your assets may be seized.

IT IS ORDERED that until midnight on Thursday 10th July 1997

- a) That the Defendants be restrained and an injunction is hereby granted restraining the Defendants whether by himself, his servants or agents or any of them, or otherwise how so ever from:
- b) Assaulting, molesting, harassing, threatening, pestering or otherwise interfering with the Plaintiff their servants or agents, employees or lawful visitors by doing acts to cause them harm whether directly or indirectly;
- c) Making any communication to the Plaintiff, their servants or agents, employees or lawful visitors whether in writing or orally, whether by telephone or otherwise how so ever save that they may send written communications to the Plaintiff's solicitors;

SCHEDULE 3

- 1) Animal Agenda
- 2) Animal Aid
- 3) Animal Concern Today
- 4) Animal Cruelty Investigation Unit
- 5) Animal Cruelty Defence League
- 6) Animal Right Militia
- 7) Animal Welfare Awareness Project
- 8) People for Animal Liberation
- 9) People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals
- 10) Political Animal Lobby
- 11) Protesters, The
- 12) Respect for Animals

Had the BFSS known that only 14 protesters were actually going to turn up (judging by the barriers, the police were obviously expecting a lot more) it seems unlikely they would have gone to so much trouble and expense. In the event, the police decided to let the demonstrators protest regardless of the injunction although however, they did take advantage of their opportunity to take numerous photographs and video footage of the action.

Another Question of Violence

by Barry Horne

In the last issue of Arkangel (No 17) there was an article entitled 'A question of violence', written by Rabbix. The article condemned the use of violence by Animal Liberation activists. This is an issue that has been aired many times in the past, and many arguments have been made against the use of violence. Fine, I've no problem with that, everybody is entitled to their own opinion as long as they argue in a sensible way. What I do have a problem with though, is when people try and force their views on the rest of us by telling us what we 'must' do, or not do, as the case may be. Especially when those views are speciest and, to put it kindly, claptrap.

Rabbix says that he has rethought his views on violence and says that he is now opposed to it. I'll let you into a little secret Rabbix, the animals are also opposed to violence, that is, the extreme and brutal violence used against them every day. So when do the animals get their say in all this big debate on 'violence by our side'? I wonder. According to Rabbix, never. The phrases used by Rabbix and others who have argued against the use of violence by our side is always 'I am opposed to it' or 'I feel it is wrong'. Great! Let's forget all about creating a non-speciest world then. Let's just concentrate on imposing our feelings and views on animals instead! Sounds ridiculous? Of course it is. Being an Animal Liberation activist means always putting the feelings and needs of the animals first. It means never ever refusing to help the animals just because we don't feel the tactics used are correct or because we don't personally like some things. To impose our personal feelings on the animals and the struggle for their freedom is speciest and nothing else.

But let's leave aside the fact that condemning alleged Animal Liberation violence is speciest. Let's look at this whole argument of violence from another angle. For a start, I have a big problem in actually pinning down this violence by animal libbers. I mean, where is it? Violence inflicted on animals is self-evident. Violence used against animals is extreme violence. So huge and all-encompassing that I would have to walk around with my eyes and ears closed and my brain shut down to miss it. Every day, millions of animals suffer and die in factory farming. Millions are abused, tortured and murdered in vivisection labs and millions are beaten, abused and broken for the pleasure and use of animal abusers. But violence by animal libbers? I have to rack my brains to think of anything that could reasonably be called violent, and yet, Rabbix condemns these few and far between acts of violence as though they were some kind of massive problem. I find that very strange. Methinks that Rabbix has been reading the 'popular' press, those who condemn any compassion for the animals as 'violent extremism'.

It's well known that in the 25 or more years that direct action has been carried out against animal abuse, no human has been killed by animal liberation activity. Not even any animal abusers. In that same period, God knows how many animals have died. I don't know the figure and I don't want to. The figure would be so unbelievably high that I'm not sure I could handle that sort of knowledge, and yet, Rabbix wastes his time, and ours, by condemning Animal Liberation 'violence'. Very strange, step out from your sheltered existence Rabbix, come and join us in the real world. But be prepared to be shocked, it's not very fluffy out there.

In his article, Rabbix draws forth three examples of violence. One of these is the Unabomber. Not sure what they're doing "...violence by animal libbers? I have to rack my brains to think of anything that could reasonably be called violent" in there, they are not animal liberation so we can dismiss that straight away. The issue in question is animal liberation violence. The other two examples are animal liberation and I have certainly got something to say about them. The first one is the use of letter bombs by the Justice Department. I wonder if it's ever occurred to anyone, Rabbix included, how easy it would have been for the Justice Department to send letter bombs designed to kill? The fact that some of these letter bombs certainly did go off, and only slight injuries were caused, should tell us something I would hope. Despite the appalling crimes of the animal abusers who received those letter bombs, their lives were not taken, and that can only be because, unlike the animal abusers, animal liberation people are not cold blooded killers. Animal liberation people care, and that is shown time and time again by the actions carried out for the animals. The recipients of those letter bombs were animal murderers grown rich on the dead bodies of the animals they have so casually killed. The hands that opened those letter bombs were hands that dripped with the blood of our murdered animal brethren. By comparison, the hands of the Justice Department are clean, untainted by the violence and indifference of a society which permits animal murder to be approved of and rewarded. Remember this in future Rabbix, when you so readily criticise those who fight for a better world.

Rabbix then goes on to pass judgement on an alleged incident on the Mike Hill commemoration day in Cheshire in February. This was the alleged attack on a 'blood junkie scum' (your words Rabbix, not mine) by the Hunt Retribution Squad. Again we have to ask ourselves, why was the criticism levelled against animal liberation activists, in this case the HRS, and not those whose hands truly are bloodstained? Anyone with any experience of hunt sabbing surely join with me in my outrage that one of our own people has the audacity to criticise hunt sabs in this way. Since the early days of the Hunt Saboteurs Association, violence has been consistently and brutally handed out to hunt sabs the length and breadth of the country. Hunt sabs have been attacked, beaten, severely injured and even murdered by these 'blood junkie scum' that make up the hunts. The alleged HRS action criticised by Rabbix, occurred on a day of action to commemorate a hunt sab who was murdered by the hunt for God's sake. Where are your words for Mike Hill, Rabbix? I don't see them in your article. What I do see in your article is condemnation of people who, week in and week out, risk violence and serious injury from bloodthirsty and violent hunt scum. And why do they risk all this every week? Because they care, Rabbix. They believe the animals have a right to live and they are prepared to run the gauntlet of hunt violence for that belief. Rabbix, your words ring very hollow my friend. To criticise in this way dishonours us all as we remember those who have died at the hands of hunt violence.

A few years back, I was involved in the running of an animal rights prisoners support group. This group never had a problem with alleged use of violence by activists, because we had a very clear policy on this. In effect, we looked beyond the action itself and analysed the reasons for the action. If an action was carried out with the intention of helping the animals and trying to end their suffering and death, then we always supported it. That was because, as far as the group was concerned, the animals were all that mattered. Our own personal feelings and thoughts were exactly that - personal, and of course our personal opinions come second to animal liberation. The animals' well-being and liberation is of utmost importance to anyone who believes in animal liberation, so we supported all activity and refused to criticise anything that we personally didn't agree with. If the animals are all that matter, then it becomes impossible for any tactics used to be wrong. Some people have stated that we 'must win in the right way'. In fact, no matter what tactics are used, we can only ever win in the right way if the animals are freed.

Can I just finish off by saying that I personally do not advocate the use of violence. Likewise, I do not advocate the use of nonviolence or pacifism. What I do believe is this, each and everyone of us must do what we feel is right.

"...I have only one problem with violence and that is the extreme violence of animal abuse"

If a person believes in animal liberation, then they must fight for it in whatever way they believe is right, and not be criticised by others for that. To criticise someone who has carried out an action for animal liberation is to criticise their beliefs. No matter which way that criticism is argued, it still amounts to a criticism of someone's beliefs, and that cannot be right. If an action is carried out with the intention of helping the animals, then that action should always be above criticism. Otherwise, what the hell are we really fighting for and how do we hope to achieve it, when all we care about is fighting the war according to our own personal beliefs and not for the ultimate liberation of us all?

Speaking personally, I have only one problem with violence and that is the extreme violence of animal abuse.

Barry Horne, currently on remand in Bristol Prison, resumed his hunger strike at midnight August 11th, because he believes the Government has reneged on pre-election promises regarding animal experimentation. Barry called off his hunger strike in February after 35 days without food, following promises by the Labour Party, then in opposition. Among the promises were a ban on cosmetic and weapons testing, a stricter inspection procedure, a review of the 1986 Scientific Procedures (Animals) Act and a Royal Commission to examine the validity of the claim that animal experiments for medical reasons are necessary.

Despite much correspondence since Labour's victory on May 1st, the Labour Government has persistently refused to implement a single one of these promises, nor even to say when any action would be taken in the future.

Barry now demands a commitment from the Government to withdraw all Home Office licenses to experiment on animals, within an agreed time period.

Please write encouraging letters of support to Barry. His contact address is as follows:

Barry Horne,
VC 2141, HMP Bristol,
Cambridge Road, Horfield,
Bristol BS7 8PS.

Beyond Ethics

by Gianni Tamino

If by progress one intends an 'advancement towards better forms in the field of knowledge, social relations, customs, means of life' (Zingarelli Dictionary), the use of genetic manipulations of living organisms is not only incompatible with ethics but it definitely runs contrary to the concept of 'scientific progress'. In this connection, the Scientific Antivivisection Committee denounces that area of the research world which, after having mistakenly adopted animals as an experimental model for man, after having ascertained the impossibility of transferring to man experiments conducted on animals as well as the impossibility of transferring to man experiments conducted on animals as well as the impossibility of using animal parts as 'spare parts' for us, keeps postponing the expiry date of a mortgage it is not able to pay and creates 'transgenic' beings (into which human genetic material has been transferred) to surmount our immunological barriers, obstinately ignoring:

- 1) The new scientific knowledge that goes beyond any kind of short-sighted and mechanistic logic applied so far and shows the multiplicity of relations existing between the parts of an organism in addition to those that exist between this organism and its environment.
- 2) The danger of transferring viruses from one species to another resulting in the spreading of new and unforeseeable viral epidemics such as AIDS which was, as many now sustain, produced by the mutation of the SIV virus transmitted by monkeys to man.
- 3) The undoubtable disruption of ecosystems due to the spreading in nature of genetic information not subjected to the close examination of natural selection.
- 4) The physical and moral consequences on individuals subjected to xeno-transplants deriving from the elimination of the natural barriers which exist between species.

Moreover, the Scientific Antivivisection Committee denies the rightfulness of a 'science' considered as a repository of fundamental 'scientific truths' on which only technicians (or scientists) are authorized to voice their views, while the only certainty of science is that it is not the repository of 'truth' and that any knowledge must be subjected to continuous verifications, of a 'science' that wants us to believe that decisions are made in the name of general welfare by the receivers of the above mentioned 'truths' of a 'science' that political power refers to as if it had been entrusted with decisions to be made for mankind, of a 'science' which is an instrument in the hands of industries that are inclined to favour their own profits rather than human health.

Considering that its only purpose is progress and human health, the Scientific Antivivisection Committee opposes any manipulation both on the human and animal germinal line and believes that one should evaluate with the greatest care the hypothesis of interfering with the somatic line for the purpose of transplanting human tissues and cells to solve man's genetic diseases (or animal tissue and cells to solve genetic diseases of animals of the same species).

For information regarding the medical fraudulence of vivisection, please contact:

British Anti-Vivisection Association (BAVA),
PO Box 82, Kingswood, Bristol BS15 1YF and/or Doctors and Lawyers for Responsible Medicine
(DLRM), 104b Weston Park, London N8 9PP
(0181 340 9813, Fax 0181 342 9878).

A Cook on the Wild Side

The Shellfish Network is asking readers to write letters of complaint to Channel Four Television and the Broadcasting Standards Commission following a cookery programme where eelers were fried alive.

Somebody from the programme stated: "You just want to get the little  dead as quickly as possible ... it's rather disconcerting having them wriggling all over the pan."

The addresses to write to are as follows:

Channel Four Television,
124 Horseferry Road, London SE1P 2TX.
Broadcasting Standards Commission,
7 The Sanctuary, London SW1P 3JS.

THE SHELLFISH NETWORK, SPRINGSIDE, FOREST ROAD, EAST HORLEY, LEATHERHEAD, SURREY KT24 5AZ (Tel/Fax 01483 282995)

Arkangel 18

Homelessness and Pets

By Noel Molland

If you've ever wandered around the main sites where homeless people congregate you'll inevitably see some dogs. The fact is many homeless people have pets. These pets can offer vital companionship. Yet for many people having a companion animal can create problems. Quite simply, when seeking accommodation, most people are given the choice of giving up their pet, or remaining homeless. To the overwhelming majority that is not a choice, so they remain homeless. A study cited in 'Psychology Today' (number 77. 'Dilemmas associated with rehousing homeless people who have pets', by Singer R, Hart L, and Zasloff R) showed that when asked, 93% of men and 96% of women who were homeless with pets said 'they would never live without their animals'.

The names of the following people have been changed to protect their identities, but these are the stories of two people who are homeless and have pets.

Gus and Heather

In 1993 Gus had just finished a day's begging on the streets of London where he had earned £37. As he wandered along Holloway Road he heard a six-week-old puppy crying. The owner wanted £30 for the pup. Despite only having £37 he bought the dog, which he named Heather.

Gus and Heather are now inseparable. Gus will happily tell anyone that Heather is 'much happier and freer than a dog that lives in a house. She's out all of the time and I take her into the country whenever I can'. Despite being in need himself, Gus very often spends all the money he earns begging on Heather.

Although Gus would like to find a safer environment than the streets of Camden, Gus insists that he'll spend time on the streets so Heather can be free.

Sarah and Sky

Unlike Gus, who acquired his animal companion while living on the streets, Sarah became homeless with her pet. When visiting Wales, Sarah rescued a five-week-old puppy from some people who were drowning them in a stream. She named him Sky and they initially lived in a flat in Brighton. However Sarah lost the flat after she became mixed up with heroin and the police raided her flat. By the age of 20, Sarah was on the streets of London.

Having a dog on the streets has been tough for Sarah. One day-centre told Sarah that 'We can get you somewhere if you get rid of the dog'. For Sarah that wasn't an option so she stayed on the streets, sharing her life with Sky.

People like Sarah and Gus, like the majority of the people living rough on the streets, would rather remain homeless than give up their pets. Yet sadly the majority of hostels and shelters refuse access to their properties for people who have pets. There are a few homeless charities, such as the Simon Community, who do welcome people who have pets. In fact the Simon Community has a policy to never separate people from their animal companions. But charities, like the Simon Community, that welcome homeless people and their pets are few and far between. Even if people can get into somewhere like the Simon Community, when the homeless person leaves the charity they then find that many landlords will refuse to have pets in their properties. In the 'Pets and Housing Rights Campaign and Support Group Bulletin (June 1994)' L. Dove wrote: 'I have known a lady fighting her housing trust in court for the right to keep her dog... I know people who have been homeless and squatted in order to stay with their companion animals'.

What can we do to help?

People who are good and care for their animals should be allowed to keep them. It is totally wrong that hostels, and private landlords can discriminate against homeless people because they have pets. In other countries, including Greece and Monaco, the right to keep a pet is protected by law. This is not the case in Britain. The following suggestions of what people can do to help homeless people with their pets were made by the Pets and Housing Rights Campaign and Support Group (cited in 'Animal Care number 1'):

- Campaign to have the law changed, so a person's right to keep their pet is protected by law. You can do this by writing to your MP and the Housing Minister.
- Raise awareness of this issue by writing to newspapers and magazines. Or, if you are a member of a group that produces a magazine, feel free to reproduce this article.
- Contact the Canine Defence League and ask them about their HOPE project (Homeless People with Pets). The NCDL is one of the main animal welfare charities campaigning for the rights of homeless people with pets. The address is NCDL, 17 Wakeley Street, London EC1V 7LT.

If you would like more information about the work of the Simon Community, please contact us at:

PO Box 1187, London NW5 4HW (0171 485 6639)

Bid to Ban Snaring

The West Sussex Badger Protection Group has launched an anti-snaring petition following several cruel snaring incidents in the area. The petition has been taken up nationally with the assistance of the National Federation of Badger Groups, and both the RSPCA and League Against Cruel Sports have offered their support.

Fox hunters currently argue that if hunting were banned many foxes would suffer a worse fate such as being snared. In reality many thousands of foxes are already killed in snares, and the British Field Sports Society endorse their use. The hunters therefore have no argument as almost all of them are members of the BFSS! Most snares are set by gamekeepers around their release pens. Only free-running snares are legal as the self-locking type were banned in 1981. However, when an animal twists and writhes to escape, free-running snares can become self locking, and snares can be bought legally as 'dual purpose' and then a simple modification makes them self-locking.

The WSBPG has recently had two incidents with dual purpose snares set as self locking: in one case the keeper only received a police caution, and in the other self-locking snares were found after a road casualty badger was discovered with a snare around its middle. Despite the evidence, the farmer simply denied setting them and no action was taken. However, it has been a series of tragic incidents involving badgers on the Goodwood Estate, near Chichester, West Sussex, which has been the launching pad for the national petition. In 1993 a Goodwood gamekeeper was fined £400 for shooting a snared badger and another keeper and two men were jailed for digging out and stabbing badgers to death.

Then in 1996 a badger was found dead on the estate having been strangled by a snare attached to a wooden pole. The pole had been dragged for some distance before snagging on a fence. At post-mortem a year old snaring injury was found on the badger which had healed, but not before fracturing the breast bone. The veterinary surgeon concluded the badger had 'suffered considerably' both in its strangulation and during its earlier snaring.

Following a local petition Goodwood Estate owner, Lord March wrote to his six shooting and three farming tenants requesting them to no longer set snares on the grounds of their 'indiscriminate nature'. A local success is good news, but we now need national action. Roger Gale MP has promised to hand over the petition to parliament - so all we need is your help!

If you can help collect signatures for the anti-snaring petition, please contact Paul Fitt: 01243 530542, or write to: 14 Tamar Way, Tangmere, Chichester, West Sussex PO20 6FG.

Huntingdon Campaign

The Countryside Undercover TV documentary 'It's a dog's life' was screened on March 26th, revealing the brutal reality of animal experimentation. The programme provoked public outrage and a hard hitting campaign. The undercover film showed how, during the testing of fungicides and diagnostic chemicals on young beagle dogs at Huntingdon Life Sciences (HLS) laboratories, 'non-compliant' animals were violently shaken, punched and shouted at. Puppies yelped as technicians pushed needles again and again into their skins, searching for the too-small veins.

Bedding for the dogs was virtually non-existent. There was evidence of careless and faulty data entry, and although Home Office inspectors visited the establishment more than once while the undercover investigator was on site, they failed even to look in on the dogs.

Anyone wishing to join the campaign against HLS should contact:

*Animal Aid,
The Old Chapel, Bradford Street, Tonbridge,
Kent TN9 1AW
(01732 364546, Fax 01732 366533)*

The Animal Rights Coalition (ARC) who supply information regarding HLS.

The address of Huntingdon Research Centre (should anyone wish to write a letter of protest) is:

*Wooley Road, Alconbury, Huntingdon,
Cambs. PE18 6HS
(01480 890500).*

To a 'Nation of Animal Lovers'

by Carol

What does she care at Christmas once the turkey's plucked and dressed?

Family bickering for the wishbone, desire for the breast.

The racetracks packed with punters, willing nags to win.

Fall at jump, the knacker's yard, innards in a tin.

Does daddy frown on leghold traps or white pups for the slaughter?

Ha! evidently not, buying fur to spoil his daughter.

No love lost for soaring wings and freedom in the sky.

He'll get a gun, with lethal shot, and cause game birds to die.

Fiestas with mad, spineless mobs, blood sacrifice all day.

Sneers and shrugs, their cold response, their God says it's okay.

Educate at the circus, tell them all they need to know?

No! animal tricks is why they queue, their children want to go.

There's barbaric ugly coursing, with supporters oh so keen!

Mangled hares plus shiny cups are worth its bloody screams.

On building sites the men don't care how pig arrives on plate,

Their start of day is fry ups - for sows a farrowing crate.

Muzzled bears, ungainly dance, their despair provokes no pity,

Beaten and chained they're driven mad, trade's good for the city.

Why can't they reach for dolphins at one with oceans law?

They can you know, to attach the mines, so gentleness meets war.

The proverbial 'great white hunter' sees mules with vertical stripes.

A zebra rug for someone's wall, filling up his rifle sight.

Try and explain to natives when polishing up the shells,

It's a savage trade in trinkets, for turtles a pure hell.

Investors don't waste ostrich, feathers, skin or feet,

The oldest bird on this planet? No,
a slice of low fat meat.

Are people too cold blooded, could they slit the reptiles skin?

Try asking them, when they buy shoes, of death to walk home in.

What will they do about the labs, full of sadistic minds at play?

Nothing much, 'white coats' know best, these atrocities will help one day.

What beliefs have chinless wonders, bloodying faces at the hunt?

Well, not one for conservation, that's their feeble PR stunt.

Explain to us why gorillas are hacked to death in hate?

Is it so brainless bastards can own a paperweight?

Are rhinos unimportant, aphrodisiacs for the paw

Being hunted to extinction, the poachers are the whores.

Vile, guttural voices swearing, enjoying whales harpooned to bits,

The flensing deck runs thick with gore, a filthy pirate ship.

Is the stalker's foremost mission to blast the life from stags?

Blindness to its beauty, steaming, hacked up corpse in bag.

What response of cultured perverts when gnawing on green flesh?

'Like chicken actually, darlings', severed frogs legs really fresh.

Accomplices to murder, point to tanks and choose their dinners

Whisk from sight, boil to death, fresh lobsters are the sinners.

What cowards twirl in silks and cape to enrage the blinded bulls?

Thrusts the sharpened blade in neck, adoration from the stalls.

What spurs on hired killers to set traps where tigers roam?

A pole thrust through its rectum, so they can sell the bone.

And what of lumbering elephants
when they come into sight?

Man glory's in his power, which makes ivory tusks his right.

He captures, trains and torments,
he hunts the bird of prey,

That proud bird has life no more,
for man controls his day.

And look rabbits, there's plenty, so let's make a coat or pie,

Let the Ministry test their chemicals, so many ways to die.

Crippled legs, de-feathered skin,
and sores that cannot heal,

Man's scrambled brain invented this, conveyer eggs for meals.

So when offered limbs of children, would flesh eat as drool and wink?

No, only at legs of baby lamb adored with sprigs of mint.

Wrench calf from cow on wobbly legs and export it off for veal,

Churns of milk, plus pallid flesh - an agricultural deal.

Shove food down funnels into beaks, pained bodies round and gross,

Wait for livers to swell and burst, spread vital organs onto toast.

Enter, rape his forest, strip the Orang-Utan from kin,

Touted in pet markets, a tourist makes a child of him.

Rope wild horse and break its will, shackle cows and brand their flesh,

Macho cowboys show no strength, weak traditions of the West.

In filth and squalor lies the bitch,
a clapped out breeding body,

Not worth a damn on puppy farms, cruel money making hobby.

Pensioners cages waiting empty, as in tubes while birds are stuffed,

Whilst enjoying smuggling profits, gasping, jewel bright bodies crushed.

But daily from this garbage heap, animals see a chink of light,

Desire to help the innocents, a need to ease their plight.

Fighting hate and apathy, people join to make a stand

For all the different species, they offer out their hand

Compassion and gut feeling to liberate from pain,

Neither done for greedy profits,
nor for any personal gain.

For once freed, the suffering creature looks up and meets your eyes,

It's the only thing that matters, the most important prize.

Gay Vegetarians & Vegans

GVV are a friendly informal national group of women and men, formed in 1979.

Lesbians, gay men and bisexuals of all ages are welcome. Topics covered by the group include Health issues, Human Diet & Living, Animal Rights, Ecology and Third World issues.

The aims of GVV are to provide a friendship network especially for those who are isolated, and to give encouragement and information to gay people who are considering becoming vegetarian/vegan.

London members have a monthly Drop-In (with good access for disabled members). They hope to encourage members elsewhere to set up local drop-ins and socials.

There is no fixed membership fee, just an SAE for the national friendship listings. Personal ads in the listings are free. GVV produce an occasional newsletter, 'The Green Queen', and welcome new writers for this - letters, articles, news, fiction and poetry welcome.

For more information, send an SAE/tape to: GV BM Box 5700, London WC1N 3XX

VEGETARIAN & VEGAN GAY & BISEXUAL MEN

Vegetarian & Vegan Gay & Bisexual Men is a group which hopes to work together with GV in the near future.

It is a new, informal social group for gay and bisexual men who are, or would like to be, vegetarian or vegan.

They meet on the last Sunday of the month (at least) at gay & gay-friendly vegetarian and vegan cafes in London, and have other regular social events. The group is aimed at men but women are very welcome to join in.

For further information please call SUN on: 0171 733 0697

The Brown Dog Affair

A 120 page non-fiction paperback, 'The Brown Dog Affair', chronicles the story of the brown dog memorial, an extraordinary statue-cum-drinking fountain that provoked nationwide controversy in Edwardian Britain.

A deliberately provocative monument erected in Battersea to the memory of a dog killed by animal experiments at London University, it was adopted as an anti-establishment emblem by a radical coalition of suffragettes, trade unionists and members of the labour movement. It caused disorder on the streets of the capital and led to the celebrated 'brown dog riots' of 1907. After five years of notoriety - much of that time with a 24 hour police guard - the brown dog was destroyed. With the advent of the First World War, it was quickly forgotten until a new monument was erected more than 70 years later.

Peter Mason's book looks at the early anti-vivisectionist roots of the monument, traces its turbulent history, and assesses its significance as a rallying point for radical and liberal activists at the beginning of this century.

'The Brown Dog Affair' is available, price £5.50 inc p&p, from:

Two Sevens, 30 Wynter Street, London SW11 2TZ (0181 874 2617).

Cheques payable to Two Sevens.

Ethical Wares

"...a cruelty-free lifestyle doesn't start and end with what's on your plate..."

Ethical Wares was set up in 1990 by a vegan walker who felt he was getting a raw deal when it came to buying footwear for his favourite pastime. When an Italian manufacturer came up with a high-class synthetic walking boot for him to try, he was so impressed that he wanted to share the benefits with other vegans.

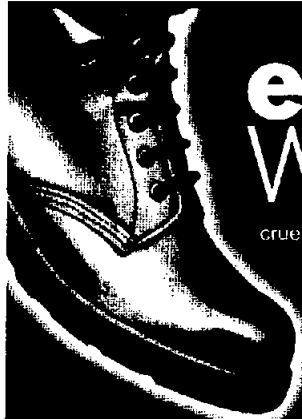

When he emigrated to America in 1993, Mike and Christine Newman, vegans for fourteen years, took over the company, since when it has expanded and is now offering over twenty different styles of footwear plus belts and non-woollen socks and jackets.

The bottom line, they say, is that vegans who want to embrace more than just dietary principles can only do so if alternatives are there to be had - and not just 'second-best' alternatives. So it's gratifying that nowadays even non-vegan walking magazines give rave reviews of the Ethical Wares boots, and EW footwear and clothing has been featured on national television and newspapers. Mike and Chris recall with amusement the American customer who visited their stand at a Christmas Without Cruelty exhibition but who walked away in disgust, refusing to believe the shoes and boots were non-leather, despite assuring her they carried the Vegan Society trademark!

But they strongly believe that living a cruelty-free lifestyle doesn't start and end with what's on your plate or on your back. That's why they have a policy of refusing to trade with countries that put human rights low on their agenda, places like China and Indonesia. They contend that exploitation of human beings is every bit as unacceptable as that of animals, as is the careless disregard of our environment. "The trees that were sacrificed at Newbury and Manchester should be part of every vegan's circle of compassion too," they say, "Harm to a part is harm to the whole."

Ethical Wares is proud to work with a number of animal organisations and to be associated with CALF and Arkangel. When they were based in Essex, Mike and Chris regularly took part in the Brightlingsea demonstrations, an experience which they maintain would have stiffened the resolve of any wavering veggies to come over to the vegan camp.

As for the future? Ethical Wares will continue to promote veganism by selling good quality products that hold their own alongside animal-based alternatives so that eventually the gleeful challenge, "Ah, but what about your shoes?", will be a thing of the past. Leather? Who needs it?

ethical
WARES
cruelty-free footwear and clothing

a stunning range of outdoor and leisureware combining the finest synthetic materials with quality craftsmanship and design. Suitable for vegans, vegetarians and all those who care about the environment

For a FREE full colour catalogue call or fax 01929 480360 or write to:
Ethical Wares, Dept FL
17 Townsend Road, Corfe Castle,
Wareham, Dorset, BH20 5ET

One Earth Shop

